NEW YORK WETTEST YET CALIFORNIA EARTHQUAKES

RECORD BROKEN BY CELEBRATION AND CLUB PRICES

New York Had Wettest New Year's Eve in History

POOR NOT FORGOTTEN

Drinkers Were Scared Away From Plentiful Liquor — Crime Down

New York, January 3.—Celebration of the New Year's arriving before midnight on the final day of 1926, continued until long after daylight with fired-eyed men and women in new gowns and attire straying from private and public taxicabs to the doors of their clubs as late as 8 o'clock in the morning. Several night clubs in the theatrical district reported that their last patron left between 6 and 7 o'clock, many of them to stop at delicatessen shops and white-front restaurants for breakfast before retiring.

"All night" bars had record deposits from amusement resort proprietors, who, as regards gross receipts, had never had a happier New Year's. Vehicular and pedestrian traffic was lighter than usual yesterday morning in New York's business sections, with a large percentage of the population in bed.

Observers of the New Year continued yesterday with food and entertainment for many of the homeless, as well as for all blind, crippled and World War veterans. On Governor's Island Brig. Gen. Hugh A. Drum held a reception for members of the staff and other officers stationed on the island, with further ceremony later at the home of Col. C. C. Culin, commander of the 15th Infantry.

Two hundred and fifty war veterans from various hospitals were guests of the Friars Club of New York at a New Year's dinner. At noon more than one thousand hungry and jobless men had New Year's dinner of Irish stew, bread and coffee, as guests of Urban Ledoux, who calls himself "Mr. Zero," at "The Jobless" 23 St. Mark's Place. To avoid any semblance of charity Mr. Ledoux charged five cents for each meal. Mr. Ledoux said he had provided New Year's cheer for 2,000 men, including those who ate at "The Tub" the night before.

In addition to the inexpensive meals, 100 yard men received mittens and another 100 received socks. Fifty overcoats were distributed, as well as 100 pounds of chocolate. "Mr. Zero" told his guests that this year had been the busiest in the history of "The Tub," and that yesterday's crowd there was the largest single crowd. This he said was because of unemployment on the building trades.

THOMAS FOSTER RE-ELECTED BY 4,500 PLURALITY

Only One Change in Toronto Board of Control Personnel

2 BYLAWS CARRIED

Alderman Wemp Succeeds Controller McBride 3 Members Re-elected

Toronto, Jan. 3.—Mayor Thomas Foster was elected for a third term to that office in the Toronto city elections held on New Year's Day. He secured a plurality of about 4,500 votes over his nearest opponent, ex-Control. Sir Samuel McBride. The third candidate in the field, ex-Controller W. D. Robbins, ran far in the rear, capturing only about one-tenth of the votes given to each of his opponents.

There is only one change in the board of control from last year Alderman Bert Wemp securing the chair vacated by Controller McBride to enter the mayoralty contest. The re-elected members of the board are Joseph Gibbons, A. E. Hacker and C. D. MacGregor. There were four other candidates for the board.

By-Laws Carried

By-laws, one to continue daylight saving in the summer months for a period of five years and the second to expend about $400,000 on one of the entrances to the National Exhibition Grounds, were carried.

The vote for mayor was:

Foster	42,446
McBride	38,307
Robbins	6,265

The elections resulted in a number of surprises, no less than seven members of last year's council going down to defeat. As three members of the old council did not seek re-election, ten new faces will be seen at the inaugural meeting of the 1927 council. Although a large increase had been looked for, the total vote cast was between 85,000 and 90,000, practically the same as last year.

The change in the personnel is one of the most sweeping in recent years, that which over a third of the members are new men, several of them have had previous experience and others have returned after temporary reverses in former years. There are 24 aldermen on the city council, three boards of eight wards. With one exception all members of the board of education who entered the campaign this year were returned and only four new faces will be seen among the 1927 trustees. The board consists of 16 members, two from each of the city's eight wards.

Among the defeated candidates were men who had been many years in the city council, Samuel McBride, defeated mayoralty candidate, has been a member of council about seven years. C. Hisk, defeated aldermanic candidate, thirteen years.

Mrs. Bert Leasemore who was reported burned to death was not a dance when the fire occurred.

50 SHOCKS ROCK TOWNS IN SOUTH CALIFORNIA BELT

Imperial Valley Shaken From Midnight Until 10.30 a.m. Sunday

DAMAGE $2,500,000

New Year Revellers Fled From Cafes in Panic-Martial Law

Calexico, Calif., January 3.—Earthquake and fire damage to Imperial Valley towns in the United States and Mexico was estimated at $2,500,000 today after a period of more than fifty shocks rocked the valley district from shortly after midnight to 10.30 o'clock Sunday morning.

V. F. Frizzell, district agent for the Southern Pacific Railroad, with headquarters at El Centro, Imperial Valley County Seat, announced the estimate of damage.

At 1 o'clock this afternoon, police have reported quakes were continuing at intervals of about twenty minutes, but were of slight intensity. No casualties had been reported at 1 o'clock.

MARATIAL LAW AT MEXICALI

Governor Rodriguez, of Lower California, Mexico, declared martial law in Mexicali this afternoon. The streets of the city, just across the international boundary line from Calexico, also severely damaged by the shocks, were ordered closed to traffic. Movement of pedestrians, however, was permitted. All side walks of the Mexicali business district are reported checked with debris from fallen buildings.

The first tremblor, preceded by an ominous rumble, hit the city at 12.15 a.m. It was the sharpest of all and lasted, observers said, for fully three minutes. Two other quakes followed on the heels of the first at 1.15 a.m. and 2.10 a.m.

RISBERG MAKES NEW ALLEGATIONS IN BALL SCANDAL

Chicago, Jan. 3.—Invitations were out today for Eddie Collins, Ray Schalk, Red Faber, Urban Shocker, Roy Rowland and about thirty others who were named in an affidavit given Commissioner Landis on Saturday night by Charles "Swede" Risberg. He told Landis that the Chicago White Sox with whom he used to play short, had been a four game series on September 2 and 3, 19-17, so glad Detroit would be down and give Chicago a better chance for a pennant. Some of those Risberg named as contributing $45 each toward the pool of about $1,100 for Detroit players, admitted raising the pool but gave a different version of its circumstance. Eppyphetic Lowe, and Nemo Leibold Sox outfielder at time, that the Chicago team gave Detroit that money for beating Boston in three games Sept. 1st to 3rd 1917, thereby killing Red Sox chances of winning the pennant from the White Sox. Detroit pitchers were named here to tip down for the box, he said.

Landis on Saturday night asked Risberg if White Sox had raised a pool to give Detroit pitchers or players to beat Boston. "No", said Risberg. "I never heard of that. Money was collected by myself and Chick Gandil (Sox first baseman) and was for paying Detroit players to slough those two double headers with Chicago on Labor Day and the Sunday before. Rowland instigated the scheme."

At 9.30 the Ben Tou Orchestra struck up the first strains of stirring, popular music and the dancing of beautiful ballroom was soon a scene of amazing loveliness as beautifully dressed women, leaning on handsome partners' arms joined the dancing throng.

The ballroom was exquisite, the decorations being carried out in the "Artists' Colors" of pastel shades, under the clever direction of committee, of which Mrs. Arthur Meighen was convener. WIDOW'S MONEY LOST THROUGH P. D. HAM DEALS

She Backed Title Clerk's Promissory Notes for $121,000

DECLARED BANKRUPT

Efforts to Find Out Where The Money Went

Toronto, Jan. 3.—Before he goes to Portsmouth penitentiary, Percy D. Ham, former land titles clerk, convicted of more than a dozen charges of forgery and uttering, in connection with the mystery bond scandals, may be examined in connection with the bankruptcy proceedings which have been instituted at Osgoode hall. His creditors, who are numerous, want to know what became of the large sums of money he handled during his unfortunate venture into the bond market.

E. G. Clarkson has been appointed custodian of the estate pending the meeting of creditors on Monday afternoon, when Mr. Clarkson will likely be appointed trustee. Ham's wife and friends are anxious, too, to have the prisoner's affairs straightened out before he begins his term in Kingston. The intention is to declare him a bankrupt and leave it to Mr. Clarkson to deal with his affairs in the interests of all the creditors.

If the action against Mrs. Emma Clarke reaches court, Ham will likely be called as a witness. Her son was best man at the Percy Ham wedding, which was quite a social event of a little more than a year ago.

HOW WIDOW WAS INVOLVED

The involving of Mrs. Clarke, who is a widow, in the Ham transactions and the subsequent developments make an interesting story. From what could be gathered today, Mrs. Clarke was interested by Ham in the way of giving security by the fact that he had good family connections and that her son served along with him at the front in the Great War.

She consented to become security for Ham, and went as deeply as several hundred thousand dollars, it is said. She gave notes alone to various bond firms totalling over $121,000, and these are the cause of the present action. It is also alleged that Ham assured her that her reward for backing him would be at the rate of $2,000 a month.

CLAIM LETTER AGREEMENT

The alleged agreement by which she was to turn over certain assets to these broker creditors was in the form of a letter from Ludwig & Ballantyne, of June 20 last, the terms of which were, it is claimed, that the brokers were to accept their assets "in satisfaction of their claims."

Now Mrs. Clarke, it is claimed, refuses to be bound by that alleged agreement. Therefore, E. G. McMillan, acting for the Dennis and Hosmer firms, has brought suit for specific performance of the agreement and for an injunction restraining any other use of the assets.

Adam Ballantyne, counsel for Mrs. Clarke, put the case for her in a few words when a reporter approached him in regard to the matter today.

"It is an attempt to practically put this poor woman on the street," he said. "She offered to turn over her assets in satisfaction of the claims they had against her. We say that they refused to accept this as a settlement and now want still to follow her up. We therefore say that the agreement was thus nullified.

"Furthermore, there has been new light thrown on the dealings of the brokers with Ham by the evidence given at the trial of Ham, and by reason of that new light we are refusing to hold to that agreement as a binding one. We are trying to save the woman from being wiped out entirely."

The assets which Mrs. Clarke offered to her creditors are said to have included $23,000 in mortgages, etc.; $5,000 in stocks, bonds, etc., and a $30,000 one-half interest in the firm of Clarke & Clarke.

Among the creditors who will be represented will be the brokers with whom Ham dealt, it is said, and there are many others, it is also asserted, to whom Ham owed money, who will be there or be represented by lawyers. The list of Ham's creditors is being jealously guarded by Mr. Clarkson.

FIND WHERE MONEY WENT?

"The real purpose of this bankruptcy action is to get some inkling as to where the money went," said one well-known lawyer, who has had connection with the matter. "Ham contends that he has not made a cent out of it. He does not tell where the money went. The brokers contend that they all lost money. Crown Attorney McFadden during the Ham trial said he had vainly tried to follow the flight of the money. It is considerable of a mystery where it went. Now, in this bankruptcy action, before Justice Fisher as Osgoode and the brokers and others may be called upon and examined as to what they know about it. It is equivalent to an examination for discovery."

40 BELOW MAKES BAD TRAVELLING FOR FUR TRADER

Edmonton, Alta., Dec. 29—(By C.P.)—The trials and tribulations of winter travel in the northern "wilds" were recounted by a party of fur traders who fought their way through blizzard, snow-drifts and bitter cold, to Edmonton.

Joe Lavoudie, a northern pioneer was the leader of the group which included four other trappers.

Each his his own background of hardship and misadventure which forced him to "dig the trail" toward civilization at this time of the season and all pooled their resources and handed together for their trip.

The party had five horse-drawn sleighs and came down from the Arctic region by way of the Athabasca river. In places the ice was piled from fifteen to twenty feet high and the little caravan was forced to travel between banks of cliffs and other hazards. In other places the river was covered with a thin sheet of ice which broke as soon as the horses put foot on it. Several times the animals went through but were rescued. To negotiate the most dangerous stretch of the river, the trappers unharnessed the horses and pushed the sleighs to safer ice. Constantly two members of the party preceded the others to check breaking ice holes to spot the safest way.

The men faced extreme hardships on their long trek. The mercury at times skidded to thirty and forty below zero. During one night's halt, the caravan was caught in a howling blizzard and in the morning the sleighs were buried under heavy snow drifts and had to be dug out. The men were pretty well worn out when they reached Edmonton.

STILL ANOTHER VANISHING ACT STIRS BRITAIN

Third in the Past Few Weeks Mystifies Authorities

London, Eng., Jan. 3.—A third disappearance case has arisen to perplex the British police, just recovering from their searches for the novelist, Agatha Christie, who turned up at a York hotel. Miss Edna Miss Crew, who drowned herself in the sea off the Dorset coast.

This time it is the Honorable Lawrence Edward Bromfield Palk, son and heir of the third Baron Haldon. Father told the police that Palk left his office in the city Tuesday afternoon, intending to take a train for Croydon, near London, where he had an appointment.

He did not appear for the appointment and has not been heard from since. He carried an unspecified sum of money.

DISASTROUS 12 MONTHS ENDED

London, Jan. 3.—The pronounced change of heart and mind with which the Labor party regards the future is seen in a message from Rt. Hon. J. H. Thomas to the Railway Review, in this appeal he says:

"There is no member of the National Union of Railwaymen who will not gladly bid adieu to the year 1926, which will live long in history for its disasters rather than for its triumphs." He urges every member of the union to forget the past and to banish all vindictiveness, remembering that they are all members of a great public service. He calls upon them for teamwork in running the service.

C. T. Cramp writes in a similar vein. Beginning the new year a levy of threepence a week will be demanded from all members to help pay off the losses caused by the strike and the unemployment benefit fund, which amounted to £1,750,000, or approximately $8,750,000.

Meanwhile, Russia, through A. J. Cook is hoping for a new assault on the trades unions by the left wing of the Labor party by exploiting the failure of the strike.

CONVENTION IS CRITICISED ON ENDORSATIONS

Washington, D. C., Dec. 31 (By Canadian Press).—Recent action of the Mississippi Valley Association, meeting at St. Louis, in endorsing the proposed all-American channel in preference to the St. Lawrence route has served to bring down on the head of that organization all manner of severe criticism.

Senator Reed of Missouri has charged the association with "traitorous betrayal" of the interests of the farmers of the Upper Mississippi Valley. This, however, is but one of the broadside of denunciations. Many of the middle western newspapers that have been urging an outlet for the midwest to the Atlantic have hit hard at the action of the association.

The real reason for this feeling on the part of many of those that demand an outlet from the interior to the Atlantic is not that they do not recognize difficulties or drawbacks in the way of the St. Lawrence plan, but that they feel the proposal for the so-called all-American route has the backing of some interests which are seeking to prevent any waterway outlet for the interior whatever. Moreover, they feel that New York harbor is already congested and that the interior cannot get relief through a route opening into New York unless plans are made for relief of the aforesaid congestion on a great scale.

On the other hand, it is felt that the midwest would be more certain of relief by expansion of waterway facilities on the Mississippi and through the lakes and the St. Lawrence to the sea.

To put the matter in another way, many of the middle westerners challenge the good faith of the proposed route through New York state. If they could be convinced that all the elements back of it were in earnest in trying to expedite such a channel to completion, there would be a difficult situation.

Doctrine final caused the shooting of Detroit blind-pig operator. He was found in his car killed with a shotgun.

BRITISH CAR IS AFTER RECORDS

London, Dec. 30.—A serious attempt by British manufacturers to capture the automobile speed records now held by the United States, is seen in a shipment via Fishmury of a big red mystery car from London to some Florida beach.

The car is believed capable of two hundred miles an hour. It is thirty-six feet long and six wide, shaped like a sea sled, weighs more than three tons and costs a hundred thousand dollars.

It has two motors and a secret transmission system.

WEDDING BELLS

McPHERSON—McKEOWN

A charming and fashionable New Year's wedding was solemnized on Saturday afternoon in St. Andrew's church, Rev. R. O. Stewart officiating, when Helen, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. McKeown, 16 Alexander street, and Clare D. McPherson, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. McPherson of Woodstock, were united in marriage.

The bride looking very beautiful in her wedding gown of silver lace over satin cloth with long court train of chiffon, with its central panel of silver lace and lining of palest pink, lovely wedding veil caught under a wreath of orange blossoms worn by her grandmother, the late Mrs. W. H. Jeffers, at her wedding, silver shoes, and shower bouquet of orchids, lillies of the valley and roses, entered the church as Lohengrin's wedding march pealed from the organ. She slowly walked up the aisle on the arm of her father to take her place by the side of the groom.

She was attended by Miss Grace Bell of Indian Head, Sask., and Miss Jean Cameron of St. Thomas, attired alike in peach taffeta French frocks with touches of silver and periwinkle blue, silver hats, silver shoes, and bouquets of sunset roses and blue iris.

Mr. Douglas Sinclair of Toronto supported the groom and the ushers were, Messrs. Charles Payne, T. Y. Fraser, Walter Parker of Deloro, and John Klassmill of Toronto.

Mrs. McKeown, mother of the bride, wore a handsome navy ensemble blue crepe and black satin tucked and carried Premier roses with fern-leaves, while Mrs. John McKeown, the bride's grandmother, wore black crepe with touches of white and hat to match.

Mrs. McPherson, mother of the groom, wore a handsome French gown of black satin with touches of, lace, but to match and carried a bouquet of orchids and violets.

The bridal procession was preceded into the church, with its quaint decorations of ferns, palms and Christmas flowers, by the Brownies of which the lovely bride has been leader. Each little member of the organization attended in uniform which less a quaint touch to the lovely scene. During the ceremony, Professor Whaydey rendered a continuous programme of appropriate music.

Gullmett's wedding march and Lemaire's Andantino in D Flat were exquisitely played and during the latter selection, as the bridal party returned to the church from the vestry, the Brownies sieged at the register, the Brownies under the leadership of the pack mistress gave the Brownie salute, which the bride courteously answered.

The groom's gift to the bride was a diamond and sapphire sun ray pendant, maids French beaded bags and to the ushers and best man, gold cuff links.

Following the ceremony the bridal party drove to the Belleville Club where a delightful wedding supper was served during which the bride and groom received the congratulations of the many attendants.

Mr. and Mrs. McPherson later left on a honeymoon to be spent in the west, the bride travelling in a costume of brown flat crepe, seal coat with Kollinsky trimming, brown satin hat with touches of leopard skin, and shoes to match her coat. They will sailed on Sunday from New York.

RAY—WELLMAN

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at high noon Wednesday, December 29th at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. P. Wellman when their second daughter, Miss Maude, became the bride of Mr. Edgar Ray, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Ray of Sidney Township, Rev. P. White officiating.

The bride entered the room leaning on the arm of her father and took her place beneath the wedding bell which hung from a beautiful arch of red cedar. She looked charming in a white crepe back satin dress with shoes and stockings to match and wore her wedding veil caught with orange blossoms carrying her bouquet of carnations and maiden hair fern.

Miss Nellie Wellman played the wedding march.

Little Miss Helen Wellman of Madoc, niece of the bride, carried a dainty basket of lillies of the valley and rose, which contained the ring. She looked sweet in a pink satin slip with shoes and stockings to match.

Master Earl Wellman of Madoc nephew of the bride, acted as page.

After a dainty buffet luncheon served by the choir of which the bride was organist, the happy couple left amid showers of confetti and rice also good wishes for Western points.

The bride travelled in a dress of rosewood satin, hat of silver, and brown needlepoint coat, with bronze chocsand stockings to match.

On their return they will reside near Canniffon.

BRILLIANT DANCE

followed in the shape of a marvelous electrical display in which the New Year's greeting was carried to all in attended to the details of decoration, large numbers which cast a soft and becoming glow over the room. This electrical effect was retained for the balance of the dance.

A personal touch was introduced when Miss Helen McKeown, one of the leading ladies of the evening, was presented with an enormous bouquet of roses in honour of her wedding which took place on New Year's Day. Mayor-elect Wilmot made the presentation on behalf of the directors of the Country Club.

The Supper

The system by which this sumptuous supper was served to the two hundred and twenty-five guests was marvelous. There were three sittings at each of which cold turkey, cranberry sauce, salads, ice cream and coffee were served. There was not the slightest delay in the service, and Mr. J. L. Jenkins' efficiency in handling social events was never demonstrated to better effect.

The basement in which the supper was served was brilliantly lighted and gorgeously decorated and the tables were exquisitely appointed. The flower-laden tables were charmlit and the staff of the hotel was most courteous.

In the Small Hours

As the small hours rolled out the dancers reluctantly commenced to disperse, the strains of the music were massed and it was only with the greatest effort the exhilarated crowd tore themselves away. Again and again couples left the floor only to return for "just one more dance." At five o'clock the orchestra played "Home Sweet Home" and the last of the dancers dispersed.

The Success

Too much cannot be said for the work of the committee of ladies who the gentlemen who organized, the management of the Quinte Hotel for their service, the Bon Ton Orchestra for the irreclaimable music and the cooperation received from all interested in the dance.

It is expected that the Country Club will make the New Year's ball an annual event.

and C. E. Blackburn, board of control candidate, eight years.

Controller Joseph Gibbons repeated his record of several previous years in heading the poll for the board. He polled 6,341 votes more than Mayor Foster and 5,000 more than his nearest opponent. Controller Hacker, Gibbons is a Roman Catholic as former employee of the Street Railway. He entered civic politics as a labor candidate years ago, but now evidently draws his support from all classes, for strictly labor candidates have not fared well in recent years. James Simpson, former controller, a well-known representative of labor, ran last, drawing about one-fifth of Gibbons' vote. Former Controller Thomas ran 8th and was therefore defeated. The board consists of four members and the mayor,

TO-DAY'S THOUGHT

Gentle words, quiet words, are, after all, the most powerful words. They are more convincing, more compelling, more prevailing.—Washington Gladden.

ALBERTA COAL

Canada spends $100,000,000 each year on United States coal, while over 15 per cent. of the world's coal reserves lie under the soil of Alberta. As money turns over three times in a year we are sending out of the country enough wealth to maintain over 100,000 average families in comparative comfort. Mr. E. J. Garland, M.P., has been calling Ontario's attention to these facts.

The problem of getting Alberta coal to the Ontario market is mainly a matter of freight rates. Sir Henry Thornton did something towards finding a solution by establishing an experimental rate of $6.00 a ton. But it is doubtful if this rate will enable Alberta coal to compete successfully with the Pennsylvania product. According to Mr. Garland's estimate the rate to eastern centres to be effective should be further reduced to $7.00.

While such a rate would probably yield no profit to the Canadian National Railway, there are other reasons which would compensate the country for the loss of railway profits. In the first place increased demand for Alberta coal would if rightly directed, place production on a more efficient basis than it is at present, and result in a reduction of production costs. In the second place eastern consumers would be getting cheaper coal, and in the third place our money would be kept in the country.

Obviously the question of freight rates is one which must be dealt with by the Board of Railway Commissioners. If left to itself, however, the board will be unwilling to fix a rate that would not ensure a reasonable margin of profit for any railway engaged in the transportation of Alberta coal. Ontario will, therefore, probably continue to import American coal until the question of transportation rates is tackled by men possessed with the national viewpoint.

SAFETY FIRST

During 1925, says a bulletin of the Metropolitan Insurance Company, of the 17,000,000 industrial policy holders in the United States and Canada, 2,748 were killed in automobile accidents.

During the same year accidents of all kinds caused the loss of 10,656 lives in the same insured group. This means that out of every 100 who lost their lives in accidents of all kinds, 26 of them were victims of motor vehicles. It is of particular interest to note that there were 13 deaths from motor accidents to one death from all other form of mechanical accidents.

In view of the prevalence of automobile fatalities more than usual interest attaches to their geographical distribution throughout the United States and Canada. The highest death rate, 39.4 per 100,000 was recorded in the urban industrial population of Florida. New Jersey came second, with 24.5.

For the whole of Canada the rate among the urban industrial population was only 14.4 per 100,000 as compared with 19.6 for the United States. Conspicuously low automobile fatality rates were recorded in Manitoba and Saskatchewan cities, the report states. A comparison of the Canadian and American figures shows that in cities of about the same industrial population less accidents occur in Canada than in American cities.

False conclusions should not be drawn from these statistics. There are considerably less automobiles in Canada per head of population than in the United States. Car for car it is doubtful if our accident record would be any better. But in any case it is not sufficient to be satisfied by comparisons which appear to present us in a favorable light. So long as Canadian men, women and children are being killed by automobiles, we have no ground for self congratulation. Our business is to spread the safety-first idea until human life in Canada will be safer than in any other country in the world.

ACQUIRED TASTES

Lincoln C. Andrews, official head of the department which is responsible for the enforcement of the U.S. prohibitory law, is an optimist. He announces that a formula has been developed, and will be put into use at the beginning of the year, for making the taste of industrial alcohol so unpleasant that nobody, even the old soaks, will be able to swallow it without being nauseated. Thus, it is hoped, the all but universal use of industrial alcohol in the decoction of bootleggers' whiskey and gin will be stopped.

But the denaturing of alcohol and the mixing with it of nauseous ingredients so as to make it unpalatable is not new. The wholesale bootleggers employ skilled chemists to discover ways and means of getting the bad taste out of the spoiled alcohol by the addition of other chemicals. It has been a contest between government chemists on the one hand and the bootlegger chemists on the other—something like the contest between makers of the big naval guns and the makers of armor plate. Mr. Andrews is probably mistaken in his belief that the government chemists have found out how to make denatured alcohol so disagreeable that it cannot possibly be used as a beverage. No doubt a way will be found for disguising that bad taste.

But it is marvellous how the tastes of the old soaks can be accommodated to new demands upon them. Who would have thought that canned heat could ever be used as a popular substitute for whiskey? Yet we know that that article of commerce is in common use by veteran drinkers who manage to get the desired kick out of it and drink it greedily with that end in view. It is only a matter of taste that Mr. Andrews depends upon to foil those who use the known brand, he will probably be disappointed. The taster of an alcoholic can be acquired with facility, and it is doubtful if any taste is so nasty as to repel him if there be the kick behind the taste.

LECTURE TOUR

Announcement is made that Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson is coming east for a whirlwind lecture tour of the big cities. This may not mean that the pastoress of Los Angeles' temple is broke, but it must be accepted as meaning that she intends to capitalize the front-page publicity of the last few months. Mrs. McPherson bills herself as an evangelist. It is said o her that she has pulpit personality developed to the ninth degree. But Mrs. McPherson must know that those who will flock to her lectures will not be attracted through the turnstiles by the hope of getting spiritual solace. They will be there to get a look at the woman who, the state prosecutor of California charges, laid away her Bible for a few weeks and carried on an illicit love affair with Kenneth G. Ormiston.. The success of this lecture tour will not be gauged by the number who present themselves at the penitent's bench, but by the box-office receipts. That Mrs. McPherson will stay to capacity business at each and every performance is, regrettably, something that can be taken for granted, but the churches wherein the old-fashioned Gospel is preached will have no overflow to cope with.

STILL AN OBLIGATION

Frank S. Cahill, M.P. for Postine, Que., proposes that the discrimination in favor of overseas-service men in appointments to the civil service be abolished.

The proposal should not be regarded as evidence of a general waning of pride in the achievements of the Canadian corps in the great war or of any national cooling of the gratitude to our gallant soldiers who survived and returned home. The proposal should be regarded as expressive of the sentiments of an individual—perhaps of a section of the population. It is not to be supposed that there would be so much admiration for the Canadian soldiers, so strong a desire to accord them recognition and reward, in the section represented by Mr. Cahill as in other parts of the country which were for better represented on the European battlefields than was Mr. Cahill's section, and that gentleman naturally is influenced by the feelings and attitude of the people among whom he lives and whom he represents in parliament.

But the national obligation to our soldiers, voluntarily assumed by the national legislature, is an obligation still. The passing of five or six years has not wiped it out. There are many veterans of the war still unprovided for, and if there is work in public office which they should have priority over civilian applicants for office.

OTHER MEN'S THOUGHTS

People in Chicago have been professing that the crime wave there has passed. The number of murders shows a slight decrease as compared with the number last year, but grafters continue to collect annually $20,000,000 from liquor, vice and crime in the city, according to Edward A. Olson, United States attorney. Maybe it is because the people are getting used to it that the crime wave "seems" to have passed.—Montreal Gazette.

"More than twenty-four persons were poisoned in New York, and most of them are dead as a result of drinking bad alcoholic liquor during the Christmas season. It is evident that prohibition in the United States favors the business of the smugglers and illicit distillers, but it is not good for the public in general, if we are to judge by the large number of fatalities of that law—infractions which are decreasing in Canada."—Montreal La Devoir.

Corsets were manufactured in this country last year to the value of $42,000,000. Our export business on this line must be picking up.—Council Bluffs Nonpareil.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

CATHOLIC CHURCH AND BIBLE

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:—

Dear Editor:—In the old days when you might as well try to strike the moon with snowballs as reason with a man who seems totally prejudiced against the Catholic Church, who never has her Catechism or other text books on what she really teaches. While my friend "Another Reader is right and logical in looking for a living authority and teacher on the Bible, it is misleading when he says: "the (Catholic party) quotes Scriptual to prove.....and with out our prayers their souls are apt to be lost") No the souls that need our prayers are already saved. but as I showed in my last letter and shut out from God's presence until purified by merits of Christ of which they did not fully avail themselves for small faults and good faith—When in this life of probation, I am shocked to think there is any such person in Belleville to use such shocking language of his Maker as did "Another Reader" towards the end of his letter especially in this Holy Christmas Season when the word atheist and unbelievist forget such drivel and piffle and with all true Christians—Protestants and Catholics alike—say the wonderful love, humility and humiliation of the Son of God in becoming man for us and for our Salvation.

By all means read the whole Bible, the Popes in every age have exhorted Catholics to do the same, you will find one in every Catholic home, the whole Bible and interpreted for them by the living authority appointed by Christ and not by every Tom, Dick and Harry to suit himself or some newly invented religion as Martin Luther did. St. Peter very wisely remarks on this matter when speaking of the difficulties one meets with especially in the Old Testament, some saying of Our Lord, and in the epistles of St. Paul; "In which are certain things hard to be understood, which the unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other Scriptures, to their own destruction."

2. St. Peter III. 16. And hence St. Augustine the greatest doctor of Christianity in fourth century said: "I would not believe the Gospel unless moved thereto by the authority of the Catholic Church, and I am held in the Catholic Church by the very Bishops who sit in the Chair of St. Peter to whom the Lord committed his whole flock" Epis. Contra Fund.

Now here is what Mallock one of the greatest non-Catholic scholars and historians of the last century says about private interpretation of the Bible:—"It tends to annihilate completely in the eye of every thinking man the great principles which are the foundations of what is called reformed Christianity. The first of these is the principle that the Bible contains in itself a clear indication of what Christian doctrine is, and also its own warranty that everything it says is true. The second is the principle that if any further guide is required we shall find it in the beliefs and practices of Christ's earliest followers, the fundamental assumption of every School of Protestantism being that its own called is that of the first Christians

BELLEVILLE CAGE TEAM WIN FROM KINGSTON Y.M.

Local Basketeers Reinforced By Faulkner. Trim Limestones

While the hockey team, were taking Brockville into camp in Belleville the Basketball team was more than holding its own in Kingston on New Year's night.

AAAA this was an exhibition game the services of Geo. Faulkner of McGill University were available and he played last year for Belleville he was able to fit in without any difficulty. "Doc." deserves a lot of credit for the showing he has made in Montreal in Senior company. Before the holidays he caught a regular position with McGill Seniors and it is expected that he will be able to hold his place. This is his first year and there are very few first year men who retain a place on a University first team. Doc played a nice game in Kingston New Years night.

The game was a close checking affair and a great many moves were called against both teams with Kingston being the worst offenders. Several men were put out of the game on four personal fouls. The score at the end of the first period was 20 to 12 for Belleville and this just about indicates the play. In the second period more combination developed with both teams and when the final whistle blew Belleville was in the lead by score of 43 to 20.

Nearly all the Kingston team has the fault of fumbling the ball and this made good team play impossible. In this respect the Quinte team were much more efficient and this just about made the difference in the score. Scott, Vince and Elliott played well for Kingston while all the Belleville team played good ball. Line up and points scored.:

Kingston—Lawrence 2, Harper, Elliott 3, Scott 5, Vince 2, Morris 4, Stephen. Total 20.

Belleville—Miles 3, Weir 8, Faulkner 15, Kew 4, Morrison, Armitroug 13. Total 43.

FIERY, ITCHY SKIN SOOTHED WITH SULPHUR

Mentho-Sulphur, a pleasant cream, will soothe and heal skin that is irritated or broken out with eczema; that is covered with ugly rash or pimples or is rough or dry. Nothing subdues flary skin eruptions so quickly, says a noted skin specialist.

The moment this sulphur preparation is applied the itching stops and after two or three applications, the eczema is gone and the skin is delightfully clear and smooth. Sulphur is so precious as a skin remedy because it destroys the parasites that cause the burning, itching or disfigurement. Mentho-Sulphur always heals eczema right up.

A small jar of Rowles Mentho-Sulphur may be had at any good drug store.

BELLE THEATRE

Cecille Evans, the Titian-haired beauty, known as the girl with the $10,000 legs, who had the part of boss of the mountaguins in "Figs Leaves", is Jeanette, the French maid, in "Whispering Wires." Fox Film version of the stage mystery which thrilled millions of theatre patrons and which is now showing at the Belle Theatre.

When Miss Cartwright, the steno grapher, calls in private detectives to solve the mystery of the whispered threats of death to her employer, Trixie Drew, detectives, answers and brings with him Cassidy and McCarthy. Cassidy is the assistant private detective. Mort Strain plays the role. Arthur Houseman is McCarthy, the second assistant. While Mrs. Cartwright explains to Drew about the mysterious messages which the wires carry, the second assistant detective discovers Jeanette at the same minute Jeanette discovers the first assistant. Jeanette prefers the first assistant because he is a "a magnificent brute" and the two assistants to the detective spend the greater part of their time trying to divert the newspaper-mine career for their beauty's affections.

Other than Miss Evans, Swain and Houseman, the cast includes Anita Stewart, Edmund Burns, Charles Clary, Otto Matieson, Frank Campeau, Myron Kehn, "Heinie" Conklin, Scott Welsh and Frank Sellon.

REGENT THEATRE

The smash and drive and power of "The Isle of Retribution", which comes to the Regent Theatre today for 3 day engagement, is due to the implacable way them elements themselves. Supervised ex serted by a cast which is headed by Jabez Rich, and directed with fine sense of standing of its dramatic possibilities by James Hogan, the splendid F. B. O. production surges along to the most thrilling fight at a climax ever caught by the camera. The battle between the bugs "Doomsday" ensues in a big boat race and the flashing speed of Ned Comet, the young society hero who has become head end under the big search lights, is spectacular and magnificent to the extreme

Victor M'Laglen, Robert Fraser, Mildred Harris, Kathleen Kirkham and David Torrence are all perfectly cast, as are the minor roles. The story is an adaptation of the Edison Marshall novel, done brilliantly by Fred Myton.

SEED CLEANING PLANTS

An absence of efficient seed cleaning machinery and convenient paints has had a depressing effect on the production of registered seed grain in Canada. To overcome this hindrance the Cereal Division of the Experimental Farms has given close study to various types of cleaning machines and established both at the Central Farm and at the Branch Farms cleaning plants of the best types. These plants are being used not only for the cleaning of the seed grown on the Farms but they are placed at the disposal of farmers for a fee sufficient to cover the cost of operation. This service last year at the Central Farm at Ottawa amounted to the cleaning and grading of more than 6,000 bushels of seed grown in the Ottawa district. So gratifying is the work done by these machines that a number of the farmers have established for themselves and neighbourhoods seed cleaning

OPEN CAMPAIGN AGAINST PETTING

Young Men's and Women's Christian Association Advise To Practice

New York, Dec. 31.—A quiet, person to person, drive against "petting" is underway by the Y.M.C.A. Y.W.C.A. and kindred organizations.

There is no "war" or passive against the frivolous practice nor is any sensational campaign planned, social workers for the organization declare, but they acknowledge that educational work is being carried on persistently to eliminate that phase of youth who considers themselves more to be petted than cultured.

And not all of them agree that petting is an unmitigated evil. Mrs. Eleanor Wembridge, woman referee of the Cuyahoga County Court, Cleveland, believes that petting is not dangerous as regarded in certain circles as a social asset.

"Whether they pet or not," says Mrs. Wembridge, "college girls as a rule hesitate to have any one believe they do not. Since petting has lead to no harm, most girls say they must pet or be left behind."

There have been rumors here of a general campaign to be waged by the Y.M.C.A. against petting, but workers of the organization declare these reports grew out of a popular demand for republication of an article in a "Y" magazine by Dr. Max J. Exner on "The Question of Petting." Dr. Exner, head of the American Social Hygiene Association, says in it that "the essential harm of petting lies in the fact that it is a replication of a low order of love."

"The best we can do," said Dr. Exner, "is for us adults to point out a thought ful view to the younger people in the country. We cannot attempt to coerce them into any course of action whether for or against petting. It is to be great ly deprecated that there has been referred to as a problem of petting as an isolated phenomenon. It is bound up with the whole problem of sex and social relationships and must be met in a large educational way."

The Y.M.C.A. is meeting the problem in ways learned, through a special group called the faculty relations commission.

Under the National Student Council, a joint Y.M. and Y.W. committee, containing more than 200,000 young people an attempt is being made to relate the problem of social relationship to the problem of religion.

Three thousand delegates from various "Y's", composed of men and women students, will gather during the Christmas holidays at Milwaukee to discuss religion and life. One of the topics to be discussed will be "What makes a student a flapper? a sheik? a woman chaser?"

Mindful of the clamor against "immodest" dress, characterized as an "outrage" by Pope Pius at Rome yesterday but they are placed on the market of problems will be discussed.

Charles Golding was fined $5 at Leighton Buzzard for thrashing his ten-year-old son with a plaited whip.

A valuable paten stolen from the altar of Holy Trinity Church, East Finchley has been found in Hadley Woods and returned to the vicar.

Osgoode village was endangered when a general store caught fire. Volunteer bucket brigade finally mastered the situation.

Seven eclipses scheduled for the coming year, according to Prof. Edwin Frost of University of Chicago.

An Old Fashioned Christmas Dinner

In the merry days of long ago, there was no sight more joy-inspiring than the stately Christmas Board that groaned beneath the weight of good things. We read of these things and we even see them on the Christmas cards, but how many of us actually gaze on them in solid fact? Very few indeed; yet here is an opportunity to glance upon such a veritable table as it appeared no longer since than last Christmas Day. It was put on at the Chateau Frontenac, Quebec, and was so superb a work of art that it seemed almost a pity to eat the dainties that figured on it. You can gaze your fill on the magnificent Boar's Head, the stately Baron of Beef and the beautifully colored Pheasant with head, wings and flashing tail complete. Do not get the idea that these good things are merely an artistic representation in candy. They are honest, real-to-goodness what they purport to be, namely, Christmastide good cheer and by this time they have gone where all goodies go sooner or later, but their memory like the fine things, nor will they be forgotten for many a long day by the guests that paid their compliments to them at the Chateau Frontenac.

BELLEVILLE MAROONS OPEN THE SEASON IN BRILLIANT STYLE BY TRIMMING BROCKVILLE TEAM 3-1

Murray's Sensational Work in Nets Kept Score Down

FIRST O.H.A. GAME

Goyer Played Great Game at Centre—Frontenacs Here Next Week

Belleville Intermediates opened the O. H. A. season auspiciously on Saturday night, in the arena when they took the Brockville team into camp by a score of 3—1 in a close and exciting game. A bumper crowd of cash customers found their way over to Gar Arnott's mausoleum of frozen water on Turnbull St. and none of them was to the wicket to ask for their mazuma back. If after the fracas was over. The class of hockey dished up by the gladiators was a marvellous one considering that it was the opening fixture. Both teams displayed practically mid-season form and the play was fighting fast from bell to bell. The future for Eddie Thomas' hockey team this year shapes up as a mighty promising one. The Eastern aces brought up a well-balanced aggregation from coal to ashe, and will make a big bid for the group honors. There is not a weak link in the whole make up of the squad.

In justice to the Maroons it must be said that they deserved to win by a larger score. With the exception of a bout ten minutes in the first period they had all the best of the play and had it not been for the sensational work of Murray in the visitors nets the Islanders would undoubtedly have been beaten by at least five goals. This boy protected his net in every conceivable manner. He kicked, batted, and threw aside the proverbial million shots and has improved plenty over his last years form although he was one of the leading netminders in the group. Murray went to his knees time after time to save as he was left unprotected when Belleville forwards circled the defence. He deserves a heap of credit for his work.

Brockville are also especially to be fortified in centre ice. Kennedy is one of the sweetest-looking privt men to grace Belleville ice this year. He can skate fast, is clever with the stick and can drive the puck home with bullet-like speed. Kennedy is pretty in touch and early days centre position.

PLAYER INJURED

tion to perfection.

Kennedy was quite badly hurt in the first period in a peculiar manner when he struck his head on the iron goal post and was laid low for the eye. He did, however, gamely return to the scene of action at the opening of the second period.

Another boy who was going good all evening was Dick Higgins the visitors right-wing. He made a most dangerous nuisin into Belleville territory. Dick is a veteran of veterans and has been playing hockey so long he has lost count but as yet does not have to take a back seat to the younger opponents, his presence on the line-up was wonderfully to steady the youngsters on the team.

The defence, Sheridan and Woodcock are a sturdy pair and looke to be stonewalls. The latter scored Brockville's only goal.

Amell right wing for Brockville played only he can remedy his roving tactics the time, this boy looks like a comer if and will be with them shortly.

The Islanders are as a whole a nice team. They worked hard all evening hon towards the finish they were pretty well fagged out.

Joe Saunderscock their star defence man was not in uniform as his playing and has not yet been received but Joe has always been one of the mainstays ed his team and was quite a class to the rest. The whole game scored ceaselessly and tirelessly and are looking better at every appearance. They got the rail-birds sitting upon their chair early every game.

"Chily" Goyer, Hibland and "Soup" Goyer were the goal-getters of the even ing.

AS SHIFTY AS EVER

"Gilly" at centre ice had one of the hardest men on the ice to watch, but he out-played him at that. "Gilly" drew more than his fair share of applause with his pretty work. His old-time fake-shot had the Brockville laddies bewildered at times. He was one of the two goal-getters of the team last year and from present indications he is due to repeat his performance this year.

His two flank men "Stan" Haszeman and "Dan" Whalen were going great. Both of them played rings around their opposition and that it not been for the superior work of Murray, would have buzzed a couple of goals each. Daw was right in a position to take the puss every time he was handed one and was driving his bullet-like shots at Murray with mighty force.

Haszeman was conspicuous with his ever-prevalent back-checking tactics. He worried Higgins into the ground with his persistency.

Frank Goyer and "Bill" Green form the same impenetrable defence. The both of them slowed the Brockville players up several times with stiff body-checks. "Soup" had some tough luck when he fell a couple of times after he had practically beaten the defence. "Bill" has not yet reached the peak of his form but will come around with a few practices.

Higgins tried to step into "Soup" on one occasion but the Brockville player bounced off like a rubber ball.

"Benny" Bohan is good but not have as much to do as Murray, but nevertheless he turned aside plenty of hard shots. He uses both his body and stick to advantage and makes sure that one of his own players is given the puck after a shot on the goal. Manager Thomas has found a boy well able to take care of this position.

The two subs, Frechette and Hibland were used frequently and gave a good account of themselves while on the ice. "Benny" was shifted back to defence where he worked smoothly. "Bunny" is not through yet by a long ways. Hibland is the same incessant poke-checker and should be one of the finds of the season.

The ice was in good shape. A flood having been put on after the skating was finished in the afternoon. There were a few rough spots but for the most part it was ideal.

Harold Farlow of Toronto handled a fine game. There was little that escaped his watchful eye.

Play opened fast with Brockville on the defensive. Murray saved beautifully on several times. He was literally bombarded by Maroon sharp-shooters, but stuck to his guns. "Mort" Kennedy playing Nine Brockville combination on a lone effort went to the goal mouth but Bohan went to his knees to block the shot. Hopman and Daw were unfortunate but the pass went into the corner. "Gilly" grabbed a loose puck at centre ice but the visitors were defensive pair hauled up his effort. Green was given the gate for tripping. "Gilly" again went down but baby luck was not with him when the puck came to the boards after he had practically beaten the defence. Brockville with the odd man advantage picked Cooke with Belleville protecting their goal. Kennedy suffered a peculiar accident when he struck his head on a projecting piece of steel and cut his head quite badly above the eye. He was carried to the dressing room for repairs. Higgins was sent to centre ice and Frego took the wing position. Frego shot but the puck hit the post. "Gilly" and Daw went down together but their rush was made useless by an offside.

"Soup" and "Benny" eluded the forwards to beat in on the defence but the combination was broken up before any sense sensational stops in a melee in front of the net. Higgins let one fly but Bohan handled it. Frego shot but never it aside. Hibbard who subbed Haszeman was checking like a fiend.

BROCKVILLE—Hopman scored. "Soup" was penalized he Farlow for an alleged trip although it looked entirely unintentional. "Soup" grabbed a pass from Daw and beat the defence pair but shot wide. Frechette replaced Green on the defence. Haszeman and "Gilly" connected in a break away but the latter was skated into the corner. Woodcock batted one in from five feet out to open the second but the rink's pass out from the corner from Frego. "Dew" sailed through and tested Murray with a long shot at the end of the first period

Brockville 1; Belleville 0.

2nd Period

The Maroons made an assault on the Brockville goal upon the resumption of play and Murray was forced to make a number of times to protect his goal. Lawrence Goyer scored the equalizer on a lovely effort, alone.

Bohan turned them aside. Whalen took "Gilly's" pass but the Brockville goalie was there. "Daw" was given a penalty for tripping Kennedy. A scramble ensued around the Brockville net as the play closed. Final score, Belleville, 3 Brockville, 1.

CORNWALL OPEN SEASON WITH WIN OVER OTTAWA

Cornwall, January 3.—In one of the best matches seen here in a long time the Cornwall O.H.A. team defeated the Rideaus of Ottawa, 3-0, in a holiday feature Saturday. The squads battled through two scoreless periods of brilliant hockey and fully equired 14 minutes of the final session to gain the winning tally. The score came as a result of a neat combination rush by Gillie, Tilton and A. Conland, the latter netting the counter.

The teams went the full time at top speed, playing faultless hockey individually and in combined play. The work of both goalers was exceptional.

GAME PROTESTED BY BOSTON MANAGEMENT

Boston, January 3.—The National League hockey game in Toronto last Thursday, which the Boston Bruins lost to St. Pats, has been protested by Chas. F. Adams, president of the local team.

Adams, in a wire to Frank Calder, president of the league, charges that Cowlett Deaneny, star forward of the Canadian team, was ineligible to play because he already was under contract with the Saskatoon Hockey Club. Deaneny failed to report to Saskatoon, but is still their property, Adams said.

SOX ALLOWED TO WIN AMERICAN LEAGUE IN 1917?

"Swede" Risberg Alleges Tigers Threw Final Series of Season

Chicago, Jan. 3.—The baseball scandals of 1926 were continued into the new year tonight with disclosure of a fixed series back in 1917.

Charles A. "Swede" Risberg, one of the banished "Black Sox" of the 1919 world series scandal, gave an affidavit to Commissioner K. M. Landis, describing a four game series which the Chicago White Sox first and the Detroit Americans, as the Sox would win and capture the American League pennant. Those four victories, on Labor Day, 1917, and the Sunday previous, gave the Sox fourteen victories in a row.

The White Sox contributed $45 apiece to raise a pool of $1,100, Risberg said, which was given to the Detroit team, principally pitchers, to "slough" the series to the Sox.

The scheme to get the Detroit team to lay down in the series, which began that way, 1917, was first broached to him, Risberg told Landis, by Clarence Rowland, then Sox manager, and now an American League umpire. Rowland managed the Winning Sox-ons in 1919. All the members of the Sox team contributed to the $1,100 pool for Detroit, Risberg said.

SportOgramS

By The "Observer"

After a summer of dormancy the basketball fixtures are making their presence known. The first unofficial opening of the local season will take place on New Year's morning when a team composed of the old boys will journey home for the holidays will clash with the aspirants for the local intermediate O. B. A. A. squad. George Faulkner who is in charge of the old boys is rounding up a formidable aggregation while the Intermediates have had one or two practices besides the regular Church League games.

John McGraw is breathing easier these days. The vision of Ican disappeared for the Giants has faded. "Everything is rosy now."

The deal which brought Rogers Hornsby to the team puts the recolored glasses on Jawn's beak.

The team "outpoyed" last season the worst year it has had since 1915, when the team finished in eighth place.

It was the first time since 1916 that the team had finished below second place.

The team has finished below fourth but twice since McGraw's first full year with the club—back in 1903—which would indicate more clearly the depths to which the team sank.

The Giants are not accustomed to playing second-rate ball. The Giants fans are not accustomed to watching second-rate baseball. Why, for a period of from 1917 to 1923 the Giants finished either first or second without a break. Nothing there to teach one to like poor baseball.

Then the Pirates socked them it 1925 and everybody socked them last year. McGraw's team wound up in fifth place.

No reason to expect better work from the same second rate season. So something had to be done.

Elmer Davis, the novelist, writes "It begins to look as if winning world series, and this year they tried ball player could make. Johnny Rawlings was the first outfielder and was sold down the river to Philadelphia; Casey Stengel did as much as one man could do with a world series and was sold up the sound to Boston; McNeeley, of Washington, won a world series, and this year they traded out seven men for his job; Mat Carey and Stuffy McInnis won a world series were actuated only by the desire to put their team in a position where it could get another world series. Regrets Hornsby, won a world series—and for Rogers Hornsby and his owner does his best to make sure that he will never do it again by selling him to Boston. That is not secret that the much-abused young man in Chicago who threw the 1919 world series were actuated only by a prudent desire to safeguard their jobs?"

WHAT'S NEW

(From a Woman's Standpoint)

Puree de pois, a kind of yellow olive tone, is exploited prominently by an importer of dresses recently returned from abroad.

A recent London bride wore a silver brocade gown embroidered in gold thread and she was attended by two small bridesmaids in sapphire velvet replicas of her gown and six pages, all under six years of age, whose picture suits of white velvet doublets bordered with ermine were threaded with pirate ruffs with paint daggers and blue hose completed their costumes.

Jane Regny declares that women are going in for sports wear more than ever. Some of the most prominent stores in New York are increasing their orders for knitted and jersey sweaters every day. And each season there have been an increasing number of buyers from England, France, and other countries in general. Bunny, in the French market for sports costumes.

In the two-piece blouse frock a great deal is being done in Paris with blue and green, and the over-blouse of the light navy blue, for example, the same gown scored for spring by Chanel, will match the pleated skirt, while with this will be worn a full-length coat of a harmonizing tone of green, the lining matching the frock.

At a recent London hunt it was noted many women had forsaken the side saddle, of which Princess Mary is a professed adherent, and were riding astride, and there is a growing use of colors in riding habits, and where it was the quiet thing to wear all black or dark blue, many women are now wearing brown greys and cinnamons.

Mr. W. J. Hume is now Vice-President and General Manager of Hiram Walker's Limited, according to an announcement made last night.

The officers elected are:—H. C. Hatch, President; President Gooderham & Worts, Limited; W. J. Hume, Vice-President and General Manager; F. E. Meredith, Director of Flour Mills of America, Inc.; F. Wellington Hay, President Hay Bros. Limited, and Percival Hunt, Limited; W. Harold Mara of Mara-McCarthy; Harold F. Marriott of Oaler & Hammond; J. R. Brokers' allotments were made yesterday and will be announced today. Only about 40,000 shares are being issued in the brokerage. It was stated last night that the amount available for the public had been over-subscribed about ten times.

The management and Board of Directors is entirely Canadian, with the exception of Mr. MacLeod, who lives in Scotland. The board is as follows: Including Directors H. C. Hatch; who has made quite a success of Gooderham & Worts; Limited, and W. J. Hume, who has been until recently a director and distillery manager of Canadian Industrial Alcohol Company,

Hiram Walker's, Limited, will own the entire capital stock (with the exception of directors' qualifying shares) of Hiram Walker & Sons, Limited. The Hiram Walker business was commenced in 1858. The plant is located at Walkerville and covers 15 acres, including nearly 1,000 feet bordering on the Detroit River, opposite the City of Detroit. The company also supplies water to Walkerville, Sandwich, Ford City and other border towns. The company has on hand a stock of approximately 4,000,000 gallons of matured whiskey, which is equal to the stocks held by all other Canadian distilleries combined.

The completion of this deal marks the end of the Walker business from the United States to Canada. After the transfer of the company the directors and control of the stock will be entirely Canadian. Two of the directors of the new company are also directors of Gooderham & Worts, Limited, but the deal involves no merger or connection with any other distillery.

HUSKY TARS TO BE LADIES' MAIDS

Portsmouth, Jan. 4.—Blue jackets will act as maids to the Duchess of York and her two ladies-in-waiting, Countess of Cavan and the Hon. Mrs. John Gibson when H. M. S. Renown leaves here Thursday with the Duke of York for his tour of New Zealand and Australia. As women ordinarily are horrid on warships, the present voyage will set a precedent in British Navy.

There will be no female servants to look after the wants of the Duchess and her ladies as the Admiralty has decided that Jack Tar, handyman that he is, is very well qualified to run things as they should be run on the high seas. This even includes hair dressing.

The Duke will represent the King at the opening of Australia's new capital, Canberra on May 9.

PREM. BRUCE GETS BIG WELCOME AT TORONTO

Toronto, Jan. 4.—Premier Stanley M. Bruce, of Australia, arrived in Toronto by special train from Ottawa this morning and left immediately for Government House. The premier is enroute to Australia after attending the Imperial conference at London, England.

He visited the grounds of the Canadian National Exhibition this morning and will receive the honorary degree of LL.D from the University of Toronto later in the day. He will address Canadian Club this afternoon and be the guest of honor at a dinner tonight which will be given by the Ontario Government. The Australian Prime Minister refused to make any statement when interviewed by the Canadian Press this morning.

The Australian Premier was met by Premier G. Howard Ferguson of Ontario, who accompanied the party around the exhibition grounds. Mr. Bruce showed great interest in the various buildings and was especially interested in the cattle building. The party after wards motored to the Government House before leaving for the Canadian Club luncheon.

KIWANIS NEWLY ELECTED CHIEFS TAKE THE CHAIRS

Included in the list are:—Harry Greenleaf, Vice-Pres.; Cecil Gordon, Treasurer; George Griffin, Secy-Treas. The executive will consist of—Clergadon Cooney, Bernard Cole, Bob Gorman, Fred Malott, Peter Maclaurin, Bernard Collins and Russell Wemp.

Not the least interesting item on today's programme was a short talk by Mr. Hardy, of Toronto, and addressed to Dr. Gordon Bates on the Social Hygiene Council of Canada. Mr. Hardy briefly outlined the work of the Hygiene Council, which in the wide sense aimed to educate the citizens and through the parents—the boys and girls, to the necessity of a proper understanding of sex matters, with a view to the prevention of venereal diseases, and the development of our young people into healthy happy citizens. The speaker stressed the absolute necessity of family love and confidence between parents and children, if this is to be accomplished. The Social Hygiene Council is at present arranging for a series of educational hygiene lectures to be given shortly in Belleville. Mr. Hardy appealed to Kiwanis to assist in the work being done by the Council.

MEANEST THIEF ROBS THE BLIND

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 4 (By Canadian Press).—One of the meanest of thieves made his appearances among the Christmas shoppers in a downtown department store yesterday, when an old lady was the victim, being robbed of a small change purse containing $2.25, all her money. She was being led through the store by a relative, purchasing presents for some grandchildren, and when in the elevator, the thief opened her hand bag and drew out the small change purse. In a near state of collapse, she was led into police headquarters.

Roaring Flames Frustrated Further Attempts at Rescue

Noth Bay, Ont., Jan. 4.—Left behind when his parents were forced to flee in their night attire from their apartment over the general store of John Whitton at Monteith, which was totally destroyed by fire, Philip, only son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Grenier, was burned to death early New Year's day. News of the tragedy reached here this morning. In confusion Mr. Grenier believed that the maid was carrying the little boy, who was recovering from an attack of pneumonia, from the house, but it was the little daughter which the maid rescued. Efforts were made to reach the boy but were frustrated by flames and smoke.

RAILWAY MAN IS OPTOMISTIC IN HIS FORECASTS

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 4.—If railway earnings can be regarded as a barometer of general conditions then Canada is in as good a state today as she has been since the war said Horace C. Grout, general supt. of the Canadian Pacific Railway today. Mr. Grout's territory extends practically over the nine provinces. He illustrates them all as prosperous and in most cases doing greater business than they have during the last few years. Several new industries will establish themselves during 1927 and there are several working locations in Ontario for the development of agricultural resources at the present time. Given a greater flow of immigration Canada's prosperity can be quickly quadrupled he retarded. He feels that the war's aftermath of deflation and trade restrictions have run their course. His railroad handlings show greater foreign demand for Canadian products. This increase is particularly noticeable in respect to forest and mine production.

TO BOB, OR NOT TO BOB WORRIES BEAUTY SHOPS

New York, Jan. 4.—The annual campaign against bobbed hair was started by beauty shop owners in a convention here today. Long hair can be dressed more becomingly and with more individuality than short hair, the speakers said. Bobbing is neither practical nor necessary to beauty and should be abolished forthwith and forevermore, it was resolved.

"The worse crime committed in the name of beauty is bobbed hair," Mrs. Ruth J. Meurer, head of the National Hair Dressers Association, said in her address. "For several years now women have been going about looking like Mary Pickford or Irene Castle. Their short hair has not been kept in curl, but constantly straying in wind and rain and dust. Then there are those who will be coquettish by frizzing their hair all around until they look like a Pill Hauler or a cedar mop."

COTTONWOOD IS SENT TO ORIENT

Vancouver, Jan. 4.—(By C. P.)—A new trade with the Orient has been started in British Columbia lumber, when a recent shipment of 500 cottonwood logs was sent to South China to be made into matches.

The initial shipment is being watched with interest, as it is considered a good market may develop in the Orient for this class of wood which meets with little demand in the building line.

Mexico City, Jan. 4.—Special dispatches from Puerto, Mexico, say that the British schooner Caiman, from Havana to Belize, British Honduras, with a cargo of whiskey was wrecked in a gale at Punta Gorda. ROTARIAN DADS EAT OUT WITH THEIR OWN SONS

Yesterday the Rotarians who had come took them to luncheon—those who hadn't any of their own borrowed one or more, if they could, and the rest paid a fine. It was a merry party, during the capacity of the Quinte Hotel dining room.

Rev. Charles E. Bishop gave a talk, certainly for the youngsters, but one containing much for Father to think about and the old man enjoyed the whole affair more than the kiddies. Mr. Bishop's address was nicely tinged with humor but it touched seriously on the right mutual relations between Father and Son. He emphasized the vitalness of men retaining the confidence of their sons and that when the boy reaches the world's problems he would turn naturally to his father for advice and encouragement.

Many men have the unnecessary sorrow of seeing their boys turn out failures from lack of parental training.

The youngsters frankly enjoyed the novelty of dining out with Dad and sing ing at the table more than the speaking but they got something too from the speaker to carry away.

The Committee reported that 23 Christmas cheer baskets had been delivered to unlucky families. Each year this work grows in volume. Next Monday the three local service clubs, Rotary, Kiwanis and Y's men will meet together for lunch at the Y.M.C.A. building.

WILL GET MEDAL FOR SAVING LIFE

Vancouver, B.C., Jan. 4.—A striking function will take place at Revelstoke on Friday evening when Trainman Lloyd Bennison of the Canadian Pacific Railway will be presented with the Royal Canadian Humane Association's honorary testimonials for his bravery in saving the life of C. E. Nance, station at Shuswap Lake on March 17th.

Mr. C. Murphy, general manager of the Pacific lines, will make the presentation and will be supported by the Mayor and leading citizens in addition to C. A. Cantrell, general superintendent for the British Columbia district and J. D. Fraze, superintendent.

REVELSTOKE

It will be remembered that the freight car in which Rogers was riding was derailed west of Revelstoke and went into Shuswap Lake. His cries of help were heard by the crew of the Bennison, without hesitation jumped in among the floating timber and after considerable difficulty rescued the man who had one of his legs broken and was helpless. It was dark at the time and the rescue was effected at great risk to Trainman Bennison's life.

KING'S CHAPLAIN SAYS INNOCENT PARTIES SHOULD NOT BE BANNED

Chicago, Ills., Jan. 4.—Churches of the world must stand squarely for Christian monogamy but divorce and remarriage in church should be possible in worthy cases in the belief of Rev. Dr. G. A. Studdert Kennedy, chaplain to King George. All countries must relax, Kildare, the family if they are to meet the divorce evil, he said.

"On the other hand," he added, "I am opposed to the present attitude of my church with regard to innocent parties. I would not throw down the bars to divorced parties, but I am convinced that in certain cases in which the church can establish the innocence party they should be permitted to remarry.

The note received appeals for correspondents for this Belleville so far from home, and the text of the appeal is—

SOCIAL HYGIENE COMMITTEE NOW ORGANIZED HERE

For several years there has been felt in the city the necessity of having such a committee to carry on the work of the Canadian Hygiene Council in this city and through the efforts of the Rotary Club, Dr. H. D. Hardy secretary of the Ontario Council in Toronto was obtained to address two meetings in yesterday, one in the afternoon to representatives from the following organizations gathered at the chamber of commerce, V.O.N., Kiwanis, Rotary, Y's Men Club, Y. W. C. A., Girl Guides, Women's Canadian Club, Catholic Women's League, W. C. T. U., Council of Women, and Hon. Mrs. Bond, after hearing of the work that was being accomplished by the Canadian Council it was decided to elect the following committee.

Pres.—Dr. V. Blakiee.

Sec'y-Mr. Ray Mann.

Com.—Mrs. Col. Pinton, Mrs. J. Kerr, Miss A. Hurley, Mr. Jack Macleod.

In the evening Mr. Hardie met with another group of ministers and school teachers in the Y.M.C.A.

It was felt by those attending these meetings that a series of public meetings should be arranged between now and summer at which some of the best speakers on the subject will be brought to the city, also that literature, books and pamphlets should be kept where they could be easily obtained.

"PUNISHMENT" UNKNOWN IN THIS NEW SCHOOL OPENED AT WEMBLEY

London, Eng., Jan. 4.—(By Canadian Press).—The first school for children of any schools—Wembley Hill Council School, Highroad, Wembley—was formally opened a few days ago by Lord Lytton, chairman of the Middlesex Education Committee. The school is divided into "houses" on the public school model.

Sticky children of Wembley Hill! They are to go to school in which Middlesex Education Committee have incorporated all the newest ideas in design, furniture, health and happiness.

The building is a model of what a school should be. Every room gets its share of sunlight, and there is heating of the barrack-like atmosphere of the average elementary school. There are no monotonous rows of fixed desks. The "houses" have separate little tables and chairs, and the senior boys and girls sit four at a table.

There are many baths where every child can have a bath once a week. The children, dressed in little cubicles, ranged round the wall, and then step on to "duckboards" under the warm sprays. No child who has a bath will thus conquest of the private has been given.

An unusual feature of Wembley Hill, which is a mixed school of boys and girls, is that it is directed by a woman, Miss A. J. Hayes, A remarkable personality, she has been very successful at other schools and it is hoped that she is going to do the same thing at Wembley. The school is divided into "houses" on the public school model.

The head lady disciplines of the old-fashioned kind. This word "punishment" is not known in the school. Miss A. C. Evans, headmistress of the junior school strongly objects to the word.

"What we aim at here," she says, "is to get everything possible out of the child rather than to force every thing possible into him. The mere giving of information is not education."

ONE WAY TRAFFIC ANNOYS DEALERS

London, Eng., Jan. 4. (C. P.)—In order to minimize the truly appalling traffic congestion in the centre of London, a system of one-way, or tyrannic traffic has been instituted at certain busy centres. In Trafalgar Square, for instance, the traffic is only allowed to proceed in one direction. This system has proved successful in minimizing many trailers. It is having a serious effect upon their business and as a result the value of property is alleged to be declining.

In the Haymarket, for example, there is decided resentment by the traders at the abolition of the one-way traffic system. Sir Walter Gibbons, head of a big movie house there, declared such streets are now being converted into miniature motor-racing tracks, since drivers have so much freedom.

FUR FARMING ON PACIFIC COAST

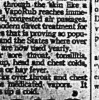

Victoria, B. C., Jan. 4. (By C. P.)—Raising mink for fur or as a side-line to a general farming business is the pursuit of J. A. A. Rainsford, of Lulu Island who, seven years ago, brought two pairs of the little animals all the way from Quebec and now has a large colony of them. He finds the Quebec skins to be superior to those of the species indigenous to the Pacific Coast and he manages to obtain prices for them three and four times as high as those paid for other grades.

Mr. Rainsford feeds his minks fish. He also breeds muskrats on an extensive scale and finds that the two species can be raised satisfactorily even when confined closely closely confined. He has found that muskrats get along well with out water to swim in and that unless not conditions provide this facility, it is better to do without artificial provision.

KATHERINE LUTHER WAS GEN. WOLFE'S FIRST AND ONLY LOVE

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 4 (By C. P.)—Private Katherine Lowther, afterwards Duchess of Bolton was the financee of James Wolfe. For a great many years the real identity of Katherine Lowther was lost in uncertainty. There was never a portrait of the lady who loved a soldier, and history only knew of her charms by repute. A Canadian, however, who finally solved the mystery of Wolfe's first love, and only love, and Dr. A. C. Doughty, the dominion archivist, knows where lies the only authentic portrait of Wolfe's fair lady.

Delving into records and relics, letters and documents for material for his "Conquest of Canada," Dr. Doughty came across this phrase in Wolfe's last will and testament.

"I desire that Miss Lowther's picture may be set in jewels to the amount of five hundred guineas and returned to her."

Writing to a friend Miss Lowther said: "I knew not that my picture was to be set in jewels. I beg you to tell Mrs. Wolfe and entreat her to take her own time about giving the necessary directions. I cannot as a mark of his affection refuse, it; otherwise I would ultimely spare myself the pain of seeing a picture given under for different hopes and expectations."

In 1759 Katherine paid a visit to her sister, the Countess of Darlington living in Raby Castle and in all probability left the portrait at the castle. It had always reminded her of the tragedy of her life's romance. As the years passed, the picture became a family heirloom.

Katherine never claimed it again after she became Duchess of Bolton and it was handed down from generation to generation to become in the present day and generation, the property of Lord Edmund the present occupant of Raby Castle.

FENG'S ARMIES SHOW BENEFIT FROM TEACHING

Peking, Jan. 3 (A.P.)—Marshall Feng Yu-hsiang, the pride of the missionaries in China as an outstanding example of the Christianized Chinese, undoubtedly has exerted a good influence upon the thousands of young men who have constituted his army.

Whether the amount of instruction he has been able to give them really has implanted in their minds any conception of the Christian religion, is uncertain. But his efforts at teaching his soldiers the rudiments of clean living and morality obviously have borne fruit.

Habits Corrected

Smoking, obscenity and dissolute habits of all sorts are tabooed under the rigid rules enforced. The value of athletics and of bodily cleanliness has been emphasized. Industry and a Co-op for learning have been established.

Mottoes of the purport that "He who will not work does not deserve to eat" and "Knowledge and industry Are the roads to prosperity and happiness" were painted in large characters on walls and gates around the barracks.

The men were given religious training en masse and at intervals baptized in the Christian faith in lots running into the thousands.

Better Fighters

ATA the time of the battles between Peking and Tientsin, which resulted in Feng's evacuation of the capital, these troops, most of whom theretofore had done no serious fighting, stunned Foreigners and Chinese alike by their courage and the loyalty they showed toward their officers.

Marshall Feng physically more nearly meets the current conception of a distinguished military leader than any other high Chinese officer. He is over six feet in height and weighs more than 200 pounds.

WRIT IS ISSUED AGAINST DAILY STAR, TORONTO

Canadian Performing Rights Society Limited Claims Violations

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 4.—(By Canadian Press).—The Canadian Performing Right Society, Limited, in a writ issued against The Toronto Star Printing and Publishing Company, Limited, demands an injunction restraining the defendants, its officers, agents, servants and employes from performing in public any musical work or works or any part or parts thereof, the sole right to perform which in public is owned by the plaintiff, and particularly a certain musical work known as "The Piper of Love," composed by Molly Carew, and from broadcasting any of the said musical works from the defendant's broadcasting station in the city of Toronto known as CFCA, or otherwise, and from infringing the copyright in any such musical works, and for damages for infringement of the plaintiff's copyright in the said musical works by the broadcasting thereof by the defendant."

The specific selection complained of in the writ was one of a number of items on a program prepared for The Star by local musicians and given by them, says The Star in its news columns.

The action against The Star is merely one of a number of suits already brought and being brought against some radio stations in Canada and Canadian and also to other suits taken and pending against theatres in Canada.

Importance of Music

It is of great interest to the general public for the claims involve an extension of the popular conception of copyright. It is not a question of recognizing also of copyright material but merely the public performance of such material. The whole subject raises interesting legal points.

The radio stations, theatres, churches, concert hall and other places affected dispute the claim of the Canadian Performing Right Society, Limited. If its contentions should be granted it would be entirely radio stations, theatres, concert halls churches halls and other places where music is performed would have to pay fees for the use of the repertoire claimed by the Canadian Performing Right Society, Limited to be under its control. Either this would make musical entertainment of all kinds more expensive either to the promoters or the public or to both, or it would lead to a change in the type of programme presented and the use of re-

BISHOP RUNS THE 'GRAPES' INN

London, Eng., Jan. 4. (C. P.)—Bishop Rawlinson, of Whalley, Lancashire, is also Rector of Croston. In the latter capacity he has control of a public house, for the Grapes Inn is part of the ecclesiastical estate. Croston in the summer-time is a great resort for pic nic parties. At the Grapes Inn a special ity is made of meals for these parties. On the other side of the road is the Church Institute, which in certain ways is run in conjunction with the public house. The Bishop believes in providing counter attractions to mere drinking, and has accordingly built on the institute in which to provide them. The Bishop says there is far less drinking now than formerly.

15,000 MORE OF MENNONITES ARE TO COME HERE

Winnipeg, Man., Jan. 4. (By C. P.)—Between 10,000 and 15,000 Mennonites will be brought to Canada next year under the plans of the Mennonite Settlement Board, Peter Wiebe, special agent of the board, stated in an interview here. Mr. Wiebe has just returned from a trip to the East in connection with the wind-up of the 1925 program which saw the arrival in the dominion of more than 2,000 Mennonites.

Next year's Mennonite settlers will be from Russia almost exclusively, Mr. Wiebe said. All will eventually be settled by the board on Prairie farms of their own. A few families will be drawn from Mexico, where they went a couple of years ago, direct from Russia.

As to what wealth the new comers would bring, Mr. Wiebe was unable to say as the majority were discreet about giving out information of this nature. For example, he cited the case of the two arrivals yesterday, totalling $60,000 reached Winnipeg recently. This sum had not been thrown approximately $50,000.

RELIC OF R.L.S. FOUND IN BOOK

TORONTO, Ont., Jan. 4 (By Canadian Press).—In a remarkable way, with the life and the writing of the Scottish literary genius, Robert Louis Stevenson, continue to fascinate an ever-widening number of enthusiastic admirers. A Toronto bookcollector had a real thrill recently when, opening a copy of "Robert Louis Stevenson's Edinburgh Days," which he had purchased at a Yonge Street second-hand book store, he found a small photographic print of Stevenson, as a young lad, inserted in the volume. In feminine writing on the back of the print are the words: "With the season's greeting to Miss Mowat—Robert Louis Stevenson, aged six." On the fly-leaf of the book is written: "Miss Mowat, with Edinburgh, 1894."

REV. R. STEWART TALKS TO YOUNG PEOPLE ON LIFE

Just as following the directions on a yeast cake will result in the purest, whitest and best bread; a life world at the same time have equally fine results if life will result in the purest, sweetest and whitest life, Rev. R. G. Stewart told the large gathering of Sunday School scholars assembled in Emmanuel Church on New Years Day for the annual rally of Sunday Schools.

Rev. Mr. Stewart held a Royal yeast cake in his hand and read the directions to the pupils, proving how they would work out in life. The first direction, to soak for half an hour applied in life to one of the hardest tasks of youth —soaking not only for personal cleanliness but to obtain clean minds and souls

The second direction, to cover up and set in a warm place was also difficult and little people often resent the covering up process early in training—the school rooms practising etc., but it must be done if any one wished to rise in the world.

Third add a pinch of salt: There are boys and girls unfortunately who are inclined to use a colloquialism or slang in conversation—the children need a grain of salt to bring them to their proper level of thinking like a fresh child, and all require salt to properly flavor life.

The fourth direction sounds harsh—not briskly for 15 minutes—but the children of the ordeal but as the child advances in age he realizes the truth his mother told him when she assured him that disturbed sleep was better than the child No one can escape the discipline of life and later in life we must be diligent in our duties.

The last direction is for the teachers and parents—mould it to loaves and suffer.

The speaker wondered if the parents and teachers realized the privilege which was theirs in moulding the life of the children. He cautioned them not to let the Church be an iceberg but to make it bright and attractive. He then performed the highest duty in life when one has given a child a chance to rise.

At the bride's home at two o'clock on Wed., Dec. 29th, Hazel Say, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Mitchell, Thurlow, was united in marriage to Clare R. Leavens. Th ceremony was performed by Rev. H Sayers, of Shannonville. There were no attendants.

The bride was becomingly attired in pink and wore silk canton crepe and carried a bouquet of pink and white roses and ferns.

After the ceremony was concluded and congratulations conveyed to the bride and groom, a wedding repast was served.

The groom's gift to the bride was a diamond bar pin, and to the plain lit a silver mesh bag.

Soon after the happy young couple left by motor for a two months' visit in Florida. The best wishes of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances go with them.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES

Two games of handball similar were played on the Y Gym last night, the opening games of the singles tournament which it is hoped will become possession of the Hand ball Cup donated by the Physical Director.

In the first set Jas. Alexander had no difficulty of disposing of J. O'Gorman by the scores, 21-3; 21-4. The second engagement brought together "Army" Armstrong and Ernie Hall, the latter the first set only two games were played. Arm-trong winning both by the score of 21-16; 21-16.

CAPITOL THEATRE

A good crowd at the Capitol Theatre last night witnessed the first showing of one of the newer Warner Brothers feature comedy film production, "Seven Sinners"—a picture that many in town will like. The story centres around the efforts of seven crooks, each trying for himself—or herself, to make away with the jewels of a Long Island home, in the absence of the owner. There is a good deal of comedy in the picture, there are a lot of funny incidents that make you laugh often enough—but there are moments in which it doesn't.

Allen and Francis in a singing, talking and dancing act, made a hit with the audience. Their dancing and singing was good, and their line of comedy was clever and different.

Pathe News and Educational completed the direction of W. H. Burton rendered many of the popular numbers in fine class style.

THREATENED LEW CODY

Fresno, Calif., January. 4—Charged with writing threatening letters to Lew Cody, motion picture actor of Beverly Hills, demanding $3,000, Vern Shannon twenty-one, is being held on a charge of attempted extortion.

PICTON BOY APPOINTED

Ottawa, Jan. 4.—Official announcement is made of the appointment of Ralph O. Campney of Picton, Ont., to the position of private secretary to Hon. James Malcolm, Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Following a short period as school teacher in Prince Edward County, Mr. Campney entered Queen's University in the fall of 1914 as a medical student, but a short time after he joined the colors, serving with the Queen's Hospital Corps in Britain, Egypt and France. At the beginning of 1917 he took out a commission in the infantry and fought with the 15th Canadian Battalion for twelve months. He then took out a policy in the Royal Flying Corps.

SEIZE LIQUOR

Napanee, Jan. 4.—A large Nash sedan car bearing the license number of 351-572 was searched on Dundas street on Friday afternoon with the result that over 225 bottles of choice liquors were found in the car.

The seizure was made by Provincial Policeman Harry Thompson and information was laid against the driver of the car, Mr. Stephen Gerow, Napanee and his son, George, both of Toronto.

The accused were taken into custody and will appear before the magistrate today. This is one of the largest seizures made in some time.

MANY ANIMALS KILLED

Oshawa, Jan. 4.—Thirteen dogs were killed in the streets of Oshawa during December by care, the monthly report of Nelson Baird, Inspector of the Humane Society, shows among other interesting facts. Seventeen dogs were gassed, and four which were either too vicious to be caught, or too seriously injured to be moved, were shot in the street Twenty-one cats were gassed during the month, 27 horses inspected, seven which were of no further use, destroyed, and 43 horses shipped to a Toronto factory where their hides were immediately killed. Seven horses were sent off the streets as unfit for work.

BIG STILL

One of the most complete stills for the illegal manufacture of liquor ever discovered in Peterborough County was seized by W. H. Buller of the Department of Customs and Excise; Lieutenant Joseph Stewart, and Provincial Constable Norman F. Maker, formerly of Belleville, as a result of a raid in Douro Township.

The still is what is termed a "Canadian," and is different to other stills in the fact that it distills whiskey without resorting to a worm.

HOLDS NEW OFFICE

Port Hope, Jan. 4—Mr. Alex Taylor, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. O. Taylor, King street, has been promoted to controller of the Canadian Department Stores Ltd., recently formed merger of 12 large stores in principal cities of Ontario.

Mr. Taylor was born in Port Hope and received his early experience in banking circles, which he left to enter the auditing business. He will assume his new office immediately and will have headquarters at Toronto.

MAROONS ADOPT NEW STYLE OF PLAYING

Montreal, Jan. 4.—Changed methods of attack have been adopted by the Montreal Maroons' Manager Eddie Gerard tried out a new style of relief for forwards while the club was on the road last week and so it is attributed the victories scored over Detroit last Thursday, and St. Patricks on Saturday. Sammy Rothschild and Frank Carson, spare wing players who have had little work previously this season with the Maroons, are the key men in the new arrangement, along with Bill Phillips, tricky substitute centre player.

Instead of relieving one player at a time as in the past, Manager Gerard adopted the policy of sending a fresh forward line to relieve the regulars at the same time. Phillips went to centre flanked by Rothschild and Carson to give Broadbent, Siebert and Stewart five minute brothers. The switch worked so well at Detroit that it will likely be a permanent scheme in the Maroon play in the future.

TODAY'S THOUGHT

Why not make our own be referred to their youth, they become invincible? Keep young.

R. STEELE.

FATHER AND SON

Most men say they, or think they are, to give stock attention to their own sons until too late. Suddenly they discover a young man of sixteen, seventeen, or eighteen in the house who is a good bit of a stranger and with whose habits of thought they are largely unfamiliar. It is pathetic to see a middle-aged man trying futilely to re-establish normal confidences which should never have been broken between himself and his half grown son.

Yesterday at home, the Rotarians took their boys to luncheon to listen to a fine address by the Rev. Chas. E. Bishop, Principal of Albert College. Many experiences of fathers and many families of sons were in the audience. If the parents would take that little talk to heart. "The boy should and would go naturally and confidently to his father for information and advice: the father must never be too busy to be interested nor unable how children's problems occur."

THE ENGLISH WAY

An American paper notices that in the attempt to prevent jay-walking the warning lines are placed on the streets of London are marked in three words: "Please cross here."

It may appear to be a simple matter that the people should be invited to please do a certain thing instead of being forbidden to do something else; but any American paper remarks with some horror that the British people have never succumbed to the "Don't" idea as some other people have. In Germany, for instance the thing is "verboten" or "Verbieten," and that is supposed to settle the matter. Even in the United States, according to the American paper, the people are constantly faced by "Don't" with the result that they have come to expect a "bawling out" every time they step out of line. In England the contrary is to ask people to do the right thing rather than forbid them to do the wrong thing.

There is a distinction and it might be well to take notice of it. Is there not likewise in the tendency on the part of those who plague to secure authority, however brief, to impose their "Don'ts" upon other people? The Belleville idea seems to be that it is better to find people than to drive them.

'TIS TO LAUGH

Summer is to be laugh month in the United States. "Not all the warnings of a heady future. They've tried nearly everything else. There have been "Eat-more-kinds" days and "Don't-believe-the-ads" days, and if one took the time to scrutinize the entire list one would make the discovery that an itchy palm was the common inspiration! National Laugh Month is the bright idea of that inspired society industry. There is to be a veritable flood of editorials officially unlicosed, it seems. The basic idea of Laugh month, we gather, is that if the moving picture people can get the audience laughing for no reason at all they will continue to be convulsed even while watching the film comedies. The modern might have picked out a more appropriate month. January is a month of sniffles, of bowling galas and big fuel bills and only those with badly-developed sense of humor will be able to roll off high percentage barks in the laughing contests. Christmas shopping bills will be falling due and the income tax man will send along his pretty dotted line. There are a lot of things that our American cousins might laugh about, if those things weren't so dread serious. They might find, for instance, at their impolish courts; at crushing-up rum in Chicago; at the new way within the borders of the United States whereby bootleggers are evading the Volstead Act at the installment collectors who are trying to catch them at home. But not one of those things is a genuine laugh subject. Laugh month, we suppose, will come to a screech despite the lack of laugh material. They have the knack of getting the impossible things over on the other side of the boundary line and come any some one might have a real idea and get the people of the United States interested in something vital—like a Respect-for-law-and-order week for instance.

SOMETHING WRONG.

Seven thousand, nine hundred and sixty-two dollars was the amount of money orders sent from the little branch Post Office at the North C.N.R. Station to the Toronto Mail Order Houses during 1926. The figures at the General Post Office are not readily available, but would be several times as much. Add to that the money sent by Postal Notes, Express Orders, and Bank Money Orders and it is not hard to see why the staff of the Bank Cheques and Drafts. Remember that this is being repeated from a score of smaller Post Offices within the trading area of Belleville and bear in mind that hundreds of people are yearly going to Toronto to buy directly from Toronto stores. It all means that many hundreds of thousands of dollars annually are going out of Belleville for ever which could and should be retained to promote the wealth and progress of our own city.

The mail order houses pay their taxes in Toronto—they do nothing for Belleville but skim the cream off our milk.

These are facts—and facts, which have to be faced. And is it the fault of the merchants? Is any one of the merchants? If the ordinary buyer was convinced that he could get in Belleville the same quality of goods at approximately the same price would he or she go to the trouble and expense of a 4-day to Toronto to satisfy their requirements?

The home merchants has a big advantage—he is right on the spot; knows his prospective customer and can talk face to face with him. Belleville stores too, are noted for the wide range of choice they offer and for the general reliability of the goods they sell.

It would look as though they had an idea still to put across—to sell themselves and their services to their fellow citizens—to convince the people of Belleville that they would serve their own best interests by keeping their money at home.

A few store keepers are doing this with conspicuous success. It is worth doing in their own personal interests and in the interest of our city generally.

OTHER MEN'S THOUGHTS

We detect a reaction against the paint and face. It is a masculine reaction. Men are so weary of the standardized mouth for they are of the standardized female eyebrow and the standardized female crop. They sigh for a glimpse of natural lips, natural cheeks and natural eyelashes. They wish that Britannia would restore the permanent wave which makes every woman look like a wash-hair-dresser's dummy. Even the sight of a school-girl's pigtail relieves the monotony of the feminine landscape. And a plump maiden exhibiting her arms that is not by an eternal procession of undersized skeletons.—London England Sunday Express.

Japan has a society for the introduction of modern marriage. The society is combating such old-fashioned and superstitious beliefs about marriage, prevailing in Japan. One of these is that girls born in certain periods which occur once in 60 years are dangerous wives. This is a gross superstition, as we all know that girls born in any period of any year make dangerous wives. That's the reason of the title.—Winnipeg Free Press.

Mandan, N.D., man ups smack in his home and hits terrorized residents trial streets. He killed the chief of police, but was finally captured.

Ritchie's are having a week of Special bargains in Men's Clothing—get your share.

HAVE YOU HEARD THESE?

The small boy was taking part in a vocal concert. He was only seven years old, and recited so well that he was encored.

"Well, Harry, and how did you get on?" asked his proud father when he reunited home.

"Why, I thought I had done all right," replied Harry, "but they made me do it over again."

Judge: "The policeman says that you were travelling at a speed of 60 miles an hour."

Motorist: "It was necessary, your honor; I had stolen the car."

"Oh, that's different. Case dismissed."

He stood at the corner of the street, his sandwich board at the correct balance.

"Hullo, Bill," said his hoarse pal; carry big restaurant now, are yer? Last time I saw yer it was ready-made soots."

"Yoolre right, Jerry. I'm always changing. I 'spose I'm one of them 'eer 'oos soule."

THIRTY YEARS AGO
From The Intelligencer Files of

The New Year has started with many reports of does poisoned. The police are investigating.

The second annual sociyhly of the sergeats mess of the 15th Batolion proved a great success. Mr. Jas. Grow was master of ceremonies while the reception committe was composed of Quartermaster Mills, Sol Sergts. Marsh, Sergt. J. Petty and Orderly Room Sergt. J. A. McFee.

It is stated today in police court circles that if this city solicitor does not place a chair in the police court that will make less noise the Crown Attorney will use his best endeavour to have the city Solicitor indicted. The one chair in the police court is grabbed always by the local town reporters forcing the big rulers to sit on the table. The Crown Attorney will investigate.

HAMILTON HAS A CLOCK TO TELL WORLD TIMES

Hamilton, Ont., Jan. 4 (By Canadian Press).—A cable from Berlin, Germany, a day or two ago, carried the news that a clock had been perfected there, which showed the time in a dozen of the world's capitals at a single glance, but today it was learned that there is a similar and even more complete time-piece in Hamilton. It is encased in a 14-inch square frame and is the property of John Duncan, 250 Prospect Street. Scores of people have seen it. Mr. Duncan made the clock and constructed the idea more than 20 years ago, but he finished it just about a year ago. It is on a smaller scale than the one reported to in the Berlin dispatch which has been installed in a railway station at Friedrichstrasse. The Hamilton inventor believes that he has improved on the German timepiece for his dials, which bear the names of the countries of which the time is given, do not move and, therefore, they are never upside down. Another feature is that one-half of the disc is white and the other black and thus daylight or dark is shown in the different places, too. Every 24 hours are shown, with the correct time of each. Iceland, Rio Janeiro, New Zealand, Lisbon, London, India, Rome and others appear. One can readily tell by glancing at the clock the hour of day in these particular places.

BELASCO HURT IN AUTO CRASH IN N. Y.

New York, January 4—David Belasco theatrical producer, was injured when his limousine skidded on the wet pavement of Riverside Drive near Dyckman street and collided head-on with another heavy machine carrying a party of men in evening clothes, who had been seeing the New Year in.

The producer, who is in his seventies was painfully, although not seriously hurt. It is expected he will be kept in his bed for a week or ten days.

Alba, King of Spanish burglars, who was arrested on the frontier after his 87th known crime faces five centuries in prison terms.

Two Windsor men and a Detroit girl were killed when their sedan stalled on the C.N.R. tracks near Face.

FUSSY WUSSY DIED IN HIS OWN BED

Osman Digna, whom Fuzzy Wuzzy "arrick 'ead of 'im" was immortalised by Kipling, died a few days ago, aged 90, at Wadi Halfa. He had spent 24 years in prison, more than 20 years in irons, treading and round years fighting. His father was a Scottish sailor, or Beetlebub. Perhaps he had an Arab mother, perhaps his father's mother was a Park. Nobody is sure.

At Suakin, on the Red Sea, Osman and his brother Joseph, about 1870, were the proprietors of a prosperous merchant business. A show belonging to the Khedive was captured by the British ship "White Swan." The cargo of "black ivory," valued at £5,000 was confiscated.

Osman devised several years to travel in the Sudan, became allied with the mahdi; assumed the title Osman Digna, "man with a beard"; and won the Mussayah Arabs to mahdism. This was a blow to British hopes for penetration of the Sudan, for these Arabs blocked the only route from the Red Sea to the Nile, by way of Berber to Khartoum.

In October, 1883, Osman annihilated two companies of Egyptian infantry in the Gulf road. A second British commander Moncrief, the British consul, and the majority of the force of 500 men under him were killed near Tokar. In 1884 the Egyptian government sent 4,000 troops under Valentine Baker against Fuzzy Wuzzy. There were 1,400 survivors.

The next force dispatched against Osman consisted of a scratch British force under General Sir Gerald Graham. Although defeated in two battles at El Teb and Tamai, Fuzzy Wuzzy stirred stiff resistance. At Tamai, the mahdis bloody natives nearly won the day, succeeding in breaking that otherwise invincible door of a hut. He died in bed.

SOME SUPERSTITIOUS

Even illustrious minds have not been free of superstitions, says a writer in the London Daily Mail. Shelley would not visit Melrose Abbey after dark because of his dread of the bogies and ghosts lurking there. Peter the Great would went to take a lofty step upon crossing a bridges. Napoleon had a horror of black cats.

Most superstitions are but the essence of paganism. Fear of the evil eye, and of the unknown, are widespread, was a prime inhibition of early man.

The beginning of the superstitious attached to the unlucky number of thirteen are obscure. In Paris one house bears a number 13—and try to find a sailor anything but 13. Napoleon was said on the thirteenth (particularly if it be Friday). The origin of this superstition has been traced to Scandinavian mythology. Baldur the Fair, whose twelve companions until Loki the sinister intruded himself, making the thirteenth. Loki caused the death of Baldur, the god of light. Because of this, we are told, thirteen became a figure of ill omen.

Cats, even black ones, have not always had a bad name. In ancient Rome the cat was the symbol of liberty, and in Egypt the cat was sacred to Isis or the moon. However a medieval superstition held that Satan's favorite disguise was that a black cat—and hence the black cat was the confidant companion of witches. Therefore it was to be shunned.

Pliny believed that one could see the will of the gods reflected in a mirror. Therefore if one broke a mirror it meant that the gods had willed it so because he held misfortune. The Romans believed the health of a person changed every seven years, as the moon reflected the health, or appearance, of the years it meant that he was to be out of health for that period.

In oriental countries salt was proffered to guests as a token of hospitality, and any attack fell to the ground when being offered it was an omen of ill-luck. Salt being strewed by the gods he who partook it incurred their anger. But the Romans stumbled upon the antidote for this misfortune: if he who spills salt throws a pinch of it over his left shoulder with his right hand he averts all evil consequences.

The superstitions concerning sneezing date back to the beginning of history and have been many and fanciful. To some peoples it was a sign of good spirits—to the Greeks, Romans and Egyptians it was an oracle warning of impending danger or good. Sneezing to the right meant good luck; to the left, disaster. Pope Gregory the Great during the sixth century established the custom of saying "God bless you!" when anybody sneezed. During his pontificate a plague raged, throughout Italy that proved fatal to those that sneezed. The Pope ordered prayers against it, accompanied by signs of the cross and a benediction.

GERMANS ARREST "SPY"

London, January 4—An Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Cologne says that the recent Germany Spy sensation in Paris now has a counterpart at Essen, where Herr von Isaar, for many years a trusted employee of Krupps, was arrested on a charge of espionage in behalf of French interests.

Part of the present irrigation system in Salt River Valley, Arizona, was built by prehistoric Indians.

Sailor Prince Back Home Again

His Royal Highness Prince George, youngest son of His Majesty the King, has been sheep on Canadian Pacific steamship Montroyal as the ship arrived at Liverpool. The Prince has spent eighteen months on Naval Service in China and recently passed through the Dominion from Vancouver to Saint John in order to join the Royal Family for the Christmas holidays. The Royal Sailor had little time for celebration in Canada as he had only just time to make connections with the east-bound ship, but while in the Dominion received a number of old friends from the days when he was a Midshipmite. The Photograph shows from left to right, Sir George McLaren Brown, European general manager for the C.P.R.; H.R.H. Prince George, and H.R.H. Prince George.

CITY LEAGUE MAY NOT FUNCTION UNTIL FEBRUARY

RECREATION BOWLING

Bowling started in real earnest last night at the Recreation Alleys when three leagues got under way for their winter schedule and judging by some of the scores rolled there will be more than one record broken before the season is over.

The senior league is going to be the best that has taken to the alleys for some time, there being 10 teams in this league and all evenly matched, this being the aim of the alley management to give all teams a fighting chance, also the junior league being in the same pool as with the Belleville Motors and the Alemite in senior Olympia it will give the other teams a better chance. In the senior league all but three teams are in again with two new ones added and if this league will run as close as the fall years it is going to be a humdinger. The following are the results of last nights games.

The Alemite girls started out to break the alley record in there opening game rolling 2833 against Deacons 2186, the Alemite going all four points, ordinarily with the score that the Deacons rolled we would be enough to win at least two points.

A new team in the ladies league were the Clare and they started out with four points to there credit against the Optimi Girls although the latter took a new team this season they are by no means new bowlers as they have bowled for some time.

In the Mens Junior league another new team was on the alleys namely the Intelligencer and the way they started out to stem the Durant Motors in the first game was a shame, but also they weakened badly in the second and third games to give the Durant Motors three points. E. Doyle for the Intelligencer and Corrigan for the Motors were the best bowlers.

The Rovers and Carthage were the only senior teams and like the above game the Rovers won the first point, but lost the next three. T. Morrell starring the day for the Carthage with 263 and 276 score in the second and final game for a total of 695. H. Salisbury being next in line with 660.

Ladies League

DURANT MOTORS—Mohor, 492; Hopsing: 483; F. C. Lee, 518; Corrigan, 529; J. White, 438. Total 2460.

INTELLIGENCER—Bonnell, 513; Bland. 197; Curry, 207; Draycott, 454; Kemp, 503. Total 2213.

Senior League

ROVERS—Taylor, 531; Barrage, 527; Brulen, 484; Dickens, 583; Salisbury, 603. Total 2701.

CARTHAGE—Morrell, 695. Atkins, 502; P. Cornell, 430; Phillips, 387; Yerex, 382. Total 2307.

In the prize competition at the Recreation Alleys for the Deacon spiel bonnet the Deacon boys kindly donated Mrs. Lesnuk holds the highest five string score with a total of 1462 as follow, 317, 289, 297, 300, 279. While the Mens 301 doubles Miss Cuyer and C. Cornell are high with 1402. Cornell having 635 and Miss Cuyer 575.

The Cisco Club of the Industrial Alcohol Co. Limited had an enjoyable bowling Tournament Thursday night at the Recreation Alleys.

REGENT THEATRE

Roaring with drama like the surge of the sullen, ice-bound river that spilled doom for the straining schooner as she crushed crazily into the icebery, was swinging to a whirlwind fight at the climax with a great bruiser of a man but tiny his fighter foe while his leg a caught in the crotch of a giant boulder. "The Jaks of Retribution," one of the most spectacular and rugged pictures ever screened, is playing now at the Regent Theatre. In behoving anyone who has already seen this smashing show to "catch it" before it departs for climes unknown. A wonderful cast is headed by Lillian Rich. Robert Fraser, Victor McLaglen, David Torrence, Mildred Harris, Kathleen Kirkham and other gyps splendid support.

BELLE THEATRE

The stage lost a fish-and-distance when all the urgent request of Douglas Fairbanks, Marguerite De La Motte signed a contract to appear in his support in "Stella." She was coming to Los Angeles theatre when Fairbanks saw her and made up his mind that her forte was the movies. Thus are screen stars born.

Miss De La Motte, who is featured in "The People vs Nancy Preston," a Producers Distributing Corporation release which will be shown at the Belle theatre tomorrow, is a charming actress and Fairbanks' confidence in her ability was fully justified. After "Arizona" came the "Three Musketeers" and "The Mark of Zorro." Since then she never has looked back and has established by her abandonment of an art which already had captured Southern California.

In "The People vs Nancy Preston" Miss De La Motte finds the finest work of her screen career. The story is gripping and the plot realistic. It deals with a girl in the Canadian underworld, who is striving to build up a new life out of the wreckage of the past and who is living for her little boy who means all the world to her. She is continually hounded by private detectives who give her no peace. The story is thrilling and unpredictable in culmination in a great climax that brings the picture to an unusual but logical ending.

Hamilton Revelle and Robert Girls' senior team and there has been mention of the Ambitious City girls attempting to get into the Intermediate City League, a thriving city for basketball—there are ten clubs of high calibre. This year the Ontario girls have organized a league affiliation with the Canadian association, and there is now the Ottawa Valley organization as a parcel of the eastern Canada territory.

Reports from Edmonton indicate that the world champions in Canada's one of the world's lady basketball champions, still find hard competition. This may mean the breaking up of the team that has so far shown supremacy over the eastern Canada champions. The senior teams in Toronto today would stand great possibilities in capturing world title. The Grids are undoubtedly weakened by the indecision of Conny Smythe, their accomplished basket-getter, about again playing.

RICKARD AFTER TUNNEY

New York, January 4.—Tex Rickard today completed preparations for breaking an attendance record in St. Louis for the purpose of signing Gene Tunney for the defence of heavyweight championship of the world in New York next September.

It will start late tomorrow. The promoter will be accompanied by a large retinue of associates and newspapermen in dicating his confidence that the trip will accomplish its purpose, and as he put it, "see the boys something to write home about."

BUTLER RENEWS PLEA FOR AMPLE DEFENCE OF U. S.

Says New American Navy Will Be Needed at Cost of $400,000,000

Washington, Pa., Dec. 31—Renewing his plea for "adequate national defense," Representative Thomas S. Butler, chairman of the House naval affairs committee, asserted that the United States would have to build virtually a new navy, "and it is going to cost us more than $400,000,000."

Representative Butler, who is spending the Christmas holidays at his home here, said the would make a big fight in the session by Congress of the navy affairs committee's program.

Race is On.

"There is a new, high-speed race of naval supremacy between the nations, and we are not in the race," said Mr. Butler. "When we scrapped more than $500,000,000 worth of, the finest warships of the designed, that were built or building, we virtually gracefully abdicated ourselves from the potential position of mistress of the seas. Now we are a poor third, and likely to be fourth.

"I and the other city that we had been fooled out of $500,000,000 worth of ships. It is the truth and I am bitterly humiliated by it."

Makes Comparisons

England has already built 40 cruisers of under 10,000 tons, her 13 building and three projected, a total of 56; Japan has built 18 and is building six, a total of 24. The United States has built 10 is building two and has appropriated for three, a total of 15. England's tonnage in these cruisers aggregates 322,200; Japan 156,000 and ours 125,000, who's all we recognize. In addition to these England has authorized three light cruisers, totalling 30,000 tons, each year for the next three years and that makes 78,000 tons more.

"It will require 60 ships of war to bring us up to our place; it will take $400,000,000, or maybe more. The present army and navy part expires in 1932. Whether it will be renewed and upon what terms it can be renewed depends upon what potential naval strength we can show at that time.

"So we have got to build up—as have

DELORME PISTOL IS STOLEN FROM MORGUE MUSEUM

Weapon Which Figured in Murder Trial Among Firearms Taken

Montreal, Que., Jan. 3—Abbe Adelaid Delorme's 25 calibre Bayard pistol an outstanding relic of one of Montreal's principal mama celebres, has been stolen from its case in the museum of the medico-legal department of the morgue. With the Delorme weapon, were eleven other revolvers, representing the pick of the valuable collection gathered together by Dr. Wilfred Derome and Dr. Romario Poulaine, experts and autopsists attached to the Coroner's Court. The dozen weapons stolen were the most prized articles in the collection, nothing else in the museum being touched.

The theft was committed a month ago and was discovered within a few hours, but authorities have been working silently on the case. The matter was reported to Inspector Mercier, detective head, and fully efforts have since been made to trace the missing articles. The thieves forced the door of the museum, apparently during the night and the theft was discovered in the morning in the manner in which they succeeded in gaining an entrance to the morgue building is parallel to the alcohol.

The building, which is under the protection and jurisdiction of the provincial police, is the headquarters of that body. The basement and second and storey are occupied by the morgue and on the third floor is situated the laboratory of the coroner. The museum is on the fourth storey.

Aside from the Bayard pistol, there was in the stolen dozen weapons the revolver with which Constable Pelletier, of Captain Hindelean's motorcycle squad, shot and killed Harry Stone as he fled from the scene of the $12,00 Hochelaga Bank hold-up on April 1, 1924. The holster also, and the rifle of one of the bank chauffeurs, and later four of the convicted robbers were hanged or the origin.

The constable's gun was an important link in the police activities which proved the arrest of the bandits. Stone's body was found in an automobile in front the scene of the robbery, but he was connected with it when examination of the body revealed the presence of bullets from the gun of the constable.

The Delorme revolver was one of the main features of the Crown's case against the cleric, who was finally acquitted. While the investigation into his half-brother's murder was going on the Abbe informed police that he had a revolver which he always carried in a pocket of his automobile. The discovery of gun-experts in this connection formed a large part of the evidence on two or the three occasions upon which the Abbe stood trial.

The gun was the only relic of the trial kept in the museum. All other articles used as evidence, which were the property of the accused, were returned to him after the trial.

Dr. Wilfred Derome refused to comment on the robbery last night. He declared that the matter had been placed in the hands of Inspector Mercier and the department of the Attorney-General. Dr. Rosario Fontaine was out of town and could not be reached by telephone.

The Pelletier revolver is a standard 25 calibre weapon, and is engraved "Montreal Police."

WAYWARD CHILD

Scientists Discuss Reasons and Cure; Hygiene and Psychology

Philadelphia, Jan. 3.—What is the reason for the wayward boy and girl?

This problem was analyzed by Dr Thomas Verner, Washington, in a paper presented at the general session of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Boys and girls were wayward, he said, because of their mental constitution, because of their home life or extra-mural factors or because their ideas of personal responsibility were lax. Dr. Verner outlined the possibilities of remedying juvenile delinquency.

In regard to the child's mental condition, he pointed out that measures aiming at the elimination of the unfit, for example, by segregation could succeed only partially and should be supplemented by attempts to cure them.

He suggested that the teaching of mental hygiene and modern psychology would be of distinct advantage in training the future parent to the proper mental care of the child.

On charges of robbery Weldon Dewitt, 23, of Columbus, Ohio, received a sentence of 33 to 120 years.

SCANTLEBURY'S

At Belleville for 40 Years

BEYOND ALL DREAMS

By Bertha M. Clay

"Admirably, indeed."

At that moment the outer bell rang sharply. Madame glanced her hands. "Now, nay, the fates send me some more beasties," she cried. "For, indeed, Les Charmettes is his half filled, and rents in Paris are so terrific."

"May the fates befriend you, madame," returned Donald, with a polite bow. He was hurrying through the dark corridor, when a hand the keys, when he encountered a tall, straight-haired lady, enveloped in an enormous cloak.

"Ah! madame, have you three bedrooms and a sitting-room to let for the winter?"

"Mais certainement, madame."

Donald hurried out and found the sandy lady in three minutes. Soon he was in the street, and encountering the freezing breath of the northeast wind Cut into the boulevards were white and stiff with frozen snow. It was the height of the Paris season, and therefore, notwithstanding the inclement weather, numbers of carriages were rolling through the streets—equipages, splendid and rich, gaily caparisoned horses, servants in brilliant liveries. The Paris of the Republic is nearly as magnificent as the Paris of the Empire.

He was bent on discovering a model for the principal figure in his composition, so he looked at the fair faces he met, not expecting at all, on that bleak and pitiless day, to meet the face of which he dreamed.

All at once he started, and thrilled in all his pulses; the fibers of his being seemed to vibrate like the chords of a stringed instrument through which the wind has rushed swiftly. He stood and looked at the face of a girl which struck him as the fairest and the rarest upon earth. Large, liquid gray eyes, with long, fringed lashes; features cast in a mold perfect of its kind, though not belonging to any especial style; the lips exquisite red, flowing in rare straw berries; the tinting pure as the pink-and-white lining of a sea-shell; the hair auburn, abundant, and worn in thick plaits on the shoulders—for the rest, the young lady's age might be eighteen. She was tall and slender, and enveloped from throat to heels in a long gray traveling-cloak; she wore a black hat and feather.

She was not alone; a round-faced French bonne, in a white cap and gray shawl, stood chattering volubly to a coachman, while she counted out the change which he held into her hands. The young lady and the bonne had just alighted from a hired carriage. Donald stood and studied the beauty of the young girl, who appeared profoundly unconscious of his existence and admiration.

"Depeche toi, Marie," she said, in a little impatiently; "it is so cold standing here, and we shall just have time to see the pictures in the Louvre."

It was near the entrance to the great art galleries of the Louvre that the quad en stood.

"The Louvre—then I will follow her," said the enthusiastic Donald to himself. And so he did, cautiously, and at a little distance, so as not to attract the observation of the whole bonne, Marie.

Cautiously, faithfully the painter followed this young creature, who seemed to him in her purest fresh loveliness, like a dream-maiden, a something impalpable and fleeting as the beauty of the sunset cloud, which changes, fades, and disappears, leaving in its place only blank shadow. A model, a model for his ambitious picture—his Desdemona sitting coldly in her lonely chamber, while Emilia "doth unpin her long bright hair;" Emilia with the look of this world upon her handsome face, and Desdemona hanging her lovely head, like a lily bent in a storm, with no great a success in the delineation of her dreamy

He had long sought a model for this Desdemona, who was to combine all the Desdemonas that had ever been painted in pathos, in gentleness, in faithfulness in purity, in the beauty which dwells in the soul and illumines the countenance Here was his model at hand; here was the fine refined, gentle exquisite painted in the fresh tints of early youth; here was the shiny before the morning dew has been brushed from it.

Donald followed the young lady and her bonne from room to room, obliquely in the picture-dealer who owned hundred frames, forgetful also of the distance hour at the Hotel Charmettes; he never once looked at a single picture on the walls; for him the dream-maiden, as he called her, to himself, was the only picture in all the wide galleries of Art.

Now he was close to her, and he heard her voice, speaking always in French and with the pure accent of Paris to her bonne:

"See Vandyke, would one have fancied he had so much power and so much thought? To me this seems but like a gallant of those days, gay and extravagant."

Donald was nearer to his coveted model than he had yet ventured to approach; his was now enthralled by the silvery tones of her voice that he forgot prudence and caution, and found that the lady, shocked by his earnest and fiery gaze, had discovered herself the object of his attention. She colored faintly and moved on, followed by her bonne. But even then Donald could not help following; when she stood again before a picture, he was within a yard or so of her.

"Ma foi, mademoiselle, yonder young man is moon-struck; he has followed us through all the rooms. I have the most set mind to walk up to him and say, 'Monsieur, if you follow me you're lady so, I will speak to a sergeant de ville.'

"No, no, for pity' sake. I think he is an artist, and fancies I would suit him for some model. I see he has a pencil in his hand; he did not mean to insult me, think. Nevertheless, let us hasten up nge and hire a carriage, else mad monsieur will avoid if we keep the dinner waiting."

And then Renfrew saw them hurrying backward to ward the entrance.

"Oh, I will find out where she lives and her name before I sleep," said the ardent youth to himself.

Pretty as a Picture in Her Dance Frock

BUTTERICK 1131

"Over its lace berths rippling to the waist line at the back, this lovely dance frock is worth itself. The full skirt, dipping low in the back, is very popular with the young miss. The panel effect in front and back, with the close-fitting upper part, have a very slenderizing effect. Taffeta is an excellent material for this frock, making the shirred side sections stand out. Radium, Georgette, crepe de Chine and crepe meteor are also very effective." The ribbon flower that holds the two berths together in front should be of a color contrasting with the dress.

WHAT'S NEW

(From a Woman's Standpoint)

Paris likes the new cormaine, which is like georgette on the one side and like satin on the other.

Some New York society girls who wear picture frocks carry out the old-fashioned idea by wearing jewelry to correspond —elaborate gold necklaces in festoon arrangement matched by pendant earrings.

Among Lanvin's wardrobe for Mlle. Yvonne Printemps for her American trip, a striking novelty appears in a frock comprising a white crepe jumper, a navy velveteen vest, and a pleated plaid skirt, and this costume is completed by a black velvet beret.

A new fashion in debuts that is quite the rage this winter in New York is to have one girl presented at a dinner dance, and then have all the guests move on to a supper dance given in honor of another debutante.

BRITISH WARSHIPS ORDERED TO CHINA TO PROTECT FOREIGNERS

Situation Grows Hourly More Serious—Will Embark Women

OUT OF CONTROL

Attempting to Provoke English to Violence as Excuse For Attack

Hong Kong, Jan. 5.—British warships Vindictive, Carlisle and Wishart have been ordered to Hankow. All available British naval forces at Shanghai have also been ordered to proceed at full speed to Hankow, it is reported. All women and children at Hankow, are believed to have been instructed to embark in readiness to leave Hankow.

Appeals For Aid

London, Jan. 5.—Frantic appeals for more land and naval forces are being made by the British community at Hankow to the British Government. The foreign office says the situation at Hankow is fraught with the gravest danger, but it is felt that the British authorities on the spot will be successful in averting armed conflict.

The situation is considered easier by passing of the responsibility for protection of the order at Hankow on the Chinese authorities.

The foreign office says Hankow disturbance is due to Cantonese agitators attempting to provoke the British to sure force, thereby stirring up another crisis in order to embarrass Britain's newly declared policy of conciliation".

Situation Serious

Peking, Jan. 5.—Official dispatches from Hankow, where the British colony is being besieged by thousands of infuriated coolies as the result of anti-foreign agitation, show the situation is growing increasingly serious and indicate angry natives are out of control of the Chinese military forces which undertook to maintain the order. Despatches report the situation "very discouraging" and that Bandi the provincial governor is now for the Britishers, is "unsafe for foreigners".

The British armed forces, feeling it would have been impossible to hold the masses back without firing, retired, leaving the concession in charge of Cantonese troops.

WALKED 3½ MILES

Carried Baby to Safety and Returned For the Children

North Bay, Jan. 5.—Fire starting in the festive decorations at the home of Leo Dorval, mileage 66, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, caused the death of his three year old son, Leo. Six other children, ranging in age from 18 months to 15 years were badly frightened when they were forced to walk 3½ miles from the fire to a railway section house. On Sunday the father took his wife to the hospital at Temiskaming, leaving his daughter, Irene, 16 years, in charge of the six children at home. She rescued five of them when the fire broke out but was unable to find Leo. Carrying the baby in her arms, the girl walked to the section house leaving the other children in their night robes, at the door of the first house she reached. Returning to the home and led the remaining children to safety, although all were badly frost bitten. Irene herself was badly frozen when found his home completely burned out. Nearly crazed he walked to the section house and found the baby suffering intense pain from their exposure.

Realizing that medical attention was necessary, he started walking twenty miles walk into Temiskaming, no trains being due until the morning. He arrived there exhausted and collapsed and was sent to the section house immediately to bring the children into the hospital.

The news was not received until today.

'AL' SMITH URGES CONGRESS TAKE SOME MEASURES

Governor of New York State Wants "Harmless Beverages Restored"

Washington, D.C., Jan. 5.—Governor Smith in his annual message to the New York State Legislature, today urged that Congress be memorialized to take action to the end that "harmless beverages which our people have enjoyed for more than a generation may be restored to them." Some of the leading commercial users of industrial alcohol, which has been banned for many recent deaths, came to the defense of existing denaturing formulas as "protective alike of governmental and lawful business interests." While advocating modification of the Volstead Act, Governor Smith said that until such modification is effected "the strictest vigour be put into as much the laws of New York State as any state statute and must be enforced. Meanwhile, prohibition discussion continues to expand as plans go forward for the annual meeting here tomorrow of the citizens committee of one thousand for law observance and enforcement, at which its dry issues is expected to figure prominently in the discussion.

STOCK MARKET SHOWS STRENGTH

Buying orders were spread over a broad list with practically all issues except the railroad equipments and coppers participating in the upswing. Speculative interest centered largely in the motors.

A Heaviness of Pullman, which sold down over three points, was in the other reduction of a relatively poor November earnings report, while the backwardness of the coppers may have been due to a drop in brass prices.

CITY SHOCKED TO LEARN OF THE SUDDEN DEATH OF MRS. R. J. GRAHAM

TRIBUTE

(From Rev. D. C. Ramsay, Pastor John Street Church.)

The news of the death of Mrs. R. J. Graham comes as a great shock to all her friends. Mrs. Graham was a woman of splendid Christian character who used every opportunity to help make life fairer and sweeter. She will be greatly missed by all those who were associated with her in her many good interests. The deepest sympathy is felt with those of her immediate home, who mourn the loss of a loving wife and mother.

Touring the World With Husband and Children When Stricken

3 DAYS OUT

Apparently, the Grahams Were Coming Home Before Expected

Belleville was shocked this morning to learn that Mrs. R. J. Graham had died suddenly and unexpectedly on board the steamship "Niagara" on Monday, enroute to Vancouver and presumably about three days steaming from port.

The only information the family here have of the death of their mother is a brief radio message from Mr. R. J. Graham which was received about midnight last night. No details were given.

Mr. and Mrs. Graham left Belleville on October 1st last, for a world tour which, it was hoped, would last until the coming June. The were accompanied by their son and daughter, Robert Bruce and Miss Grace. The happy family spent a week in California, then a short time in Hawaii, Samoa, and the Fiji Islands and on to New Zealand.

In Good Health

From New Zealand, the children here had letters, telling of the pleasures of the trip and of the excellent health enjoyed by the whole party. Leaving New Zealand, the Grahams toured Australia. On December the 9th, Graham wrote from Sydney that they were leaving for Colombo, Ceylon, in a few days to visit that island and see something of India, after which they would go to Africa. Apparently the trip was cut short at Sydney, the family taking steamer there for Vancouver sometime before Christmas. Mrs. Graham died before the vessel reached Canada.

Popular With All Classes

Belleville has no citizen more widely beloved, and respected than the late Mrs. Graham. Her circle of close personal friends was large, but outside of that she had a host of warm interests and private philanthropies which brought her into touch with all classes of citizens. Hundreds are grief stricken at her loss.

She was an active leader in church work at John Street Church, giving generously of time as well as money to this work. Apart from organized charities her helpfulness extended personally to scores of less fortunate

Manufacturing Progress Reflected in Increased Membership

Winnipeg, Jan. 5.—1926 will be recorded as a year of marked progress in the manufacturing annals of Western Canada," T. N. Clayton, chairman of the prairie division of the Canadian Manufacturers Association stated today.

"The trend towards industrialism is becoming stronger," he added. "New industries have come in gratifying numbers, and those already established have generally during the year, added considerably to their position and achieved development.

"The general advancement is reflected in the growth in membership of the prairie division of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, which will commence the New Year with a membership of 600, upwards of 80 members being enrolled the past year.

"Especially noteworthy has been the growing realization on the part of the consuming public as to the importance of increased payrolls to the community and to the fact that the home-produced article from a standpoint of both quality and price merits purchase.

"Manitoba's industry now represents a capital investment of over $125,000,000, has a payroll in excess of $25,000,000 and gives employment to 14,000 persons. We are looking forward to greater progress during the coming year, and hope to share in a prosperity that will extend to all sections of the community."

TORE HIS HAND

Marion Shaneberg of Cokeoach, 28 years of age, was the victim of a painful and unusual accident yesterday afternoon. He was drilling a well at Ashesburg when the hook used in the excavation work swung while Shaneberg was holding it and catching his right hand tore it terribly. The injured man was brought to the city by Dr. Victor Tull and Dr. J. J. Robertson found it necessary to put in several stitches.

HALF FOOT SNOW

Five and a half inches of snow which fell in the storm of yesterday and last night brought out an army of snow shoesthers and the traffic was held up at any time. The temperature varied between 15 and 20.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE AS OUR ANCESTORS KNEW IT

Most of us unconsciously feel that we have always had the English language, save an exchange. But look at the following sentence taken from the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle for 1137:

"The gaere for the king Stephne ofer sae Jo Normandi, and ther wes fiohtenegas, forsihdan! hi unandon that he scolde ben alsuic eloe the cun wes, and for he badde gat his treasr; an hi fodeldi it and scatered sedlice."

The sentence is in the English language—the English language such as you would have faced if suddenly thrown back into "Englande" of the twelfth century. Of course the passage is quite oblique, meaning "This year went King Stephen over the'sea to Normandy and was received there, because they thought that he was going to be just such as his uncle was, and because he still had his uncle's treasury; but he dispersed it and scattered it foolishly."

Don't be misled by some of the words that look familiar. They are not what they seem. That innocent looking "for" means "went" and is cognate of the German "fahr." There are many words which are related to the German. "Uuaren," meaning "were," needs only the "w" for the literal un and we have "waren."

"Sworn" is spelled "snoren." There are many forms of "evil". "Yfel" in days—"yvele," "ifele," and "uvele." all occuring within 30 years, followed closely "vvel" and "wvele." We find the German form "ick" for "I" and this degeneration in later years to "ich" and then the present form "I."

The word "whog" evolved "tha," "thaanne," "whan," "thare," now "then," "when," "there."

MANY REGISTRATIONS

While the registration at night school, which opened last evening in the High School, was not heavy, a large number turned out for the first classes. Dressmaking showed the heaviest registration while millinery holds its own for applicants wishing to study the craft. The only change in the staff is the appointment to the roll of an instructress to take the place of Mrs. Carman, formerly Miss Fenton.

WEDDING BELLS

SNIDER—EMBURY

At the United Church Parsonage, Shannonville, on Wednesday, Jan. 5, 1927, the marriage was solemnized very quietly of Gordon Burton Snider and Martha Elizabeth Embury, both of Melrose. The ceremony was performed by Rev. H. F. L. Seymour, their pastor.

The attendants were Miss Mabel McLaren, of Melrose and Mr. Franklin Snider, of Belleville. After the ceremony the bridal party left on a honeymoon to be spent in Toronto and other Western cities.

SEAL OR SALMON IS THE QUESTION

Victoria, B. C. Dec. 31. (By C.P.)—Which is more valuable—the fur seal or the salmon? Which is the more easily dispensed with by humanity? Which one, if threatened with depletion, should be allowed to go?

This is the problem which has arisen in the North Pacific as a result of the claims of fur traders that fur seals are decimating the salmon, most important of all food fishes in this part of the world.

Since the enforcement of the pelagic sealing treaty in 1911, sealing has been restricted, except in the case of natives, to the Pribylof Islands of Alaska, where the slaughter is under the close supervision of the United States government. It is estimated that this protection has permitted the herds to increase to 2,000,000 head of seal.

It is a conservative estimate that each seal kills twenty-five pounds of salmon every day", said one veteran fisherman. "That means that the Pribylof herd destroys 50,000,000 pounds of salmon daily—more than as much salmon as is canned for the whole world. Hundreds of thousands of dollars is spent yearly to propagate the salmon. Yet the seals are allowed to prey upon them to that extent. Salmon has become a necessary article of food. Seal skins are a luxury."

Which should go—the salmon or the seal?

FIRST CHINESE WOMAN PASSES SOLICITORS EXAM

London, Eng., Jan. 4. (C. P.)—One of the happiest women in London is Miss Kathleen Hoahing, aged 23, the first Chinese woman to pass the solicitors' final examination. At the end of this month she will have completed serving her articles up a London firm of solicitors, and will be fully qualified "I want to get out East and start a practice of my own," she said yesterday. "perhaps in Singapore, where I know people who will be barristers." Born in British Guiana, Miss Hoahing was educated at a convent school there, and when she came to England seven years ago finished her education at Salisbury. She words she studied for a time at an agricultural college in Kent, and then became articled.

Before she goes out East, however, she will make a tour of the world. Much of her spare time is spent in travel. Her mother was the first Chinese woman to become a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland. Her young sister studied as a barrister, but was married before she was called.

LAUNDRIES GET HUGE BUSINESS FROM BIG SHIPS

Vancouver, Jan. 5 (By C.P.)—It is a red letter day for Vancouver laundries when ships come in from the Orient and Australia.

Shipping is one of Vancouver's most important sources of revenue, but the part played by the laundries generally escapes attention when the effect of the ocean ships arrival on business is considered. Every deep-sea vessel that reaches port has a sizeable laundry bill and some of them, such as the big ships that ply between Canada and Australia and China, average $300 or more in their expenditures for the maintenance of cleanliness.

Take the big motorship Aorangi which plies between Vancouver and Sydney, reaches here next Sunday bag and baggage this: 1273 white counterpanes, 264 colored ones, 2190 napkins, 250 table covers, 2022 sheets, 2830 pillow slips, 1000 towels, and sufficient other articles to make 17,294 pieces for the laundry.

LACEWING FLIES WERE SHIPPED TO NEW ZEALAND

Victoria, B.C., Jan. 5.—(By Canadian Press)—Five hundred lacewing flies from the Okanagan country were shipped to New Zealand recently on the steamship Niagara.

In New Zealand, the larvae of the lacewing fly is used to control the aphids, or plant lice, most destructive insects known to the islands. The lacewing is an elongated little creature with six legs and delicate wings and formidable jaws and the sworn enemy of the aphid.

Several unsuccessful attempts were made to import lacewings into New Zealand before British Columbia was called on to send a shipment last year as a result of experiment. On the previous occasion, due to faulty packing, the flies died before reaching New Zealand, but this time British Columbia succeeded in establishing the basis of the aphid. Their good work led to orders for more of them this year.

TIPS TO HOUSEWIVES

Water boils at 212 degrees Fahrenheit; it freezes at 32 degrees.

When in a jubilee hurry place it is wise to flip your overshoes together with a paper clip and avoid a search for one of them when it is time to go home.

Paper clip is small enough to be carried in any sort of bag.

The mother is very foolish who waits until the last minute to get up, and get her children off to school in a grand rush if she starts the day off in a tension for the child and concentrating and sitting still in school come very hard after the nervous turmoil."

The next time you sew with a double thread try pulling the thread through to an even length and then knotting one thread separately instead of twisting them together. You will find the thread will not snarl and knots as when the ends are knotted together.

To a new housewife an unopened fresh cocoanut is at once a puzzle and a mystery. Try this the next time you have one. Place it in the oven and leave it until the shell is hot. Then remove and give it a crack with a hammer. The shell will crack into halves and can easily be opened.

The most effective way of cleaning an iron sink is to rub it well with a cloth wet with kerosene oil.

families, making life easier and sweeter for all with whom she came in contact.

Born in Prince Edward

Mrs. Graham was born in Prince Edward, the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. George Roblin. Her only sister, Mrs. Wm. Delong of Kingsville, died a few months ago and the death of her only brother, Del Roblin, of Bodmerville, occurred in 1924.

Her marriage to Mr. Graham took place in 1887, after which they lived in Belleville. A few years ago Mr. Graham built "Montrose Cottage" out on the Trent Road, where they have made their home latterly, travelling mostly during the winter season.

Mrs. Graham was forced to undergo an operation two years ago, but rallied afterwards and the family were under no apprehension about her health when she left on the tour last October.

She leaves three sons, Robert J. E., George L., and Robert Bruce, and two daughters, Mrs. Jamieson Bone, and Miss Grace Graham.

Mrs. Graham was much interested in the Boy of Quinte Country Club, serving as President of the Ladies' Club for one year. Her influence was always on the side of anything which tended to make life fuller for the community in which she lived.

TO-DAY'S THOUGHT

The future works out great men's destinies.
The growth is enough for common souls,
Who, never looking forward, are indeed
More clay wherein the footprints of their age
Are petrified forever.

LOWELL.

W. J. HUME

While regretting that Belleville, for we count Conbyville as part of Belleville, is about to lose one of her most prominent citizens, the community joins in congratulations to Mr. W. J. Hume on his assumption of his new position as Vice-President and General Manager of one of Canada's big corporations.

His recent with the Canadian Industrial Alcohol Company assures his success in the new field and friends in this part of the province will watch with interest, for his continued rise in the Dominion's industrial life.

But while we wish Mr. and Mrs. Hume all the luck in the world we have not too many public spirited citizens that we can part with any of them without real regret.

PREMIER BRUCE

It is fitting that Toronto, often called the most British city in the Empire and the capital of the loyal province of Ontario should give Premier M. Bruce of Australia a warm welcome. Mr. Bruce is an able statesman and his stand at the late Imperial Conference made this foreigner feel a little envious of Australia.

But if we cannot claim him as a Canadian he is at least a fellow citizen of the great Empire—a cousin if not a brother and so we gladly pay him honor.

SILK BREECHES

There is a movement in Paris to put the grab mule sex into silk breeches, knee length. Jackets of satin and lace would follow, silk stockings and jewelled slippers, and then the ladies would have to look to their laurels.

We are heartily in favor of the suggestion—on certain conditions. In Canada we suggest that Parliament should lead the way in this reform. Let it work from the top down. We have a vision of a Commons and a Senate exhibiting all the virtuosity of the ballroom, all the tact and finesse of a Chateau tea hour. It might be enacted that Senators should wear no silk, and members of Commons blue or yellow; or that the parties should be distinguished by the colors of their breeches, with plain white reserved for the Progressives as emblematic of their matchless politicial purity.

We are told that a man reacts to his attire, and a Parliament so handsomely arrayed could not be expected to give much attention to sordid details of government concerning taxes and branch lines and new fish docks. There would be lofty discourses on ideals, and international obligations, and Empire status. Should any dispute arise, it would be settled not through the pages of a long-suffering Hansard but by the old order of "coming for two and pottes for one."

Only one thing gives us any concern in the matter, and that is the position of Miss MacPhail in this silken Parliament. But clearly it is a case where our legislature must lead the way.

WHAT IS "NEWS"

A New York tabloid newspaper which published prominently on the front page of a recent issue a large photograph showing in ghastly array the bodies of some 27 victims of a Hudson River fatality now prints a correspondent's letter in which the editor's "brutality" is made the subject of harsh comment. "It was news," is the heading put over the letter, and that, of course, is the newspaper's defence.

The British Parliament is enacting legislation which makes it illegal to publish details of divorce cases in the British courts. The evidence in divorce suits is "news," especially when titled or famous persons are involved, but Parliament, with the approval of the mass of public opinion, takes upon itself the responsibility of saying such news shall not be published in British newspapers.

It is said to have been the declaration of a great New York newspaper owner that he was "not ashamed to publish anything which the Good Lord permitted to happen." That is a comfortable rule which would permit of all manner of journalistic indecencies, the editor carefully shifting to a Higher Authority responsibility for the latitude which he claims. Theoretically it appeals to all editors; practically, they know, it is an impossible guide to journalistic conduct.

There is only one safe rule in the matter, and it is followed by almost every Canadian newspaper; the subject which has no place in ordinary decent conversation has no more claim to a place in a presentation of the day's events which is read alike by young and adults. Exclusion of this class of material leaves to the editor's trained discretion an infinite variety of matter—the news reports which are the public's source of information and on which to a large extent, public opinion is based.

SHIP OUT 100,00 LBS. OF HOLLY SPRIGS

Victoria, B.C., Jan. 5.—(By Canadian Press)—One hundred thousand pounds of holly sprigs for Christmas decoration were shipped this season by Victoria firms, one business house alone having filled orders for 60,000 pounds.

Shipments have been made to points as far east as New York and California is one of the most profitable customers. The Prairie Provinces and Ontario are also important buyers of Victoria holly which is now grown extensively whereas a few years ago it was merely considered a sideline.

CANADA TO HAVE BIGGER TRADE WITH JAPANESE

Volume of Business Increased Since Period Following Earthquake

Vancouver, Jan. 5.—(By C. P.)—Canada stands to increase her share of trade with Japan on an enormous scale next year, in the opinion of Canadians and Japanese who have arrived here recently from the Orient

Already the volume of business between this country and Japan has vastly increased since the period following the earthquake, but it would undoubtedly be on much a larger scale were it not for the heavy obligations of the Tokio government and private interests as a direct result of that disaster.

The Japanese money market is prevented from returning to normal by the problem of these "earthquake bills" amounting to approximately $115,000,000, according to advices received by business interests here.

Several moratorium arrangements have been made by the Japanese government since the earthquake to relieve the financial crisis and upon the Imperial Diet met last October a further extension was granted for one year for the discounting of loans up to $20,000,000.

The "earthquake bills" originally were about $215,000,000 and about $100,000,000 of them have been redeemed. In other words, the country is gradually rebuilding its credit and is becoming more and more able to buy extensively in the world markets. Evidence of this is shown in the fact that Japan will be the heaviest foreign buyer of British Columbia this year, with the single exception of the United States.

PROGRAMME OF REBUILDING IS DISCUSSED

London, Eng., Jan. 5 (By C.P.)—The £27,500,000 scheme to re-bridge the Thames, to construct approach roads and viaducts in London, to demolish the present Charing Cross Station, and to construct a tunnel from Dartford to Purfleet is being discussed now.

No report of a Royal Commission in recent years has been received with such universal approval as the report on the bridge scheme and a tribute to Lord Lee of Fareham, Chairman of the Commission has been paid for the practical way in which the problem has been tackled.

The difficulty of finding the money however, is expected to prove the great stumbling-block. The next step rests with the government and the London County Council. After the report has been considered by the Prime Minister, it will be submitted to the Ministry of Transport for technical examination and after that it will come before the Cabinet for final decision.

IF THE "MODERN" CLEANS IT—IT'S CLEAN!

IT'S HARD TO BELIEVE—

—but it's nevertheless a fact, that many people who pride themselves on personal cleanliness wear clothing a whole season without cleaning. Doesn't seem logical, does it?

But just the same, these people don't seem to realize the fact that dark fabrics absorb just as much soil as light ones. The grime is there, even if it isn't seen. It wears away that new look.

And remember—as well—that clean clothes last twice as long—and that clothes cleaned the "Modern" way are cleaned right.

Newsy Neighborhood Notes

FERRY TO CONTINUE

Kingston, Jan. 5.—The Wolfe Island ferry will not serve part of the harbor over the week-end. On Sunday no trips at all were made by the ferry and yesterday morning it was too thick to get over for it has tightened up over the last few days. It will not set over again until March or April.

AWARDED $282

Oshawa, Jan. 5.—Justice Lennox awarded Henry Hazel, Oshawa grocer, $282 damages on a $2,000 claim, at Whitby, by Hazel against George Prior of Oshawa, and his son, Kenneth as a result of his having been in a collision with the Prior car which was driven by Kenneth, February 13, 1926, on King street east. He was allowed $72 for bills incurred, $150 for injuries, pain and suffering, and $200 for loss of earnings, making a total of $422. As Hazel was held to be one-third responsible for the accident, he was awarded but two-thirds of the sum, which was $282. Plaintiff also gets county court costs.

NEW FACTORY

Peterboro, Jan. 5.—This year starts off with a new factory for Peterboro. The incorporation business of J. C. Pooiman, manufacturer of specialties in ladies' wear and art needlework demands more space, and a new building exclusively for this class of work will be erected immediately on Romaine street.

DRANK IODINE

Montreal, Jan. 5.—Rossi Tomasso aged 36, drank the contents of two small bottles of iodine in his room at 4362 Clarke street last night after he had received a letter announcing the death of his father in Italy.

Tomasso now lies in a critical condition at the Notre Dame Hospital with a charge of attempted suicide against him.

INSTALLATION OF OFFICERS

Fort Hope, Jan. 5.—Recently elected officers of Palestine Parceptory, R.A.M., were installed at an interesting ceremony here last Friday night by Right Excellent Sir Knight H. W. Mitchell. Among the officers installed were: Eminent Perceptor, J. Sprazze (Cobourg); Constable, John Blackmore (Cobourg); Marshall, Fred O'Neill; Sub Marshall, W. Youden (Cobourg); Registrar, John W. Sanders; Treasurer, W. J. Robertson; Chaplain, V. B. Coleman; Captain of the Guard, Colin Hamly.

WASN'T SATISFIED

Peterboro, Jan. 5.—"If you are going to give me anything, Your Worship, don't give me less than six months, for give me two years and maybe I'll get a parole up six months," declared a prisoner, in Magistrate O. A. Langley yesterday morning.

The accused, who has been in the hands of the police several times on different charges but "recently had been appealing in the role of a "canned heat" drinker, was arrested Monday for the third time within three months.

His Worship told the accused that the Act permitted a sentence of only three months for this class of offence, but this did not satisfy the prisoner. "Can't you give me four months?" he inquired; the teenage cunning of a jitter among the usual crowd of rail-birds that adorned the back for the court.

"I'm sorry I can't," declared His Worship. "I sentence you to three months in the common jail, and perhaps you can get transferred to Guelph."

HUGE ORGAN

Liverpool, Eng. — The Liverpool cathedral organ, completed recently, is said to be the largest in the world. It cost 35,000 pounds and is driven by motors totalling 35 horse power. There are five rows of keys, 222 draw knobs, 1696 stops and 10,934 pipes. The organ is so large that there are 17 telephones from various parts that are used for communication by the tuners.

JNST A LITTLE "FAG" CAUSES BIG FUSS IN FORD'S MODEL HOSPITAL

Highest Paid Nurse in the World Loses Her Job

SUPERINTENDENT OUT

Over-rode Decision of Nurses Council and Resignation Followed

Detroit, Jan. 5.—Two cigarets in the pretty mouths of student nurses at the Henry Ford Hospital school have resulted in an upheaval unequaled in its history, it developed last week, when it became known that W. L. Graham, superintendent of the hospital, and Miss Katherine G. Kimmick, superintendent of nurses, "the highest paid nurse in the world," are no longer employed there.

Miss Kimmick, head of the school, Miss Jones and Bennett, are also understood to be out in the upheaval.

Whether the dismissal of Graham was a direct result of the ban on smoking by students, could not be determined, Edsel B. Ford nor Mrs. Edsel B. Ford the latter two members of the hospital board, would not discuss the changes. It is understood, however, that the order Miss Kimmick that either the two girls discharged would stay discharged or she herself would go, was the direct cause of her dismissal.

The story as pieced together concerns the discovery of Miss Scott and Miss Bennett, nurses of senior class at the hospital, smoking cigarets in the nurses' home. This is in violation of a rule laid down by Ford, it is said, that no nurse employed there.

The story as pieced together concerns the discovery of Miss Scott and Miss Bennett, nurses of senior class at the hospital, smoking cigarets in the nurses' home. This is in violation of a rule laid down by Ford, it is said, that no nurse employed there.

Miss Kimmick, in deference to the honor queen in force in the senior class called the nurses together and asked what discipline should be applied to the offenders. The nurses voted that they be disciplined severely, but Miss Kimmick disbelieved them. To this, the meeting protested but Miss Kimmick announced that they would be discharged or they would resign. It is said to be a rule that dismissal of nurses must follow action at a board meeting, and in her failing to consult such a meeting, the student's held Miss Kimmick cred.

At a second meeting, the nurses prepared and signed a petition, asking that the management not discharge the girls and not accept the resignation of Miss Kimmick. This petition was presented to Henry or Edsel Ford by Graham.

Miss Kimmick Given Notice

The result was that Miss Kimmick was informed that she should be out of the employment of the hospital. Miss Jones and Miss Bennett were not on duty the next day. Graham's office and that of his secretary were also both empty, as Graham was told that "he is out of the city."

The students were discharged one afternoon and left the hospital immediately. Student nurses are paid $10 a month. The two girls accepted the invitation of a nurse, who has supervision of one floor of the hospital, to live with her.

Neither Mr. Ford nor Mr. Graham would say whether successors had been appointed either for Miss Kimmick or Mr. Graham.

LONDON TIMES MILL

St. John, N.B., Jan. 3.—The proprietors of the London Times contemplate the erection in Canada of a large pulp and paper mill, but the location of this is not disclosed. Such was the statement this morning of Charles Maurice, of the Quebec Pulp and Paper company. Chicoutimi who arrived here from Liverpool. Whether the development would be on such a huge scale as that instituted by the late Lord Northcliffe, at Grand Falls, Newfoundland, Mr. Maurice did not indicate. (1)

QUEEN MARY IS EVIDENTLY FOND OF RACING BIRDS

Released Pigeons For a Race and Gave Cup to Owner Of Winners

London, Eng., Jan 5 (By C. P.)—A pigeon belonging to Cyril Hocking, an East Ham dentist, won the race for the silver cup presented by the Queen in connection with an effort by the East London Amalgamation of Fanciers to assist the London Hospital recently.

Her Majesty herself liberated from the terrace at Sandringham the "eight East London birds competing. They all reached home safely, the winner at the rate of 529 yards a minute. For a quarter of an hour before the Queen sent them on their journey she stood with the King chatting to Edgar Richards, who had brought the pigeons from London.

"The Queen told me," said Mr. Richards afterwards "how fond she was of birds. The King, too, chatted to me about pigeons. He told me he had about 100 in the lofts his father built at Sandringham. He gave a bit to the War Office during the war to carry messages. When the Queen released the birds they circled round the Palace once and then flew straight in the direction of London. Before I left the Queen asked me to write and tell her if they all got home. I think the King is quite a sport, a jolly sort of chap, and I quite like him."

The result of the race was given out at the Drill Hall, Tredegar-road, Bow, where a record number of 1,100 birds, given by prominent fanciers all over the country, were on show. The birds were afterwards auctioned. The shows, which have been held for the last four years, have resulted in over £1,000 being handed over to London Hospital.

A FOOL THERE WAS

"A fool there was and he saved his forks, even as you and I; last he took them out of the old strong box when a salesman called with some whitest steeks, and the food was stripped down to his socks, even as you and I."—The Railroad Trainman.

Frenchman of New Toronto died from poison, presumably taken because Long Branch girl rejected his attentions.

B. C. WILL HAVE TO MEET THE ZINC SHORTAGE

Vancouver, Jan. 5.—(By Canadian Press)—British Columbia is being called upon to meet the world shortage of lead.

The British coal strike and several other economic factors have resulted in a general decline of zinc production, in almost every region where the mineral is found with the exception of British Columbia. This province, consequently is unaffected by the disorganization of industry felt in other parts of the world as a result of the protracted strike; has taken its cue from the drop in production elsewhere and has rolled up a new record for itself.

Sales of zinc however, are generally low everywhere and prices have been rising steadily. Output of zinc in British Columbia has advanced accordingly and the value of the output this year will be approximately $9,000,000. Most of the zinc is being taken out of the Sullivan mine, in the Kootenay, where until a few years ago the ores were regarded as so complex that successful smelting was not attempted.

American and Dutch explorers located a tribe of pygmies in Central Sumatra. Civilized men had never visited them before.

KEEP KIDNEYS CLEAN, DRINK MORE WATER

Eating too much rich food may produce kidney trouble in some form, says a well-known authority, because the acids created excite the kidneys. They become overworked, get sluggish, clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, begin drinking lots of good water and also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity; also to neutralize the acids in the system so that they no long er irritate, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts can not injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to help keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus often avoiding serious kidney disease. (1)

CANNIFTON'S CHRISTMAS TREE

(Contributed)

Our Christmas tree was a success I mean to our two school mistresses. They worked so morn, they worked at night.

So to make sure it would be right

The Angels with their message came, And sang aloud o'er Bethelem's plain. The shepherds' heard the joyful sound. While rested there upon the ground.

And then the infants cradle too With Joseph and His Wife Mary. The wise men came with gifts galore. And placed them there upon the floor.

The Puritans then had a drill, Dressed in plain suits without a frill. Two years and liberty they sought, And held the flags for which they fought

The dialogues they were given with ease, And recitations too were there.

And when the program, it was over, We scattered for Santa Claus to come.

The tree was dressed with greatest care, For many precious things were there, For old and young, for girls and boys. Some things to wear, and some for noise.

At last, was done and we went home. A happy but a tired throng. And may all meet again next Year, And greet each one with Christmas cheer

L. BLACK.

ST. PATS CLIMB HIGHER IN N.H.L.

Windsor, Ont., Jan. 5.—Toronto St. Pats climbed a little in their group of the National Hockey League, but sent Detroit to the cellar of the United States section last night. The Irish won 5 regard game, 2 to 1. Both of the invaders' goals were scored in the second period by Day. Joe Simpson bounced into the net from the assist of Shephard, Detroit's wing, who scored the losers' lone goal in the first twenty minutes.

Roach made several brilliant stops. Late in the second period the Detroiters screamed about the Toronto goal but it could not score. The third period was practically all Toronto despite Detroit's desperation.

New York, Jan. 5.— Ten thousand spectators saw the New York Americans slide into second place in the international section of the National Hockey League by administering a 3 to 1 trimming to the Canadiens of Montreal here last night. The New Yorkers scored a well earned victory in their defensive combination play overshadowing the individual efforts of the visitors. Eleven penalties were meted out, Morenz drawing a major for starting a fight with Himes immediately following Hart's goal in the third period.

Captain Billy Burch and Norman Himes obtained two goals apiece for the locals, Rosie and "Red" Green getting one apiece. Gardiner, Morenz and Hoot scored Canadiens' three counters.

Boston, Jan. 5.—Boston defeated Ottawa, leaders of the National Hockey League, by 2 to 1 here last night in a fast, rugged game that went to overtime. On tonight's showing, Boston was the better team. Connolly, Quinn and Conacher were under fire during most of the engagement.

Ottawa went into the lead in the second period when Clancy went on one of his rampages down the ice and fooled Stewart, Boston net-tender. Clancy's unaided effort netted Ottawa scoring for the evening. As they played defensive hockey in the third period Howarth's and Cooney Boucher's goal was not found and the latter's shot counted the affair. The game went to overtime, and Hewitson's counted the deciding tally on Oliver's pass.

Chicago, Jan. 5.—Pittsburg defeated Chicago here last night in a slow and listless game by a score of 2 to 1.

McCurry scored the winning goal for Pittsburg in the third period when a shot from centre ice struck Goalkeeper Lehmon and bounded into the net. Scores were McCurry, following the shot, drove in the winning marker.

Millis' scored the first goal for the Pirates. Millis, who evened the count temporarily in that period, following a pass from Dye.

MAROONS TACKLE QUEENS-SEXTETTE ON MON. NIGHT

Tricolor Will Send Up Strong Team Led By McKelvey and Legon

Belleville Intermediates with one win under their belts will stack up against the strong Queen's team here next Monday night. The Irosp looks like an evenly-matched one, judging from the scores of the first two games.

The Tricolor led by such boys as Ewart Lindsay, "Red" Legon, and "Chic" McKelvey are to be feared and Manager Thomas is taking no chances and will send the team into the fray in the best possible shape.

"Olly" Guyer is trying out his new tubes and finds them to his liking, by Monday or three more practices the Maroons should be "in the pink". Saturday night's game showed that there is still a few enough speed and flaws were detected and are being remedied.

The Kingston Whig Standard says: "Following the Christmas holidays, Queen's hockeyists got back to practice yesterday, preparing at the Harry Arena, when about twenty players were on the job. Daily practices will be held from now on, with Queen's playing their first O.H.A. game at Belleville on Monday next.

"Coach W. P. Hughes was in charge of the session, but got the team into fast pace while they were on the ice. He had Quinn and Arkley in the nets and both boys showed to advantage. The forwards were "Red" Logan, Howard Reid, and "Ewart Lindsay, Bob McKelvey, Red Macpherson and several other juniors, were also on hand for the workout.

TEN PIN BOWLING

Two games were played at the Y alleys last night, the first game in the Church League between the Bridge Street and St. Michael's, the latter winning three points and the second one. This gives the league to the St. Michael's team. Miss Lafferty had the high single of the evening with 201 and Miss M. Lynch the three string with 466, while for Bridge Street, Miss Brown was high with 347.

In the second game the St. Andrew's and Recreations came together and the Recreations were on the big pins.

In the first game the St. Andrew's were leading by 170 pins but the Recreations came strong in the second and came near to the alley record and put themselves in the lead by 144 pins and this in the same added another 269 to this. V. Weir of the St. Andrew's had the high single of the evening with 318 and T. J. Wray the three string with 749.

St. Michael's—Miss McLellan 436; Miss Dean 401; Miss N. Lynch 369; Miss M. Lynch 466; Miss Lafarty 431. Total 2049.

Bridge Street—Miss Brown 347; Miss Wood 336; Miss Menden 340; Miss Howard 321; Miss Carley 240. Total 1606.

BELLE THEATRE

Said to be one of the most dramatic stories of underworld and police life ever screened, "The People vs. Nancy Preston," with Florence Vidor in the title role in which Marguerite De La Motte and John Bowers are featured, will have its premier presentation here at the Belle theatre for two days beginning today.

The story tells of a man, woman and child who are "framed" by members of a private detective agency, and whose efforts to find honest lives are nearly prevented by the bluffing to which they are subjected. Crimes of which they are innocent are fastened upon them with the result that they find themselves fugitives. The scenes are mostly laid in Sing Sing prison, the underworld haunts of crooks and in a peaceful village.

Miss De La Motte appears as a woman with a past, while Mr. Bowers plays the part of a convict who makes up his mind to walk the straight and narrow path. Frankie Darro, one of the best juvenile players of the screen, is seen as Sonny, the child character portrayed by Miss De La Motte. They pass through many adventures all of which are thrilling and border on the sensational.

REGENT THEATRE

Rocketing to new heights of fame in one of the most colorful roles of his spectacular career, Tom Tyler, will be the Regent Theatre on Thursday when "The Arizona Streak," begins a three day run at that popular picture house. Fox A. E. Fine, one of Hollywood's most promising young authors, responsible for the original story and the continuity for the work of Lane Bartlett. Mr. Fine has turned out the most entertaining athletic that this good looking star has had to date. A fine, delightful, and the hearty laughs with which the title is filled are nicely interspersed with thrilling and breath taking action, and Tyler Vaughn is a charming heroine in the role of Ruth Castleman, while the rest of the cast, which is evidently splendidly picked, is excellent. Bob De Lacey, the young director who produced Tyler out and who has handled him in all his previous pictures, has done an excellent job in directing the production.

"Clancy" Lederman, the former New York Americans star, is the player in mind. Mail and Empire said in the sport columns yesterday.

Lederman, according to those who have seen him in action in several games this season, is one of the best prospect in the King loop and St. Patrick's will do well to land the Mail and Empire says.

UMPIRE SUES FOR $200,000

Kansas City, Mo., January 5.—Ollie Chill, former American Association umpire, filed suit for $200,000 damages today against the league and Thomas J. Hickey, its president, alleging he had been slandered.

Chill alleged that Hickey had given a statement to a Minneapolis newspaper in explanation of the umpire's dismissal, charging that Chill raised a hotel bill from $2 to $16 in addition to his expense account.

JUNIORS TO OPEN SEASON HERE ON FRIDAY NIGHT

Last Night's Practice Indicated Promising Future For Youngsters

The aspirants for Belleville's Junior team turned out in large numbers last night for the opening practice of the season. Nearly twenty youngsters put in an appearance and were divided into two groups.

The ice was chipped quite badly and consequently carrying the puck consistently was virtually impossible and it was really no true indication of each player's ability. But nevertheless the practice helped to light the fact that Belleville is going to have a smart-looking Junior club. The youngsters open the season on Friday night here against the Trenton kids. Four games will be played and the total number of goals on the whole round will decide the winner.

The two Canning brothers, Johnny and Henry, were on deck and looked nice. Their past experience in Junior ranks should gain them both a place.

Johnny Baker is another good-looking prospect and will no doubt be among the lucky ones to be given a position.

"Red" Doran, Trunisch and Brown all showed up particularly well.

Latchford, a mite of a youngster is working hard for a place among the honored. This youngster is a regular hornet with his persistent back-checking tactics.

Bill Greed assisted Manager Thomas in lining up the candidates last night. Immediately after the practice a number of the kids to their dismay were given their unconditional release.

Eddie Holway, brother of the famous hockey family was given a chance in the nets as was Davies, another candidate. Neither had a real opportunity to show their wares last evening.

Friday night's game should be a worth-while affair as Trenton are reported as having a strong Junior aggregation.

Among those who were out last night were—Ernest Holway, Henry and John Canning, Johnny Baker, "Red" Doran, Jack Trunisch, "Moose" Darragh, Vic White, "Norm" Clarke, George Matthews, E. Lahart, Sammy Tobe, Latchford, Simpson, Boulter, Semark, Brown and Davies.

From this array Manager Thomas ought to select a fast team.

LANDIS KNEW?

Ray Cannon, Milwaukee, stormer, who at one time represented baseball players dismissed, following the exposé of the so-called White Sox Scandal in 1919, declared today that Commissioner K. M. Landis knew back in 1922 that, the Detroit Club, American League had "thrown" games to Chicago in 1917 as charged by "Swede" Risberg, and refused to invest quite a.

Cannon stated that "Happy" Felsch told the Commissioner "Beck" Weaver later corroborating that the Detroit Club deliberately permitted Chicago to win seven games near the end of the season. Cannon added that he asked Charles Comiskey, owner, to submit to an examination to determine the status of the White Sox Club, but that Comiskey declined.

SportOgramS

By The "Observer"

Cornwall by stepping into Kingston and walloping Jim Sutherland's Frontenacs, afforded the world that they will be fighting for the group championship. The Factory Town athlet by the well-known Ralph Tilton who formerly performed in Belleville trotted out a well-balanced aggregation. The Easterners nosed out Ed. Thomas' luddies last year after the latter had looked all over like winners. Tilly Flying Frenchmen are well fortified from goal to subs, and are to be feared.

Every team in the "Big Six" are equally strong in at least one position that of goal-keepers. The two games played thus far have brought to light the fact that there is no dearth of good net-minders. The two goalers Brooks of Frontenac and Elliott of Cornwall were all that saved the score from mounting a great deal high er on Monday night. Last Saturday evening it was Murray of Brockville and Bolton of the Maroons who stood out prominently.

Local hockey fans who have followed the game closely for years are of the opinion that Belleville has a great chance to cop the laurels this year. The forward line are working smoothly and were hitting the nets for fours on Saturday night. "Gilly" Goyer, "Stan" Hagerman and "Doc" Whalen are pretty a trio as ice could wish to see waltzing down the ice together. "Soup" Goyer has lost none of his old time form while he "Ole-Idol "Doll" Green also can be a little short on condition will round to shape.

Brown compares favorably with any goal-tenders in these parts, while the two subs, Frederick and Ribbard round out a smart hockey club. Barring accidents the Maroons should win the group.

Queen's will be here on Monday evening for the second local fixture. The tricolor have not been heard from yet, but the students are reported to have a strong team. "Red" Legon, Lindsay, Rochester and the rest of the Presbyterians can be counted upon to shove a fast team over the boards against the locals.

City League hockey looks like dead loser until the first of February when the arena may be available for two or three evenings a week. The bulk of the Intermediates home games will be finished by that time when it is to be hoped that the junior lights will swing into action.

Joe Saundercook star defence man of the Brockville team will be found in the line-up at their next appearance.

The call for Junior candidates brought out some good looking prospects last night and the youngsters should make the Trenton youngsters step to win.

LOCAL REFEREES BEING IGNORED

Kingston Scribe Takes a Crack at O.H.A. Officials For System

The Kingston Whig-Standard prints a good article this week under the caption "Local Referees Being Ignored." It is undoubtedly more truth than poetry and might be brought to the attention of Secretary Hewitt, of the O. H. A. What is the idea of appointing a set of local officials if Toronto referees are to be the limelight. The Kingston critic says:

As a general rule there hasn't been an awful lot of opposition to the referees sent to handle local games in the O.H.A., but just the same officials of the club in this group, as well as hundreds of hockey fans are trying to get into their heads the reason why the O. H.A. is continually sending Toronto men to handle the games.

Officials of clubs in the group had been led to believe that this year referees from near the scene of action would be sent to handle their games. They lived in hopes, but alas and alack, their fond hopes were dashed to the ground, or rather the ice, because already the Toronto referees are edging in on the job.

Take for instance the game at Brockville on Saturday night, Steve Vair of Toronto handled the game, and of course he had to be paid. The rule governing the paying of referees reads as follows:

"The referee's fee shall be $10. and in addition an allowance at the rate of fifteen cents a mile and way fare for all no miles and 10 cents a mile for all additional miles."

Computed on this basis it turned out that Mr. Vair received his $10 fee, and in addition $20.20 mileage, in all a total of $30.20, pretty fair pickings for one night's work. Had a Brockville or Belleville man been appointed for the job the chances are that each club would have saved at least five or six dollars.

At the start of the season referees were appointed from all the places in the O.H.A., including this group. The O.H.A.'s annual for 1927 says that the following in this group are on the O.H.A. Board of Referees: Brockville, William Slinger; Belleville Stan Nurse, Clayton Frechette, William Green. L. Barrett Cornwall, John Dennesay, R. Mallett; Kingston Harry Bateman, C. Mendell, W. P. Hunber, A. Brouse, Clair Devlin.

What the fans would like to know is why in the name of goodness should they have again the same old "wheel of fortune," such as "Farlow-Vair; Vair-Mitchell; Mitchell-Matthews; Matthews "Farlow," and all over again. If some of the referees in this group are not as good and better than some of the alleged referees from Toronto, we'll eat our last year's straw and not kick over some coming!

The O. H. A., in justice to the clubs just starting their season, should at least try to help them cut down the expenses by sending referees whose expenses won't amount to a big share of the gate receipts. If the Toronto referees must have work, send them to the Toronto Playgrounds League, where they might get some needed knowledge of the game.

RECREATION BOWLING

In the second night's bowling at the Recreation Alleys for the winter schedule it looks more and more that all the teams are going to have a merry old battle in all the different leagues. In the ladies league the Orchids and the Hit and Miss broke even with two wins each while in the other ladies game the Wanderers got three points and the Beavers one, only 46 pins difference in the two teams while in the other ladies game there was only 30 pins difference. A queer instance in the Hit and Miss-Orchids game was that three bowlers each had 400.

Two new teams were on the card in the Junior League namely the Bankers and the Cherry Pickers, the latter team who have had more experience won all four points. K. Kennedy and Bartlett rolling the highest scores for their teams.

Another snappy game was played in the Senior League when the Alemite who graduated from the Junior ranks took on the fast traveling Poules, the Alemite coming through with a 1000 score in their first game to count their four point as they lost the second and third games also losing out on the total. No doubt the foul line had a lot to do with the Alemites defeat as they lost more than one bowl by violating this rule but the boys will have to learn to keep back of the alleys some good individual bowling was done on both teams when Kerr bowlers were well over the 800 mark, namely Kerr, J. Legault, and Mitchell, while G. Anderson led the way for the Alemite club with 797, Anderson having a 327al score for the highest single.

PARENTS FAVOR HOMEWORK FOR THEIR CHILDREN

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 4 (By Canadian Press).—There are very few parents of pupils who ask that their children be not given homework. There are many parents who want homework given their children, and some of them ask for more of it than it is usual to give.

This is the opinion of Dr. C. C. Goldring, principal of Earl Beatty school and president of the Toronto Public School Principals' Association, in comment on the action of the board of ejucatin in raising the maximum of homework from 30 to 50 minutes for third class pupils, and from 30 to 60 minutes for fourth book children.

"There is not much danger of harm being done by an hour's homework," said Dr. Goldring, "but I think an hour is enough. Of course if the child is delicate or there are special reasons against so much homework the principal or teachers will use discretion." Parents in some homes, says the principal, ask that their children be given no homework because they have the radio and want to enjoy it.

OLD LADY OF 103 THREADS NEEDLE

Hamilton, Ont., Jan. 4 (By Canadian Press).—"The fairies' share have given sight." This was the answer given to astonished friends who watched Mrs. Sarah Sutherland, aged 103, thread a fine needle with cut glasses of age, other difficulty. She died in her sleep on the day after Christmas, after talking of old days till an early hour in the morning. Mrs. Sutherland was born in the County of Cork, Ireland. She came to Canada when she was ten years of age, and lived in these parts. Proof of her longevity, it is felt, is partially established by the fact that she was in service many years ago in the home of Adam Brown, when he himself was a young married man. Mr. Brown was in his hundredth year when he died in 1926.

FOR Sour Stomach

PHILLIPS' Milk of Magnesia

Hereafter instead of soda take a little "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" in water any time for indigestion or sour, acid, gassy stomach, and relief will come instantly.

Better Than Soda

For fifty years genuine "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" has been prescribed by physicians because it over comes three times as much acid in the stomach as a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda, leaving the stomach sweet and free from all gases. Besides, it neutralizes acid fermentations in the bowels and gently forces this sour ing waste from the system without purging. It is far more pleasant to take than soda.

BEYOND ALL DREAMS

By Bertha M. Clay

He was upon the track of the young lady. It was now dusk, and the lamps were lighted. The boone saved her hand and called a cab, but the cab was occupied; they had to wait three or four minutes, and then another came in sight. This was ready to receive them; it drew up at the side of the pavement; and Donald, on the alert listened eagerly for the direction; but—perhaps the sharp-eyed boone had even him.

Anyhow, she whispered her direction to the coachee.

Donald heard nothing—he saw his chanticleer drive away, and he was left standing alone under the lamp-post. Had there been another cab at hand he would have hailed it, and followed the dream maiden; but there was not one; and the cocher drove swiftly, so that even had he made himself ridiculous by running at the top of his speed, he could not have overtaken it.

The dream-maiden had appeared and disappeared, had flashed like a lightning dart across his path, and was gone. Such a blank as the world seemed to him!

"And in this huge Paris I shall never meet her again," he said to himself.

CHAPTER II.

MISS BATEMAN

"In this huge Paris I shall never meet her again." Donald repeated to himself. He glanced up the splendid line de Rivoli, and he felt, for the first time since the earliest days of leaving his dear old home, "lonely;" he realized in a flash what a sad and solemn thing it is to stand solitary in the whole, wide world. If he were ill, what loving hand would smooth his pillow? His artist friends would be there, doubtless; for Digby was true as steel, and gentle as he was outspoken. Durand also would be there, for his heart was warm, his impulses kind; but there would be no cords of soft garments near him, no voice low and sweet, and tender; no heart-breaking at sight of his pain, at dread of his death.

"Away with such paltry, selfish twaddle," said Donald to his own heart, rousing himself by an effort. "What the plague do you want with weeping women here in Paris? where I am working, studying, striving to attain excellence—battling with the hard world, doing my duty as best I know how. I know what women are—at least, I guess, and I have heard much talk. The upper classes, and also evidently belongs to that order, educate their daughters with the idea of making good matches. Maybe the French and she speaks like a French girl—she is of course betrothed to some swell."

He hurried home by way of the quays, for the Rue des Orues is not more than a couple hundred yards from the Pont Neuf. As he crossed it he heard the clock of Notre Dame strike six; he had but time to hurry upstairs and perform a hasty toilet, and, true enough, when he entered the salon the soup was being taken out.

Wire is here bertha rippling to the waist-line at the back, this lovely dance frock is youth itself. The full skirt, dipping low in the back, is very popular with the miss. The panel effect in front and back, with the close-fitting upper part, have a very slenderizing effect. Taffeta is an excellent material for this frock, making the shirred side sections stand out. Radium Gazette, crepe de chine and crepe meteor are also very effective. The ribbon flower that holds the wire bertha together in front should be of a color contrasting with the dress.

"And the old dealer?" asked Durand, whose black hair alone, whose white cuffs and gold shirt-studs were faultless, and who affected the unfeigned admiration of a very young lady from Brighton, who, with a stout mamma and aunt, was "seeing Paris" previous to starting for Mentone, where they all purposed passing the latter part of the winter. This young lady's name was Maria Davis; her papa had been a prosperous draper, and she was the heiress of all his savings. She was the most romantic little puss in the world, always quoting or misquoting poetry.

She was only eighteen, but literally in search of an adventure. Life in a stiff, Brighton school, or at her mother's comfortable but popular establishment was quite unendurable to this young heroine; thus she had persuaded her relatives to bring her abroad; she was in a state of chronic ecstasy with all she saw. Paris appeared to her only another name for Paradise. In appearance she was fair and rosy, with a dollish prettiness, and a plumpness that threatened one day to develop into the embonpoint of her mama. She was very fashionably dressed in dark blue silk.

Brefrew had had the pleasure of a little conversation with this fair damsel. She had interested him but slightly. The mother and aunt were what sarcastic people would term good-natured, and dropped their "h's" and boasted of their money.

Besides these ladies, there were an English colonel and his wife visiting Paris on their way home from India, and a few more pompous persons of either sex, who were sojourning in the "seven city" for a week or two. The Hotel Charmettes was unfashionable but well patronized, and the prices were regulated so as to suit moderate means.

"Well—how is the old dealer?" pursued Donald.

"He is gone to Siberia; called, and compelled to work in chains for the remainder of his days. Did you not know that he was a Russian refugee?"

Miss Maria Davis had learned enough French at her fashionable school to reach the meaning of Donald's impertinent assertion, and she thoroughly believed in the dreadful!" she said, in her school-room French. "Is that a friend of yours, Monsieur Brefrew?"

"An acquaintance, mademoiselle, in whose welfare Mr. Donald is especially interested."

"And will he work in the dark all his life? Oh, how horrible. Could you not save him?"

"My friend Durand will start to-morrow for Siberia in search of him."

Maria started and turned pale.

"Will you not take some with your fish mademoiselle?" cold Donald politely.

"Do not alarm yourself, mademoiselle," said the young Frenchman, who saw that he had made a conquest, but only regarded it as a just tribute to his ever wheedling fascinations. "I shall induce my friend Blake, here on my right hand to go in my place."

Maria gave quite a disdainful glance at the high shoulders and manly hair of the young Englishman. She was only enthralled with everything French, and Durand was French, with black hair parted down the middle, and black eyes brown, and a waxen, half-yellow coloring, which made him superb in the light of her blue eyes.

"I am glad you do not go, monsieur," she said, with a naivete which nearly made all the three palsters laugh.

"How bold these English girls are," said a hoarse voice in a whisper, close at Donald's ear; he started, looked, and found that he was seated next to the identical lady with sandy hair who had come into the passage where the key hung and inquired if she could hire three bedrooms and a sitting-room at the hotel.

"It is a different manner from that of the French madame, but it is all on the surface; there is not any real boldness in your countrywoman who live under the same government."

"Ah! you are not English?"

"A Highlander, madame."

"Cest ca." The lady helped herself largely to fried potatoes, and poured herself out a glass of wine. She was a large blonde woman, of forty-eight or so; she had been handsome fifteen years before, and was even now a genteelish personage. She had an excellent appetite, and was dressed well, but soberly befitting the room.

Brefrew knew not what there was about the lady—old enough to be his mother—which attracted him. He found himself attending her wants, discussing the merits of French poultry, versus English, and then his politeness and appearance got French ladies' versus English. The lady soared not into the higher altitude her converse was of the earthy earthy. She was violently in favor of everything French.

35 MILES TO BE SPEED LIMIT ON ONTARIOS ROADS

Legislation To Authorize Change Will Be Brought in By Govt.

"STOP" STREETS LIKELY

All Horse Drawn Vehicles Compelled to Carry Lights

Toronto, Jan. 6—Legislation providing for the raising of the speed limit on highways to 35 miles per hour, the carrying of lights by all vehicles, and the recognition of all Provincial roads as "stop" streets will be brought down by the Government at the next session of the Ontario Legislature. Intimation to this effect was supplied by both Premier Ferguson and Hon. George S. Henry, Minister of Highways.

LITTLE OPPOSITION EXPECTED

General opinion is that very little opposition will be raised in the House either to the proposed increased speed rate or the light-carrying proposal. Government spokesmen believe that the attention to the "lights-for-rigs-and-wagons" idea has vanished before the general appeal for safe traveling on the public highways. Designation of Provincial roads as "stop" streets is only another effort on the part of the Government to lessen traffic accidents and this legislation should pass the Legislature unchallenged.

The regulation requiring warning bells on all auto vehicle drivers will go into effect this year. This particular legislation has been enacted, and only requires proclamation to become effective.

The Government, in addition to considering these legislative matters, has given considerable attention of late to the feasibility of instituting compulsory stopping by motor cars and other vehicles at all railway crossings. It is hardly likely, however, that legislation embodying this requirement will be brought down at the coming session. A feeling has prevailed in Government circles that a measure of the kind would lead to endless difficulties of responsibility in cases of collision.

OLD DOCUMENTS STIR MEMORIES OF THE PAST

Col. W. N. Ponton, to-day brought in to the Intelligencer office three extremely interesting connections with the past. The first of social interest was an invitation to a ball given by the "Bachelors of Belleville" in the year 1856. Quoting as clue on the back of the Country Club Ball it is interesting to review the Patronesses and the Stewards of forty-three years ago. It is said to relate that of the Patronesses only two are now living and of the Stewards only eight out of 20 are still alive.

The Patronesses were: Mrs. Alexander Mrs. Bonnett, Mrs. Burke, Mrs. Campbell, Mrs. Falkiner, Mrs. Hunt, Mrs. T. C. Wallbridge, Mrs. Rec. Mrs. S. S. Lazier, Mrs. Nunn, Mrs. Phillips, Mrs. A. Ponton, Mrs. Prince, Mrs. F. Wallbridge, Mrs. Potts, Mrs. Starling and Mrs. Wallace.

Mrs. T. C. Wallbridge and Mrs. Phillips are the two surviving members of the list.

The Stewards read: Messrs. T. Rumsman, J. A. Corbett, P. Deacy, J. F. Deacy, H. A. Perry, W. H. Garrett, J. E. Hallipell, Geo. F. Hope, W. Hudson, L. Parker, D. B. Robertson, H. N. Roberts, C. A. Mr. Bachelor then presented Miss Lavoie with an Indian Indian Tree tea plates and Mr. B. Adjutant and Mrs. Squarebrigs who have been in command on the local Salvation Army for the four months have been transferred to Brantford and will leave for their new duties on Thursday next unless the petition which has been sent in by the members of the Army receives a sympathetic hearing from the authorities. The Adjutant and his wife have endeared themselves not only to their own people but to the city in general since coming to Belleville in October 15th and while all are hearty in congratulating them upon the honor conferred upon them in their new appointment, their leave taking will be universally regretted.

Adjutant and Mrs. Boulton, of St. John, N. B., well known in Salvation Army circles will take over their duties in Belleville.

COMMITTEE NEAR-SIGHTED; SEES TROUBLE IN B. C. BUT NOT IN U. S.

Washington, Jan. 6.— The citizens committee of one thousand, formed three years ago, by prominent men and women throughout the United States to work for the general law observance and enforcement, heard an assertion today that the drastic prohibitionist methods are occuring in British Columbia, where government control and sale of liquor has been in effect for several years.

Although he made no mention of recent deaths in the United States from poisonous liquor, Raymond Robins of Chicago, stated at the annual convention of the committee that fatalities from this cause "continue in wet British Columbia". Mr. Robins further asserted that the government control and sale of liquor in several Canadian provinces has "revived evils of the liquor in those provinces."

RENOWN IS WELL PROVISIONED FOR HER RECORD TRIP

First Time British Battle Ship Carries Women as Passengers

Portsmouth, Eng., Jan. 6.—Duke and Duchess of York, boarding the cruiser Renown on which the Prince of Wales made his great tour several years ago, today started on a 34,000 mile globe encircling voyage designed to tighten the bonds between the Mother country and the Dominions.

The Prince of Wales, Prince Henry and Prince George were also taking as well as most of the population of Portsmouth, to wish the pair God speed. The Duke of York left officially late at the opening of the Commonwealth Parliament at Canberra, the Australian capital.

The Renown was attired in its finest party dress of silver which replaced the chilliterian battle grey and the Duchess wore a hat to match this being one of the fifteen she is taking along. The voyages smallest all naval traditions, as a British warship for the first time is carrying women around the globe, the Duchess being accompanied by two ladies-in-waiting, in the ship's hold are vast sea and phesants killed on the royal estates by the King himself, and many bottles from the King's cellar selected by the Queen.

BRITISH ABANDON HANKOW; CHINESE ASK INDEMNITY

All British Women and Children Taken on Board Warships

Hankow, Jan. 6.—Three hundred armed Chinese troops and 200 Chinese pickets occupied the British concession here last night after all women and children were put aboard ships in Yangtze River. Two warships, marines and volunteers left the concession and boarded British warships.

The Chinese dispersed the mob of coolies and restored order, streets immediately became quiet and were cleared of all Chinese except troops and pickets. All British police were withdrawn from the streets and Chinese were in complete control.

Hankow, China, Jan. 6.—Representatives of laborers farmers, merchants, students and soldiers of Hankow have informulated demands to be presented through the National or Cantonese government, to the British consul including a demand for indemnity for Chinese alleged to have been killed and wounded in disturbance of Monday the withdrawal of gunboats and an apology to the Chinese government.

London, January 6.—Great Britain today was breathing a little easier over the tense situation at Hankow where seething crowds of Chines Coolies have over run the Britis Concession. The slightest provocation on the part of the British, however, it is felt, is likely to turn the ugly situation there into unextricable mobs.

The foreign office this morning said that no further sensational development has occurred in Hankow since the British Marines were withdrawn Tuesday.

TWELFTH NIGHT BRINGS HOLIDAY TO SOME KIDDIES

Tuesday, January 6th, Christian Church to celebrate Epiphany or Little Christmas as it is frequently called. Special services have been held in the Churches of England and in St. Michaels Church in accordance with the custom which began in the 9th century when the Eastern Church observed the manifestation of Christ. In Quebec the day is observed as a holiday and the banks, courts, liquor stores, taverns and other businesses will not be in operation. In Ontario business will go on as usual; the Feast of the Epiphany is a Holyday of obligation for Roman Catholics and the pupils of the separate schools are today, as on other Holydays, given a holiday.

TWO TRENTON PEOPLE DIE FROM DEADLY MONOXIDE GAS FUMES

BRINGS ACTION AGAINST PETERBORO HOTEL MAN

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 6.—Emma McGill, widow, of Peterboro, brings action at Osgoode Hall against George S. Graham, declared to be an hotel proprietor of Peterboro, Ont., claiming $11,625 damages in respect of an alleged breach of contract which she claims she entered in to 20 years ago at Peterboro. The plaintiff claims that some 20 years ago she was courted by Graham and brought action for breach of promise. Settlement was arrived at, she contends, whereby Graham was to pay her $50 a week and provide a house for her. She alleged that in June of last year defendant refused to carry out provisions of the contract and that defendant had her arrested on a charge of creating disturbance. Graham denies allegations of plaintiff.

WALKER STORE'S FIRST BIRTHDAY ENDS GOOD YEAR

Manager Surprised, Though Pleased at Success During 1926

"During the year which it has been doing business in Belleville The Walker Store has made lots of friends and now while celebrating its first anniversary it promises to make more. The celebration takes the form of slashing already low prices for the benefit of customers in a big promise to be an orgy of selling.

The Walker Store started in to gain the good will of Belleville and Hastings County people by guaranteeing satisfaction—by giving good value and standing behind what it sold.

The first purchaser, who in trepidation took back an article which she had decided she did not want, was a little afraid to helmet with the quiet courteous statement that she could either choose something else or have the money of the purchase price refunded to her. The news of such a policy, backing up the store's attitude of fairness in dealing and spread quickly and women went to Walker's for their requirements with absolute confidence.

Mr. James Murray, the energetic genial manager says the first year's business has surprised him and he did not anticipate such instant success. And the business is growing as it was bound to grow under the methods adopted by the Store.

We hope to see the Walker Store continue many more anniversaries in our City. They are a decided acquisition to our business section and have been the means of bringing thousands of out of town shoppers Belleville during the year as well as retaining here much money which might have gone to Toronto.

PLAYED IN MONTREAL

Stan. Hagerman, speedy right wing of the Belleville Maroons, played with the Canadian National team of Montreal in the Railway Belt Tele-phone League at the Montreal Forum last evening. The C.P.R. team disposed of the Nationals by a score of 5-1 before a record-breaking crowd of 10,000 spectators. Both teams were reinforced by a number of stars from the O.H.A. who gained permission from Secretary "Billy" Hewitt to take part. Conner Arnott of Pres-cott was to have lined up with the C.P.R., but had to cancel the en-gagement. Kells, formerly of St. Mary's and Stanley of Hamilton Tigers were among the performers. There is an outside chance that Hagerman may be moved to the "Coasts of Canada" and play regularly with the Railroaders. In that case he would be lost to the Maroons for the balance of the season. However, it is to be hoped that Stan does not spread the latter course.

—just one year ago when we opened up for business in Belleville the Bargains we offered were so Genuine and so numerous that THE WALKER STORE became overnight a household name, not only in the city but the county for miles around.

The crowds who endeavored to get into the store were so great, that we were forced to barricade our windows to avoid accidents, and for hours on end we had to lock our doors to enable us to wait on the people inside, who were compelled under the circumstances to leave by the back door. The hundreds of compliments received regarding the high quality and low prices of our merchandise, is something that we are justly proud of, therefore this sentence

The secret of success in life, is for a man to be ready for his opportunity when it comes.—Disraeli.

MRS. GRAHAM

The City's heartfelt sympathy goes out to Mr. R. J. Graham, his sons and daughters in their loss. On all sides and from all classes is heard expressions of regret at the tragically sudden death of a woman who had endeared herself to all with whom she came in contact.

The late Mrs. Graham lived a full life—always helpful, kind and considerate. The pastor of her church, her fellow workers in Christian endeavors, members of her clubs and societies and a host of personal friends feel keenly the loss of a loved and respected personality. And many of the less fortunate will miss the aid and comfort of a kind helper.

Belleville is poorer in the ending of her life, even though richer in the memory of the manner of her living.

A NEEDED BRIDGE

Any reasonable and practicable scheme for bridging the St. Lawrence is worthy of support on this side of the international boundary. Tourist traffic has a definite cash value, and tourists, other things being equal, follow the line of least resistance. A city means delay and inconvenience; a bridge is merely a continuation of the open road. It is perfectly certain that more motor tourists would come into Ontario from the United States over a bridge than come now by ferry.

Between Niagara and Montreal the St. Lawrence carries no bridges save those for railway tracks, and there are no large communities on the Canadian side likely to interest themselves in spanning the river. Thus the proposition is one for private capital, if anything is to be accomplished. Governments have more pressing calls on their money.

The projected bridge across Wellesley Island, near Alexandria Bay, may or may not be a practicable one—that is for engineers to decide. On the face of it, however, the plan of Mr. Gilbert Freeman, of Glen Falls, N. Y., is worthy of the sympathetic consideration which it seems to be receiving in official circles here. He is asking no financial assistance either from the Ontario or Dominion Governments. He proposes to petition for a Federal charter, and he asks for the use of two or three small islands in the St. Lawrence, owned by the Dominion, which he says appear to have been designed by nature as piers for his bridge. These islands, it is understood, are not now used for any purpose. The Provincial Government would be asked to build three or four miles of roadway to connect the Canadian terminus of the bridge with the Kingston highway.

If Mr. Freeman is able to interest United States capital in the venture to the extent of $3,000,000, it is hardly to be expected that he will find any serious difficulties in Ottawa.

CODDLING CRIMINALS

A commonsense view on crime prevention in the United States is taken by James H. Hepburn, who is the managing director of the Baltimore Criminal Commission. He contends that the most effective way to stop a crime wave is to make crime unprofitable. He thoroughly deprecates the popular theory that criminals are "sick men" of low mentality who are born cooped.

Mr. Hepburn backs his statements by two strong arguments, one to the effect that, when the convict population of the States were given intelligence tests during the Great War it was found that they received a considerably higher rating than the draft army, and that convicts in penal institutions represent the low type of criminals, the more astute usually escaping conviction.

While there is no doubt that the major portion of the enormous amount of crime in the United States is due to the lack of prompt and effective punishment of the wrongdoer, the sickly sentimentality which depicts the crook as the unwilling victim of circumstances is also a contributing factor.

BRITAIN LEADS AGAIN

While all Western nations excepting Russia express regret at the falldown of war which is devastating China, Great Britain goes a step further by suggesting the actual removal of one cause of strife which tends also towards the breeding of contention between China and the rest of the world.

British statesmen have recommended to other nations having interests in the Celestial Republic, that China's right to complete self-government should be recognized, that the restriction forced upon her to levy duties not exceeding five per cent. ad valorem on foreign goods, imported and domestic goods exported should be rescinded; that China be given a few hand in treaty making, and that control of China and her Custom Houses should be done away with.

Of course this implies some temporary financial loss to Great Britain and other holders of Chinese securities for loans or debts, but the suggestions show an inclination to accept such loss in the interests of peace for China.

It may have been necessary, in times past, to exercise tutelage over a China emerging late into modern civilization—at least all the rest of the world thought so—but Great Britain now declares her belief that the day has come when this should cease.

As soon as China sets up a government that can be dealt with, Great Britain would have complete independence of foreign control granted her and pursuant that other nations join in an assurance to the Chinese to that effect.

Great Britain in this friendly, self-sacrificial action is continuing her policy of assisting China to take her proper place among the nations which was illustrated in many ways in past history especially by the exertions of General "Chinese" Gordon, and the magnificent record of Sir Robert Hart, superior of Chinese Customs, and father of the country's postal services.

HINT FOR CANADA

Speaking to the Canadian Club at Ottawa, and in the presence of Premier King, Stanley Bruce, premier of Australia, gave his views of the recent imperial conference. He denied that the political status of the dominions had been altered or in any way changed by anything said or done at the conference. Their status had been advanced shortly after the conclusion of the great war, and the report adopted by the conference was merely a formal acknowledgment and announcement of the change.

This is not the view of General Hertzog, who has told his people of South Africa that the change in the status of the dominions was one of the achievements of the conference, and that as a result of it the British empire had been born of all authority over its self-governing members and reduced to a mere name. But perhaps General Hertzog deemed it politically expedient to popularize his view; it would be in the interest of himself and his party to produce the impression that it was mainly as a result of his own firm stand for complete dominion autonomy that the change was made.

As a practical statesman Mr. Bruce is less concerned with the new status of his own and the other dominions than with what it implies. He points out that increased national autonomy must be accompanied with increased dominion responsibility for participating in the task of directing the foreign policy of the empire, and also for taking adequate measures for national defence. He has no doubt that Australia's boast of strict neutrality has done in the way of naval defence and to contrast its record with Canada's, or to presume to reproach this country for its neglect to do its duty in that respect. But what he said might likely be regarded as a delicate hint to the effect that it is about time that Canada ceased looking to any other power for protection of her coasts or her commerce.

William Humphreys of Attaville City strapped his wife when she refused to get breakfast for himself and children.

One year in prison and fine of $500 was sentence given Charles Herrold, of Philadelphia, for operating two stills.

OTHER MEN'S THOUGHTS

Our Kingston girls do not need the benefit of simulation to bring them to the stage of beauty which would fit them for places in the Ziegfeld Follies. And there are more "sweet sixteens" in Kingston than in any other city.

When we gaze on these sweet, unsophisticated faces of the fair young damsels who daily toil, it is asking far too much of even our highly-developed imagination to make us believe that they have taken post-graduate courses in the one thing which is said to be conducive to greater and more lasting beauty.—Kingston Whig-Standard.

One after another, fads which seem to be reforms are recognized as fads and discarded. Three Saskatchewan cities—Regina, Moose Jaw and Saskatoon—after several years' experience of proportional representation have discarded it.—Hamilton Herald.

A society for the protection of persons who intend to commit suicide has saved the lives of 500 persons during the five years of its existence at Zurich.

The committe of the society makes frequent appeals in the newspapers for the enlightenment of the public. "Send us the name and address of any person you think intends to take his life," say their advertisement, "and we will do the rest."—London England Express.

HAVE YOU HEARD THESE?

Mrs. Smith was expressing her regrets to old Epp, whose wife had passed on. She had been Mrs. Smith's washerwoman for many years.

"I don't know what I am going to do for another laundress," Mrs. Smith was saying.

"Now, neyah you mind. Mrs. Smith. Ah's co'in again and Ah co'n rapid. Jes' you with a week or so."

One night Phillips Brook's little niece disturbed her aunt by telling her that she did not want to say her prayers. In the morning her aunt asked her if she had not said them.

"No," she replied. "I did not say my prayers, I just kneeled down and said: 'Dear God, I am too tired to say my prayers.' And she looked down and said: 'Miss Brooks don't mention it.'"

Mrs. Baggs: "I hear your son is going to get married: I hope he will be lucky."

Mrs. Jaggs: "Bless yer kind 'eart, he'll be all right, he came through the Great War without a scratch."

RUSSIA LIKED WESTERN BRONCS

Regina, Sask., Jan. 6. (By C.P.)—Satisfied with the first shipment of 1,000 prairie broncbos, the government of Soviet Russia plans to purchase between 3,000 and 5,000 western Canadian horses in 1927, stated Jack Byers, representative of the Dominion Livestock branch, who with J. C. Hargrave, of the Dominion Health of Animals branch, delivered the shipment at Leningrad.

General Bellamy, Cossack hero of Russia, inspected the horses and expressed satisfaction with the majority of the animals. Leaving Saskatchewan in September, the horses were landed at Leningrad late in October. Five hundred of them came from Saskatchewan and the remainder from Alberta and British Columbia.

"We received courtesy and consideration practically the time during our stay in Russia," Mr. Byers said. "Our opportunities for observation were of course limited but our movements were at no time hampered. From what we saw of the life of the people and of their industrial activities it would appear that many of the reports we sometimes read of the alleged chaotic conditions in the Soviet cannot be based on authoritative information."

Laxatives are dangerous said 2/3 of the doctors

RECENTLY we asked doctors, all over the country, the proper treatment for constipation. Two-thirds condemned the continued use of laxatives and cathartics. More than three-quarters favored the Nujol type of treatment.

No one knows better than the doctor the greater safety of the gentle lubricant. As one doctor said, "It is the most natural aid to normal activity of the bowels. The trouble with laxatives is that they irritate and stimulate the digestive tract too much. Laxatives bring on the laxative habit."

Doctors Advise Nujol

Nine doctors out of every ten told us they were advising the Nujol type of treatment for their patients in place of laxatives—and for these reasons: 1. Nujol is not habit-forming; 2. A more natural method; 3. A lubricant is better than a laxative; 4. Does not gripe; 5. Is not irritating; and 6. Nujol gives lasting relief.

Unlike Laxatives

Laxatives and cathartics act by irritating the intestinal tract. They cause the bowels to frantically expel the contents of the intestines and thus rid the system of the drugs that pills and potions contain.

Nujol acts entirely differently. It contains no drugs, no medicine. Its action is mechanical. It merely softens the fecal waste matter in the intestines and lubricates the passage so that the muscles of the bowels can expel the waste matter regularly, naturally and thoroughly.

Nature-given Remedy

Nujol appeals to the medical man because it is a simple, scientific and safe remedy for constipation, no matter how severe the case may be. It is gentle in its action and pleasant to take. Children love it.

Get a bottle of Nujol from your druggist today. Doctors advise it for constipation, whether chronic or temporary. Avoid substitutes.

Winnipeg, Man., Jan. 6.—(By Canadian Press)—Seeking new homes in South America, a party of 200 Mennonites from Saskatchewan passed through Winnipeg on their way to New York.

Newsy Neighborhood Notes

BOYS FOUND

Oshawa, Jan. 6.—Clarence Sills, 16, and his brother, George, 12, who were reported missing from their home on Olive avenue by their mother, have been found at Crowland, a village near Welland. Police picked up the boys on vagrancy charges, and they are being held until the mother sends their money with which to return to their home by train.

DOPE SQUAD BUSY

Montreal, Jan. 6.—Montreal's "dope squad" has begun the new year auspiciously, following its excellent record of 1926. Constables Belanger, Francoeur and Bourdon in the past 24 hours arrested on warrants five men charged with various drug offences. It is claimed by the police that the men belonged to an organized gang which has been disposing of narcotics such as cocaine, morphia and heroin in the vicinity of the Main.

In Recorders' court today all five pleaded not guilty, and were held in bail of $5,000 for appearance January 12 by Recorder Morrison.

DUMPED REFUSE

Port Hope, Jan. 6.—Magistrate W. A. F. Campbell found Frank McAvoy guilty of a breach of the Public Health Act in police court here this morning and imposed a fine of $2 with $1 costs. McAvoy, it was stated, dumped a quantity of refuse upon the ice of a stream leading into into Lake Ontario and Magistrate Campbell delivered a stern lecture upon the danger to public health which resulted from such a practice and pointed out that the case might serve as an example to others committing breaches of the Health Act.

REBUILD FACTORY

Peterboro, Jan. 6.—The plant of the Canadian Canoe Company, which was destroyed by fire recently, is to be rebuilt at a cost of approximately $15,000.

T. C. Ephgrave, to whom the contract has been awarded, has already commenced work on the building and is rushing the contract through in order that he factory will be in full swing by March 1.

SUSPENDED SENTENCES

Oshawa, Jan. 6.—Four boys stood with downcast eyes in police court here today and heard counsel retained in their behalf by their parents plead guilty for them to charges of theft and shop breaking. Two of them admitted seven charges; the other two three charges apiece. Three of the members of the gang of youthful shopbreakers were accompanied by fathers.

After an eloquent plea in their behalf by Mr. D. A. J. Swanson and the concurrence of the Crown represented by Mr. Kelly Creighton, his Worship Magistrate Hind in each case allowed the boy out on suspended sentence. The parents, however, are bound in the sum of $500 in each instance, amounting in two instances to $3,500, and the boys are to report monthly at the parole office to Chief of Police Owen Friend.

SEEK NEW TRIAL

Port Hope, Jan. 6.—Because decision in the case of Chase vs. Mikel, Rosebush, Rosebush and Sharpe was pending at the death of Judge J. C. Cameron, former County Judge at Cobourg, a new trial is being sought

MARKET SPOTLIGHT ON MINING STOCKS

M&M EXCELLING

Mr. D. R. Rochester, president of the Acondo Mines, Limited, has given out the following statement for publication:

"As president of Acondo Mines, Limited, my attention has been drawn to a statement appearing in the press regarding a valuable discovery of gold-silver ore on the company's holdings in the Rouyn district. To date I have received no official word of such a discovery, and, this being the case, I feel that the report should be corrected."

"Over a year ago a report of a similar nature appeared but the directors of the company were unable to obtain any definite information which would verify such a discovery and although the necessary work has been done on the property this season to cover the requirements of the Quebec regulations, Our consulting engineers, Aldcroft and McKay, and Mr. Otis Lacroi, the engineer in charge of the work have made no report to the directors of any valuable discovery on the property of any kind. All that the directors claim is that we have 1,000 acres of well situated mineral lands with ideal geological conditions.

"No effort will be spared to test this out as soon as possible by diamond needle and the Swedish Electrical System and diamond drilling if necessary. We are hopeful of locating ore and any discoveries made will be reported by our engineers to directors and by them to the general public.

AN OLD RECIPE TO DARKEN HAIR

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and luster to the hair when it is faded or streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and trouble some.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store or "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients, for only 75 cents. Every body uses this preparation now, because no one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You damp en a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair; taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

BELLE THEATRE

Some hungries has said that, as soon as a man gets elected to the school board, the next thing he thinks about is the governor's chair. The assertion is probably a little exaggerated, but members of the board of directors of a village school very often take themselves for more seriously than is necessary for the good of the community, themselves included.

In "Flop Look and Listen," Larry Semon's first feature comedy for Pathe, and showing Friday and Saturday at the Belle Theatre, the plot is given considerable impetus by the local school board which sees in Larry when the pretty schoolma'am breaks all traditions and teaches the youngsters in her class how to dance.

But Dorothy has blither and nobler ambitions than to teach the young. She cherishes the desire to prance and sing before the footlights for the edification of the tired business men, and she'll not listen to Larry's proposal that she give her heart and hand until after she's had her career.

Look and Listen" was adapted by the Comedian himself from a musical comedy success of the same name that introduced the gorgeous Gaby Deslys to Americans from coast to coast.

Even-Rice - Hurt Stomach - Says Girl

"I had indigestion so bad that I was afraid to eat anything. Cigdist, gas and rice. Adlerika has done me so much good that now I eat anything. I have taken a lot of medicine but Adlerika is the best."—Adenia Howard.

Adlerika gives the system a REAL cleansing and brings out old poisons which many have caused trouble for a long time. Unlike most medicines, it acts upon BOTH upper and lower bowel. Just one spoonful relieves GAS and takes away that full, bloated feeling so that you can eat better and sleep better. Even if bowels move daily, Adlerika brings out much additional poison which you never thought was in your system and which caused sour, gassy stomach, nervousness, sleeplessness, headache. No matter what you have tried for your stomach and bowels, Adlerika will surprise you. J. H. McKeown, Druggist, and other druggists.

BALL PLAYERS DENY CHARGES LAID BY RISBERG

Former White Sox Player Faces Judge Landis

Chicago, Ills., January 6.—Sweeping denials were made by members of the White Sox and Detroit Tigers, players of the past and present, of "Swede" Risberg's accusations that the White Sox bought a series from the Tigers in 1917, when Kenesaw Mountain Landis, Commissioner of Baseball, brought the players face-to-face with their accuser in unprecedented hearing that opened here yesterday.

Added to these denials were two bits of concrete evidence that indicated innocence on the part of all those accused and tended to shoot the story Risberg told under oath, full of holes. The first was a cancelled cheque, dramatically produced by Eddie Collins, former baseball baseman of the White Sox, and now with the Athletics, which showed a variance in his date with that mentioned by Risberg. The other was a statement by George Dunn, a pitcher with the Detroit club, that he had been paid $180 from a pool raised by the White Sox players, yet he did not pitch in the series in which Risberg said that "slouging" was done.

Which Risberg said that "slouging" was done.

which Risberg said that "slouching" was done.

which Risberg said that "slouching" was tonight, after nearly all hours of testimony, twenty-odd players had feed-

RICKARD MEETS TUNNEY TO DISCUSS CONTRACT

St. Louis, January 6.—Tex Rickard, boxing promoter, and Gene Tunney will discuss a contract for the heavyweight champion's first fight in defence of his crown today.

The promoter, who arrived here late today from New York with Dudley Field Malone, Tunney's legal advisor; Billy Gibson, the champion's manager, and a party of more than a dozen newspaper correspondents, hoped to talk with Tunney tonight, but said that nothing concerning arrangements for the fight would be available until tomorrow's conference.

Rickard would not reveal details of the contract he will offer to Tunney other than to say that he would expect the champion to fight anyone he selected for him. This was the nature of the contract he had with Jack Dempsey.

Risberg and denied his charges and more of them will take the stand.

"Chick" Gandil, involved with Risberg and six other former White Sox in the crooked world's series of 1919, will come to Risberg's rescue tomorrow in an attempt to substantiate the "Swede's" story.

Risberg, nervously puffing a cigarette, told his sensational story in a room packed with the great stars of the diamond, on whom he was to place the brand of bribery. When Risberg took the stand there was a moment of deathly silence as his eyes swept the room, picking out the players he accused. The Swede did not say a word to any of his old baseball pals as he edged his way into the office to take the witness chair, and none of them said anything to him.

The Belleville Juniors led by the Canning brothers will face Trenton youngsters to-morrow night in the opening game of the season. The Kids have not practiced together a great deal but for the past month the ponds and rink rinks have held their load of human freight and most of those who will hop over the boards will be in good shape.

The Trenton team have been working out faithfully since there is no Intermediate team there. Manager Thomas faces the task of practically rebuilding the team as most of the players on last year's team have graduated from Junior ranks.

Buck Wheat captain and left fielder of the Brooklyn Robins, who has received his unconditional release, has been in organized baseball for twenty years and all except three of these seasons were with the Brooklyn team. He has been a mainstay of the Dodgers, both at bat and in the field, and his batting average has dropped below the .300 mark only four times in his seventeen years of service in the major leagues. His best year was in 1924 when he batted .375. Wheat's performance last season was his poorest since 1915, when he hit for a mark of .256.

Last year when he participated in 111 games he batted for .300 and had slowed up perceptibly in both the field and on the base paths. Since 1920 his average did not go below .320 and his slugging ability made him a formidable man in a pinch.

In 1925 Wheat was installed as team pilot to succeed after Wilbert Robinson had been elevated to the post of President of the Brooklyn club. However, the team made an indifferent showing during his brief reginn at the helm, and Robinson again assumed the reins. It was believed at the time that if Wheat had made a success of his trial at the post Robinson would have withdrawn in his favor at the end of the campaign, officially spotlighting his manager.

Bobby Kenwood, 23-year-old light weight, died during the night of injuries received during a bout at the New Star Athletic club with Mike Spirgel, 21. Toward the end of the fourth round Kenwood collapsed and fell to the floor.

Spirgel and the officials of the bout were held on technical charges of manslaughter.

Kenwood's skull was believed to have been fractured.

BOWLING

The last game in the Church League came to a close last night at the Y Alleys when the Christ Church and Tabernacle clashed, the both teams taking two points each. In the first game the Christ Church were up 17 pins and added another 20 to this in the second but in the last game the Tabernacle came strong and won this by 107 pins and also the total by 33 pins. Miss Donaldson of the Tabernacle had the high single and three string of the evening with 193 and 411 while for the Christ Church Miss Beare was high with 411.

CHRIST CHURCH—Miss Morton, 259; Miss Gem 347; Miss Adams, 026 Miss Symons, 315; Miss Beare, 411. Total 1801.

TABERNACLE — Miss Reinhind, 254; Miss Greenleaf 363; Miss Lent 419; Miss Bell 333; Miss Donaldson, 411. Total 1930.

RECREATION BOWLING

The C.N.R. Shops made their official debut in the Men's Senior League at the Recreation Alleys last night when they took on the Hardware boys, and broke even with them with two wins each, the Shops piling up enough pins in the first game to give them a point on the total score. The Hardware got away to a bad start, only rolling 787 in their first game, and although they were handicapped with a John Doe score they settled down in the second and third game to count two points. The C. N. Shops rolled 2970 which is the second highest score of the week and no doubt they will be able to hold their own with any senior team in this league, this Shop team being the one that won the C.N.R. League, Fall schedule. F. Austin was the best bowler of the night with 702, while Doran was next in line with 682.

C. N. Shops—F. Austin 702; J. Collyer 555; H. Baldres 640; J. Howe 558; A. Randle 615. Total 2970.

Hardware—Detlet 537; Harris 616; Nafin 641; Doran 682; John Doe 432. Total 2953.

New C. N. R. Shop League Organized

At a meeting held at the C.N.R. Shops yesterday afternoon, a new bowling league was organized, with all shop employees. There will be eight teams in this league and the teams were so arranged that they will be all evenly matched. The following were the officers appointed for this league: Pres. J. Walshe, Vice Pres. N. Kerr; Sec. Treas. R. Ferguson. The teams will play a double schedule and the three teams that are leading at the end of the schedule will play off for a trophy.

BEYOND ALL DREAMS

By Bertha M. Clay

Renfrew laughed, while he strove to combat some of her prejudices.

"You see, madame, it is the same on all sides. In London and in Scotland I have met good folks, who regard France and especially Paris, as the very pit of Tophet, where their children would be bound to learn immorality and impiety. They think everything French is wicked and so you, running to the other extreme, fancy English women, especially young girls, forward, bold, ill mannered. Do not judge a whole nation by the silly little girl who is eating guava ice, fan, and talking at the same time to my friend, Durand; she means no harm.

The lady threw up her hands.

"I think her detestable. I have under my care two young persons, who are to pass this winter in Paris for the sake of improvement in various accomplishments—music, painting, and Italian. I would not allow the young lady to enter this salon for the world, since she is of that enthusiastic sort, which discovers beauties in the most commonplace things and persons, beauties which do not exist—you understand. I should for instance, have her inviting that detestable Miss Maria, as her mother calls her, to take tea in our salon, and I am sure I should shut the door in her face. At the same time, I myself shall occasionally dine here, for I have been leading the curious a life in a dull German town, and I need a little vivacity and change of scene. While the very young is at different, their studies should be enough for them; light talk only distracts them from more important things. Thanks monsieur, I will take a cup of that black coffee, and they make it here splendidly, so I have been told."

All the while this lady had spoken French, but she smacked Renfrew by crying suddenly, in excellent English:

"After dinner, since there is a piano, I will play for you some of Beethoven's sonatas if you care for music of that sort."

"I delight in it, madame; but you astonish me; I thought you were German?"

"Irish—I am an Irishwoman of very good family and very bad fortune. I had seven sisters, four are living besides myself; all are married, well, I am the only single one," she paused and smiled a little sadly; "the old maid of the family—we know what that means in dear, merry England, as it is falsely called; the unmarried one is the servant to the married ones, present when everthere is trouble to be taken, or sick people to nurse well. I have never made myself useful among those married folks. I went out as a governess in a school in France when I was twenty-two, for my father, a colonel in the army, died suddenly, leaving not a half-crown piece behind him, except his pension to mamma; she is still alive, and lives quietly in a little Irish town. I never go to see her. I have had to provide for myself for years and years. I learned to speak French and German perfectly, and to play, and to draw. Oh! I adore art—and I have lived in several noble families in France and in Germany. For the last seven years I have been English teacher to a young lady, the daughter of the Polish Prince Nicholas. You have heard of him—he married an English lady, a Miss Martineau, daughter of a merchant. She had a fortune; but though a prince, was poor. He was an enthusiast, a fanatic about Poish wrongs and so on, and he was thrown into Rotherden prison more than once.

"Ah! how men treat women. The poor princess spent nearly the whole of her fortune to aid him in his schemes; she was devoted to him—how blind women are! At last, seven years ago, they were released, his residue of their fortune to the dull German town of Obenstein, a place so obscure that I doubt if you still find it on any map, and then they advertised for a governess for the Princess Ariel, their daughter; and I, being out of a place, saw the advertisement in Calignani. I answered it. I had references they gave me a good salary, I was, Ah! to dull a town, so gloomy a house, so stern and disappointed a man the prince and the princess a beautiful woman and so amiable. They lived well, they lived in style; we dined at seven, they drove out in the carriage every day. But, those dull drives! I wonder, monsieur that I am alive when I think of it.

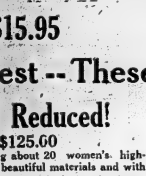

"Well, in one year after my arrival the princess died, and thus my duties multiplied. Only three months since the prince died; his lawyers came to look into his affairs. Ah! how he had wasted property. Will you believe me there is a bare hundred and fifty pounds a year apiece for the son and daughter Prince and princess they may style themselves, poor things, but you know the English would laugh at royal titles and poor pockets together. They had had continual recourse to French words and French idiom. "Cependant; they are highly connected, and Mr. Martineau, a rich English merchants their mother's brother, has written to Claud, the son, telling him, that he will be ready to receive him and mademoiselle, in London in the spring, on his return from Venice where he is passing the winter with his wife and daughters.

"Meanwhile the will of the prince delegates the care of his son and daughter to me, their governess for the last seven years, and directs me to come to Paris and establish myself in apartments with them. Claud is to attend the cours and lectures, Ariel to take lessons in painting, Italian and music. By the will of the prince his son and daughter are not to go to England until June, then, then the London season will commence, they will be of my hands. Ariel will, with her connections and great beauty, no doubt make a great match—she expects to be one as for me—that is not necessary. what is a governess worth, when she has completed the work for which she was engaged? only me for, to look out for another position." The lady shrugged her shoulders. "I am meanwhile paid our full income up to the month of June, and there is a sum for our winter expenses in Paris. Laid by. After that, what do I know?"

Renfrew did not reply for a moment; they had left the dining-room, and he was standing with the governess of the prince and princess now to the light of the fire in the salon of the Hotel Charmettes. The tables were being occupied by ladies or gentlemen who chose to play cards or dominoes. He friends crossed over to him.

"It is really so, then," said Durand, smiling. "You will stay and play cards?"

Donald turned testily round. What reason he had for listening with so much interest to the revelations of this middle-aged lady he could not have given, but that he was immensely fascinated Mayfair next spring!

WHAT'S NEW

(From a Woman's Standpoint)

Horizontal stripes bid fair to rival any other novelty note for the spring, interpreted in both jerseys and woven fabrics.

One of the most remarkable houses in London is that of Sir Frederick Lewis in which every room is a contrast in period decoration, the drawing-room being Florentine Renaissance, as I saw described by a typical Italian staircase through one or two modern rooms into a perfect reproduction of an Elizabethan dining-hall.

New York notes that three-tone-trimmed evening frocks and slippers have brought about a decided change in jewelry for the woman who once boasted all if she could not get those is now selecting rhinestone pins, gracelets and diamonds, and would wear no jewelry at even rings with great discrimination.

Served Two Years as Chairman of Board of Health

The final meeting of the 1926 Board of Health was held yesterday afternoon to close up the work of the Board for the past year. Major H. D. Ponton, having completed two years as Chairman of the Board of Health, announced his retirement and expressed his pleasure and delight in the duties that had devolved upon the Board during the last two years.

Kept in Limits

On being interviewed today Major Ponton stated that few citizens and rate payers had any idea of the work that was carried on by the Board of Health, and no doubt the taxpayers would be interested to know that for the last two years the Board of Health were successful in keeping their expenditures below the appropriations made by the city council. In 1925 the appropriation was $6000 and the expenditures of the Board during that year amounted to $4734.63. In 1926 the appropriation was $5000 and the expenditures of the Board amounted to $3281.37. Although the Board of Health deserves some credit for keeping the expenditures down to minimum, Major Ponton stated that the credit was due first to the marvellous discoveries of vaccine and other preventatives of contagious diseases and credit is also due to the efficiency and hard work of our Medical Officer of Health, Dr. G. D. Cook, the medical profession, nurses and the co-operation of the citizens of Belleville generally.

Six Cases Smallpox

Major Ponton further stated that at the present time there is no scarlet fever, diptheria or measles in the city, and there are only six cases of small pox of a very mild type, five patients being in the Isolation Hospital.

The Chairman regretted his retirement owing to business reasons, and he stated that he hoped that the city council would in future ask the Medical Association of the city of Belleville to nominate and recommend a representative to the Board of Health, in the alternative if there was a medical man elected to the city council, then that doctor should be the representative of the city council on the Board of Health in the place of the mayor, who has formerly acted on the Board.

Penticton, B.C., Jan. 7.—Armed with two rifles, George Barden, garage man, shot and killed his wife by his dressing room and after being pleaded with for nearly three hours by police officers, who surrounded the dwelling, was fatally wounded in an exchange of shots.

"Get straight out of here, or I'll plug you," shouted Barden.

When Provincial Police officers arrived on the scene a few minutes later, Barden called: "Come a step nearer, and I will shoot. You will never take me. I have killed her and know it is a hanging job, so keep away."

S. Gifford of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, in New York, and Sir G. Evelyn Murray, secretary of the British General Postoffice, in London. The worst atmospheric conditions in months prevailed, which somewhat delayed the initial conversation. Seated in his office in lower Broadway Mr. Gifford lifted the receiver at 8:44 and said to the operator, "Can you get me Sir Evelyn Murray in London?"

A few minutes later the telephone bell tinkled and Mr. Gifford said "Good morning", "Good morning" came the reply. After a short delay owing to static, Mr. Gifford told Sir Evelyn he believed the new service would, like the two countries together as neighbors in a very real sense. Sir Evelyn replied he was certain that the inauguration of personal conversation between the two countries would strengthen existing friendly ties.

McKENZIE KING FAILS TO ANSWER GUTHRIE

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 7—Mackenzie King would make no statement or comment on the points raised by Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Conservative leader at Toronto yesterday, when his attention was drawn to Mr. Guthrie's speech this morning. The Prime Minister merely said that he had spoken on the results of the Imperial Conference in the House of Commons. He has already intimated that there would be an opportunity for full discussion of the proceedings at the conference during the session of parliament. It is possible that Mr. King may reserve any statement in regard to Canada's attitude on Imperial defence until he can make it in the house, though it is suggested that he may refer to the matter when he speaks in Toronto early next month.

90,000 RAILWAY WORKERS ASKING WAGE INCREASE

One Parley Proceeding and Others Follow in Few Weeks

MANY MEN INVOLVED

Men Want From Ten to Twelve Cents Per Hour More

Montreal, Jan. 7.—Wage negotiations involving more than 90,000 men, and wage demands ranging from 10 to 12 cents an hour, confront Canadian railways in the opening weeks of this year. The parley is proceeding, another dispute is the subject of Board of Conciliation proceedings, and other negotiations will follow this course.

NEGOTIATIONS START

Negotiations opened yesterday around the request of 35,000 maintenance-of-way men of Canadian lines for an increase of 10 cents an hour. Three representatives of the men are members of Wage Committee of the Railway Association of Canada on this matter, and certain working conditions are also the subject of discussions.

Rail shoppers in Canada, to the number of 15,000 employed on the various lines, are looking also to resumption of negotiations, when their representatives will put forward a request for an increase of 10 cents an hour. Their negotiations also will be resumed with the Railway Association of Canada.

The Canadian Brotherhood of Railroad Employees are looking to negotiations with the Canadian National Railways for a wage increase broached to the company a August last. The request involves 10,000 Canadian National Railway employees, including clerks, cafe, freight shed employees, roundhouse men, freight crews, etc., and is for a 10 cents per hour increase for hourly rated men and $30 a month for monthly rated men.

DINING CAR MEN ASK INCREASE

Negotiations are expected to open toward the end of this month between the Canadian National Railways and representatives of some 800 employees in the sleeping, dining and parlor car services of the railway. The employees request wage increases of approximately 12 per cent., as well as a uniform schedule, instead of the four schedules for the class of workers in use at present.

The wage requests of some 8,000 railway and steamship men employed by the Canadian Pacific Railway became the subject of the Board of Conciliation proceedings instituted by the latter part of last year and working conditions being the issue. The proceedings, it is understood, are not yet completed.

NO BUSINESS IN NICARAGUA SAYS SENATOR BORAH

Cannot See Where United States Lives on Property Endangered

Washington, D.C., Jany 7.— United States has "no business in the world in Chinese," said Senator Borah, chairman of the senate foreign relations committee, discussing a conference with President Coolidge today.

Senator Borah declared he had been given no proof that United States lives or property were so imperilled in Nicaragua as to remotely justify "intervention" by the United States.

Secretary Kellogg, defending the administration's policy, said that factional fighting where the lives and property of United States citizens exists must be stopped as the best way of protecting those interests. It was with such an end that several snow were established by Admiral Latimer, and Mr. Kellogg. Taking cognizance of statement by Senator Borah that Mexican-recognized Soviet government has more claim to non-intervention than does government recognized by Washington, Mr. Kellogg declared that Mexico has fully chosen president at recent election. Asked whether Mexico was not acting within her rights as sovereign nation in supplying arms to Nicaua faction, Secretary Kellogg replied it was an act of unfriendliness to personally friendly country to provide armament to a revolutionary party.

ANNUAL VISIT PAID TO PRINCE EDWARD LODGE

The annual visit of District Deputy Grand Master S. J. Stinson of the I.O.O.F. to Prince Edward Lodge, Wallbridge, took place last evening. The spacious lodge rooms were crowded to fullest capacity with visitors, from both Prince Edward and Hastings County.

The District Deputy was assisted by Bros. B. Mayhew, J. McCann, W. McKinnon, H. Ross and S. Langdon of Brighton and W. Ralls of Belleville.

Following the installation of the officers the gathering adjourned to the lakeview inn where a bountiful repast awaited them.

During the course of the evening an orchestra composed of A. Oatley (leader), S. Vandervoort, H. Reynolds and H. Quailt supplied especially fine music.

Mrs. Parliament was hostess to the visitors at the banquet.

W. M. G. R. Wilkes acted as toast master most acceptably. The first was a toast to the King, P.D.D.G.M. Way proposed a toast to the Grand Lodge which was responded to by P.D.D.M. Stinson, Bro. H. Rose proposed the toast to the visitors which was responded to by Bros. Duckworth and Ranson of Belleville.

A group of some of our most prominent citizens looked and no doubt felt shocked and grieved at being hailed into police court this morning to tell an unsympathetic magistrate why they had not scraped their sidewalks clean of snow. Among those present were ex-Mayor Meyers, W. Porrett, J. A. McFee, Raymond Harris, Sykes Large, R. Turlington, G. Harold Holton and Bro. Caldwell and Wallbridge. It was a relief but not exactly a happy party.

Magistrate W. C. Mikel benign and benevolent as usual, explained to the erring citizens that the by-law absolutely requires that every trace of snow and ice be removed from the sidewalk by the owner or occupant of the property bordering the walk. It is not enough to make the passage way passable—the law says it must be clean.

Highly Indignant

Mr. Porrett argued for the crowd that he had driven over the streets that day and found that 75 percent of the walks of the city were as bad or worse than his and that he did not intend to waste one iota of snow. He did not see the justice of picking out a few citizens when the conditions complained of was almost universal. He protested that dragging a man down to police court was humiliating and that the bylaw was ridiculous any way.

Mr. Porrett said that he always kept the walk in front of his house in an easily passable condition safe to walk on and he wanted to know if the court would like to see the walk off as the snow flakes came down.

Law Must Be Enforced

The Magistrate said his duty and no recourse but to see the law was enforced as written. He pointed out that the city was in charge of possible damage actions if snow and ice were allowed to remain on sidewalks beyond a reasonable length of time.

The majority of the delinquent snow shovellers pleaded guilty and paid one dollar but one or two insisted on having the offense proved with the result that $4.50 costs was tacked on to their penalty. One asked if nobody else had raised the $1.00 and promised to bring it in today.

The moral is "eternal vigilance and an active snow shovel are the price of keeping out of police court.

Almost One New Citizen Arrived Each Day During Past Year

April and May showed the lowest when but five couples made the yow irrevocable during each month. In all one hundred and twenty-two couples became one in the year, five more than in 1925.

The Great Majority

With a total of 221 deaths during the past year one hundred and twenty-two males and ninety-nine females joined the great majority. Thirty-nine answered the summons to their reward during April, the month of the heaviest mortality during the year while March showed the smallest death rate for the year, but eleven deaths having been registered. Two persons of the twenty-two children were either stillborn or premature. 19 died under one year, 16 from 1 to 10 years, 5 from 10 to 20 years, 13 from 18 to 30 years, 17 from 30 to 50 years, 53 from 50 to 70 years and 76 over 70 years.

Bro. D. S. Ainsworth proposed a toast to "Canada Our Country." This was responded to by Bro. J. O. Herity of Belleville.

E. L. Hubbs thanked the orchestra for their rendition of various numbers and also the hostess for her extraordinary spread.

Bros. H. Rose of Brighton and Jos. Duckworth moved and seconded a vote of thanks to the Lodge for their splendid entertainment.

The rich ore encountered in sinking operations on the Teck Hughes property continues with depth, the vein is reported to be over seven feet wide and carrying values of over a hundred dollars to the ton. Shareholders of this stock have every reason to expect higher prices for the shares.

Despite the bad effect of the reported platinum find on the Acosda property broadcasted by a News Service in New North, there is a very good market for the stock. Sellers are still offering shares, and as long as stock can be picked up at these prices the market will not go up. That is the position.

DRIFTED THREE DAYS ON BLOCK OF SHIFTING ICE

Harrowing Experience of Two Fishermen Along Lake Superior

"LUCK" WITH THEM

Nothing to Eat But Herring Which They Devoured Raw

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Jan. 7.—Two Round Island fishermen and a horse played Robinson Crusoe on an ice raft a half mile square, eating frozen raw herring for two nights and three days, while their raft of eight-inch ice raced them for one into White Fish Bay to the Parisien, where they made a hazardous landing and were brought back by a lighthouse keeper, it became known today.

By the allotment of chances their ice raft ran up on the Parisien. Had the wind changed, or had the raft floated half a mile away, the fishermen and their horse would probably still be drifting in Lake Superior or resting at the bottom of the lake.

Alleck McKenzie and C. R. Draper, fishermen of Dollar Settlement, were fishing in the herring nets Tuesday off Round Island. One of them noticed that a huge flow of ice had broken away and that they were being carried out in to the lake, driven by a southwest wind. Three days and two nights the ice drifted with their icy craft at the mercy of the wind. They had a quantity of herring in the nets, one of which they took them so they devoured them raw. The horse had nothing to eat.

The snow bitter cold and the only shelter the men had was the cart used to haul the fish. On the third day of their journey they sighted the island and a lookout would have it, their ice raft was headed straight for the shore. The raft struck a reef, broke and made way for round the island and then came fast on shore, while the men hurriedly left the precarious floating home and were welcomed by Keeper Douglas and his family.

Ambrose Mcavoy, noted painter of women, died in London from pneumonia.

Six men were sentenced to death in Moscow for embezzlements and bribe taking.

GANDIL MAKES AFFIDAVIT THAT MONEY PAID TIGERS FOR LOSING

Upholds Risberg's Evidence and Willing to Go Before Landis

Chicago, Jan. 7.—Arnold Gandil, banished White Sox first baseman, has sworn in an affidavit that Detroit threw four games to the Chicago team in 1917 and that almost every member of the White Sox drew $45 to $100 subsequently turned over to the Tigers.

The affidavit was made in the office of the Chicago Tribune and the charges upheld those made before Commissioner Landis on Wednesday by "Swede" Risberg. Gandil came here to testify in the resumption of the hearing.

In his affidavit Gandil maintained to Detroit players that the Sox would reward them for easing up. Gandil said the frameup was made before the first of those four games was played. "I met Bill James under the grandstand at Comisky Park before he first game," the affidavit read. "Bill said to me, these are going to be some pretty soft games, and I said, 'well Bill, it goes till night, I will see that you are fixed all right.'"

Gandil offered to go before Commissioner Landis at four o'clock this afternoon.

Players Knew

After reciting his conversation with James, The Tribune quotes the affidavit as continuing: "First intimation that I had that it was generally talked among Chicago players that these games were being thrown was the night after the first ball game in the club house, when Rowland, Schalk, Eddie Collins and Gleason were discussing how easily we had won the game. They mentioned different things that had happened during the day and Eddie Collins made the remark how terrible games looked." At another point in the affidavit said: "I don't claim that every single one of the fellows who contributed to this pool, which to my recollection seemed between $900 and $1,100, did no thinking that we were paying Detroit for throwing four games. I only know that it was general talk among the fellows that Detroit had been pretty friendly with us in September when we needed it, and we ought to do something for them."

Go Before Landis

Gandil said he would repeat his story to Commissioner Landis provided the commissioner is confined to four games under question. He would not stand to be bullied and he was not going to talk just to get even with fellows who once threw him down, but because Landis had asked him for what he knew. He declared that what Risberg told the commissioner was true and spoke of the fact that "Swede" was called liar by some of those he accused. "Risberg was too easy," said Gandil, "Nobody will call me a liar in my hearing and get away with it. Risberg couldn't tell all the story because he didn't know it. I can tell it and no man is going to scare me." Whereas Risberg's story was general, Gandil's charges are definite. He names several players and tells facts they charged the games alleged to have been "thrown".

BASKETBALL

The Y Gym was the scene of a fast game of basketball last night when the Baptist and St. Thomas' girls played a game which decided the title to Group "B" of the ladies' division of the Corporate Basketball League. The St. Thomas' girls won by a margin of five points the score being 21-26 but had the game been by one gross much longer it is hard to say who might have been the winner as the losers were travelling at a fast clip near the end of the game and the St. Thomas' girls were fast losing a comfortable lead piled up in the initial period.

On the forward line the work of Miss Mulcher and E. Doolittle was outstanding, the former scoring no less than twenty-seven of her team's points and the latter being responsible for twenty-two of the Baptists total score. The game was exceptionally clean throughout only a few fouls being made by either team.

DINNER AND PRESENTATION TO HIS HONOR, THE RETIRING LIEUT.-GOVERNOR OF ONTARIO COL. HENRY COCKSHUTT

TORONTO, JANUARY 18TH

A rousing interest is being taken by the people of Ontario in the Banquet and Presentation to be tendered on January 18th to Col. Henry Cockshutt, retiring Lieut.-Governor of the Province.

The Banquet Committee, under the able Chairmanship of Mr. George Wilson and the Secretaryship of Mr. J. G. McIntosh of Toronto, have worked indefatigably to obtain as large a representation of the citizens of the Province as may be possible and all public bodies and organizations in the various municipalities are putting forth every effort toward assisting in obtaining the objective. The co-operation of the Railway Companies follows as a matter of course, and the question of transportation of the guests is receiving every attention.

A special train has been announced by Canadian National Railways as operating between Windsor and Toronto, thereby serving the territory from which the attendance is expected to be particularly heavy. From other districts transportation requirements will be protected adequately by the furnishing of extra coaches or parlor cars as may be necessary on regular trains.

The Banquet Committee have urged those at outlying points to form parties of ten or more in that advantage may be taken of the special party fare, and this means of reduced transportation will at once recommend itself. Canadian National Agents and representatives at all points are keenly alive to the importance of handling the traffic originating in their areas with comfort and despatch, and will be glad to give complete information and to help in organizing special fare parties for the benefit of those who desire to participate in what will be an outstanding event for years to come in the history of the Province of Ontario.

BATTLESHIPS TO SOON BE ALL OIL BURNERS

Washington, Jan. 7.—A new era in United States naval history will have fully dawned at the end of the year 1927, when the offshore coal-burning battleships, born more than a century ago through the inventive genius of Robert Fulton, will be a thing of the remote past.

Three dreadnaughts, the Utah, the Wyoming and the New York, which in their day have consumed unknown quantities of coal, remain to be modernized. They will have a new set of engines, new oil-burning furnaces to replace them on a par with other ships of the fleet. When these are completed, they will mark the close of a program inaugurated six years ago when it was determined most desirable to use oil.

Because of the coal barrier in Australia, the failure of the nations to agree to the closing of the commercial ports to battleships during the limitation conference in 1921, and the fact that the navy the first "fuel-conscious" nation, planned for protracted cruises and to carry nothing down to the bottom mud, utmost.

Nearly a century later, in 1900, the North Dakota, first United States battleship to utilize oil as fuel, was commissioned.

The trio of vessels to undergo reconditioning in the coming year are all more than 10 years old. The change of fuel consumption, together with extensive overhauls in Boston, Philadelphia and Norfolk Navy Yards is expected to rejuvenate them.

Advantages of oil are found by Navy officials in its concentration of power in less space than coal, its cleanliness, and adaptability for handling. Oil has a higher combustion efficiency and gives an even greater cruising range.

Most of the newer oil-burning battleships are electrically propelled. Oil burners generate steam which in turn spins turbines for the generation of electric current. Submarines, of course are electrically outfitted. All the Navy's destroyer burn oil.

CHILDREN NEED A LONG PERIOD OF PLAY HOUR

Bad Effects of School Require an Antidote Says J. B. Nash

New York, N.Y., Jan. 7.—Four to six hours of vigorous play activity each day are a necessary antidote for the bad effects of school on the child's development, according to Jay B. Nash, associate professor of physical education at New York University, in a recent radio talk under the auspices of the Playground and Recreation Association of America, on the topic, "After-School Play for Boys and Girls."

"Try as you will, and as the best educators are trying, the school is a great strain on the physical and the mental life of the child. It is a strain as it is at present organized but it should not be and will not be as we learn more about the child and the matter of education. The curse of the school is the long hours of inactivity—the bad seating, the poor ventilation, the artificial lighting and the artificial heating."

"Play activity in the open offsets the effect of long hours of sitting with its marked result and decreased appetite; it checks bad vertical curves which tends to decrease respiration; it offsets the effect of bad seating conditions with their tendency to slow up physical development; and finally, it checks the many conditions of mental strain with their tendency to delinquency and to the cutting off of development of power, according to Professor Nash.

"Playing jacks, marbles, the piano or sewing, cannot be classed as vigorous play," said the speaker, "there should be plenty of running, skipping, chasing, dodging and climbing. Unless strenuous can be closed, children should not be allowed to play in the street. Vigorous team games, such as baseball, basketball, soccer and the games of all kinds fulfil the child's physical needs. Skating and coasting are also good types. When there is a little space about the house, a basketball standard can be put in the back yard or three might be room in the back yard for a bar or a pair of rings. A work-bench in the garage or the basement will give the boy an opportunity to make many of the things to which he is interested, such as bows and arrows, coasters, basketball standards, etc.

"All of the play the child needs undoubtedly. If the best results are to be obtained," Professor Nash concluded.

RADIO CHRISTMAS FOR QUEEN CITY

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 7.—(By C.P.)—It was a radio Christmas for this city, that of 1926. It is estimated that between half-a-million and a million's worth of radio gifts were sold here. There were three other notable developments in the Christmas buying for the radio—aside altogether from the lines which for the past ten years have been the favorite gateway grounds for the merchant for Christmas gifts. They were golf equipment, floor lamps and antiques. Those were bought in much greater quantities than ever before at Christmas.

"People are becoming educated in the art of making their homes tasteful," said an expert. "This accounts for the big demand for floor lamps, table lamps and antiques. More and more families are becoming dissatisfied with the illumination from one fixture in the centre of the room. These are gradually going out altogether, I believe. People want the light where it is most convenient in their homes, and they are getting this through the use of floor lamps.

In jewelry, beautiful and costly articles are in demand, but they must have a distinct element of use. Incidentally, men this year showed more courage in the buying of silk and near silk undies than ever before, for wives, sisters, and sweethearts.

Mines in the Limelight

This sketch shows the relative position of the famous Amulet-Area properties in Quebec, on which a recent electrical survey indicated an ore zone now being proved with the diamond drills. Mining men claim that there is about a 90% chance that the drilling will disclose a sulphide ore body, but no one can tell anything about it, and the speculation which has put Area shares up from around 22c to over $1.30 a share and Amulet up from around $1.30 to around $2.60 is described by a northern paper as the most interesting gamble since the early days of Cobalt. The electrical survey on Area took place in low lying ground, just over the southwest corner of the Amulet. As shown on the map, near where the spectacular strike has been made on Vickers and Ribago, and which shows a length of some 1,400 feet on the Vickers property alone.

North of Amulet and Area is shown the Waite-Montgomery on which Noah Timmins, President of Hollinger has an option.

SEN. Mc NARY BRINGS IN FARM RELIEF BILL

Washington, D.C., Jan. 7 (By John Sayre, Canadian Press Correspondent).—Complications continue in the farm relief situation in Congress. The farm relief measure desired by the corn belt has been introduced in the Senate by Senator McNary and, is a somewhat modified form, in the House by Chairman Haugen of the committee on agriculture. But it is still a long distance from enactment.

President Coolidge and Secretary Jardine continue their opposition and eastern members of Congress and the most of the members from industrial centers are hostile to the legislation.

It is difficult to exaggerate the exasperation of many of the agricultural members from the middle west over the situation and not easy to overstate the political dynamite involved in it.

What is making the matter worse is that while the administration and eastern members balk at farm relief action, the banking conditions in some parts of the middle west are getting worse. Little appears in print about this but the frank comment of one of the foremost banking institutions of Des Moines, to say nothing of numerous cases by far lesser, is that in that part of the west, indicates that the agricultural regions are hard hit, is not a question of the need farmers needing more loans. The causes go deeper and are involved in the fundamentals of the economic conditions under which agriculture is laboring.

These students of the agricultural problem who are frank about the matter ascribe the farmer's difficulties to a number of causes including tariff on manufactures which the farmer buys, high freight rates, lack of inland water transportation at low rates which will give him easy access to foreign markets, the failure to enforce the antitrust laws and to prevent the growth of combinations and monopolies whose heavy capitalization takes toll from agriculture, government extravagance and resulting high taxes, high interest rates and other causes not far to seek.

The truth of the matter is that in the opinion of some of the ablest men in country agriculture in the United States is going to continue on the down grade unless an administration and a Congress in the near future effect a series of big reforms which will redound to the benefit of the farmer. No pending farm relief bill though it might help would not reach to the root of the difficulties.

It is a curious fact that one of the strong advocates of curtailment of immigration has been the agricultural influence in Congress. But there is not lacking evidence that this very curtailment has hit the farmers hard. It has, among other things, drained the farms of ablest agricultural labor, or impded in that direction.

Signs are wanting of a political uprising in the middle west which will take on proportions some of the western politicians do dream of. Yet, however, will depend on leadership. If there were in the west a man with anything like the capacity for leadership of a Roosevelt, there would be an upheaval in the 1928 campaign which would make the renomination of President Coolidge impossible would put western independents in a position to hold the balance of power in House and Senate and might even send a middle western man to the White House. Former Governor Lowden of Illinois is just now the man to whom many of the western farmers are turning. But whether he will measure up to the demands remains to be seen. It is not inconceivable that in the end the farmers will turn to some new democratic Moses. It is certain that party reins never before rested so lightly on them as they do today.

C.P.R. STEAMERS HAVE BIG YEAR ON THE B.C. COAST

Vancouver, B. C., Jan. 6.—Review ing the year 1926 Capt. J. W. Troup, manager of the British Columbia coast steamship service of the Canadian Pacific Railway stated that it had been a marked success from the view point of the company. There were several outstanding developments in the coastwise service that were responsible for this success, continued Capt. Troup. The Princess Marguerite and the Princess Kathleen, in the triangular service, had a particularly good season, while the Alaskan tourist business was also good. Notwithstanding the increased service by other lines. The motor traffic between Vancouver and Nanaimo was very much improved with the placing of the motor princess on that run last summer.

Automobiles of all classes were handled more expeditiously, and the number showed an increase of something like 50 percent. Business from the west coast of Vancouver Island was considerably enhanced in value by the operation of an increasing number of fish reduction plants. We had to fit out the Princess Ena especially for this work with special oil tanks and pumping arrangements and the investment was appropriately justified. The Princess Ena is also operating to advantage since the herring fishing season opened said Capt. Troup. The tourist business and cruises on the west coast of Vancouver Island, which have proved so popular the last year or two, will be taken care of with increased service this coming summer and the new steamer Nootka which was recently acquired by the company, will be put in order for the handling of freight but now generally on the coast, and will be ready for early spring operations. MANITOBA WANTS SALE OF BEER BY THE GLASS

Winnipeg, Man., Jan. 7.—(By Canadian Press)—Petitions still are in circulation throughout Manitoba which will be presented during the approaching session of the provincial legislature, asking for the passage of an act which would provide the sale of beer by the glass. Already about 80,000 names have been subscribed, it is officially stated.

Agitation for the sale of beer by the glass in recent years was started at the first annual convention of the Manitoba command of the Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League, on March 10, 1926. R. H. Webb, Mayor of Winnipeg is president of the League.

THE ROAD TERROR

When your engine's humming sweetly and the road is smooth as glass,
And you're naturally tempted to be stepping on the gas,
And you let 'her out a little"—to forty-five or so,
Just to test the motor's action when you really let her go,
Then—boy hear a sudden creaker and a popping pop! pop! pop!
And you've gotta slow to twenty—it's the Motorcycle cop.

I suppose his wife may look him, and perhaps his children do,
But I'm sure he hates to imagine that he has a friend or two,
But I'll bet he keeps it secret—what his job is all about,
If this bird upon his cycle spoils your joyous drive,
Snooping on you with a summons when you better thirty-five!
Is there any sound more vicious than that "pop! pop! pop! pop!"
As you hear the motorcycle of the municipal guard.

What's the use of making copies with municipal guard.

If this bird upon his cycle spoils your joyous drive,
Snooping on you with a summons when you better thirty-five!

As you hear the motorcycle of the municipal guard.

HAMBURG STEAK GOOD FOR TROUT

Hartford, Conn., Jan. 7.—Hamburg steaks, latest addition to the equipment of fishermen who frequent the Frozen River in Mansfield, proved excellent bait for trout, according to Fish Warden Superintendent John W. Titcomb of the state Fish and Game Commission.

A truckload of trout destined for planting in a state-leased stream was put into Barrett's Pool in the Frozen River last March when the truck became mired. The trout did not escape and fishing in the pool was prohibited.

The fish showed appreciation of food thrown to them from the ardent anglers acquired the habit of everyone hamburg steak for them. Toward the end of the season the fish started to scatter.

One angler, in half an hour, took from open waters below the pool 15 trout weighing ten pounds. Helped by the contributions of Hamburg and other food thrown them, the trout doubled in weight between the time they were planted and the time they scattered, according to the report.

Puppy Pitou Goes to Quebec

Albert Jobin, of Winnipeg, was all set to step aboard on the platform of the station waiting for the C.P.R. train to pull out that was carrying the French Canadian westerners travelling under the auspices of the "Survivance Fran caise" on a Christmas and New Year visit to friends and relatives in the province of Quebec. He refused to be separated from his puppy "Pitou" who had no idea of the long journey in front of him. Fate intervened however and Albert after all couldn't for family reasons make the trip. On the other hand every body on the train fell in love with Pitou and he was unanimously elected mascot. So Pitou made the journey and doubtless would have a lot to say about it when he comes back to Winnipeg. It he has learned French in the interval

BIG LYNX SHOT

Oshawa, Jan. 7.—A lynx, a 30-pound wild cat, mottled gray in color, was shot yesterday within two miles of Oshawa.

Mr. Walter Rose, who lives with his father, Mr. Norman Rose, on a farm, on the west side of the road and just north of the Union Cemetery was the huntsman whose shot brought low the intruder.

Mr. Rose said he was out with a single barrel shot gun—the usual shotgauge—and in seeking rabbits was walking through an orchard about a mile east of his home when he noticed an animal of some sort in a tree. He was not sure what it was at first, but it was lighting at him very valiantly and he didn't like its looks so he took a shot. As he fired, the animal leaped for the ground away from him and his shot struck it in the hind foot.

SENATOR PULLS LION'S TAIL IN PLEA FOR NAVY

Says European Nations a Unit in Hating United States

BRITAIN DANGEROUS

View of Hiram Johnson; Navy Bill for $314,652,680 Reported

Washington, Jan. 7.—Pleading for an American navy strong enough to battle with a hostile world, Hiram Johnson of California, ran amuck in the senate, twisting the tail of the British lion, pulling handfuls of feathers from the French Chanticleer and even trampling the Belgian hare under foot.

European nations, he said, discussed among themselves on many subjects but were a unit in their hatred of the United States. He glimpsed a European concert of powers having for its aim the subjugation of the United States, he declared, when it could again seize active aid from Japan and at least silent sympathy from Latin America.

Scarcely a Friend

The California senator declared that the United States might view with complacency the present state of unpreparedness if she enjoyed the good-will of other countries, but she had scarcely a friend among all the nations of the world. The feeling of Britain toward the United States was depicted as cold-blooded animosity, even more dangerous than the passionate hatred of France, or the threatening gestures of Italy.

The English, he said, call American "Shylocks"; the French call them "swine", while the Germans and Italians were even less complimentary.

Senator Johnson said the European nations could not be conciliated by a policy of debt cancellations. Such a policy would not allay their resentment, but would bring the United States into contempt. They were angered, he said, because the United States had won the great jackpot of the war, coming away with all the money.

Washington Agreement

He charged that Great Britain and all the other nations except the United States had failed to observe either the letter or the spirit of the Washington agreement for the reduction of naval armaments. The subject of naval defence was not before the senate, and Mr. Johnson's speech was evidently intended to influence the fight for additional cruisers going on in the house of representatives.

Senator Johnson, Republican, California, demanded that the United States navy be raised from its "woeful status" to a parity with any other nation.

Declaring that "we were outmaneuvred in the arms conference," and "that everybody believed our navy would be equal to Great Britain's and greater than that of Japan," Senator Johnson asserted the United States navy in comparison with the other two powers is "underbuilt, insufficient, inadequate, and so far inferior as to humiliate the national pride and imperil the national safety."

The California senator suggested that the United States should build eight cruisers at the rate of one each a year until the navy is the equal of any in the world.

Naval Bill

Drawing a barrage of criticism of the United States navy from both sides of the senate, the naval appropriation bill was reported yesterday to the house. The verbal shells were hurled by members from both parties as attacks to be delivered when the bill carrying $314,652,080 for activities the next fiscal year, with the exception of blocked cut for navy men in both houses.

While the bill still was in the safe harbor of the appropriations committee before the house met, a plan was brewing among naval committee members to demand elevation of the guns of United States battleships to equal the firing range of British and Japanese warcraft.

WHEAT SHOWS AN UPWARD TENDENCY

Chicago, Jan. 6.—Wheat showed an early upward trend today influenced by advances of freight rates from the Southern Hemisphere, notice of less wheat afloat for Great Britain than a year ago also was a factor. Opening unchanged to 1-4 cent higher, wheat gained all around. Corn, oats and provisions likewise developed firmness, corn starting 1-8 cent to 1-4 cent off but soon showing an advance.

Here and There

More Clydesdales are on the way to Canada from Scotland. It is announced that the year's imports will run to 120, a record since the war.

Over a million Christmas trees have been shipped from New Brunswick to the United States mainly, according to unofficial estimates based on exports of some 500 carloads averaging 2,000 trees to the car.

About 150 French-Canadians from the Prairie Provinces travelling under the auspices of the "Survivance Fournalier" arrived Montreal by special Canadian Pacific Railway train at the Windsor Street Station recently to spend the holidays and New Year in the province of their origin.

According to a recent statement of E. W. Beatty, Chairman and President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the record of the railway's common stock as at June 30th, 1926, indicates that $51 per cent is held in Great Britain, 19½ per cent. in Canada and 19 per cent. in the United States.

All previous records have been broken by the salaries paid in British Columbia for 1926. It is estimated that the total pack for this year, when all returns are in, will be, in round figures, 1,900,000 cases. The nearest approach to this was in 1924, when slightly more than 1,700,000 cases were put up.

Early in June next year, it is announced, a regular airplane service between Chicoutimi, Montreal and Toronto will be inaugurated by the Canadian Transcontinental Airways Company—a corporation which has just received its letters patent. The airplanes or hydroplanes will make stops at Riviere du Loup, Quebec, Three Rivers, Montreal and Ottawa.

Nearly a ton of mistletoe wasted its sweetness on the Eveless air of the Canadian Pacific Express Company's yards in Montreal at Christmas time. It arrived from France and England via the Canadian Pacific steamship "Montrolite," and was boxed in twenty-two crates, of which twelve were destined for New York and the balance for distribution in this city.

Two hundred and ninety-four vessels of 55,295 gross tons and 42,923 net tons, were built in Canada and registered during 1926, according to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Wood vessels built consisted of 267 sailing, 3 steam and 132 motor, and metal vessels of 5 sailing and 8 steam. Of the total 294 vessels built, 46 were constructed in British Columbia, 11,250 tons to Ontario, 7,670 tons to Quebec and 2,108 to Nova Scotia.

United States settlers continue to cross the border in large numbers despite the lateness of the season. November figures issued by the Department of Immigration and Colonization show that the Government Agency at Regina, N.D., forwarded 123 settlers and seven cars of effects, compared with 105 settlers and four cars in the same month last year. The Kansas City Agency sent 46 settlers, as compared with four last year, and the Detroit Agency sent sixty, an increase of over 200 per cent. over November, 1925.

February will see the winter sports at the carnival at its height. At the Quebec Frontenac Course, On the 4th and 5th the foremost speed racers in America will compete in their annual Speed Speed Skating Championship for all distances and ages. Hockey, snowshoeing, bobsled racings, ski-ing, will be going on every day of the month, but the outstanding event will be the Eastern International Dog Sled Derby, February 21-23, which will cover the 120 miles of the race at the rate of 40 miles a day. Teams from the United States and Canada will compete, and it is understood there will be a woman competitor in the race.

THE WORST BLOW OF ALL.

"No woman is really afraid of old age until she can no longer honestly complain that she is constantly insulted by strange men." This is an old bit of light-sophistication saying more or less smart by that the worst evil which can befall any woman is to be found unattractive.

Mrs. Cora Dorian, of Brooklyn described this to a T in open court the other day. The lady faced charges preferred by her husband of misconduct. "Ridiculous!" said Mrs. Dorian. "Look at me—fat and short and near-sighted. Do I look as if I would have much chance at 'misconduct'?"

The jury acquitted her after short deliberation, and Mrs. Dorian broke into wild, sobbing—which every woman can well understand.

PATENT BANDEAU FOR HAT SAVED HER FROM DEATH

Edmonton, Alta., Jan. 7 (By Canadian Press).—Saved from instant death by a tiny patent hat bandeau, Miss Dinah Elston is recovering from an accident which came near to being among the fatalities of a recent storm in the city.

When entering her apartment, Miss Elston was struck on the head by a milk bottle which was carried by the force of the wind from a third storey window. Fortunately, the force of the blow was broken by the band of metal and diminutive air cushion which composed the bandeau she had placed almost on her hat. Otherwise, according to her physician, death would have been instantaneous. With great effort, Miss Elston managed to reach her apartment and summon help. She is still quite ill but her recovery is deemed merely a matter of time.

A peculiar coincidence is that the bandeau which saved Miss Elston's life was really intended to be inserted in the back of the hat to keep it in place, but because it was uncomfortable there she had removed it and placed it in front of the crown.

COW WAS "FUDDLED"

Bovine Ate Frozen Apples and Accumulated a Real "Jag"

Caledon, Queen's County, N.S., Jan. 5.—"A local farmer turned his most famous thoroughbred cow out in the orchard for a few hours' exercise and observed her reeling and finally falling. Rushing to her assistance, he helped her to regain her feet. To his consternation she repeated the performance falling in a completely inlegested condition. "He discovered that the cow had eaten heartily of apples which had been frozen while lying on the ground. Subsequent thawing had caused fermentation from which a considerable alcoholic content had resulted."

BOYS PREPARED FOR THE SERIOUS WORK OF LIFE

Hartford, Conn., Jan. 7.—Learning trades and earning money while still going to school is made easy for boys in the higher grades of Connecticut public schools. Manufacturers in many instances have met the state more than half way in the promotion of the state trade school system.

Some of the boys showed such an aptitude for silver-smithing that one concern took over the student class, organized a department for it, indentured the boys on a part time basis and paid them the same wage for the time they were in school as for the hours they worked. This company also sent some of its men to the school between the ages of 25 and 40 years to the trade school for upgrading.

At a school in the hat manufacturing district the boys were given a turn in each department of that industry as a part of the trades course. The students at school in a textile district were sent through a practical mill course from picker to spinning rooms, before finishing off in plain and jacquard weaving.

The trades schools are in industrial centres and each specializes in the leading industry in its locality. In the last school year the state board of education indentured 481 pupils.

CAMEL TO LOSE PLACE AS "SHIP OF THE DESERT"

Wonderful New Craft Supposed to Meet Requirements of Arid Regions

Berlin, Jan. 7.—The future "ship of the desert" will not be the traditional camel, in the view of a Kiel inventor, who has evolved a craft which he believes will meet all modern demands for speed, effectiveness and freight and passenger carrying capacity in traversing the earth's arid regions.

The new craft, in which its projector, Johann Cristoph Bishoff, is working in conjunction with other engineers and the co-operation of industrial interests, is really a gigantic motor vessel, nearly 200 feet long, 38 feet in breadth and standing about 30 feet high, resting on four huge wheels nearly 40 feet in diameter, which resemble the paddle wheels on the old-time river steamers.

It is calculated that these wheels will take kindly to the desert sands and skim over them easily and safely, for the estimated speed of the new land ship is about twenty miles an hour under average conditions with a slowdown to perhaps less than ten miles if the sand is extremely soft and deep.

The craft is intended to speed its way across any desert area independent of high roads or even trails, taking an airline from start to destination. It is designed primarily for passenger traffic with accomodations for 300 persons, but with capacity for fifty tons or more of freight. It bears a strong resemblance to a medium-sized ocean liner, with pilot house and bridge and commander at the helm. Powerful gasoline engines supply the motive power.

BEYOND ALL DREAMS

By Bertha M. Clay

"Are you going to remain, or will you come to the opera?" repeated Durand.

"I tell you I cannot bear the music and the crush of the opera tonight, Durand."

"Adieu. I hope you will have a very pleasant evening," cried Durand, and he bowed to the handsome lady, with a Frenchman's exaggerated politeness.

The lady did not detect the mocking emphasis in the Frenchman's tongue. She smiled as some women smile, to whom empty compliments are sweet as honey to little children.

"He is coming it fast," she remarked after Durand had gone. "Is monsieur an artist?"

"Yes, madame."

"Oh, that is charming. I must ask your name, and then introduce myself."

"Donald Renfrew, madame. I paint in the atelier of Charles Le Grand."

"Ah! you study in the French school. What a volume of wealth in the Louvre. Ah! she delightful Paris, it is a city of enchantment. My name, monsieur, is Ristenau—Georgette Ristenau."

Renfrew bowed. He and—cared now for her interest in this rain, shallow, and somewhat selfish person, for on his quick wits judged her not to be churchgoer, came from the fact of her connection with the unknown Polish maiden, whom she intended to shut up all the winter in her private apartments on the third floor. "I will manage to see her," thought the artist; "her beauty might serve as a relief to the sweet face of my Dolemon. She will be haughty, as all the Polish and Russian women are—so they say. Still I could make a sketch—but why should not Miss Ristenau even permit me a sight of her lovely features? I will ask her."

Renfrew was diplomatic enough to ask Miss Ristenau not to play a game of innocence with him, and she smilingly consented. After that he ventured to hint timidly that he was sadly in want of a head for his principal picture; would Miss Ristenau allow him to see the Princess—; would she bring her to his studio, at least once?—

Immediately Miss Ristenau's genial smiles disappeared; she froze up into the coldest, strictest of women.

"Monsieur, you request an impossibility. You are British and cannot understand les convenances here. No, monsieur, I can not determined not to permit mademoiselle to meet you, that I will leave this hotel tomorrow unless you promise to abandon the idea."

Renfrew bowed, apologized, thought Miss Ristenau a perfectly detestable old woman, and he made an entrance in upon the salon, and began a little coldly to mount the stairs; just so as received the landing he heard a light, laughing step behind him; he turned, and there passed rapid under the light of the chandelier the round-faced, white-capped bonne, who had accompanied the dream-maiden at the Louvre. What made the more provokingly pleasant was the fact that the woman recognized him. She turned, she half smiled, she half frowned, and then she shot on to the entrance door of Miss Ristenau's apartments, she inserted a key, she passed in Renfrew caught a glimpse of a bright fire, a figure in black, with white lace at the throat—the door closed. He had seen the dream-maiden!

CHAPTER III.

THE DREAM-MAIDEN

Renfrew had seen the dream-maiden, but the door had closed, and he was left standing on the landing. The dim outlined lamp burned close to where he had stationed himself. He could see the long bench placed against the wall, that those who felt fatigued in mounting the staircase might rest themselves. He could see the dimly-polished floor, large and lofty, larger considerably than an ordinary stereotype in England. There was a brightly-polished bell-handle.

The five rooms forming the apartments on this stage were let off like a furnished house by Madame Ardell. Son frequently Marie, the round-eyed bonne, must have to perform the arduous duties of a maid-of-all-work—cooking, dusting, sweeping.

The fair Princess Nicholine had, then, no special personal attendant, none of the luxuries that one naturally associates with the idea of a titled lady. A small apartment in the old Hotel Charmetley, in the ancient Rue de Omore, within two hundred yards of the Seine; a strict and stony governess, with an implacable will, to enforce her; one domestic, few, perhaps not any, fine acquaintances—behold the outward circumstances of Donald's Princess!

"The Princess Nicholine—Ariell! What a lovely name! She looked ethereal, spiritual. Bah! he was talking trash to himself. This beautiful lady would never be anything to him.

Still, as he mounted the stairs toward his own rooms, he could not help thinking what a strange caprice of fate had sent the dream-maiden to dwell under the very same roof with him, after first transfixing him with her enchanting beauty at the door of the Louvre.

"I am not superstitious, I hope," said Donald to himself; "still there is something wonderfully strange about it. I will not believe that the dream-maiden can be nothing to me. In some way she will influence my life, or I shall influence hers, I know not which, but I feel sure of it."

In his own room the stove was cold; in consequence the room was chill, for he had opened the window to admit the air. He looked up at the moon sailing through pearly clouds. The dark day had been succeeded by a brilliant night.

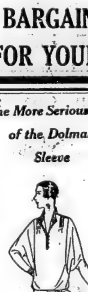

There was a little balcony outside the window of Donald's salon. He stepped out on it, and looked with his poet's eyes at the beauties of light and shade, —the mass of the tall white houses, covered with the far more dazzling whiteness of the snow; the gables and chimney-stacks standing out clearly defined against the gloy of the winter heavens; below, the streets snow-lined and, if not silent, still hushed to a mere fitful murmuring, like the voice of a child who frets in his sleep.

The freezing cold drove the dreamer into his room. Then the looked at his watch; it was not yet ten. Too early for bed, besides, he was not in a sleepy mood. Then the room was too cold for working in; it would take too long to heat the stove again. He resolved to go out and to stroll in the direction of the opera, and perhaps he would meet his friends coming out."

So Donald enveloped himself in his greatcoat, and once more sallied forth into the snowy streets. After all, he did not go toward the opera. He wandered on to the quay, and on along by the side of the river, where the lights were gleaming on the white ground. He was wishing—and this kind of wishing is a very sure sign of a young man's failing in love—that all this had happened years before, when the Siren City was beleaguered by her foes—ayze, or even in the terrible days of 1871, when the people of the Commune raged like demons within the walls, and when fire and sword stalked with death amid murder, though every street. Suppose that, during those perilous days, the dream-maiden had still been sheltered by the roof of the old Hotel Charmetley, how he would have watched and guarded her! how he would have soothed her fears! how joyfully would he have laid down his life to save hers! Then that horrible door on the third stage would not have been shut in his face—but the still and stony Miss Ristenau would not have refused him admittance—

First you see the dolman sleeve developed into a daytime dress, suitable for any business you may wish to transact. Simple and plain, in two-piece effect, this frock relies on a touch of embroidery on the blouse yoke, collar and cuffs for its trimming. The neck may be worn open, or closed in a straight, up-standing collar. The fashionable materials are satin crepe, crepe meteor, crepe de Chine, Georgette, crepe Roma and Canton crepe. The sleeves may be of the same material as the dress, or they may be of metallic brocade or Georgette to match.

That beige combines a sweet shade in Paris, where the young Parisienne wears darker hues of tan with it, and chooses a hat and coat of the sameshon, while tweeded effects are much worn, and in the way of an innovation come the horizontal rows of contrasting material—velvet bands, for instance, on a silk frock, with an interesting V motif in the front, to harmonize with the V neck.

RECOVERED MEMORY AFTER THIRTY YEARS WHEN STRUCK BY A TREE

Truro, N.S., Jan. 7.—Frank Burgess, about 55 years old, cook at shelter at the police station here, declares that he had just recovered his memory after a blank period that started about 30 years ago, when what are believed his lifeless body was carried ashore from a sailing ship at Gibraltar.

Burgess said that while working alone in the woods near here - few days ago he was struck by a falling tree and rendered unconscious for some time. When he recovered, he said, he was blind. After lying helpless part of a day, he recovered his sight and with it came his memory.

Coincident with the return of his memory, Burgess declared, the 30-year period intervening became hazy. He now believes that his home was across the Avon River, not far from Hantsport, and that an aged mother is still living there.

From inquiries made tonight by long distance telephone, it was learned that Pyfank Burgess left Centre Burlington, Hants County, about 25 years ago, on a sailing ship and that his mother, who still lives there, was advised of her son's death of yellow fever at Gibraltar short, ly after. His effects were sent home to her and he had since been mourned as dead. The mother, who was a widow when her son left home and had since remarried, is now past 80 and is anxiously awaiting the arrival from Truro of the man who claims to be her son.

RECORD NUMBER OF VISITORS TO CAN. NAT. PARKS

Highways Play Important Part in Increasing of Tourist Traffic

Calgary, Alta., Jan. 7 (By Canadian Press).—The 1926 summer season witnessed the establishment of new records in the number of persons visiting the Canadian National parks.

While this increase has been general it has been most noticeable in the matter of motor tourists. Advances made in the automobile industry and in the construction of good roads, have brought corresponding advances in the growth of motor travel, until this traffic has become of great importance in the development of the country.

Highways play an important part in drawing a large number of the tourists who visit Banff and Kootenay National parks by motor. Through the Kananaskis gateway, which is the eastern entrance to the Banff park and the Radium Hot Springs gateway, which is the western entrance to the Kootenay park, there passes each year the greater part of the motor traffic to the Canadian parks in the Rockies.

The volume of travel which poured into these two parks by motor is shown by the registrations. At the Kananaskis gateway at the end of October of this year, 18,949 motor cars had been registered as incoming; at Radium Hot Springs gateway, 6,281 entries were recorded, making a total of 24,662 cars entering the two parks. This number shows an increase of 5,789 over the number recorded in 1925.

Waterton Lakes, National Park, in Southern Alberta on the International boundary drew an amount of tourist travel far in excess of the previous year. The possibilities of this scenic wonderland are accentuated by the plans for extensive development announced for 1928.

The opening in June 1926 of the motor road extending from Lake Louise to Field, brought Yoho National Park for the first time into prominent in the motor tourist world. The further extension of this road which will enable motorists to proceed through Golden, is expected to be opened to travel early in 1927.

Jasper National Park, in the northern part of Alberta, had a most successful season, nearly 7,000 hotel registrations having been recorded prior to the end of October.

The National Buffalo Park at Wainwright, Alta., drew more visitors than in former years. A very keen interest is being taken in all countries, particularly in Canada and the United States, in the efforts of the Canadian government to preserve the buffalo and also in the experiments that are being conducted at Buffalo Park in cross breeding.

When an automobile skidded, the 3-year-old son of A.A.M. Keller was thrown from the car and killed, near Lebanon, Pa.

NEW QUOTA SCHEME

President Holds Us National Origin Bill

Washington, Jan. 7.—Discovery by government experts that the "national origin" provision of the immigration act of 1924 would have the effect of reducing immigration from the countries of Northern Europe, contrary to the purposes sought by some of the framers of the law, has prompted President Coolidge to request that the commission composed of the secretaries of state, commerce and labor, charged with the duty of devising new quotas, should suspend its work for the present.

Whether this means that the administration will seek the repeal of the "national origin" plan, which would become effective on July 1, 1927, if not modified by the president, is not made clear.

WILD OATS WAS CAUSE OF GOOD BEET CROP YIELD

Raymond, Alta., Jan. 7 (By C.P.) —Since land operations have ceased, farmers here are now discussing among themselves topics relative to crop returns for the year just passed. During the course of these conversations, many interesting figures in connection with the 1926 crops were made known.

A. J. Welton, whose best acreage for 1926 covered an area of 25 1-2 acres, from which he produced an average of 12 1-2 tons. Fifteen acres of this yielded an average of more than 15 tons. The most interesting feature in connection with this crop was the startling statement made by the grower that wild oats was the cause for the excellent yield.

Mr. Welton stated that his beet field was covered with wild oats, but for a time threatened destruction of the best stand and it was due to the persistent method of cultivation, which he used again, in an attempt to destroy the wild oats that resulted in the fine crop. Sugar Beet Seed Scheme Has important cultivation, during the present season, is the secret of success in the growing of beets.

TODAY'S THOUGHT

The moving finger writes and having writ
Moves on; Nor all thy piety nor wit
Can lure it back to cancel half a line

THE OLD STORY

The binder twine industry in Canada used to be great consolation to free traders. Binder twine is on the free list, and because special conditions enabled it to prosper, it was inevitably cited as proof that every other industry, no matter what their special circumstances, didn't require protection.

But there has come a change. Importations of binder twine during the past three years have become so heavy from Holland and Germany that they are threatening the Canadian business. For the three months ending June, 1924, Holland manufacturers sold $64,000 worth of binder twine in Canada. For the corresponding three months of 1925 their sales had grown to $51,000. For the same three months in 1926 the figure had mounted to $809,000. And there were the products of German manufacturers as well.

Recently the Brantford Cordage Company issued its annual statement. It showed that profits of $627,000 in 1925 had been cut in two in 1926, the reason given being foreign competition. The Brantford company was unable to compete with the products of Holland and Germany, made by labor costing one-third of the labor cost in Canada.

That is the story of Free Trade versus Protection in a nutshell. It is almost entirely a question of living standards. If Canadian workers want to live decently and comfortably, if they want to avoid the low wages and the lower standards of living existing in European countries, then they should be the first to try to see to it that the conditions by which they work are protected against the competition of low-wage factories elsewhere.

THE GROUP NUISANCE

Brief and formal though the preliminary proceedings of the new Parliament were last month, and of little value as a guide to future political developments, they at least suggested that, even with its substantial majority, the Government may not have such an easy row to hoe as its supporters expected. And the indications are that its troubles will arise not so much from the quickness of a strong and capably led official opposition as from the guerilla tactics of the so-called independent groups that form the "tail" of the present House of Commons.

In the light of past events and recent re-alignments no one, least of all the Prime Minister, seriously imagines that the independents collectively will prove a menace to the Government, or that the "tail" will even attempt to wag the Parliamentary dog. With the Liberal-Progressives snugly ensconced in the Government benches and their leader exalted to a position in the Cabinet; with the Labor triumvirate playing a tone hand in more or less close conjunction with Mr. Bourassa; and with the United Farmers from Alberta and their former associates, the Independent-Progressives, eyeing each other askance, there is little or no danger of a united revolt against the party in power.

What is to be feared is that the various groups will constitute, not so much a menace to the Government, as a Parliamentary nuisance and a clog upon the State machine. Composed of members who take themselves seriously and are not lacking in the ability to make them selves heard, they have already served notice that they claim certain rights of which they will demand recognition. Their right to take part in every debate and discussion is, of course, conceded, and, once publicity is the life of the group system, they may be trusted to make the fullest use of their opportunities.

Then each group has not only its own appointed leader, but also its own whip, who expects to be consulted by all the other whips in the arrangement of divisions, pairs, and other matters affecting the business of the House. Each favors a change of the rules which will permit of the multiplication of amendments; and each insists upon representation on the standing and special committees of Parliament. How the Government is going to meet these demands, without dislocating the parliamentary machinery, and causing endless confusion and consequent legislative congestion, is a problem not susceptible of easy solution and likely to prove somewhat embarrassing.

PEOPLE NEEDED !

Incomplete returns of the 1926 census of the Prairie Provinces afford material for reflection rather than for jubilation. The final figures for Alberta and Manitoba indicate aggregate increase over 1921 of 19,130 for Alberta and 28,958 for Manitoba.

This scarcely represents even the natural increase of the population, quite apart from immigration!

In Manitoba the rural population increased 12,350 and the urban population 16,579, making the total population of the province 639,056.

This is gratifying when it is considered, for Manitoba, being longer settled than the other two Prairie Provinces, was subjected more severely to the effects of the war and post-war periods than its western neighbors, by reason of the larger investments in agriculture per head of farming population.

The turn of the tide came to Manitoba with the crop of 1924, which, though not heavy, was profitable, with prices well above the level of the former year. Both 1925 and 1926 continued the improvement, steadied the population and brought emigration to the south back to the minimum.

Looking toward Alberta, the first and striking thing observed is that Calgary and Edmonton are now cities of 65,000 each, the former with 65,513 and the latter just 350 less. The other four cities of Alberta have not succeeded in keeping up to the 1921 figures.

The population of three federal electoral districts shows a small decrease while several show a healthily normal increase.

As in Manitoba, the past three years have seen fairly good crops, with improved prices for them. Asked to that there has been more active development of the natural resources of the province particularly in coal and oil.

Incomplete returns for Saskatchewan the great rural province of Canada which produces annually more wheat than all the other provinces combined indicate normal increase in both rural and urban districts.

Saskatoon, in company with all important centres in the western provinces, has manifested capacity to overcome its financial problems and has increased in population and trade.

In the fact of the census returns and with 17,000,000 acres of farm lands which in operating distance of existing railways there is a great opportunity for an energetic immigration and colonization policy on the part of the Federal Government, with co-operation of the Provincial Governments.

It is estimated there are 10,000,000 acres of farm lands, most of it already broken but unoccupied, within 15 miles of a railway.

That spells opportunity for experienced farm renters in Britain and elsewhere and a campaign put on in the proper manner should be productive of great results.

"THE REST IS SILENE"

The victory you sought is wholly yours
The heart you needed not comes back to-night
To lovely life, ordinary things.
And the heaped love of friends that never hurts.
I raked deaf wall, forbid my foolish cry
To useless, daily, quivering agonies.
Your friend, much nigh than the girl you liked,
Alone can soon be happy as of yore.
Again, dream on, dear, doubting artist-soul!
Teach, laugh, make love, bring joy I shall not hear.

Britain talks of abolishing the Grecian piece, her smallest silver coin. Another blow, exclaims The Brandon Sun at the Scottish Chuef.

"I met Tom today, Nellie," said Jean. Tom was the man Nellie had refused.

"Did you tell him I was married?" asked Nellie eventually.

"Yes."

"And did he seem sorry?"

"Yes." He said he was sorry, although he didn't know the man personally."

The ambulance answered a call to the G. T. R. station last night to remove a man to the hospital as he was suffering from a sick-key fit.

A man appeared in court this morning charged with tying his horse by the tongue, which resulted in the animal drawing away from the hitching and the tongue being extracted. He was given a severe sentence.

The separate School Board organized with the following members present, Gilfick, Lynch, Tisdale, Dawrie, Bailey, Macauley, Meagher, Malvern, Copeland, and Handley.

The talent taking part in the concert given at St. Thomas Sunday School, in the night were: Hazel Steele, Mabel Twining, Willie Cunnington, Queenie Retallack, Edna Bird, Annie Phillips, Mertel Gill, Helen Maron, Margery McQuaig, Mr. Epps, Connie Weller, Margery Hamilton.

NEW OUTLOOK TO STAGE A PICNIC AT ROYAL RANCH

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 3.—Dr. H. W. Fallis stated today that the announcement which was made last week to the effect that a special train would be operated under the auspices of the "new outlook" in Duty, with a view to bringing the people of eastern Canada in closer touch with those in the west has created a great deal of interest in the west where organizations in almost every city enroute have offered to see that the party is properly entertained. The latest invitation was from Professor W. L. Carlyle, M.S.H., the Prince of Wales' manager at High River, and arrangements have now been made to include the ranch in the itinerary. Whether his Royal Highness will be at his ranch at the time is not yet assured, but in any event the party will enjoy his hospitality. The train is being operated over Canadian Pacific Lines under the all-expense plan, and latest plans provide for motoring over the greater part of the Rocky Mountains. Enquiries are pouring in from all quarters to such an extent that Dr. Fallis is considering the placing of further restrictions on his party list or running his train in two sections. At present, however, his lists are open to anyone.

Dr. Harvey C. Hayes of Washington, has been awarded the John Scott medal, in recognition of his invention of every girl's education, according to Mrs. Nellie Jones of the University of Wisconsin faculty.

ECZEMA ENDED

Madame A. Larivière of Fall River, Mass., suffered with eczema for three years, and had treatment from several doctors, all of whom gave up the case. "Finally," she says, "I went to a specialist, which cost me another $25, but I was no better.

"A friend advised me to try Zam-Buk, which I did, and for which I have ever since been thankful. I very soon felt some relief, and perseverance with Zam-Buk completely rid me of the disease."

SEVERE CUT HEALED

Mr. C. Oakley of Saskatoon, who sustained a terrible cut on his leg, says: "Until I known of Zam-Buk when the accident occurred, I could have saved myself a $10 doctor's bill! A doctor sewed up the cut and attended me for five weeks, but the wound did not heal, and he advised me to go into a hospital.

"I objected, however, and used Zam-Buk instead, and in two weeks' time was back at work."

SAVED OPERATION

"Father developed a painful sore on his face," writes Miss N. Lewis of Silver Lake, Oregon. "Numerous remedies and treatment from several doctors failed to heal it, and the doctor advised an operation. Someone advised him to first try Zam-Buk. A few applications brought relief, and continued use of Zam-Buk entirely healed the sore, saving father from an operation."

Zam-Buk is best for eczema, ringworm, salt rheum, boils, pimples, ulcers, abscesses, blood-poisoning, piles, cuts, burns, scalds, and sores. All druggists 50c. box.

WINNIPEG RADIO STATION HEARD IN LIVERPOOL ENG.

First Time Peg. Station Has Ever Been Picked-up In Old England

Winnipeg, Man., Jan. 6 (By Canadian Press)—The Winnipeg radio station operated by the Canadian National Railways, has been heard in Liverpool, England, according to a letter received by H. H. Roberts, announcer for CNRW.

The strains of "Mary Lou" being broadcast in Winnipeg one Saturday evening were heard by Herbert Jones of 58 Monkswell Street, Dingle, Liverpool. Mr. Roberts is looking over the log of CNRW in verification of the statement, finds that "Mary Lou" was one of the items included on the program on the date he listened in.

The radio department here consulted the radio log kept of all numbers broadcast and verified the time of broadcasting and the items.

This is the first time that the station at Winnipeg has been picked up in England, although it has been heard as far south as the Isle of Pines and as far west as Hailer, Hawaii.

BELLE THEATRE

"Stop, Look and Listen" Larry Semon plays the role of a sober-faced bank cashier in the feature comedy of that title showing at the Belle Theatre today and Saturday.

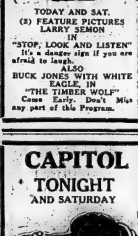

Larry always stopped and stayed outside when he heard the jingle of chips from some local "resort" where the youths of his age were playing poker. Larry always looked for new opportunities around the bank. And Larry always listened for the words of wisdom from the older men with whom he worked—while he stenographed. Bill, stopped only when the law stepped him, looked the other way when opportunity was knocking at his door, and listened for the clink of poker chips and click of pool balls.

The bank clerk and the black sheep—just two boys from Main Street going fast, but in opposite direction! Pick your own winner. Which one landed up on the stone pile and which one was the Rotarian school teacher and piled his rocks in a "bank vault"?

As adapted by Larry Semon from the famous musical comedy of the same title "Stop, Look and Listen" is a story of Main Street crooks and Main Street politicians, a stranded troupe of one-horse town bank robbery; and a wild chase in runaway train, motorcycle and automobile brings the film to a thrilling climax. Don't miss it.

PRIZE FOR BEST PEACE ESSAYS

Boston, Mass., Jan. 7—Mrs. Florence Brooks-Aten, founder of the Brooks Bryce Foundation which for three years has conducted essay contests among secondary school pupils to promote understanding between Great Britain and the United States, has now offered prize for university students, it was announced here today.

One award of 50 guineas is offered to undergraduate or graduate students at Oxford and another of $150 to Yale students—while his stepbrother, Bill, stopped only when the law stepped him, looked the other way when opportunity was knocking at his door, and listened for the clink of poker chips and click of pool balls.

MUST HAVE BEEN AN ABERDONIAN

Moose Jaw, Sask., Jan. 6.—(By Canadian Press)—Unique among Christmas cards received this season, was one addressed to Frank S. Hall, a resident of this city. It was a Scotsman who sent the card and the verse on it read: "A Merry Christmas to Yet And A Guide New Year for 1927, 1928, 1929 and 1930" On the reverse side, was written: "Please return when through with the card."

The card was delivered to Mr. Hall in an unstamped envelop. He suspects a practical joker.

2 cups white flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
½ to 1 cup milk or water
2 tablespoons Crisco

Sift dry ingredients, rub in Crisco with fingertips or cut in with two knives. Add liquid and stir to a soft dough. Toss on slightly floured board, pat or roll and cut out with biscuit cutter. Bake 12 minutes in a moderate 425° F. oven.

Waffles

2 cups flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
2 tbs. sugar
1½ cups milk
2 tablespoons Crisco

Sift flour, baking powder and salt together. Add milk to beaten egg yolks and stir into dry ingredients. Add melted Crisco and fold in stiffly beaten egg whites.

Taffy Tarts

2 cups brown sugar
2 tablespoons Crisco
4 teaspoons cold water

4 eggs
2 teaspoons vanilla
Beat eggs, add sugar and vanilla. Then add water and melted Crisco. Mix well. Pour into shells and bake in a moderate oven (375° F.) until firm.

Shells

1½ cups flour
½ cup Crisco

SPORTS

BELLEVILLE KIDS MEET TRENTON TONIGHT AT 8.15

Juniors in Good Shape For Opening Game of Group Series

The Belleville Juniors face the Trenton six tonight in the first game of the group schedule. The two teams will play a double-schedule with total goals to count on the round. The team had a fine work-out last evening. For the first half-hour the Juniors had the ice to themselves and over twenty of them kicked, batted and slammed the puck around. Promptly at 7.30 Manager Thomas' intermediate team took to the ice and six of the best looking youngsters were stacked up against their older rivals with "Benny" Bolan protecting the Junior's nets and "Benny" Frechette wrecking on the wings. For half an hour a stiff work-out was held with each of the aspirants on the sides-line being given a chance.

Latchford and Bolsay will each be given an opportunity to work in the nets tonight. Both are smart-looking kids and should take care of that position in fine style. Young Pete Latchford's head hardly reaches the top of the net but despite that fact he was knocking them down from all sides last night.

Matthews and Johnnie Baker will likely form the defence and both are fast boys and can block and check well. The former was dumping some of the Intermediates with regularity in last night's practice. The forward line shapes up as an unusually fast one with the two Canning brothers, Johnny and Henry, who played '24 year and know the ropes. "Red" Doran is another boy who created a favorable impression with the middies. He can step with any man on the team and should be the undertaker.

CITY KIDS HAVE EXCITING GAMES ON OPEN RINKS

The "East Side" were victorious in the first hockey game of the season last evening on the "West Sides" rink by a score of 14-3.

Great rivalry exists between the youngsters of the East and West Hills in every line of sport and this certainly reaches its peak at hockey. A series of games are being arranged between the two teams with the second taking place tonight on the open-air rink on Foster Avenue.

It is unfortunate that these boys are not organized into a league with an arranged schedule with older and more experienced officials in charge. There are plenty of youngsters here who are anxious to play as was evidenced by the fact that over twenty presented themselves for the approval of Manager Thomas in the try-out for Belleville Juniors. The open-air rinks are a great boon to the kids and with the present facilities as provided by the city, Kiwanis and Rotary clubs, the time is ripe for the organization of a Junior League.

Here is a work which the Y.M.C.A. or some similar organization might undertake.

SportOgramS

By The "Observer"

The Belleville Juniors will jey the lid off their hockey season tonight and it is to be hoped that a good crowd will greet them. The kids have not been given the best kind of support in Belleville lately and this fact is to be regretted. These boys are the Intermediates of tomorrow and should be given every encouragement. Some scrappy battles are in store for the fans. The Trenton team are coming down with all good intentions of taking a fall out of Eddie Thomas' protegee but the Canning brothers, Johnnie Baker and the rest will bear watching from the sidelines.

Those who saw last Saturday's night's Intermediate game went away feeling that they had been given a real evening's entertainment. Next Monday night's game looms up a similar affair when the Queen's team comes here. The Limestonites have won, slipped any cogs in getting into the best possible shape and besides the University lads have never visited this city with a weak line-up. The students will mine Vow and Robertson as both were backsyde of well-known repute but nevertheless Smart, Lindsay, "Gib" McKelvey Boucher and other prominent players will seek to take a fall out of the Maroons. The locals have been putting in plenty of practice work since the Brockville game and are rarin' to go. They hope to reap the first three and step out in front of the "Big Six."

Basket-ball players are awaiting developments here. It has not been definitely settled as to whether the Intermediate group will function this year. Kingston may form a league of its own with R. M. C., Kingston and two Queen's teams composing the loop. It this is the case of the out picture with Petrolea the remaining team. It is not thought advisable to form a thirteam group and consequently a city league may result here or the reorganization of the Church League during the next two months. There is plenty of material to choose a squad from here although several of last year's players have shook the dust of Belleville from their feet. Last year Central "Y" of Toronto eliminated the Belleville team.

The Belleville High School hockey team will open the season here next week. The Intermediate is composed of a five-team group with Albert College and the High School the local entrants. The boys from the Trent-land have a mighty smart club with Chant one of his leading lights. B. H. S. will also be represented by a strong aggregation with several players of last year's team still available. It is unfortunate that two or three of the boys who were counted upon to perform a bulk of the work have been declared ineligible through failure to attain the necessary standing in their exams.

The Bulchers and the Bakers-hoe key teams are the latest to come out with a challenge to the rest of the world for a game of hockey. The most vendors have relegated the ancient Harry Green from the rank of the retired and will provide him with a pair of skis—garden edges and endeavour to recondition him for a year's service. The execs are further geared by the presence of "Slats" Miles, Claude Mitchell, Earl Pesker and several other prominent beef artists. The other teams in the city are a little leary of tackling them for neither may take a couple of neat axes and display them in a fit of rage when the game does not go by just them. The Buckers have been working rather on the quiet for several afternoons following the freezing of the vault floor we have noticed these musclebound wiel forward Arnott's ice house annex with a pair of skates and a stick. With the Bulchers, Bakers, McLaughlin's and Intelligencer gangs already in the field it looks as though a sort of catch-as-catch-league may result. The Intelligencer will play the Bulchers the early part of next week.

It is also reported that "Pete" Belsay is secretly conditioning his last year's "Boarders" team and with the help of his energetic manager "Abe" Wannamett and trainer "Art" Hill are rounding out a fast bunch of would-be hockeyists.

Gordon Howard, chief umpire of the City Baseball League and one of the most efficient indicator handlers in Eastern Ontario is moving to Toronto to take charge of more important work for his firm. The loss of Howard to amateur baseball circles will be keenly felt as he is popular with fans and players alike, who will wish him all success in his new casing.—Ottawa Journal.

Time-honored introduction in the House of Representatives at Washington of a bill placing baseball under the control of a Federal commission with the claim that it had the sanction of Ban Johnson brought forth a denial from the American League head yesterday.

Johnson stated he had not written a letter to any Government official urging such a commission.

He said he wrote a letter several years ago in regard to passing a Federal law making it possible to prosecute and punish violators of gambling on baseball games both in and out of ball parks.

Johnson declared, however, if the Government desired him to appear before a committee he would be glad to assist in any way in investigations

MAROONS READY FOR INVASION OF QUEEN'S TEAM

Two Important Games in "Big Six" Carded For Tonight

The Belleville Maroons will practice previous to the Junior game tonight in order to be in the best possible condition for Queen's invasion on Monday night.

The Intermediates had a fine workout last night with "Soup" Guyer and "Stan" Hagerman being absentees. Hagerman was at the rink but did not don the blades having played a hard game with Montreal C. N.R. team at the Forum on Wednesday night. The boys were going along fine with the forwards showing up exceedingly well.

Providing injuries or other unforseen circumstances do not intervene the same line-up as defeated Brockville will face the Tricolor.

Lou Marsh who was last seen here in the memorable game with Collingwood some years ago will again be here. On that occasion Lou was subjected to a rather rough passage but managed to escape with his life. Lou is a colorful figure in himself and is regarded as a "king of good fellows" in yachting, boxing and hockey circles. He has refereed "pro" games this year in New York, Montreal and other large cities and knows the game from A to Z.

The Queen's team will be chosen from Quinn Lindsay, Reid, McPherson, Conway, McKelvey, Pelton, Bibby and Boucher.

Art Quinn who will likely tend goal is well-known here having played three time for the Dehorn ball team last summer. The star rube opened the season here and is reported to be progressing favorably.

TUNNEY WILL FIGHT

St. Louis, Mo., Jan. 7.—Gene Tunney, world's heavyweight boxing champion, yesterday agreed to defend his title next September against any contender selected by Tex Rickard promoter, for what was declared to be the largest guarantee ever made for a fight.

There are two games tonight in the "Big Six" which Belleville fans will be interested in, namely the Kingston at Brockville and Cornwall at R. M. C. games. The results of these two games will have a great bearing on the league standing.

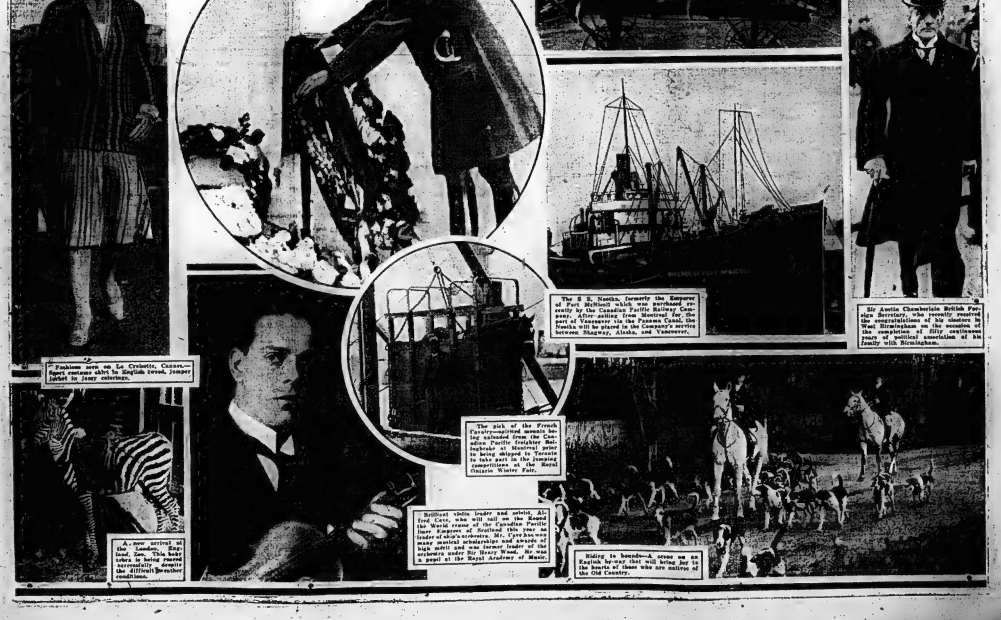

Th Cornwall team conducted a successful invasion against the Kingston Frontenacs and tonight's game will give the fans an idea of the respective strength of the six teams.

The R. M. C. line-up is practically the same as last year's intermediate intercollegiate team with the exceptions of G. F. Osler of Kingsmill in goal, in place of "Chippy" Rogers and "Windy" Smith at centre in place of Macdougall. Walker and G. S. Osler are lining up well on the defence. Osler was injured shortly after Christmas last year but is going better than ever now and strength the up the defence considerably. Matson will relieve Smith at centre while Tremaine and Clarke will hold the wing positions. The other relief man will be chosen from Mather, Holyk, Fair and Nichol.

Interstate highway bridge between Bellaire and Benwood, W. Va., has been opened.

Total of $1,638,710 in royalties has been received by S. Government from oil sold in Red River field.

MAN'S CLOTHES FOUND NEAR RIVER; SUICIDE SUSPECTED

ENGLAND MAY BE UNDER A LABOR GOV'T NEXT YEAR

Commander Joseph Kenworthy Says Liberal Party is "Wilting"

STRIKE HELPED

Arms Reduction, Palestine China and Debts Referred to in N.Y.

New York, Jan. 8.—Prophesy that the British Labor party will form the next Government in England was made today by Commander Joseph M. Kenworthy, M.P., who arrived in this country Tuesday to travel and study American conditions. The Liberal party is "wilting," he declared, and most of its middle-of-the-roaders are turning to the Labor party.

The failure of the general strike has strengthened the hands of Labor enormously, in Commander Kenworthy's opinion.

"The Industrialists, or Left Wing, in the Labor movement have been discredited by the strike," he said, "and the rank and file in the party have swung in behind the more moderate political action. The strike's failure also burst the bubble of a great Labor conspiracy to fill up to-day the middle class, which is turning more and more to Labor."

As a result of his visit to Palestine last month, Commander Kenworthy considers the British mandate there "a wonderful success, largely as a result of the energy displayed by the Zionists."

PREDICTS 500,000 SETTLERS

"The Jewish colonists are developing the country in a wonderful way," he said. "Still in twenty years' time I predict that there will be 500,000 Jews there. The Arab situation in Palestine is satisfactorily financed by a handful of political agents, and is not supported by the mass of the people. Palestine is fast becoming a tourist centre, and in time many will become a second Riviera, without the vice of the Riviera."

PREMIER BRUCE IS AT WINNIPEG

Winnipeg, Jan. 8.—Premier Stanley M. Bruce, of Australia, who just completed a tour of Eastern Canada and several United States cities, following his attendance at the Imperial conference in London, arrived here this morning from Chicago. The Premier, accompanied by Mrs. Bruce, is enroute to Vancouver, from where he will sail for Australia. Entering the gateway of the province, the Australian premier was greeted by Lieutenant-Governor T. A. Burrows, members of the provincial government, Civic officials and numerous prominent citizens.

31 LONDON-NEW YORK CALLS ON OPENING DAY OF OCEAN TELEPHONE

New York, January 8.—Hello, London.

These two simple words, spanning the Atlantic on electric waves travelling with the speed of light, heralded the opening of the radio telephone between New York and London yesterday that in most remarkable communication service yet devised by man.

They were spoken by Walter S. Gifford, president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company, in the directors' room of the corporation on the top floor of 195 Broadway. He was talking to Sir Gs Evelyn P. Murray, secretary of the British Post Office, over a circuit of 8500 miles of land and 6300 miles of other path. And so eager were persons on both sides of the Atlantic to have a part in the events of this the amazing day of wireless talking, that from the time Mr. Gifford officially declared the circuit open to the public until it closed late in the afternoon there was a steady stream of conversation flowing through the air.

The first commercial conversation put through so-open as Mr. Gifford finished, was between Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of the New York Times, and Geoffrey Dawson editor of the London Times. The call had been put in by Mr. Dawson in London and the connection was made and conversation began at 8.37 o'clock.

Mr. Gifford finished speaking at 8.49 o'clock. Two minutes earlier Miss Mary A. Timmons on the outside staff of the New York Times office was asked to be ready to receive a London call. Six minutes after Mr. Gifford had finished his talk in the Times building, and said:

"Good morning, Mr. Dawson. This is Mary Timmons speaking. Can you hear me?"

Mr. Dawson replied that he could hear very well, and Mr. Ochs continued: "I am glad to tell you very well indeed, hear you come. I recognize it."

Mr. Gifford then said: "Mr. Ochs is standing by with his office in the Times building, and said:

"Good morning, Mr. Dawson. This is Mr. Ochs in New York

FRENCH CABINET MINISTER IS OWN CHAMBER MAID

Paris, Jan. 8.—A cabinet minister in his nightshirt, making his own bed and shaking rugs out of the window, was the final jest affordes pedestrians in the boulevard St. Michel one morning.

Louis Marin, minister of pensions and deputy from the Nancy region, was detected without notice by his chambermaid. And His Excellency is very particular about keeping his house in good order.

Not so particular about his own garb, Marin usually wears a "sweater" or blouse similar to those of workmen, his neck adorned with an old-fashioned flowing blue bow tie studded with artists' polka dots. His shoes are sturdy things made more for the mud of his native Lorraine than for the boulevards of Paris.

Monsieur Marin would rather walk than ride any day.

"I have a government credit of 25,000 francs a year for the upkeep of an automobile," he said. "But I have no car. First, because it is healthier to walk; second, because it helps the government economize. When I myself go to attend an important ceremony, I simply hire a cheap car for an hour or a day."

GOLDEN ROD RETIRES FLAG FROM ARMY LIFE

Frankfort, Ky., Jan. 8.—After having served in the Mexican, Civil, Spanish and World wars, Kentucky's 80 year old goldfinch has been forced out of military life by a spray of golden rod.

The flag first saw service under the Second regiment, Kentucky National Guard, known in 1848 as the Kent city Volunteers. The addition of a wreath of golden rod, the state flower, to the Kentucky seal on the field of blue was authorized in the 1926 session of the legislature. The state flag of California also golden rod on it, however, and because of this the United States war department could not accept Kentucky's banner as the standard of the provost 18th Infantry of the United States army.

The flag may be used for ceremony but cannot be carried in the summer camps of the national guard. A new flag with trumpet vines in the shape of the golden rod is being made to represent Kentucky in the national army.

UNIVERSITY COSMOPOLITAN

Honolulu, Jan. 8.—The University of Hawaii is a cosmopolitan institution. Its 728 students represent 43 of the United States, Japan, Korea, China, India, Guam, the Philippines, Mexico and France. Caucasian students comprise 41 per cent. of the enrollment, Japanese 28 per cent., Chinese 11 per cent. and Hawaiians 12 per cent.

SAYS BEER HEALTHIER THAN COFFEE OR TEA

London, Jan. 8.—Beer is better for the health than tea or coffee because of its vitamin content, said Dr. J. Lewis Hoesdale of St. Thomas' hospital, addressing the People's League of Health on common errors of diet.

"Our valiant and semi-deserted ancestors were far greater meat eaters than we are, but they balanced their excess of protein with beer, which contains vitamin B and has a large diuretic value instead of with the valueless tea and coffee of today," said the physician.

Pleasant Information

"Let me give you this pleasant bit of information as a first message by telephone. There is an ever increasing sentiment throughout the United States, which is becoming more and more articulate, in favor of a reconsideration of the foreign inter-Allied debts, after the French ratify their agreement, to that end that they may be adjusted on a higher moral and political basis, for peace and goodwill throughout the world.

"Yesterday I witnessed the exhibition of a new invention at Pox's studio in this city. It is called a movietone, whereby sound is synchronized with motion pictures. Verifying what Dr. Alexander Graham Bell said about twenty years ago, on the occasion when I gave a dinner at The Times office in honor of Mr. Moberly Bell, then manager of The London Times. The inventor of the telephone then said that the day was not long distant when you could see as well as hear a person at a far distant point.

"I am having photographed as I am talking to you. I shall send you a copy of the picture by wire.

"Good-bye. Hope to hear often from you."

A message was sent to the London Times telling of the manner in which Mr. Darwin's talk was received. The talk was for five minutes. While Mr Ochs was speaking a flashlight photograph was taken and sent by radio to London, and the picture as received in London, was later rushed back to the Times in New York, which a short time ago would have been hailed as an amazing achievement.

Immediately after his message the flood of calls started from other newspapers, financial firms in Wall Street, one of which is involved in a $7,000,000 deal in foreign exchange, from moving picture executives, men in many lines of business, as well as reciprocal greetings between Mayor James J. Walker and the Lord Mayor of London. One firm received an order for 100 carloads of lumber. Another announced to London a merger of business interests.

Handful of hair and a coat button in his dead mother-in-law's hand led to the arrest of H. E. Webster of Illinois, N.Y., for murder.

MUSICAL DRESSING GOWN

The musical dressing gown is a novelty in the world of feminine fashion. The garment, does not produce symphonic sounds, but it carries the semblance of them about on it, so that its wearer may say quite truly that she dresses to music. The gowns are quilted about the top portion while the sleeves, cuffs and trims of music are embroidered in black silk as a border around the bottom of the garment.

4,000 SNOW SHOVELLERS

Montreal, Jan. 8.—The city has 4,000 men out clearing the streets of snow from the last big storm which was one of the worst to date. Since last autumn removal of snow has cost the city a sum of $155,740.89 distributed as follows: Sidewalks, $85,664.19; intersections, $27,317.50 and special (tramways) $22,235.48.

If the weather man keeps on piling up the snow the way he has, the total cost of removing the beautiful white stuff from Montreal streets will be far ahead of last year, it was stated at the City Hall.

CAR BURST INTO FLAMES

Oshawa, Jan. 8.—When his car suddenly burst into flames on the road north of the city last night, Frank Birmingham, 122 Acmes street, shoved it into the ditch so that it would not obstruct traffic. No one was injured in the car, but it was destroyed.

GUILTY OF NEGLIGENCE

Kingston, Jan. 8.—The coroner's jury enquiring into the death of Robert Hall, 45, farmer, living near Highland Creek, found that he came to his death at St. Michael's Hospital on December 29, as a result of injuries sustained on the Kingston highway on the night of December 24, when the wagon on which he was either was struck by a car driven by Ernest Paxton, 459 Simcoe street, North, Oshawa. The jury further found that Hines had shown gross negligence. The inquest was held at Toronto Morgue last night before Coroner G. W. Clendenan.

TWO FIRE CALLS

Kingston, Jan. 8.—On Thursday evening, at 11.24 o'clock the Brunch were called to 77 Division street, where a chimney was giving trouble. With the use of the fire extinguisher, the trouble was remedied.

It is thought that the chimney fires have been caused by the amount of wood which is being used and filling up the outlets in the chimney.

ONLY BREAD AND BUTTER

Kingston, Jan. 8.—During the winter months, the local representative for the Employment Service of Canada, has some very pathetic cases to deal with in connection with men who find themselves out of employment.

On Friday morning, when a representative of The Whig-Standard was in conversation with Mr. A. W. Stroud, the representative, a woman walked into the office and stated that she and her husband were "right up against it." When asked some questions, it morning appeared that the husband had been out of work for some time and that the family had been living on bread and butter for some time. The woman said that there was absolutely no food in the house. When asked how the six members of the family had faired for breakfast, the mother stated that she had been able to get a small loaf of bread from the grocer and this with a very small portion of butter made up the

"DRY" CITY'S NAME MEANS "GOOD WATER"

Canberra, Australia, Jan. 8.—Canberra, the Federal Capital of Australia, which is "dry," as pronounced by the natives as "cranberra," and in Aboriginal language means "good water," of which there is an abundance to be had below the crossing of the Molonglo.

Canberra, where parliament will soon be opened in its new home by the Duke of York, is known as the "bush" capital, because of its location, and Yarrolumla House, an old Jacobean house, converted into the vice-regal residence for the Duke and Duchess of York during their visit next month.

It was found that the woman was the mother of four children. The father was out searching for work.

The woman said that there was absolutely no food in the house. When asked how the six members of the family had faired for breakfast, the mother stated that she had been able to get a small loaf of bread from the grocer and this with a very small portion of butter made up the

LITTLE MOTHERS USE RAG DOLLS IN THEIR STUDY

Detroit, Jan. 8.—The little rag doll which, tightly clutched in small hands means so much to many children's hearts, is taking on a new meaning for older girls in Michigan's primary schools.

Through cooperation between the Michigan State Health Department and the "Little Mother's League," the little effigy upon which is lavished the "mother instinct" of youngsters is being used to promote basic training for parenthood.

Care For Them as Babies

Each little member of the League has her chance to "mother" one of the dolls, to dress it in the most comfortable of clothes and learn what practical care is necessary to make "babies" grow. The smallest girls, watched by competent nurses, bathe and dress their dolls and lay them in comfortable beds of their own making.

More than 22,000 girls enrolled in the Little Mothers' league the first half of this year. Many have been graduated, receiving merit badges and diplomas, with the privilege of continuing their work as long as they care to, through correspondence.

Decrease Infant Mortality

Girls from 10 to 16 years old, compose the majority of League members. At the end of each course, usually containing twelve lessons, they are required to pass examinations and those who are successful are graduated. At this time each group holds exhibitions, inviting the mothers to attend.

By teaching girls to help train younger children in the home and through their efforts, educate the parents, the state department believes it can decrease infant mortality and raise Michigan's health standards.

Four nurses are employed full time, teaching these classes in the schools of Michigan. Where there is a competent nursing service, the nurses employed locally have frequently taken over this work thru-

Life is like a tale. What makes it of value is not its length, but its goodness.

ROYAL VISITS

England yesterday gave a loyal and enthusiastic send-off to the Duke and Duchess of York, who sailed on the battle-cruiser Renown—on which the Prince of Wales made his great tour several years ago—from Portsmouth, bound, by way of the Panama Canal, for Australia and New Zealand. The event is of Empire significance, and one in which every Dominion will feel a fraternal interest, for its main purpose is to enable the Duke of York to act as the representative of his father, King George, at the official opening of the Parliament Buildings at Canberra, Australia's new federal capital Australia, as politically constituted today, is young, even compared with the Canadian Confederation, for it is only a quarter of a century ago that the people of New South Wales Victoria, South Australia, Queensland, Tasmania and Western Australia, were united in a federation under the name of the Commonwealth of Australia. The first Parliament, which, like ours, consists of a Senate and House of Representatives, was elected in March, 1901, and was opened in Melbourne on May 9 following, by the present King, then the Duke of York. The then Duke's passage through Canada on his way home will be recalled by many who, in noting the pleasing coincidence of the associations of father and son under the same title, will regret that the royal journey today does not correspond a little more with the one made twenty-five years ago, so, that Canada might have opportunity to extend a welcome to the present Duke of York and his Duchess.

CENTRAL AMERICA

Central America is rapidly becoming the Balkans of the western hemisphere. The present strained relations between the United States and Mexico over the question of pro-dominance in Nicaragua are surprisingly similar to the relations between Italy and Jugo-Slavia over the question of Italian influence in Albania.

Mexico, drawn by radical affinity with the Central American republics, is the immediate south of her—Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica and Panama—is desirous of maintaining intact her own exclusive influence in those territories. The United States, for commercial reasons, desires to extend her influence in the same quarter. "Mexico must be stopped in Central America," said a prominent United States politician recently. "We must extend our jurisdiction clear down to the Panama Canal."

From the days before Cortez down to the time when the United States made Reid' master of the Great Corn and Little Corn islands, off the coast of Nicaragua, and planted a naval base in the Gulf of Fonseca, the Central American bridge between the two Americas, now the hub of intercoastal traffic, has been the cause of much conflict. Today, Panama is the focus of conflicting interests.

The present crisis dates from 1912. In that year the United States was "informed" that certain German interests were trying to secure a concession for the construction of a canal across Nicaragua. The building of the Panama Canal, and United States "national safety," required that the United States should secure that concession. How much truth there was in the rumor of German intentions in Nicaragua is hard to say; but it served to bring about a treaty between Nicaragua and the United States, whereby the little republic in consideration of $3,000,000 gave the United States the option of constructing a canal through Nicaragua, also the right to establish a naval base and the lease for 99 years of the Corn Islands.

In this treaty the Mexicans profess to see a "Yankee peril." They fear that United States influence will spread from Nicaragua north to Guatemala on Mexico's southern frontier. In which case Mexico will be between the two jaws of American pincers.

Guatemala, according to a statement of the American consul-general in that country, "will yet prove more important in the history of the United States than Belgium." Others have said, that Guatemala is playing the role of Serbia. At all events, Mexico and the United States are both striving to prove to the little republic that Caddin's the friend. not Short. Much the same relation prevails in regard to the other Central American republics.

A SIMPLE REMEDY

Complaint was heard recently of the holding up by customs and immigration regulations of a number of Canadians arriving at New York by steamer, so that there was some danger of the passengers failing to arrive at their destinations in time for the holiday celebrations Some question was raised as to whether the responsibility rested on American or Canadian Officials.

Wherever the responsibility rested for the delay the difficulty might have been avoided if the Canadian passengers had sailed for Canadian ports on Canadian steamers. It should not be necessary to remind Canadians that there are Canadian steamers sailing for Canadian ports and offering as good accommodations as any vessels on the Atlantic. It is not necessary to take the risk of being held up at New York or any American port on the way to Canada.

NEW SPEED LIMIT

A speed of 35 miles an hour is to be permitted on provincial highways, it is announced by Premier Ferguson. It is understood that, after careful study of the traffic situation in the province, Hon Mr. Henry, minister of highways, has satisfied himself that a uniform regulation, fixing the limit at 35 miles an hour is the best solution of a perplexing problem. So conflicting have been the regulations in the past that even the most careful motorists unwittingly offended at times. The speed limit for several years has been 25 miles an hour, but on reasonably open stretches of highway it has been the practice of the department to permit a speed of 30 miles an hour Municipal officers did not always walk with their provincial associates at this interpretation of the letter of the law, however, and motorists were seldom able to say with certainty, at the end of a journey, that blue papers with their names nicely engraved on the dotted lines were not then in process of prepression. A great deal depended on the condition of the livers of the constables operating on the highways, it became evident. The uniform regulation announced by Premier Ferguson, however, will not apply to municipalities through which provincial roads are going from hihher to yon With few exceptions the sped limits fixed by individual municipalities are prominently displayed at the outskirts, and the motorists who trade greater heed will be the author of the punishments that is visited upon him. either will it follow that 35 miles an hour will be a legal rate of speed on provincial highways at all times. In congested traffic motorists will be expected to exercise caution and, it may be depended upon, will be yanked into highway court if they do not. There will be times when a speed of 35 miles an hour will come under the head of reckless driving. The motorist who is guilty of using the motoring-public what it has asked for and it can best express its appreciation by rigid observance of the regulations. The other piece of legislation, which it is proposed to bring down, and making it compulsory for all vehicles to carry lights at nights is desired, of course, to bring a greater measure of safety to night driving and will be generally endorsed.

FACES ON SHOE HEELS

Strange things happen in the fashion world of the Royal Borough of Kensington. Latest of these is the new heel mode of the evening shoe. It is a painted face of a woman with striking Headdress, executed in enamels and brilliants and which tones with the decoration of the slipper and evening gown

Nora—"No, mum; they mostly washed themselves after they come to the table."

L'ENVOI

When I lie down at last—if I die to feel
I've helped some fellow mortal brve.
That I had caused some loss heart to be cheered,
And made some soul forget its fear.
I wish that little children fair would come
And say, "We'll miss the man that smiled,"
And some might say of me, "Because he lived
We've walked Life's pathways undefiled."

I would not care what marker showed my place,
I do not crave a purple shroud.
I do not want the vulgar, cheap display,
Nor grief that shows in mourning loud
I'm sure I shall be satisfied, at last,
If some poor wandering human clod,
Shall think of me with thankful heart, and say,
"Through him, I learned the way to God."

QUEEN'S WILL BE HERE MON. NIGHT

Students Will Bring Strong Line-up Here—Lou Marsh, Referee

The Belleville intermediate are cocked and primed and ready to step in and give the Queen's team the battle of their lives in the first appearance of the Tricolor here on Monday night. The Queen's team are the only six in the group who have yet to play a game and they are rather an unknown quantity but reports out of the University state that the students have been working out daily at the Jack Harty rink under the direction of Coach Bill Hughes and will be in tip-top shape.

The Maroons put in a useful practice previous to the Junior game last evening and the squad were practically intact and got in a fine work out. "Bill" Green who was short on condition has been out on the ice practically every night since the opening game and is stepping along at a faster clip. The other members are all in fine fettle and the Presby terians will know that they have tackled a big proposition.

Cornwall are stepping out with all good intentions of winning the group as was evidenced by the fact that they stepped into Kingston and won their second straight game this time winning from the R. M. C. by a score of 8-4.

The Kingston Frontenacs according to reports were a much better looking team in Brockville last night than on their first appearance against Cornwall on Monday night. The group is certainly lining up as an established Junior O.H.A. team and fast games are in store for the fans.

An added feature of Monday's struggle will be the appearance of Lou Marsh, erstwhile laborer in the pick-and-shovel column of the Toronto Daily Star, Lou is making his first visit here in some years and will be welcomed from some quarters and is bound to be handed the lemons from others. However, Lou is a hardened veteran of many campaigns and won't mind the latter in the least.

The weather man promises a fine sheet of ice and indications point to a record crowd.

CITY LEAGUE MAY START SHORTLY

It was at first believed that the City League would be unable to organize until the first of February owing to the fact that the rink management could not do so on short notice. However, since that time it has been discovered that there is several evenings open. The Belleville High School team had arranged to play their games in the evening but it is believed this arrangement may be altered and the City League may be given these dates.

It seems useless to call a meeting since only half of the representatives are on hand to do so but it has been arranged to have the team managers drop over to Lorne Storey's store and enter their teams. The same set of rules which were used last year will again function this season which bars O. H. A. players from taking part.

There seems to be no dearth of players and teams but the schedule must be drawn up right away and a little pep must be shown by the team managers. It is believed that there is plenty of material for an eight-team group which means that each team will play at least once a week with two games on two separate evenings. The following teams have been mentioned as possible entrants. Some may have been inadvertently omitted. The managers are requested to get in touch with Mr. Lucas if they wish to enter: Y's Men Club, Tieres, Intelligencer, Albert College, Belleville High School, Canadian National Express C. N. R. Moguls, Bankers and Alemite.

BELLE THEATRE

Swashbuckling adventure aboard Spanish galleons flying the skull and cross-bones against New Orleans in 1820, for seventeen years under the Stars and Stripes, is the first production to be made for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation by Frank Lloyd, the man who won everlasting fame with "The Sea Hawk". Aside from Florence Vidor and Ricardo Cortez featured players, the cast is composed of such prominent artists as Andre Beranger, San Du Grasse, Mitchell Lewis and scores of others.

"The Eagle of the Sea" is the romantic story of Jean Lafitte, last of the buccaneers, who sets sail in his boat comes to New Orleans as Captain Saracen. Just a few of the exciting scenes that will be shown are the capture of "The Seraphine" by Cortez' pirate crew, the abduction of Miss Vidor from an American merchant, a mutiny of the corsairs when Cortez refuses them permission to loot their prize, and the battle between rivals in the blowing up and sinking of a galleon.

Charles Tenney Jackson wrote "Captain Scarron" from which "The Eagle of the Sea" was adapted. Julien Josephson prepared the screen play. All work was done under the supervision of Associate Producer B. P. Schulberg.

REGENT THEATRE

"The murmuring pines and the hemlocks" of the poet's lore have nothing on the background of "Sir Lumberjack" for "primeval forests"; and this newest of the P.B.O. productions starring Lefty Flynn is strong in drama as it is redolent of the big woods, with their piney tang, their dramatic atmosphere and their redblooded denizens. The excitement and adventure of logging was never better depicted than in this picture, which comes to the Regent Theatre for its first local showing on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

The big double feature programme at the Regent Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday will also include Charlie Chaplin in one of his greatest slim successes. The title of the picture is "Charlie's Life", and it deals in a screamingly funny way with the efforts of Charlie as a vaudeville actor to get himself a farm, wife and something to eat once in a while. That he eventually succeeds is due in no small part to a dancing girl and also a vagabond, who shares Charlie's gravel mattress in a vacant lot and who ends with Charlie on it.

Regular admission prices will prevail for the big double feature show.

CAPITOL THEATRE

One of the funniest comedy bits of the year is due to appear at the Capitol, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, and the title is "Oh Baby," a screaming feature starring Mackie Kennedy, Little Billy and Creighton Hale. Where Little Billy, famous fight manager, volunteers to masquerade as a little girl to help a friend out of a ticklish predicament, he started something which almost broke up the heavyweight championship fight and set the whole "White Way" on edge. It's a scream all the way through, so don't miss it.

Professional vaudeville, a comedy, and the Capitol Symphony Orchestra will complete a bill that promises to well merit a visit to this popular playhouse the first half of the week.

INTERESTING DEVELOPMENT IN QUEBEC MINING FIELD

A well known Mining Engineer, sends the following report from the Hoyra mining field in northeastern Quebec which he has just visited;—

NORANDA—A visit to this property shows that underground work is being confined largely at the present time to the widening of drifts and crosscuts for main haulage ways. The type of electric locomotive which is to be used in this hauling is such that it can be lowered from one level to another on the cage in the No. 2 shaft. Recently a raise was driven from the 250 foot level to the 100 foot level in order to prepare for mining operations. This raise was in "B" orebody south of the No. 1 shaft. This is the first attempt that has been made to raise through an orebody from one level to the other. The work showed massive chalcopyrite all the way.

On surface, smelter construction is ahead of schedule. Cement work is well ahead of steel construction. Carpenter shops and new storerooms are up and bricked in. Bricking in of the machine and electrical shops is well under way. Cement work for the No. 2 or main shaft cellar and dry has been completed and a temporary headframe is being erected. A striking feature of the construction and layout on the Smelter site is that the Company has put in railroad spurs from the main line, which spurs pass on railway cars in the main building, which go to make up the complete smelter. Standard locomotive and railway rolling stock can be taken into and through the buildings, thus allowing for cheap handling of ores, fluxes, machinery and materials. At the present time steel work is being swung into place by a derrick placed on railway cars in the main building. It is quite apparent that the smelter as being erected at present is only the first unit of a very much larger plant. This unit will be good for 1000 tons of ore per day and provision has been made in regard to site, etc. for two or three additional units of the same capacity.

GROVER DALEY—Work on this property has been held up pending further financial arrangements. These arrangements we understand are now complete and exploration will be immediately continued. The property has assumed considerably greater importance recently, due to the indications on Area and other properties in the vicinity. With intelligent work going on we believe that the property, particularly the holdings which tie on to the Vickers and Ritnago, has splendid chances of developing very importantly. It is a good prospect.

AMULET—A visit to this property shows that sinking in the No. 4 area has reached a depth of 575 feet. An interesting feature about the ore opened up by this work is that as lower levels are reached, in all cases the lenses have a decided tendency to widen out.

The drawing of plans for a concentrator apparently proves that Amulet will operate their own plant at least as far as concentration goes. A mill superintendent, who by the way has been a member of the Hollinger staff, has been appointed to look after this work.

Amulet is well away, with an assured future.

LAVAL, QUEBEC—Work on this property has been confined largely to the sinking of the N. W. corner of Pelletier Lake. Geological information has been obtained under considerable difficulty, due to the heavy overburden. The outline of the contacts of the older formations have been fairly well established. This gabbro contact is important, being similar to the gabbro found in association with the rich orebodies on Noranda. On Claims No. 1842 a geological condition similar to that found on Amulet has been proven.

On Claim No. 1741 encouraging mineralizations were obtained.

A contract has been signed with the Swedish Electrical Company for a survey of the property. Magnetometer work will be continued through the winter, together who a campaign of diamond drilling. This property is regularly being well and intelligently explored. The management have had a great deal to contend with on account of heavy overburden and deserve great credit for the work that they have accomplished. We feel that an electrical survey followed by diamond drilling will prove that the time spent on geological work has not been wasted but has proven to be of very great value to the property.

ACONDA MINES—This property is located, adjoining Amulet's "C" group, is now ready for magnetometer survey which is to start immediately. Work on their Claim No. 245 will consist of further trenching. Some of these trenches will be run to the Amulet line to pick up if possible the find of disseminated copper close to the line. On the Aconda on what is known as the south showing shots have been put in which showed low grade iron and copper sulphides. A picked specimen from this work showed values as high a $200 in platinum. This is the first occurrence of platinum which has been reported in the district. Its importance has not by any means been fully determined but it certainly gives room for considerable thought. In the north section of the property a mineralized area was located on which no work has as yet been done. It looks fairly important. This area will be trenched. The mineralized zone here lies in the rhyolites while the southern zones are found in basic andesite. Work is proceeding along highly insellicent lines and we are hopeful of ultimate success being met with.

LIFE ON VENUS MAY BE BARED BY NEW RED RAY

Chicago Scientist Believes Baffling Vapors Will Be Pierced at Last

Chicago, Ill., Jan. 8.—An attack on the heretofore impenetrable clouds of Venus, the earth's twin, is to be made from Yerkes Observatory with an infra-red ray photographic apparatus.

The dense vapor masses surrounding the planet have made it impossible to penetrate to the actual surface of Venus, but the Yerkes staff of the University of Chicago, at Williams Bay, Wis., is optimistic over chances of success with the infra-red filter which last summer yielded some excellent views of Mars.

While these clouds have baffled scientists, Prof. E. B. Frost, director of the observatory, attaches much importance to them in connection with any theory of the possibility of life on the planet.

Life is much more likely to exist on Venus than on Mars, in Prof. Frost's opinion. "Venus is near the sun," he continued, "and if it were not for the heavy clouds the heat would be unbearable."

Many murders, holdups and robberies have been perpetrated by Mexican bandits during the past six days.

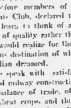

ACHIEVEMENT SHOULD BE MEASURED IN QUALITY, NOT QUANTITY SAY PROF.

Winnipeg, Man., Jan. 6 (the C. P.)—Deploring the prevalent fashion of measuring achievement by a material prosperity, Prof. W. F. Osborn, speaking before members of the Winnipeg Kiwanis Club, declared that Canadians must learn to think of achievement in terms of quality rather than quantity if they would realize for their country the glorious destination of which every true Canadian dreamed.

"We speak with satisfaction of increased railway construction, of a favorable balance of trade, of bank profits, and wheat crops, and think to measure our progress thereby. But greatness is nourished primarily by mental and spiritual achievement," Prof. Osborn said.

Referring to the glory of the ancient world, the summit attained by Egypt, Babylon and Chaldea, by Greece and Rome, and later by Great Britain, the speaker declared that in each case their greatest glory lied be a realized in the mental and spiritual field. The golden age of Great Britain lied been the days of Shakespeare, Marlow and Spenser, of Bacon and Spicer F.

The reason for the lack of Canadian literature, Prof. Osborn attributed to the wrong standard of achievement. Men wrote to make money. NOT to make books, he stated. NOT until the baser motives of striving to sell, was driven out could we expect a Canadian literature to be found.

(With apologies to Rudyard Kipling)

If you can keep your nibs all done you
Are clearing theirs and wanting you lie too,
If you can bind your tongue when others mock you,
But make allowances, for their cackling too;

If you can force your heart and nerves and sinews
To keep your hair long after they is gone,
And hold on to it when there's nothing in you,
Except the will which says to you "hold on!"

If you can talk with crowds and keep your locks too,
Or walk with "thrills"—nor lose your commonsense,
If neither foe nor living friends can hurt you,
If women rub you "Frack" in self-defence,

If you can smile with not a bit to fill you,
If you can walk, but never shed a tear,
Yours is the Earth and everything that's in it,
And—which is more—you'll be a lady, dear.

6. He must have a long spoon that must eat with the devil.

7. The devil hath power to assume a pleasing shape.

8. No man means evil but the devil, and we shall know him by his horns.

9. Find some work for your hands to do, so that the devil may never find you idle.

10. When to sin our bias'd nature leans The careful devil is still at hand with means.

11. "From his brimstone bed at break of day,
A-walking the Devil is gone,
To look at his little smug farm of the world,
And see how his stock went on."

12. Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour.

13. "That all which you as Sin have rated—
Destruction, — ought with Devil blest—
That is my proper element."

14. "It is Lucifer,

And since God suffers him to be,
He, too, is God's minister;
And labors for some good

15. "I called the devil, and he came;
With wonder his form did I closely scan;
He is not ugly and is not lame,
But really a handsome and charming man.
A man in the prime of life is the devil,
Obliging, a man of the world, and civil;
A diplomatist too, well skilled in debate,
He talks quite glibly of church and state."

CANADIAN FOLK SONG

Outside the gust is driving past,
Outside the shivering icy clings,
While on the hob the kettle sings

Margrey, Margery, make the tea,
Singeth the kettle merrily.

The streams are hushed up where they flowed;
The ponds are frozen along the road;
The cattle are housed in shed and byre
While singeth the kettle on the fire

Margery, Margery, make the tea,
Singeth the kettle merrily.

The fisherman on the bay at his boat
Shivers and buttons up his coat;
The traveller stops at the tavern door,
And the kettle answers the chimney's roar

Margery, Margery, make the tea,
Singeth the kettle merrily.

The firelight dances upon the wall;
Footsteps are heard in the outer hall;
A kiss and a welcome that fills the room
And the kettle sings in the glimmer and gloom

Margery, Margery, make the tea,
Singeth the kettle merrily.

JUST IN PASSING

"The past is dead, yet echoes still remain;
Sweet memories of love, and memories of pain.
Then let us learn of each, and day by day
Strive to retain the good and throw the dross away.
The truth will live; we only need the real,
To guide us onward to the Great Ideal."

HAPPY NEW YEAR!

Every where people have been extending the hand and scattering good wishes with every breath. Now, good wishes are easily expressed, but I wonder how many of us help to make them come true. If everyone resolved to do everything that lay in his or her power to make this year full of happiness and peace to all, what a world it would become! Hell is paved with good intentions (at least so we are told) but only when good wishes are transformed into good actions will this world become a better and happier world.

Hasty Louder sings a song about being nicer to stay in bed than to be up in the morning. I'm sure all of us agree with Sir Harry, particularly in the winter. Everyday we begin with a conflict. Never before has the bed been so warm and soft and it is agony to think of sticking a limb out into the cold and bleakness of the room! It isn't because you want to go to sleep again either. It is because you are so comfortable. There is a feeling of bliss nothing else can give you. And every morning all over the country people are having this struggle!

A TEST OF PHYSIQE

"They're changing guns' at Buckingham Palace—
Christopher Robin went down with Alice
Alice is marrying one of the guard.
"A soldier's life is terribly hard."
—Says Alice

This is the first verse of a delightful poem by A. A. Milne and it reminded me of something I was reading not long ago about "changing the guard" when Queen Alexandra was living in State. The public, nearly all in black clothing, formed a procession, two abreast, which passed by her bier. This continued for eleven hours. There was a brief pause of 2 minutes every hour, for changing of the guard. In spite of this hourly change one of the Gentleman-at-Arms fainted after 30 minutes of immobility. Anyone who dislikes the severity of the control of standing stock-still for an hour, with bent head, just try it for ten minutes! Even at that he will miss one thing which is said to be the most trying part, and that is watching the unceasing procession of feet, all shuffling along in one direction. I read about one soldier who slow-stepped from the Abbey to Paddington at the funeral of King Edward. He said recently that although he had spent four years of warfare in France he had not suffered such fatigue.

"Where art thou, then, Jamesan?" cried a loud voice in the rear. "Art thou, then, at thine old tricks—drinking wine, and stealing, and after that falling down in one o this fits? Pardon, monseigneur, with a grim politeness, as the crowd made way for him, "yonder woman is my sister; she is subject to fits, and is acting a mighty bad one. When she can, she will escape from home, and she will pour herself in my strangers, do anything if they will give her wine. She tells fortunes, and, awkward as she is, dances to make people laugh. After all, she is not dumb, she gratly always has a fit. If she sees anything she will steal it; but you must not look her up. I have the doctor's certificate that she is insane, and when we can afford it she goes to the Maison de Sante."

The man who spoke was a broad-shouldered, ruffianly looking fellow, with a coarse face. He wore the blouse and cap of the lower orders. He came on, and stood close to the woman; he put his hand on her shoulder. She shrieked and—yelled, rather—making a hideous noise.

"Ah! beat me not, Jacquez, my brother. See, I took the watch of the belle demoiselle only for an instant to

At the creature spoke, she drew out of the bosom of her dress an enameled gold watch, which glittered in the lamp light. It was attached to a thick, short chain of solid gold.

"Give it to me—it is mine!" cried the beautiful young lady, who had set Donald dreaming so pasionately. "Give it me, I say; it is mine—the watch of my mother!"

"Your name and address, mademoiselle, and the watch shall be given to you when we find that all is correct." It seems that, notwithstanding the fray, you did not hurt this thieving woman more than she deserved; but we cannot return you this watch unless you give references."

She handed a card to the sergeant de ville.

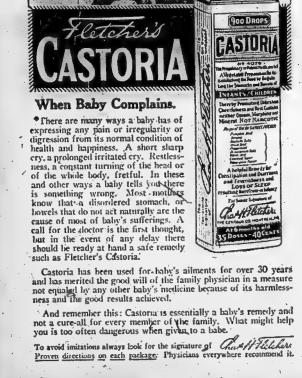

The man stared at her in dumb amaze; then, doffing his cap:—

"Pardon, pardon, mademoiselle, how came you here, and without attendants, and in a crowd like this, and at this hour? It is terrible!"

"Bien!" the beautiful maiden shrugged her shoulders. "What would you have? This is an adventure, I am a Pole; Poles love adventure. Now will you bring that watch to my address tomorrow, and ask to see me?"

The man bowed.

When Baby Complains.

There are many ways a baby has of expressing any pain or irregularity or digression from its normal condition of health and happiness. A short sharp cry, a prolonged irritated cry. Restlessness, a constant turning of the head or of the whole body, fretful. In these and other ways a baby tells you there is something wrong. Most mothers know that a disordered stomach, or bowels that do not act naturally are the cause of most of baby's sufferings. A call for the doctor is the first thought, but in the event of any delay there should be ready at hand a safe remedy such as Fletcher's Castoria.

Castoria has been used for baby's ailments for over 30 years and has merited the good will of the family physician in a measure not equaled by any other baby's medicine because of its harmlessness and the good results achieved.

And remember this: Castoria is essentially a baby's remedy and not a cure-all for every member of the family. What might help you is too often dangerous when given to a babe.

BELLEVILLE JUNIORS WIN HARD EARNED GAME OVER TRENTON

Game Fast Throughout Marked By Rough Play

Belleville Juniors opened the season with a hard earned victory over the Trenton team at Arena last evening by a score of 5-4. The game was fast throughout and was marked by rough work by both teams being equal offenders in this respect. The best hockey of the evening was dished up in the final fifteen minutes of the game.

A raft of goals were lost through a lack of combination play on both sides. The teams, of course, are short on practice and there were plenty of defects to be remedied that popped up last evening.

The one redeeming feature of the whole affair was the beautiful work of young "Pete" Leiefelord in the Belleville netz. This kid although he had hardly reaches the cross-bar received his first test under fire and came out with flying colours. He was given many a hard shot to handle but turned them aside with the ease of a veteran. He was picking the long shots off with regularity and tossing them into the corners of the arena. He does, however, place himself in danger of receiving a kick from a skate or a crack from a stick by continually falling to the ice to save.

Most of the kids are playing their first O. H. A. hockey and some of them are a little inclined to lay too heavy on the hockey and they must be taught to play the game on the ice and not in the penalty box. "Red" Doran was given four tickets to the house-gow and although one of them was an accidental trip the others were of the intentional variety. "Red" bears all that goes to make up a lively hockey player but he must learn to play the puck and pay les attention to the man. He carries himself well on the ice, can shoot, pass the puck and knows the rudiments of the game.

The two Canning boys, Hoky and Johny with their previous experience played a nice game all through the piece both were effective, especially around the nets and played a prominent part in the victory. Johnny received a bad crack on the knee early in the game and was given medical attention after the game. Henry displayed good form in centre ice and will develop into a smart pivot man. Johnny Baker in his first appearance in a Junior uniform played a good game and ran into some tough luck and should have been rewarded with a couple more goals. He and Bowen had a fiery mix-up and were bumping each other right and left during the early part of the fracas.

Bowen was sailing around with a chip on his shoulder waiting for somebody to knock it off. As a result he spent several minutes with the penalty timers and emerged from the game with a bad clip over the eye. Bowen has a nasty habit of cutting opposing players, over the ankles with his stick. On one occasion he left the penalty box and was back with them in half a minute afterwards.

The local defence composed of Fullwell and Matthews, did fairly well in protecting their goal but showed a weakness in rushing. They fail to place both hands on the stick when breaking away which is a bad habit to fall into. They will eventually with a few work outs improve readily.

Semark was given a chance and did not measure up to expectations although he may improve with a little more experience.

Perry was probably the pick of the Trenton crew and was instrumental in scoring one goal and banged two himself. He skated miles and hard-checked like a fiend.

Hutchison, defence, is another boy who was a Stern in the sides of Eddie Thomas' kids. He skates like a whirlwind and played an all-round fine game. George Filion gave all he had and worked like a trooper. He is one of the kingpins of the forward line.

The Trenton aggregation had a decided advantage in weight over the Belleville youngsters and consequently handed out some stiff body checks which had the needed effect. But these were handed out back whenever the opportunity came.

The Devils of Kingston made his initial appearance here and made a good job of the none to enviable position of referee. He kept a close check on the rough stuff and watched offside closely. Not a dissenting voice was heard on any of his decisions.

A very slim crowd greeted the teams and this is to be regretted but if the brand of hockey continues they will be given better support in the future. The locals will play the return game next Wednesday night in Trenton.

Play opened at a furious clip with both goalies being called upon. Perry was hurt on being thrown to the ice, but gamely continued. "Pete" Leiefelord was given two or three hard ones to handle. Trenton's goal was narrowly escaped on a scramble.

Hutchinson was penalized for molesting a man in the boards. Belleville scored a fine goal on a mixup in front of the Trenton goal. Perry broke into the scene unknown he took a pass from behind the net to drive the rubber home.

Bowen was given the gate for hooking, and Doran followed him when he sent an iron for hooks t centre ice. Baker passed from the corner and nobody was home. Canning was sent off for tripping. Kennedy was penalized for bodying into the boards. Jack Canning scored the equalizer on a nice piece of work. Baker was given the gate for throwing the puck. The score at the end of the first period was 3-1.

2nd Period

Doran put Belleville one up when he drove one at Hickey and the latter tried to catch it and fumbled it into the net. Doran drove another in a minute later.

Lochhead made a nice save on a combination effort. Perry scored Trenton's second goal. It looked as though Lochhead kicked it in himself.

Doran was penalized for tripping. Fellwell went to the goal mouth to help the puck. Kennedy and Bowen were given penalties in quick succession. Doran followed them a minute later for slashing. Hutchison drove one up into the corners. The goal was disputed but later allowed.

Johnny Baker scored the prettiest goal of the evening on a beautiful pass. George Filion again kiestled flying up on a pass from Perry and Doran paid another visit to the penalty box. The score was tied 4 all at the conclusion of fifteen minutes play.

3rd Period

After about four minutes of the final period, Canning scored a soft one. Play was even and see-sawed up and down the ice with both goalies endamer d.

Baker, Bowen, Henry Canning and Hutchinson [illegible] Play ended 5-4.

Duke Keats, former Edmontons hockey star, but now with Boston in the National Hockey League, is all "set" up over the ignorance of the fans who attend the games in the United States.

According to Keats there isn't the "thinnest" kind of hockey game in the N. H. L.—at least NOT in the western section of the loop—that was evidenced in the old Western Canada circuit.

"In a letter sent one of his friends Keats says that the fans there have but a hazy idea of what it's all about and 99 per cent. of them don't know a good play when one is worked.

"The hockey business is just some what of a spectacle for the Yanks, and the game lacks the driving zest that surrounds the air during the best of a game in Canada," Keats writes.

The Duke thinks that most of the real hockey in the N.H.L. will be played in the rinks on the Canadian side, where the fans know all the wrinkles and pull hard for their home teams. First of all he a novelty for the Yankee spectators, he says and furthermore the rinks are too warm to give the players the right kind of conditions.

According to J. McGovern, writing in the Minneapolis Journal ice hockey was first played in the United States in 1896, when the Canadian residents of Pittsburg played their first regulation game. The success of the game was slow, due to its public apathy toward ice events.

"There is no doubt of its permanency and its favor with the United States sport fan," Mr. McGovern asserts. He grants that there is little danger of Canada losing her supremacy in the domain of hockey for at least a number of years to come. In the dominion, he points out, there is the tradition, the climate and other factors to insure the Canadians their long-established supremacy in Canada's favorite winter sport.

CLYDESDALE MEN ASK EARLY DATE FOR WINTER FAIR

Pass Resolution at Brandon Favoring First Week in March

Brandon, Jan. 8.—Manitoba Clydesdale Breeders, in session here, after considerable discussion, passed a resolution asking for an earlier date for the Manitoba winter fair at Brandon. The first week in March was favored. Another resolution asked that classes for aged stallions of nine years and over should be revived, also the classes for yearling colts and fillies.

The objection to the first resolution was the fact that the ice sheet in the winter fair building was in full use early in March. The members as a whole decided that breeding exigencies demanded an earlier fair and appointed a committee of John Smith, Holland; James Bartlett, Napinka; and Jos. Taylor, Brandon, to approach the fair board. The race committee will urge the establishment of the shoe classes named in order to encourage the hiring out of the older horses and the display of young stuff.

The association elected the following officers for 1927: David Binnie, Rosser, president; Jos. Taylor, Brandon, vice-presidents; Jas. Burnett, Issac Cornack, A. M. Brownridge, Portage la Prairie, directors.

When Chief Clark found them in Bacon's possession he told the chief that they belonged to Massey and he was using them temporarily. Kraus, it is said, has identified them as his and Bacon will appear in police court on Monday charged with theft.

And Now The Most Beautiful CHEVROLET in Chevrolet History

With Scores of Improvements

It's Greater than Ever Chevrolet

As a climax to the most outstanding automobile success of recent years, Chevrolet announces the greatest triumph in its history—

—a complete line of cars, mechanically finer, entirely new in line, contour and color, and offering elements of style, distinction and elegance hitherto undreamed of in the low-priced field:

Here are new bodies of beautiful lines—brilliant in their modish new Duco colors—irresistible in their distinguished smartness—and outstanding in that individuality and perfection of silhouette regularly associated with costly custom-built creations.

Here are score upon score of advancements in design—a new and massive radiator shell—full-crown fenders—bullet-type head lamps and cowl lamps—new, heavier running board—new gasoline gauge—new A.C. Oil Filter—new A.C. Air Cleaner—Co-incidental ignition and steering lock—new, luxurious upholsteries—new sliding seat in the Coach model—new large steering wheel—and many others too numerous to mention.

But, however complete—however enthusiastic—no mere description of the Most Beautiful Chevrolet in Chevrolet History can adequately portray the new measure of individuality and style it brings into the field of the low-priced car. This can only be gained by inspection of the cars themselves.

So, we urge you to visit our show-rooms. And we ask you to come in anticipation of the revelation you would expect when the World's largest builder of gear-shift automobiles announces the Most Beautiful Chevrolet in Chevrolet History, at the Lowest Price for which Chevrolet has ever been sold in Canada.

Thinking of building next Spring? If you are here are a few tips that may act as a guide for you in the solution of two of the important problems—your building material and the selection of the type of hardwood flooring that will prove most suitable and serviceable. No use going ahead blindly in the matter. Rather profit by what experience has taught others in the same position as yourself.

In the first place, what kind of material will you use? Jamieson Bone and Co., Limited, prominent building contractors, can advise you in this matter, and one of the materials this firm advises and recommends as among the best for service and beauty is "Milton Brick"—the same brick for modern home building. Milton Brick, Limited the producers, have operated almost continuously, winter and summer,for almost thirty years; with three plants running a daily capacity of 260,000 face brick is attained by this firm. All brick is made from shale, not clay, and are guaranteed free from lime and other impurities. Both the rough texture and pressed brick have a crushing test of over 5,000 pounds per square inch; absolutely no artificial coloring is used in these bricks and the many beautiful and different shades secured are obtained naturally by various firing effects.

Among the products of this firm is "Maple-Bark" Texture Brick, something decidedly new in the line of rough texture brick. While it has a decided depth of texture, there are no vertical mechanical lines visible. Discriminating architects who have seen and used this brick state that it is the finest rough texture brick that is used in this country and is filling a long felt want in face brick.

Ask Jamieson Bone about this brick. Then, in the hardwood flooring matter, this firm advises the use of "Satin Finish Kant Kup,the greatest improvement in hardwood flooring. Cupping has been in the past one of your greatest worries, when you consider the time and money you may have spent re-laying floors, you will be quick to realize the greater satisfaction and saving possible with the use of this new hardwood flooring.

A SLOGAN WITH MUCH MEANING IS THIS NEW ONE

"We Know How" Expresses Service Given Sprague's Patrons

"We Know Now." These are three words with a whole lot of meaning. Competent and skilled service nowadays in any line of business is virtually demanded by the public. Competition, changing and improving living conditions together with a realization on the part of the public that its demands must be met by those engaged in serving it, in whatever capacity, has given to the word "service" in busines today a greater significance than has ever been the case in the past.

And fundamental to the desire on the part of the public for ever better service to the business man's realization that he must give it—and to his desire to do so—must be the basis of a thorough know ledge of his business—a grasp of the details and an ability to serve just a little better—to a reciate and serve the demands of an ever more exacting public in such a way as to win an increasing patronage to his own advantage.

Take for example the cleaning and pressing business today. A firm backed by years of service, if it today holds an increasing patronage will be found to be one, of which it can be truthfully said that, alive to the demands of its patrons, it has steadily advanced in the art of cleaning and pressing, adopted up-to-date methods and improvements and altogether must be giving a satisfactory service—else where would it be.

Sprague's have for years been doing just this—keeping "a jump ahead" in their desire to serve their patrons needs and fill them and an increasing number of these patrons have realized ere now that Sprague's Stands "WE KNOW HOW" has real significance for it means to their patrons "We Know How" to fill your cleaning and pressing needs in a way that is just a little better—and to give you the service you demand and then some.

Phone Sprague at 305 for your next cleaning and pressing job—and see for yourself.

EYE TROUBLE IS CAUSE OF MANY BODILY AILMENTS

Properly Fitted Glasses Can Cure These With Removal of Cause

Defective sight may be the cause of many ailments that are seemingly wholly unrelated. Just as medical science has found that bad teeth will affect our bodily well-being, eyes have frequently determined other physical conditions

For instance, it has been found that poor eyes are frequently a contributing cause to stomach trouble, nervous disorders, insomnia, headaches and a presently run-down condition

That is because the eye constitutes more than a very large segment of the body. Our great network of nerves communicate and influence each other. Each nerve that runs up and down your eyes for strength. Hence any defect or weakness of vision immediately has its effect upon the nervous system which nerves out its distress in the form of aches and pains

If your vision is not 100 per cent. perfect you will be wonderfully surprised to learn how much real comfort a pair of expertly-fitted glasses can give you in your everyday life

JANUARY

Oh, a right brave jeweller is he,
Frosty January!
He hangs his diamonds the great elm-tree,
Rich old January.
He strings his pearls along the eaves,
And when the sun the cold earth leaves,
He works all night while the children sleep,
And the arms of frost come creep, creep, creep,
And many a shining wreath he weaves,
Gay old January!

CULTIVATE YOUR MIND TO LENGTHEN YOUR LIFE

(By G. P. S.)

I do not mean to offer any statistics on this subject, for the statistical method does to many mathematicians, sometimes becomes as dangerous to hardie as a two-edged sword lacking a hilt. But while I write, a few supreme names of the last couple of centuries come to mind, and on looking into a biographical dictionary I find that Newton lived 85 years, Voltaire 84, Franklin 84, Kant 80, Humboldt 90, Herschel 84, Goethe 82, Gladstone 89, Tolstoy 82, and Chevreul 102.

It is by meditating the mind that long years are invited. The mind is the master, not the body. Mind cure is a reality; but it is not so much a cure as an irresistible momentum. Instead of looking your bodily ills in the eye and saying definitely, "Avaunt! You are frauds; you don't exist; I won't have you!" (which is simply fixing your attention upon them), forward them by otherwise occupying your mind.

The bicyclist can't fall as long as he keeps in motion. The skater skates over the ice as if it were a firm floor. The moon transmutes the accelerating attraction of the earth from a fall into an endless circuit. So the mind-in motion discounts the gravity of the body.

It used to be said that Gladstone disarmed the advancing years by the exercise of chopping down trees. Nonsense! It was his mental activity that dissolved time, and the axe was but a pendulum to his mind. "You are as old as you feel." That does not mean physical feeling but mental consciousness.

* * *

"My mind to me a kingdom is":

Such perfect joy therein I find
As farre surpeds all earthly blisse

That God or nature hath assigande."

That was old William Byrd's confession of faith in what is really the only true life.

As long as the mind is growing an essential youthfulness remains which retards the ageing of the body. Too exclusive concentration upon a single or a few closely related subjects does not appear to be favorable to longevity, or even to great mental power. It is breadth of interest that furnishes inspiration and relief from tedium, as well as a sufficient foundation or real intellectual culture.

In all the instances with which I began herewith was characteristic of the men. Newton was not only the discoverer of the law of gravity but of the constitution of light. The subjects with which he dealt had universal relations and led into inexhaustible regions of discovery. "Forever voyaging through strange seas of thought alone." Newton's mind had room and stimulus for continuous development, and while it grew life could not languish. So with all the others. Their outstanding intellectual interests no doubt prolonged their lives.

"Care killed a cat." Care in this case means worry, but in the kindom of the mind pictured by William Byrd there is no worry, there is only ceaseless activity. Whether it prolongs your life or not seek intellectual cultivation. For it is the best part of you, the only part that has any chance of being represented in a future state. Take up a new study and put real work into it; no matter how old you are, it may "make you a boy again," in more ways than you expect.

CONDITION OF INDIANS 1926 IS IMPROVED

Many 'Redmen' Have Homes As Good as Some Whites

Regina, Sask., Jan. 6.—(By Canadian Press)—The year 1926 shows a marked increase in all branches of activity by the Indians of the West, according to W. M. Graham, commissioner for Indian affairs.

"Production of live-stock and grains, has shown a gradual increase, but this year we have to report an untoward condition in the northern sections which reduced the yields to some extent. Even with this reduction, we are able to show almost as large an output as last year. The production of more than one million bushels of grain, twenty-nine and barley is an indication that the Indians are buying themselves and making a success of farming. In fact, I can truthfully say, that you will find many Indian farmers, just as successful as white, settles in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, and pro rata producing equally as fine crops.

"Their living conditions have been ameliorated to the degree that in many homes of Indians now, enjoy similar conditions to those in the homes of the better class of white people. Also the five per cent. of the children of school age on all reserves, are NOT attending school—and for this there are various causes."

During 1926 the department experienced some difficulty in getting up the required quantity of hay, but with not too severe a winter, it is expected that the supplies will hold out without having to provide extra fodder for the livestock Mr. Graham said.

Live-stock has been the one point where most progress has been made. Of one reserve, $15,000 worth of cattle were marketed. In 1925 cattle of Indian raised cattle, took first and third prizes in open competition on the Winnipeg market.

"We pride ourselves on having the finest range cattle in the West, and that is NOT only our opinion, but that of men who buy on the markets of the world.

"Every year we buy anywhere from 70 to 100 registered bulls, and the result in making of our herds the best that are ranging in Western Canada," Mr. Graham added.

Indian farmers during 1926, he said, had 9,000 acres of breaking on which some empire was done. There were 27,000 acres of summer fallow, 600 acres of gardens and 800 acres of pot-tree. Approximately 70,000 tons of hay were put up for winter feed.

The old time log shacks, Mr. Graham says, are disappearing and in their place are to be found modernly constructed houses. These are still of the old Indian log in their belief structures, but they also are going out of use.

"The report of Inspector Christianson, who has just returned from the Fish River Indian reserve in Manitoba, is one of the best indications or progress that the department has received," the Commissioner, concluded.

WOULD ABOLISH JURY SYSTEM

Edmonton, Alta., Jan. 6.—(By Canadian Press)—Abolition of the existing jury system in favor of trials before a single judge was urged at the annual meeting of the Edmonton Law Society by Neil D. MacLean, K.C.

"The jury system started in Britain to replace the trial by combat and it carries out the spirit of the same dark ages," Mr. MacLean said. "More especially," he added, "if the admiralty law were adopted in damage actions should the civil jury be abolished, because it is only a judge who gives the defendant a fair show."

Mr. Justice Hyndman favored the jury system for criminal trials as carrying on a British jurisdiction and civil juries were often better than trial by judge alone. The call of the public provided a "safety valve." Nor did Mr. Justice Ford agree that the jury system should be abolished for he had found at times that he welcomed their assistance in difficult cases.

A resolution favoring a reduction in the cost of a civil jury trial was endorsed. Speakers of the resolution pointed out that in Ontario NO fee was charged while the other provinces of the dominion had a lower rate than the fee of $200 charged in Alberta. Under prevailing conditions, it was asserted, a poor litigant was often prevented from obtaining justice.

Mr. McCarthur, who is 73 years of age, has lost 50 pounds the last months, and is not expected to live many days. Physicians state there is no hope of his recovery.

Mr. McCarthur built the National Transcontinental from Winnipeg to the Sioux Lookout; the Red River Valley road from Minnesota to Winnipeg; broke the C.P.R. monopoly in 1897, and built the Hudson Bay line as far as Nelson, where the grade was completed in 1917, and the Peace River lines, which he owned. He has no children, but his wife is with him in Battle Creek.

A STATEMENT

By the President of Dodge Brothers, Inc.

Within a few months, Dodge Brothers, Inc., and their subsidiaries will introduce a new line of motor cars, in no way conflicting with the market for Dodge Brothers present types, but occupying a considerably higher price field and produced in limited quantities.

Combining Dodge Brothers well known dependability with exceptional performance and striking beauty of appointment and design, these distinguished vehicles, we believe, will instantly set a new and higher standard in fine car practice.

Dodge Brothers will continue to produce their present line in maximum quantities to meet a demand which, during the year just ended, was very much the largest in their history, reaching the record total of 330,000 cars.

77 DIE -- MOSTLY CHILDREN -- IN THEATRE FIRE PANIC

Council Organizes For 1927 Business -- Passes Resolution of Sympathy With Graham Family

A HEARTRENDING PROCESSION OF DISTRACTED PARENTS AT MORGUE

For Hours an Endless Chain of Mourning Relatives Passed In

BODIES CLAIMED

Coroner Promptly Releases Remains For Burial—Full Inquiry Later

Montreal, Jan. 10.—The toll in lives from the panic in the Laurier Palace Moving Picture Theatre yesterday, when a crowd of children rushed for the doors following outbreak of fire, was placed officially at 76 this morning. Thirty-five youngsters in the city hospitals were reported to be recovering and not to be in any further danger.

Montreal, Jan. 10.—The citizens of Montreal this morning were sorrowfully surveying the havoc wrought yesterday afternoon when, within a few brief minutes, the lives of 76 children were snuffed out and 24 other persons were more or less seriously injured as the result of the panic in the Laurier Palace moving picture theatre which followed an alarm of fire.

The little victims, whose ages ranged from only five years of age to sixteen or seventeen, were for the most part suffocated by smoke or trampled to death under the feet of the throng which jammed the exits in the wild rush to safety. The tragedy is one of the most poignant that has ever occurred in this city, and is the greatest moving picture catastrophe that has happened in this country. In several cases more than one member of the family was killed. Constable Albert Imbeault, of the Retreaultville police station, left his three children.

Officials Give Aid

All yesterday afternoon and evening there was a heartrending procession of distracted parents to the city morgue where the 76 little bodies were laid out, awaiting identification. The scenes within the building were unparalleled in their tragedy and pathos as heartbroken mothers, crazed with grief, came to seek and in too many cases, claim some pitiful little corpse. Stricken to the depths with the horror and the sorrows of it all, the officials guided the mourning parents among the bodies, themselves grim and unemotional as a rule, breaking into tears at the sad and unprecedented spectacle. Per hours an endless line of fathers, mothers, sisters and brothers passed before Coroner Leo Mahon as the aged official, his head bowed in grief and his heart filled with sympathy, awaited them to fill the requirements of the law. Working ceaselessly and giving to each bereaved parent the same kindly attention throughout the night the coroner issued death certificates after all identifications had been made and the cause of death determined.

London, Jan. 10 (C. P. Cable).—Several London, England, newspapers issued special editions last evening to publish the latest cables telling of the disastrous panic in the Laurier

RIOTS FOSTERED BY GOVERNMENT

Hankow, Jan. 10.—Responsibility for the riots of January 3, which resulted in the evacuation of the British concession here, and the removal of Americans from Hankow, was laid at the door of the Chinese reunion today after the results of an investigation made by foreigners was announced.

The survey holds that riots were instigated with the connivance of government officials that the coolie unions were harangued by nationalist orators and that anti-British posters were supplied by the nationalist (Cantonese) propaganda department.

CONGRATULATIONS

Ald. Granvill and Mrs. Sinclair were congratulated by the City Council this morning on the arrival of a son and heir. An official resolution was sagged to this effect at the inaugural meeting.

DEATH TOLL IS INCREASED TO 77 AND 30 INJURED

Inquest Opened and Ad journed Until Thursday For Inquiry

74 IDENTIFIED

Unattended Children at the Theatre Without Parent's Knowledge

Montreal, Que., January 10.—In spite of another today brought the number of casualties up to 77 in the Laurier Palace Theatre disaster yesterday afternoon. Some thirty other children who were injured in catastrophe are now receiving treatment in the hospital.

In addition to 66 bodies identified last night six more were claimed by the parents of victims today. They were: Lorette Fermeorue, 11 years; Arthur Gaston, aged 6 years; Roger, Perpetue, 11 years; Arthur Godin, 13 years; Edward St. Pierre, 13 years and Ida Godin 1 years.

INQUEST ADJOURNED

Montreal, Jan. 10.—The inquest on 77 dead in the Laurier Palace picture house fire and panic yesterday afternoon was adjourned until next Thursday shortly after the hearing opened here today. The proceedings were postponed by order of Coroner McMahon after the hearing of one father as to the identification of his child and hearing of Dr. H. Fontaine, Morgue autopsist, who told of having examined the bodies of 72 of the victims, all children. Coroner McMahon stated that he wished to have the interest of the fire commissioners present, which will open Monday next, before the coroner's jury would be asked to render a verdict.

WITHOUT PERMISSION

Thomas Girard was the first to appear before Coroner McMahon to claim a death certificate for his son Raoul. He stated and proved that his boy aged 14 had no permission to go to the show. Girard believed he had went to the show sometimes but did so against his father's will and in opposition to his orders. Girard watched with his 13 year old brother who was saved.

Joseph Hebb was then called as the first witness and stated that his 10 year old boy Albert was among the victims. Adrien had been accompanied by his eight year old brother, who had been saved and was in the hospital.

"Had the children your permission to go to the show?" asked the coroner.

"They had permission to go to another show, not that theatre," the witness replied.

The Coroner: "Why not that theatre, did you think it was dangerous?"

DOES NOT LIKE IDEA OF HANGING FOR THE MURDER

Pastor Norris Says State is Actuated By Hate Only

Austin, Texas, Jan. 10.—Dr. J. Frank Norris, Baptist pastor and evangelist of Fortworth today faced trial in the district court here, for the killing of D. Chester E. Chipps, wealthy lumberman, who was shot to death in Norris' office July 17, 1926. With upwards of two hundred witnesses subpoenaed and 200 prospective jurors summoned, the State announced it will ask the death penalty while counsel for Dr. Norris declares the pastor will take the stand to testify he shot Chipps in self defence.

When said the state would demand the death penalty, Dr. Norris said: "This prosecution is actuated by hate. It is merely an outgrowth of that old hate. It was persecution, not prosecution." Accused expressed "unflinching confidence" in the outcome of trial and declared he wished to take stand to tell just what is back of this cause."

MAYOR WILMOT FORECASTS A YEAR OF PROGRESS AT INAUGURATION

MAYOR'S ADDRESS

Deals With Collegiate—Gas—Publicity and Other Civic Problems

To the Aldermen-Elect and Citizens of Belleville:

First, I wish to express to the Citizens of Belleville my sincere appreciation of the honour conferred upon me in the recent Municipal Elections. I realize that this honour carried with it a great responsibility and my one aim during the ensuing year will be to demonstrate to you that your confidence has not been misplaced.

To the Aldermen-Elect I offer hearty congratulations and feel that the people have plainly shown their appreciation of your efforts during the past year. We have with us two new members who I know will do their utmost to co-operate in the work that was started last year and by their assistance aid materially in solving the problems of 1927; I welcome them to this Council.

There are some big items to be met and dealt with and you must when dealing with them remember that the present tax rate is uncomfortably high for many of our citizens and therefore no expenditure should be passed that are not of absolute necessity, also that you are simply Trustees handling the citizen's money.

The proposed new Collegiate Institute will no doubt come up for your consideration very soon and as this will entail the greatest single expenditure in the history of Belleville it behooves you to study the capitally from all angles, keeping in mind the present financial condition of the city, but not forgetting the

FORMER RESIDENT OF SHANNONVILLE SHOT IN WINDSOR

Windsor, Jan. 10. — Irvine East Graves, 50 years old, formerly of Shannonville, Hastings County, who was twice shot last evening by James Smith, negro Chauffeur, is in a dangerous condition, owners at Hotel Dieu said at noon today. Both bullets have been extracted by Dr. Paul Poisson, who expects Graves to recover.

According to residents of Shannonville Graves left there about twenty years ago and traces of his whereabouts have been lost ever since.

He was employed as a section foreman on the old Grand Trunk Railway many years ago.

Mr. Graves still has a number of relatives living in Tyendenaga Township, Sam Graves, formerly of Belleville, and Thomas Graves, Point Anne, both of whom are dead were brothers of the victim.

SUICIDE STORY PROVES TALE OF SOILED CLOTHES

What appeared to be a terrible tragedy involving the suicide of a man who wore Hatchway underwear and a brown dressing gown and who had presence of mind enough to leave and all before taking the fatal jump into eternity via the Moira has developed into a comedy—it was only a bunch of soiled clothin on its way to the Chinese laundry.

On Saturday morning the police were rotified by the manager of a small boy who told of finding a heap of men's clothes under the footbridge on the East side of the river. Investigation verified the report and the clothes which apparently indicated a suicide in the icy waters were brought to the station. No one had been listed as missing so surmising that the heap of clothes was either a practical joke or a mistake a some kind, no investigation was instigated, though the police force kept a watchful eye open for further developments which might tend to the solving of the mystery.

Sunday came, and at last the Chief was informed on good authority that the affair was not a hoax—the mystery had developed from the loss of a bundle of laundry on its way to the wash. Some small boys finding a bulging mass wrapped in newspaper on the foot bridge indulged in a little foot ball practice with the result the improvised ball found its way over the top, onto the fender of ice which have held the Moira fast since a couple of week ago. The bundle proved an easy prey to the wind and was rapidly broken up into a mound of very personal belongings, which on being recovered by the bluecoats was taken on to the furnace room of the Police Station where they await a claimant and the promised wash.

ALLOT CHAIRMANSHIPS

Council Gets to Business; Two New Aldermen Take Their Places

Belleville's 1927 Council with due ceremony was inaugurated this morning and promptly got down to work.

Mayor Wilmot delivered an address briefly outlining the more important questions with which the Aldermen will have to deal this year, and then the Council organized for business.

Chairmanships

The various civic chairmanships were the most important items dealt with and they were apportioned as follows:—

Chair of Executive and Finance—Ald. Morley Cole.

Belle Vieu Park—Ald. E. Y. Cherry.

Water Works—Ald. O. R. Sinclair.

Fire—Ald. C. J. Hyde.

Market — City Property—Ald. J. R. L. Gorman.

Light—Ald. C. C. Walker.

Industrial—Ald. A. P. Procter.

Gas—Ald. A. S. Collins.

Printing and Stationery—Ald. G. O. Tice.

Labor—Ald. R. Goudy.

Power—Ald. W. Donahue.

Tourist and Publicity—Ald. Russell Wotten.

The last named is a new committee and it is believed that it is a necessary one in view of the fact that thousands of tourists from all parts of the continent pass through Belleville annually. Ald. Wotten has had some experience in promoting and fostering several projects in Belleville and is certainly the right man for the job.

Opening Ceremonies

Aldermen Donahue and Tice escorted Mayor Wilmot to the Mayor's chair where he was invested with the Chain and Insignia of office amid loud applause.

Dr. E. N. Baker, Principal Emeritus of Albert College, invoked the Divine Blessing after the Mayor had taken his place.

Mayor Wilmot's inaugural address was received with every mark of attention expressed.

Ald. Granvil Sinclair on behalf of the Council, moved a vote of thanks to the Mayor for his splendid address.

He said he felt that Belleville had a prosperous future before her this year in his estimation he was of the opinion that the new ideas expressed by the Mayor in his address would be of great benefit to the City.

City Clerk Holmes on behalf of the officials also thanked the Mayor for his address.

Cemetery Crossing

A communication which was received from the Canadian Council in regard to the placing of a more adequate system of protection at the Cemetery Crossing was read. The Board of Railway Commissioners refused the request to act on the question.

Alderman Collins brought the matter up and said he believed that the Council of the future of Belleville should concur with the County Council in the matter and co-operate in following it up closely.

By-Laws

The usual by-law was passed authorizing the borrowing of $150,000 to cover current expenses.

Newsy Neighborhood Notes

KINGSTONIAN ESCAPED

Kingston, Jan. 10.—The Ladies' School for Girls at Greenfield, County, suffered serious damage by fire on Wednesday night. Miss Eva Martin, who is on the staff, wired her sisters, Mrs. H. E. Richardson, and Miss Nora Martin, that she was safe, but that some of the buildings were completely destroyed. This is the third ladies' school in this district to be destroyed by fire within the past few weeks. The pupils are all of the wealthy class.

FELL AT RINK

Port Hope, Jan. 10.—Mr. John Clement, Harcourt street, was the victim of an unfortunate accident at the rink Saturday night when he fell and broke his left wrist. Mr. Clement was pleasure skating when in some manner he tripped and fell with considerable force. It was not thought at first that the wrist had been broken but medical examination disclosed the break.

NEW SPEED COP

Port Hope, Jan. 10.—Gordon Hallit has been appointed traffic officer for this district, replacing Officer Byles, who has been transferred to another district. Mr. Hallit served last year in the Cornwall-Brockville district and at one time with Colborne as his headquarters. He commences his duties here at once.

FIRE GUTTED SHOP

Peterboro, Jan. 10.—Fire gutted the shop of William Taylor, 219 Hunter Street, Saturday night, causing about $1,500 damage. Mr. Taylor had been grinding skates and sharpening saws until shortly after nine o'clock when he went home. At a quarter to twelve a passer-by noticed a fire in the rear end of the shop and he turned in the alarm. When the firemen arrived the shop was filled with a heavy black smoke, and as the door was opened the blaze shot to the ceiling at the rear.

PERISHED IN FIRE

Brockville, Jan. 10.—The residence of Albert DeBruyn, together with its contents, situated between three and four miles north of Brockville, was totally destroyed by fire early this morning.

Mrs. DeBruyn, the wife of the owner, is missing and it is believed she perished in the building, of which she was the sole occupant during the night.

The barn, situated a few rods from the residence, was saved through the herculean efforts of Miss B. DeBruyn, sister of Albert DeBruyn, and the latter's daughter, Lillian DeBruyn, aged 13.

NEW STREET CAR SYSTEM?

Kingston, Jan. 10.—The future of the Kingston street railway may be decided at a conference which has been arranged to take place this afternoon at 2.30 o'clock, between members of the Public Utilities Commission and representatives of the street railway company, when the question of the rate to be charged the street railway company, which has been hanging fire for some time, will be under discussion.

Will Kingston continue to have a street car system? This is the all important question and from what can be learned, this will be decided on the one point—that of the rate to be charged the street railway company for power.

SIDNEY TO LOSE VALUED FRIENDS

On Thursday evening, December the thirteenth, the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Sharpe, on the fourth concession of Sidney, was the scene of a very pleasant surprise. About seventy-five friends of the immediate neighborhood and surrounding vicinity invaded their home to bid them farewell before their departure to their new home in Belleville.

A very enjoyable evening was spent in games and various amusements. Toward the close of which Mr. and Mrs. Sharpe and Mr. Bonisteel were presented with an electric reading lamp and John Mrs. Sharpe a wicker rocking chair, with the following address:—

Dear Friends and Neighbors:—

In the midst of our glad Xmas festivities a fresh touch of sorrow is entering our lives. Always we feel a mild regret when new friends pass on to other parts and activities, but when associations, that the years have mellowed and enriched, are broken a keener sense of loss comes, and for some we may lose the Sharpe home and family have stood for stability and faith, sanity and kind ness.

As Anglo-Saxons and Canadians expressions of praise and affection require an effort, embarrassing the speakers almost as much as those who listen to them. Often, for this reason we fail to give due need. Yet at times like this it becomes a pleasant privilege and duty.

For years, in fact a lifetime, you have been associated with us, as radical friends workers in the church and community. Ever ready to aid and support, wherever help was needed. Our loss is not light. In an age of license and irreverence we have found you staunch, pursuing the even tenor of your ways, doing your duty to yourselves and fellowmen, endearing yourselves to us in sickness and health.

It is to say something of this that we, co-workers in Church and community, have gathered as well as to ask you to carry with you to your new home one small gift in remembrance of our appreciation. so we are asking you Wilbur and wife, and Mrs. Bonisteel to accept this electric lamp, hoping its light will shine as brightly and steadily as the inner lamp of life you carry with you.

To Mrs. Sharp our aged friend who already sees the light of a great future shining ahead, we offer the comforts of this chair, hoping you may long enjoy it.

Particularly, we should like you all, who have laughed and suffered with us in the past, to carry with you that Beautiful. It has been good to live with you, it would have been good to have died with you. But the last is not to be, so we bid you Godspeed in your other home, among other people.

Signed on behalf of Church and Community.

Chester Bowers
Hilton Shorey
John Gilmour

Each one of the family thanked their friends in a few well chosen words, and invited them to visit them in their new home. Several other speeches were made, after which a dainty lunch was served, the party breaking up with the singing of Auld Lang Syne.

Moving Picture Palace at Montreal, when 76 lives were lost.

Montreal, Jan. 10.— Seventy-seven smoke-stained, blood-bloothed boys and girls lie lifeless on the floors of the morgue. About thirty other children, and a few adults, scarred, scratched and bruised, repose in cots at four city hospitals. All are victims of a stampede that followed a minor outbreak of fire yesterday afternoon during a moving picture show at the Laurier Palace, 1683-5 St. Catherine street east.

All evening the toll mount-d. Hour after hour ambulances made still more journeys to the old port hospitals near the harbor, where mortuary chambers held scores of bodies chastity in death. Long after the last patient was laid and floated over the gaunt east end building, which had been a tomb for so many, mothers and fathers, brothers and sisters, trooped wearily from hospital to hospital. Some cried hysterically as they found their little ones in one cot. Others left the last hospital with one more call to make. And the morgue enveloped in the deathly stillness of a business district hushed on the seventh day, saw ever-filling lines of taut-strung men, women, children even, still search ing and awaiting the worst.

The mute and mutilated were taken in mid-afternoon from a stairway, barely thirty feet long, leading from the current end of the theatre gallery to the street. Ten minutes rumoursweed the whole tragedy. Out of the bright January sunshine, which threw alluring blue shadows under the trees of the snow-covered park opposite the theatre swooped of adults and children. but above all children. had filed, rosy-cheeked and laughing, into the ground floor and the

MINING STOCKS

From the 'Star Weekly.'—Take pressures to be extremely sanguine in mines and mining stocks. If the results of the drilling on Areas are good there is likely to be a blaze of trading on all the Quebec issues. It will only be necessary to say that a property has had an electrical survey which indicated large ore bodies and the public will scramble to get in. Such buying will not be regarded as speculations any more. The main thing will be to make sure that the management of the property has a reputation for veracity. If, on the other hand the drilling on Area is disappointing, there will be a temporary lull after the initial boom is over. fear or heft could not snatch one little fellow from death. Practised eyes saw the need for heroic measures. Holes were chopped through the wooden stairs, directly under the jam of bodies; another hole was made in a wall. Firemen formed in a human chain, and gradually undermined the mass by extricating those jammed.

Nearly all pulled out of the stairway were dead. Two or three boys gave their names and died, crushed and mangled. Outside, the police worked feverishly. While motor fire pumps roared in ear-splitting cacophony, as the inferior blaze was attacked with tons of water, doctors were summoned. Frail little bodies were laid in rows on the sidewalks, faces turned to the azure sky under which they had romped, a short hour before, to the show that was to be a tragedy. Dead and injured were quickly separated. Priests were on the scene, and the last rites were given to a few choking little ones who revived in the open air, then died.

THE RIGHT SPIRIT

Mayor Wilmot's address to the Council at the formal inauguration this morning was a brief but masterly presentation of the serious duties which face the Aldermen this year. The tone of his remarks, while stressing the importance of the issues, was optomistic as befits a young Mayor speaking to a young city just getting into her stride.

Perhaps no other question is as important to the citizen ratepayers as the proposed new Collegiate, which will have to be dealt with during 1927. While the tenders submitted to the Board of Education have never been made public it is understood that the present plans call for an expenditure of well over half a million dollars, which, as the Mayor pointed out, is the largest single expenditure which the city has ever been called on to make. It is a question which will need earnest consideration before it is finally decided.

It is generally admitted that our present Collegiate is inadequate and in poor condition. Money spent on it for repairs, according to competent advice, would be money wasted, and there is serious danger of the Department of Education condemning entirely the old building and no cutting off our Government grant.

Every public spirited citizen wants to see the vital educational needs of the city's children amply provided for, but no taxpayer wants to throw away a dollar needed to the sheerly high tax rate. If it is not possible to erect and equip a building for a lot less than $600,000 the Council should and probably will submit the matter to the tax payers in a by-law for their approval.

The Mayor's remarks about the Civic Gas Plant are encouraging. With proper management the plant will pay its way, once it is put in a sound physical condition. The present inspection will show what is needed.

In this connection it is interesting to note the experience of cities of about our own size. Stratford was served by a private Gas Company until within the past few months when the rate payers endorsed a by-law to buy them out, when the company had threatened to close up as profits were not being made.

Shortly after purchasing the Gas Plant, Stratford City Council had an offer to sell again at a profit of ten thousand dollars, but refused. The system is apparently working satisfactorily under a Public Utilities Commission.

Another point in the Mayor's address worthy of commendation is his suggestion in regard to advertising the manifold advantages of Belleville as a location for manufacturers seeking to locate into the Canadian field.

With Canada practically assured of a period of prosperity, many British and United States corporations will be looking for locations to establish Canadian branch factories. By working in close harmony with the Chamber of Commerce along the lines proposed by Mayor Wilmot, substantial benefits should accrue to Belleville.

The City is off on a fine start in the New Year—we have a fine Council—let us get behind them and push Belleville ahead.

MODERN YOUTH

One of the tendencies of the day is to compare the youthful ends of behaviour with the coin practised by former generations to profess to find in the comparison sound basis for attacks on the free and easy carelessness of modern youth, and accuse both sexes of a frivolity, irreverence and immodesty, that would never have been tolerated in the days of the critics' own youth. What is said in this respect may embody some truth, but it is inoportune to signal the evidence of a competent witness in the person of Dr. Charles W. Harris, of the University of Indiana, who, in an address delivered before a convention of university church workers at Chicago, stated plainly that many of the severe criticisms that are finding wide currency are unjustified. Whatever truth they may reveal, it is not the whole truth, and it may not be too magazine to believe that Dr. Harris's defence can be applied generally through the country. It has been a constant element in social history that the older generations find the younger invariably discourteous, ill-behaved and arrogant, as compared with their own standards; and the younger generations will no doubt register like professions when they grow mature. There is a greater independence and outspokenness, there is perhaps more wilfulness, there is seemingly less discipline amongst modern youth than was manifest in the days of, say, their grandparents. It is one of the inevitable changes of progress, but a change that does not necessarily involve or denote the degeneracy that some people allege. Conditions in some instances may not be always what they should be, but in casting stones at particular offenders it is hardly fair to aim at a whole generation.

THE PEOPLE'S PART

Rev. Canon Cody, in the course of a recent address, appealed to the people of Ontario to justify the wisdom of the action taken by popular approval at the recent election, by preventing any abuse of the rights which would be accorded to them.

It would be well if the people give serious thought to the appeal: "The electors of Ontario have voted in favor of government control of the liquor traffic. Government control to be the success that people are hoping for must have the support and co-operation of those who are willing to exercise self-control. According to Dr. Cody, the only kind of prohibition which can have any kind of moral value is the prohibition which a man enforces upon himself and which must lead him to be temperate in all his actions.

The government must not be allowed to forget its responsibilities; but neither should the people be allowed to forget what belongs to them. One good New Year resolution for all the people of Ontario, would be this: "Regard the beginning of a new experiment in this province in dealing with the liquor traffic. As electors we are responsible for the trying of this experiment; as citizens there will be a heavy responsibility upon us if we do our share to make it a success."

A LIBEL

The Toronto Star quotes the following from the Malverton, Ont., Sun, presumably with approval, as the Star heads it, "Lesson from the Last War."

"There is still throughout rural Ontario a repugnance being extended to military militarism being introduced into the schools and colleges whether it be under the guise of cadet training or military disciplining. The people of Canada have not forgotten that in the last war the poor man went forward to fight while the rich man remained at home to reap up a fortune."

The above is quite a scurrilous kind of libel, which we think few newspapers in this country endorse. We are sure that the people of Canada have no thought whatever that "the poor man"—presumably from the reference to "rural Ontario" the man of the country districts is meant—went forward to fight while the rich man remained at home to reap up a fortune."

The men of Canada, poor or well-to-do, of military age, went forth with equal readiness to the war. There is not a rich man's club in this country, ninety per cent. of whose members under thirty years of age, did not enlist in the war; and so far as money is concerned, the people of other than rural districts in Canada contributed as patiotic, and other things of the kind at least their share, and are certainly doing more than their share now in the way of paying taxes. Finally, there are very few people in Canada who made any money out of the war; and to endeavor to class as discreditable in that way the vast number of well-to-do people to whom the war only meant loss, is as rotten a thing as it would be for any well-to-do man to insinuate that the people of rural districts did not mostly do their share.

The mind that would frame such a paragraph as appears in the Milverton Sun, or would promulgate it with approval anywhere, is a sample of a pretty poor brand of Canadian patriotism.

OTHER MEN'S THOUGHTS

A London, Ont., boy spends $300,000 collecting butterflies has been declared bankrupt. He's lucky that's the worst indictment they brought against him.—Buffalo Courier-Express.

Sir Henry Thornton suggests that Canada's Diamond Jubilee, which is to be observed next July, might be celebrated as an "Old Home Week." The idea is good. It will be a splendid opportunity to send forth a call from home to "those of the dispersion."—Sydney Post.

The London (England) Morning Post puts it in a nutshell when it says: "Were the British Empire to fail, the status of the Dominion would not long survive that calamity. They would be prizes of war, pawns of fortune, helpless as single units to defend their trade, their liberties, and even their existence."—Toronto Globe.

HAVE YOU HEARD THESE?

Phyllida—Sometimes you appear real ly manly, and sometimes you are effeminate. How do you account for it?

Phillip—I suppose it's hereditary. Half my ancestors were men and the other half women.

Friend: "Aren't you rather tired of that record? Why don't you buy another?"

Sandy: "Hoots! This one isna' anything like worn out yet."

"Judge, yo' honah," complained an irate colored lady to the court, "dis yeah no-'count husban' o' mine drinks."

"Vassuh, judge, yo' honah. Ah does drink some," admitted the husband. "But, judge, dat woman don' treat me right. Why, Ah pawns de kitchen stove fo' six months an' she doan' miss it fo' two weeks."

Father (over the phone)—Mabel is not at home. Can I take any message?

Young Male Voice (nervously)—Er—yes. Just say—er—Toodle-oo—sweetest—ecious—from Cyril.

WISH

I wish I could take every little thing
That gladdened summer for you, and of these Fashion a rich forever of certainty;
The motion of a cloud a leaf, a wing,
Across the sunlight or in shadowing;
The soft confusion of fine melodies
Out of the grass; wide tenderness of trees;
The afterglow on water wandering.

My vigilance would seek out every sound
You loved, and, lest a murmur should be missed,
Love in his strength would all the earth enlist.
Even to the mole's furred footstep underground, . . .
If only the bleak and haggard nights could go
Like the dead leaf, like the last drift of snow.

RELEASED ON BAIL

The proprietor of the theatre, Amedeo Lawand and three of his staff were released on $1000 bail each pending investigation.

In his preliminary address to the jury, Coroner McMahon expressed the opinion that probably not more than three or four of the victims had any right to be admitted to the picture house at all, as a provincial law prohibits the admittance of all children under the age of 16 to cabaret theatres who are not accompanied by an adult.

"I myself interrogated 31 parents over night," the Coroner told the jurymen. "Not more than three or four of the children identified by their parents were accompanied by an adult, as required by law. No, I don't believe there were as many as four."

Quebec, Jan. 8.—Plans for the construction of a tunnel under the St. Lawrence River, between Montreal and Longueuil, were submitted to Parliament today by the Montreal Underground Tunnel Company, a million-dollar concern, which will be established for the carrying out of the project. The bill will be presented before the Legislature at the forthcoming session.

BARBERS SACRIFICE TIPS TO GAIN DIGNITY

Indianapolis, Jan. 8.—Barbershop patrons who have for years "dimed" or "quartered" their way past their favorite razor or scissors wielder are advised that their frequently bestowed tips are undesirable.

James C. Shanessy, president of the Journeymen Barbers' International Union, says that his organization is opposed to tipping and will seek to eliminate the practice.

"Millions of dollars come into the hands of barbers in the United States and Canada yearly through tips but the price we pay is reduced dignity and loss of patronage is too high," he asserts. "Officials of this union realize that they are taking a momentous step in opposing tipping. Many of our members will disapprove but we believe a majority will favor our action."

The anti-tipping campaign also will be extended to beauty parlors, Shanessy said, as "cosmeticians" are members of the Barbers' Union.

MAYOR WILMOT

vital necessity of adequately providing for the educational needs of our students. While the plans have not yet been submitted to the Council, it is understood that they call for an expenditure of over half a million dollars, an amount which should not be sanctioned without the most careful and searching consideration.

The Gas Works is another problem of major importance and one that must be definitely settled in 1927. It is gratifying to know that the investigation now being carried on by an engineering firm will be completed very shortly and we may then deal with this proposition. I feel that the Gas is a Public Utility that, properly handled, may be made to pay and one that in a few years will be a satisfaction and a credit to the city. To a great many hundreds of our citizens, Gas is a vital necessity and there are many thousands of dollars tied up in gas equipment. Other cities of our size have successfully solved the problem that is now facing Belleville and there is no reason why we should not also make a success of this Utility. I would like to suggest to this Council what they may take immediately the forming of a Public Utilities Commission.

I am glad to learn of your intention to create the morning a new Chairmanship, that of Tourist and Publicity. No doubt our city can profit greatly through the tourist, by the impression he receives and carries away with him. In my estimation we cannot do too much of the proper and intelligent kind of Publicity, and in the Chairman of this Committee would suggest that he work in conjunction with our Chamber of Commerce in advertising Belleville in this Country and Abroad. Successful businesses are built up by advertising the quality of their goods and service. In likening Belleville to a business house, we need customers in the way of new industries and we can give those customers service by way of the very best transportation by land and water. Geographically also we are in a splendid position to locate new industries. Let us make a drive for more. As a suggestion to this new chairmanship, I believe it would be a good idea to circularize by letter all important firms in England and the United States asking if they contemplate at any time in the future building branch business in Canada, and pointing out the advantages they could enjoy in Belleville; in their replies we would no doubt receive many prospects which could be worked upon by our Industrial Commission.

Belleville is truly a beautiful city and most appropriately named. We have everything to make for Health, Wealth and Happiness. Our incomparable Bay of Quinte affords us excellent fishing, sailing and bathing. No other city in Canada is more richly endowed with natural beauty of water, land and trees. We have surrounding us one of the richest tracts of agricultural land in the Dominion—we are blessed with a fine type of enterprising and public minded citizens and service clubs whose chief aims are the welfare of the people and the city. I feel most optimistic over the prospects of prosperity for Belleville and personally appeal to everyone to put their shoulders to the wheel of progress and by means of constructive criticism and advice help this Council, our Service Clubs and the Municipal boards during 1927.

I also appeal to the Fathers and Mothers of those fine young citizens in the making who are attending our schools to instill into them a municipal patriotism that they may at the end of their education remain here and help to build up our city and a prosperous Dominion.

HYDROGEN AS BALLOON GAS REGAINS FAVOR

Washington, Jan. 8.—Helium, one of the young at members of a large family of gases, but very useful to Uncle Sam because it lifts balloons, is looking to its laurels. Hydrogen, an older brother, is returning to favor.

Because of its high inflammability, hydrogen left a quality to be desired which helium was subsequently found to possess. Helium, however, was accordingly cast as opposed to the ahort shape of its rival, and it was expensive to manufacture.

Recently the experience of a British dirigible visited by lightning during a storm led to the conclusion that hydrogen was more to be respected than declined. If they could eliminate an additional hazard that of the combustable fumes generated by the gasoline motors, engineers believe they could establish hydrogen as premier for gas-bag inflation. Development of an engine utilizing crude oil for fuel has accomplished their efforts.

PILE SUFFERERS

Can You Answer These Questions?

Do you know why ointments do not give you quick and lasting relief?

Why cutting and operations some times fail?

Do you know the cause of piles is internal?

That there is a stagnation of blood circulation in the lower bowel?

Do you know that there is a harmless internal remedy discovered by a Canadian and known as HEMROID, now sold by J. S. McKeown and druggists everywhere, that is unsanatced?

HEM-ROID banishes piles by restoring the cause, by toning blood circulation in the lower bowel. This simple home treatment has an almost unbelievable record for sure, quick and lasting relief to thousands of pile sick sufferers, and saves the needless pain and expense of an operation. Don't delay, Try HEM-ROID today It will do the same for you.

SNOW - DRIVEN STATES TO KEEP THE ROADS OPEN

Chicago, Jan. 8.—Virtual armies of men, batteries of powerful motor driven plows, and long lines of "snow fence" have been mobilized in the fight of mid-west states to keep their highways open the year 'round.

Increased bus traffic and the insistent demands of automobile owners for clear roads is chiefly responsible.

MILES OF SNOW FENCE

Minnesota, this year will spend nearly $500,000 in "snow fighting." "Cats" and "sweeps" along the state's 7000 miles of trunk highways are guarded by 1,500,000 feet of snow fence, 600 patrolmen, and 150 snow plows. The line of fence is placed a few feet back from the roads and protects the snow from drifting over the highways.

Sixteen district headquarters direct the operations of the state patrolm n, who work on a patrolling basis. Within an hour after a highway is reported in danger of being blocked, equipment for mile can be rushed to the threatened spot.

"Snow fighting' cost Minnesota $300,000 last year and highway officials expect the cost to run close to $500,000 this year.

HOLD BACK DRIFTS

More than 900,000 miles of fence are constructed to hold back the drifts among Nebraska's roads. In the farming area of the state, giant power "V's" clear sidewalks and pavements.

Wisconsin's snow plows work on two principles; one pushes the snow to one side of the road, while the other carries the snow away by centrifugal force. "Rotary blade" plows are rapidly used in the states where the drifts are not too deep. That type of plow has been successful against 18-inch accumulations.

SHAVING MUG PASSES OUT AS SOCIAL REGISTER

Kansas City, Jan. 8.—Back in the days when Ward McAllister's "400" was the only recognized social register in the East, the gaddish West had its own way of indentifying the socially elect. Strange by enough, its passing has been almost unmarked.

In the so-called biffy 'nineties the register of eligible males in most middle western towns was to be found on the carefully guarded shelves of tonsorial establishments. Here, one saw on display, private shaving mugs of the town's prominent, and across each was the owner's name, usually in elaborate script.

HELD "RANK" ON SHELF

The town barber frequently possessed the quiet, unpretentious mug. It had but one outer position on the top shelf. Possibly on the second shelf, just below, sat the mug of the town banker in all its pristine glory, ornately gilded and colored. From there, the mugs of other prominent citizens—the merchants, the hotel proprietor, and son on—stretched on either side. It was a procession as well as display—by rank.

But now like Ward McAllister's little private mugs are passing. New fandangoes which eliminate the shaving mug altogether have come into their own.

Some Barbers Blame Women

Some Kansas City barbers blame women's invasion of the shops. Others declare that masculine patrons are not as particular now and do not always visit the same shop as they were wont to do when business was transacted in more leisurely fashion. Still others scout the need for the mugs had passed; that they came into being as the result of someone's belief they would be more sanitary.

BELLE THEATRE

Frank Lloyd just can't help being modest. Notwithstanding the fact that he has made what is acknowledged as the most magnificent productions ever brought to the screen, "The Eagle of the Sea," which comes to the Belle Theatre tonight, this noted director refuses to accept any glory for its success.

On the day shooting and editing had been completed, the picture was viewed by R. P. Schulberg, associate Paramount producer, and a projection room at Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's West Coast Studio. So enthusiastic was Mr. Schulberg over the photoplay that he immediately wired Lloyd, congratulating him on his work. "The Eagle of the Sea" is what I have just seen "The Eagle of the Sea." To my mind, it is one of the greatest pieces of work you or any other man has ever accomplished."

And Lloyd sent the wire back with a note that said—

"I am afraid your secretary made a mistake in addressing the note. It should have been sent to Florence Vidor and Ricardo Cortez."

"The Eagle of the Sea" was adapted from "Captain Salvarc," a novel by Charles Henry Jarvis, which features Miss Vidor and Cortez are featured. Julien Josephson prepared the screen play.

REGENT THEATRE

Charlie Chaplin is leading "A Dog's Life" to the tune of giggles, chuckles, laughs and roars at the Regent Theatre from this week. The great comedian with his tried equipment and shuffling walk was never funnier than in his Prima Donna role. His sounds of merriment are any criterion.

It's a big double feature programme and an additional feature. "Sir Lumberjack" starring Lefty Flynn is being presented. The crashing of giant trees falling before the blades of the woodsmen; the desecration of vast stretches of beautiful forest land; the fury of an east coast in autumn and a love story as sweet as orange blossoms kissed by a Californian sun are highlights of Lefty Flynn's rugged new melodrama of the north woods. "Sir Lumberjack" to be shown for three days commencing today at the Regent.

CAPITOL THEATRE

Lovers of good clean comedy are in for a treat tonight, Tuesday and Wednesday at the Capitol for the funniest comedy hit of the year is billed. It is entitled "Oh Baby" and is the latest Marcel Gurt production presented by Carle Laemmle. These names are sufficient indication of the treat in store. Here you may expect, and with such leading lights as Madge Kennedy, Little Billy and Creighton Hale starring it, there should be good. Adding realism to the feature is the appearance at the ringside of some of the famous pugilists of today in the persons of Joe Humphries, Sid Mercer, "Dugs" Baer, Damon Runyon, Graham McNamee, Frank O'Neill and others. You'll enjoy seeing these sporting men you've all heard about.

Professional vaudeville. Pathe News and a good comedy, together with the Capitol Symphony Orchestra will complete what promises to be an outstanding bill at the Capitol for three days commencing tonight.

URGES ENDOWMENTS TO MAKE IDEAS PRACTICAL

Detroit, Jan. 7.—Endowments granting the dreamer an opportunity to put ideas into practical use are suggested by Dr. Leon D. Upson, chairman of the advisory committee of the bureau of governmental research.

"Men like Andrew Carnegie, John D. Rockefeller, James J. Hill, Duke and scores of others have left us institutions," he said. "Now let someone leave us a few millions to be used in putting ideas into practical use."

Dr. Upson would have endowments that permit the free play of scientific reasonsulation in trying out new theories of government and analysis of methods by men who have expert knowledge would be divorced from political expediency or financial necessity."

Bakersfield, Cal., Jan. 7—School. A languorous spring afternoon. Clock standing still. Up goes a small hand. Lips murmur, "teacher can I go home. I'm sick."

Nothing like that happens in the Oildale grammer school. A miniature hospital containing a bed, fire and kitchenette, table and medicine cabinet, including castor oil is maintained by the teachers and pupils.

An average of six children a day are treated in the hospital. Girl pupils are appointed to act as nurses. Health charts on each student are maintained and those who are under-nourished or under-weight receive special attention from a physician.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

Saturday afternoon saw a number of the handball devotees in action at the Y Gym and as a result three games were played off in the singles tournament now in progress. In two first round games played A. L. Sills won two straight games from D. W. Munnings, 21-7; 21-5. In the set the loser entered, having had very little practice previous to the game. Another singles game which provided some fast hand ball was the set between V. Wolr and S. Nurse. Weir won both games of the set but the scores were close, the first being 21-18 and the second 21-20. It looked very much as if a third game would have to be played as Nurse held the lead throughout the greater part of the second game, but near the finish, Wolr by a determined effort, snatched the game from the fire, as it were, and thereby concluded the set. Playing a second round game against J. Alexander, V. Weir was returned winner of the set by the scores of 21-10 and 21-15. Alexander held a considerable lead at one stage in the second of the two games played but Weir refused to accept defeat and after trailing for over half of the fixture, swept through for a win by a three point margin.

FIGHT FEATURES N.H.L. GAME ON SATURDAY NIGHT

St. Pats Come to Life With Another Win Over N. Y. Americans

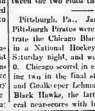

Montreal, Jan. 10.—Written apologies from an over-wrought spectator who struck Hec Kilrea, Ottawa substitute; match penalties and automatic suspensions—the first of the National Hockey League season—for Aurel Joliat and Hooley Smith for a two-round bout which threatened to develop into an affair of serious proportions until Chief of Police Belanger suddenly ended the two game cracks off with a warning that they would be landed somewhere else than in a penalty box if they did not desist, and a 2-0 triumph for the Ottawa Senators over the Canadiens were the direct results of the explosive hockey staged at the Forum between the two teams Saturday night.

Twelve thousand ardent hockey fans, keyed to a high pitch in anticipation of a thrilling contest between the professional hockey rivals, were sent into a nerve-wracked state by the wildly exciting play and the nine minutes which were added as the tension broke and both players and spectators gave way to their feeling in two disgusting exhibitions.

Toronto, January 10.—St. Patricks of Toronto, playing in whitewash fashion throughout the entire game, defeated the colorful New York Americans at Arena Gardens Saturday evening in a stirring Hockey League fixture, by a score of three goals to one. It was the second consecutive victory for the "Irish" and it marked the first time this season that they have extended a winning streak past one game. On the other hand the defeat of the Americans was the first they have suffered in their last seven engagements.

The victory of the locals came after one of the most dazzling exhibitions of the winter pastime witnessed here this season. St. Pats gained the lead in the first period after four minutes and six seconds of play, when a three-man thrust with Bailey as the pivot, resulted in Carson taking the former's pass to backhand a snap shot past Forbes.

Boston, Jan. 10.—The Montreal Maroons were back in form Saturday night to defeat the combination Boston Bruins in a National Hockey League fixture here, 3-0. Maroons scored in every period and were invisible on defense. Their victory gives them a two-in-one

ALBERT COLLEGE CLASH WITH CAMPBELLFORD INTERSCHOLASTIC GAME

Albert College will open the Interscholastic season on Wednesday night of this week with the Campbellford High School team. The students have a fast team and have been practicing faithfully ever since the arena opened. Practically every one of the Tri-color players have had experience with Intermediate Junior on High School teams and will give the Campbellford team a real battle.

Coach Hardy Hill had nearly twenty candidates to choose a team from when the call was issued.

Chint Ide of Oakwood Collegiate Institute is one of the main prospects. Bond who starred for the football team will team up on the defence. He also played for Oakwood last year.

Campbellford are coming down with a strong aggregation. The management of the Albert team are making arrangements for University of Toronto school and Victoria College teams to play here in exhibition games in the near future.

Wednesday night's game will start promptly at 8.15.

CHURCH HAS EARPHONES

Walsall, England, Jan. 8.—Earphones for deaf members of the congregation of the Aldewell Street Wesley church here have been supplied by the wife of a former minister. A microphone and supplier have been fitted to the pulpit and visitors whose hearing is defective are escorted to the front pews where earphones are hanging.

CHURCH HAS EARPHONES

Pittsburgh, Pa., January 10.—The Pittsburgh Pirates were unable to penetrate the Chicago Black Hawk defence in a National Hockey League contest Saturday night, and were defeated 4 to 0. Chicago scored in every period adding two in the final stanza. Dye Irvin and Coach Cyper Lehman starred for the Black Hawks, the latter directing several near-scores with brilliant stops.

MAROONS MEET QUEENS TONIGHT

Students to Bring Same Team as Played Against McGill Friday Eve.

Queen's University lock horns with the Belleville Maroons at the arena tonight in what promises to be one of the best games of the current season. The students lost to McGill on Friday night by the close score of 3-2 and practically the same players will represent the Tricolor in tonight's game. That means that Eddie Thomas' crew will have their work cut out for them. Everyone of the visiting line-up are well-known puckaters and to this list may be added "Ollie" McKelvey, younger brother of the famous "Red".

The Royal Military College play in Cornwall tonight and if the cadets are lucky enough to take a fall out of Tilton and Co., the locals will be sitting pretty on top of the loop.

The seat sale has been going fast and fans who are fkeriner on standing room only are advised to be on deck real early.

The weather man has been kind and the teams will be given a fast sheet of ice.

The Queen's Intercollegiate players can play as much O.H.A. junior as they wish until their second intercollege game and after that they must play with one team or the other. Jan. March will face the puck promptly at 8.15.

The probable line-up:

Queen's		Belleville
Quinn	Goal	Bowen
Rooney	Defence	F. Goyer
Bellamy		Green
Lindsay	Centre	L. Goyer
Legon	Wings	Hagerman
Reid		Whalen
Boland	Subs	Frechette
McKelvey		Hibbard

"TOOTS" HOLWAY MAKES GOOD WITH STRATFORD

According to all reports from up Stratford way "Toots" Holway is certainly making good with the Nationals in the Canadien hockey league. "Toots" has went bad and Manager Eddie Gerard released him to the western team. He will get a chance to work there and there is no doubt but what it won't be long before he'll be back in the big-time circuit. Joe Brothers, manager of the Stratford team is regarded as one of the best-informed hockey men in the Province. Commenting on his work the Stratford Beacon-Herald says:—

"Toots" Holway on the Nationals defence was the most effective performer on the ice.

They were referring to the game between the Niagara Falls and Stratford teams when the latter were declared winner.

HOCKEY PLAYER FINED $100

Moose Jaw, Sask., January 10.—As a result of the mix-up between the Edmonton Eskimos and the Moose Jaw Maroons, held way through the overtime period of last Friday night's game, which ended in a three-goal all, Art Connolly, wing man of the Maroons, was fined $100 by the league president, W. F. Nickson, on Referee Carl Batteffe recommendation.

It was also intimated by President Seaborn that should Connolly hit his stick in an antagonistic manner again he will suffer suspension for the rest of the playing season.

The fine resulted from a fight on the ice between Connolly and Evans, of the Edmonton Eskimos in which the latter received a badly gashed ear, lacerated cheek and bruised nose from blows inflicted by Connolly.

HORNSBY'S CONTRACT

New York, January 10.— Rogers Hornsby today signed a two-year contract to play second base and captain the New York Giants. Terms were not announced, but the former St. Louis manager was given an increase over his Cardinal salary, which was $20,000 a year.

Hornsby, who piloted the St. Louis National League Club to a pennant and world championship, was traded to the Giants for Frank Frisch and Jimmy Ring when he could not reach a salary agreement with the St. Louis Club.

BEYOND ALL DREAMS

By Bertha M. Clay

Meanwhile, the man with the brutal voice had led off his idiot sister, and the crowd angered about the beautiful girl in the gray dress, eager to hear her name and learn her address.

A dozen Frenchmen began bowing to her, talking, and offering to roll a cigarette. She turned them all off.

"Excuse me, gentlemen, I beseech you," she said. "I came out when my governess was absent, for I had never been alone before in the streets of Paris, and the first person who accosted me was that ugly woman, who asked me to give her enough money to eat and drink, and she would tell me my fortune. I wish to know the future; who does not at seventeen? Then I followed the woman to the quay. I knowing nothing of Paris, and she, entering a small shabby hotel, called for roast meat and wine. When she had eaten the roast meat, and drank the wine, she began to tell my fortune. It was all nonsense; it was not like a fortune; it was rubbish, and I, taking out my watch to see the time, laid it on the table for a moment, and this wretch seized it, and ran out with it. I followed her, and struck her on the face, when she fell down in a fit, and this crowd gathered. Now you know the whole story."

The young lady spoke with confidence without a trace of maiden shame; still without any of that hateful boldness which makes even a beautiful woman odious in the eyes of a man with the perfect heart of mind of Renfrew.

Donald ventured to address the young damsel. He now stood close to her.

"Pardon, mademoiselle, I know where you reside. Allow me to lead you out of this crowd, and, if you will, to conduct you to the Hotel Charnettes by a near road, and without calling a cab, I think you will not fear to trust me."

Donald spoke in English. She stared at him in amaze.

"How did you know that I understood English?" she asked.

"Because your mother was English; besides, Poles and Russians of any rank usually speak English fluently; and then you have an English governess."

An amused twinkle shone in the bright, blue-grey eyes of the young lady.

"Ah!! then you know Miss Bateman? What a flirt the old Lord is—if she can get a chance. She would drag me to dance, or a pleasant party. Ma foi, I defy her—detest her! I have serious thoughts of pitching her, some fine morning, from the balcony of the Hotel Charnettes; but, if you will walk with me, mademoiselle, to the Rue des Arcades, and by a quiet road I shall be charmed to escape this crowd, and ever grateful to you."

"Do me the honor, then, to follow me."

He bowed; the young lady bent gracefully. Donald walked first, looking a little defiant at the crowd, in case any of them wished to molest the Princess Nicholine. But, somehow, the crowd was touched by her mingled courage and reticence, and they happened that with the exception of a few moments Renfrew was walking along a quiet old street in the Quartier Latin with the princess at his side.

CHAPTER IV.

THE MYSTERY DEEPENS

"Tell me how you know Miss Bateman?" said the Polish princess, in both commanding tones.

"Your commands, of course, are law," replied Renfrew. "I am an inhabitant of the Hotel Charnettes, and I dined with Miss Bateman this evening. She told me that the Princess Ariel was her pupil; and I had seen you in the Louvre this afternoon and again, about an hour and a half ago. I saw you when the door of your apartment opened to admit your house, Marie; then, just now, I at once recognized you. Who could see you once, and fail to do so?"

Donald was no longer dreaming; he was thoroughly disenchanted. The dream-maiden, beautiful beyond compare in feature, complexion, and tout ensemble, had nevertheless fallen from the high pedestal on which she had placed her; no longer even a fitting model for the gentle and lovely Desdemona of his imagination, because he felt that he had been quite mistaken in supposing such lofty qualities to be the characteristics of this mocking maiden, who laughed out only at the bold, bright, who talked of Miss Bateman, and appeared to relish the recollection that she had slapped the face of the thirsty woman.

"Ah, I am not an ugly personage, now am I, from a point of view?" said the Princess Ariel; "thus I fear I may be easily recognized by some of those very ugly Persecutors in the crowd. Still, I shall prevail, I suppose, either with or less I am accompanied by Miss Bateman or Marie. And as to, I think of Miss Bateman as a fit companion if she knew that I had exchanged words with you. Do me a favor, then, if you please, and let me, for the present, be known as Marie, and indeed, at all times by none respect that title, our most simple for meeting, may be as if it had never been. It is sad and sad to meet painful reminders of the episode of to-night were to me."

"It would, undoubtedly, be undesirable in any way to annoy you. At the same time, if you could even condescend to allow me to take a sketch of your head! If you would come into my studio with Miss Bateman—"

"Ah, you are an artist. How superb! I forgive much. Ha, ha, ha!"

Her harsh rang loud loud and clear down the dark street.

"Yes, I will come costumed; but not with Miss Bateman. She must not be in the secret. How shall I costume?"

"As Marie Queen of Scots, when in a riant mood when young and gay, and, if there can be found, a dark dress of that Catherine de Medici period, so sad a home for her."

"Done—I will come," cried the girl, in a riant mood when young and gay, and, if there can be found, a dark dress of that Catherine de Medici period, so sad a home for her."

"Done—I will come," cried the girl, She had not one atom of what is called refinement in her whole organization; Renfrew was certain of it, and he had thought her so divine. How could he have so mistaken the expression of this beautiful creature? Mary of Scotland, pound, merry, gleeful, at the French Court, before even the shadow of love or of grief had crossed her path? Yes, this lovely, laughing Ariel might make a charming Scottish queen. And now they were in the gloomy Rue des Arcades and close to the Hotel Charnettes.

"We must not enter together, the young lady said to Donald; "at least, we must not appear to. I will go on first, then I met Bateman on the stairs. She would eat me. Don't you think so?"

She gave him no time to answer, but shot ahead of him and entered the wide open door of the hotel.

Now there was no concierge at the Charnettes. When anybody wished to know who was in or out of the different boarders, they had to go and ring the bell on the first floor, and ask of Madame Andell, who, by referring to the key on the peg, was able to say who was out and who was in. Ariel, Princess Nicholine, ran up-stairs, then mounted to the second floor, then paused a minute to laugh and to look around.

Renfrew, tall and stately handsome, stood by the dark staircase watching her. She scarred her hand, then pulled the bell vigorously.

In a moment it was opened, and Renfrew saw Marie's white cap, round face, round eyes, hands uplifted in anger in amaze, in surprise. He heard an exclamation pass the woman's lips, which sounded like the word "disgrace!"

BRIDGE STREET LEAGUES STAGE FINE PAGEANT

Talented Young People Offer Artistic Treat—Beautiful Music

"I Bring You Glad Tidings", the beautiful pageant put on by the Junior and Intermediate Leagues of Bridge Street United Church was one of the most ambitious and successful amateur productions ever presented in the city. On the Sunday School rooms of Bridge Street were crowded to capacity last evening for the affair. The boys and girls taking part each exhibited considerable histrionic talent, splendid training for the hands of Mrs. Fowlie who is Superintendent of the League and a close knowledge of Bible history.

The Play

The Pageant opened with the story of the world when it was in darkness, before the tidings of the Savior had arrived. Miss Barbara representing the World in darkness, was very clever and as the pageant developed "Joyful Tidings" (Miss Eleanor Malott) brought the glad news that the Redeemer was to be born. Mary was impersonated by Miss Florence Barber who met every demand of the difficult stage presence in a most sympathetic manner. With remarkably clever stage effects and costumes, the last wearing a clever and appropriate costume the pageant told the story of the Birth of Christ very beautifully introducing the Biblical characters of nineteen hundred years ago, and sweetly sung carols and solos.

The Cast

Those taking part were:

Angels—Dorothea Stewart, Helen Ackerman.

Prophet—Arthur Stewart.

Shepherds—Wilbur Countryman, (Abner). Ralph Shaw, Kenneth Munnings (Omri), Charlie Barber (Young Shepherd), Archie Boyd (Levi), Ernest Moult (Bildad), C. Countryman (Old Shepherd of Nazareth).

MR. McMILLAN'S ADDRESS

In a brief and witty address, Mr. J. D. McMillan, District Superintendent who with Mrs. McMillan was an honored guest at the greeting, told of the plan of The Belleville district terminal taken in Canada. "It stands first, the men are the best and most efficient in Canada and many other places."

Canada", he said, and I have told this not only here but in Montreal and many other places. The speaker complimented splendid work and upon the success of the evenings installations and welcomed the visitors from out of the city who included Mrs. Flook, Mrs. Kirkum, Mrs. Webb, Mrs. Althouse, Mrs. Gilbe, Mrs. Hunt, Smith Falls; Mrs. Moss, Grey, Trenton; Mrs. Lemin, Mrs. Glide, Smith Falls; Mr. and Mrs. N. P. North and Mr. and Mrs. Yarrow were also honored guests.

The ladies served supper at 6 o'clock to the visitors.

TWO PRESENTATIONS

Following the installation ceremonies Mrs. Flood presented Mrs. Ruth Charlton with a Past Presidents pearl and Mrs. Lilian Jordan with a beautiful bouquet of carnations, the latter gift from the newly-installed officers as a token of their appreciation for Mrs. Jordan's services as convener of the social committee. To each presentation the recipients made a graceful reply.

The evening concluded with a dainty supper served to the trainmen and their friends after which a vote of thanks was unanimously passed by the B of R. T. and Ladies Auxiliary to all the visitors, wives and families and friends who had attended the successful function. During the evening it was decided to hold a bowling party during the coming week.

HORNSBY DENIES OWING GAMBLER $92,000 FOR ALLEGED RACE REBTS

St. Louis, Mo., January 11.—Denying that Rogers Hornsby, former Cardinal manager, owes a cent to Frank L. Moore, Cincinnati betting commissioner, William L. Fahey, Hornsby's attorney, today demanded that Moore furnish an itemized account of the $92,000 indebtedness which he alleges.

Moore asserted he had advanced money to Hornsby at various times to pay his debts and to make bets on horse-races. He exhibited cancelled cheques made payable to Hornsby and Mrs. Hornsby for amounts ranging from $4,000 to $12,000.

Hornsby admitted he had had numerous "transactions with Moore" but vowed him nothing. He said he had frequently received tips from Moore on horse races, and he had both won and lost money on the tips.

TODAY'S THOUGHT

Learn to laugh. A good laugh is better than medicine. Learn to tell a story. A well told story is as welcome as a sunbeam in a sickroom. Learn to keep your troubles to yourself. The world is to busy to care for your ills and sorrows.

A TRAGIC HORROR

The disaster at the Laurier Palace picture theater in Montreal yesterday was the worst calamity of the kind that has ever happened in Canada. A picture film was being exhibited. It was of a character specially to attract young people, and the audience consisted largely of children, most of whom were in the balcony. From the balcony a stairway led direct to the ground outside, and this appears to have been the only mode of exit. A fire broke out in the theater. At first the audience showed no sign of panic, and most of the people present evacuated the building speedily and in an orderly manner. But as the children in the balcony were going out and the stairway-exit was crowded, the pressure from behind caused some in front to stumble; there was a jam and a pause, and a panic followed. The human mass on the stairway became so tightly jammed that it was for some minutes impossible to move it, and in those few terrible minutes the life was crushed out of 76 children ranging in age from five to sixteen. Twenty thirty and forty others were injured and removed to hospitals.

How narrow and steep the fatal stairway was is not mentioned in the despatches. Probably it was not broad enough for safety and was too steep. It is a significant fact that a year ago the exits of this theater were found upon inspection to be inadequate and the fire department's building inspector ordered alterations designed to make the building safer. His orders were complied with on that occasion. He says that the building was also recently inspected, but fails to say that any further change were ordered. If there had been, we may be sure the inspector would have said so. If, therefore, the stairway exit from the balcony was inadequate, the responsibility would seem to rest upon the inspector rather than upon the theater management.

Montreal's dreadful calamity should have the effect of forcing official attention to the exits of all places of popular resort throughout the country. Public authorities everywhere should be compelled to realize that it is their duty to protect human life by seeing that every building to which people resort in large numbers is so equipped with exits that an audience can get out quickly, easily and safely in the event of sudden emergency.

VOLUNTEER WORK

Over in Great Britain they have an enthusiastic establishing volunteer organizations to look after anything which they think the Government of the country or private individuals may not look after properly. Things like the Navy League, the Overseas League, the British Empire League, and other organizations, political or social, spring up and flourish in a surprising way. Some of us perhaps inclined to laugh at these volunteer efforts but they probably accomplish a good deal more than they are often given credit for.

After the recent Imperial Conference in London, considerable touring was done by the various Prime Ministers of the Overseas Dominions. Our own Mr. Mackenzie King did not do a great deal. We think the only city he visited outside of London was Edinburgh. But the Prime Ministers of Australia, New Zealand, and Newfoundland did considerable touring. The liberal suspicion probably was and is that this touring was either an idea of the Imperial Government, or of the Prime Ministers themselves. It was neither. It was the work of the British Empire League. This body planned all the trips and paid all the expenses, except the expenses of local receptions. This fact was not publicly announced; there was no fuss made about it; and it was done at a cost of some $20,000 to $25,000, put up by the British Empire League, secured by a special private subscription of 15 which several hundred public-spirited members of the league contributed.

The touring that was done included visits to Edinburgh, Glasgow, Sheffield, Manchester, Axminster, Cardiff, Dublin, Belfast and Liverpool. At all these places some or other of the overseas Prime Ministers received hearty welcomes, were conducted through scenes of the principal industries made speeches which must have attracted considerable attention, and accepted a lot of space in the newspapers. This was very valuable work for the British brotherhood, and the British Empire League did a very fine thing in promoting it.

NEW BUSINESS

The progressive business firm finds that it needs to be constantly making new friends and creating a new circle of customers. If it just depends on existing those who have previously bought its goods it is likely to see its trade diminished. Population changes more rapidly now than formerly, and if a firm has a certain list of customers this year, it can't expect as the result of all the changes that naturally occur, that a considerable proportion of those customers will not be on the list in a year or two.

Also people are changeable in their habits, and unless a very energetic effort is made to hold old customers by advertising, a lot of them will go elsewhere attracted by the various inducements that are offered them.

People are not much inclined as they were often formerly, just to trade at one place or a few places right along year after year. They are on the alert for the idea, if some firm seems to be doing a little harder than its competitors to please the people, and no feeling of habit or sentiment of loyalty is apt to hold them, if they think they can do better by going elsewhere for something they want.

By an active campaign of advertising a firm can keep making new business friends to make up for those who drift elsewhere. It does not take elaborate expensive to win such new customers in these times.

People are ready to go to any piece of business where the spirit of enterprise and bustle seems to prevail. A store that makes it a regular practice to advertise, will have a constant stream of inquirers entering its doors, who will more than make up for old customers who go elsewhere.

A SUMMER HOTEL IN JANUARY

(Arthur L. Lipsmann in the New York Sun).

Yes, even now, while winds of winter wail,
The ghosts of summer boarders haunt your halls,
The symptomatic dowager, the Soprano whose unearthly caterwauls
Profaned the hallowed silence of the night,
The mamma with a daughter come of age
Still used to wander through your rooms, despite
The winds of winter howling in their rage.

Across your empty porches now there sweep
Those winds of winter singing with refrains;
Around your silent balconies they woop
And hurl themselves against your window panes.
In Corbyanite revelry they shout, —
They scamper through the silent, snowy glades!
Ah, soon enough they will be put to rout
Before the doughty Rocking Chair Brigades.

COMMUTATION UNLIKELY

Ottawa, Jan. 11.—While no official announcement has been made, it is considered unlikely that the Minister of Justice will interfere with the execution of the death sentence passed upon John Barthy, Hamilton, Ont., murderer. Barthy will be executed unless there is some interference.

DAIRY EXPERT PLAYS PART OF ARCHITECT, BUILDS HOUSE OF FOOD

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 11.—(By Canadian Press)—Miss Helen Campbell, of the Dominion Government's Dairy Department has been playing architect and builder. Her materials have been all sorts of good foods and she has made of them a little house that children think is the most wonderful thing in the world and before which the grown-ups stand fascinated. It is of "prince"—rolled oats, reinforced smoothly over a plain wooden foundation; the opened shutters are of brown bread, and the window sills of date. The house is adorned with Graham wafers, and the chimneys that rise at either end are bottles of good milk; the path to the hall door is of unpolished rice, bordered with nuts of various kinds; the pillars that uphold the porch are of macaroni, and the staircase of cheese. Curtains are made of lettuce leaves.

ARCHDEACON ACCEPTS

Vancouver, Jan. 11.—Venerable Archdeacon R. J. Renison, M.A., D.D., rector of the Church of the Ascension, Hamilton, Ont., has been offered and accepted the call to Christ Church, Vancouver, it was officially announced last evening.

GREAT INTERNATIONAL HIGHWAY TO LINK UP CANADA AND U. S.

Washington, D.C., Jan. 11.—Congress was asked today to authorize negotiations looking toward a great international highway linking the capitals of Canada, United States and the seventeen republics in Central and South America after the proposal had been presented at the White House.

Senator Cameron, Republican, Arizona, who discussed the plan with President Coolidge, introduced the measure in the Senate and like Representative McLeod, Republican, Michigan, who offered it in the House, viewed the highway of vast importance in developing new commercial markets and contributing to the good will between the new world nations.

The bill carries no appropriation but provides salaries and expenses for a three-member commission which would investigate the best connecting points between the various countries. In addition to the three appointed members, the President's Cabinet would serve ex-officio.

Senator Cameron represented the president as interested in the proposal especially that part of the highway which would connect Canada through the United States and Mexico, with the Guatemala frontier. He favored advancing the road until the capital of Argentina is reached.

"The President," he said, "holds a high appreciation of the prosperity to follow the advantages of rapid transportation by aircraft and automobile."

DEATH PENALTY

Michigan Likely to Restore Capital Punishment

Detroit, Mich., Jan. 11.—Members of the Michigan state legislature, alarmed at the steadily mounting homicide list are busy in preparation of bills providing for capital punishment instead of the existing life term now provided for those convicted of murder. Defeat of a similar move at the last session was sufficiently close to give grounds for belief that the opposition manifested at that time will have been largely overcome because of the realization, even among advocates of the death penalty, that drastic steps are necessary to curb the shooting down of bandits men and women upon the streets of the state.

Adoption of the lethal gas chamber method is referred to as the most probable system of executing. Recent hangings in Chicago and other cities, where the criminals died by strangulation, make it almost certain that the rope and gallows will not be introduced into this state.

The death penalty bill will first be presented in the senate, according to present arrangements. This move, it is believed, will act as a sentimental leverage in the house, where previous capital punishment bills have met defeat.

BENEFITS DURING 1926 AMOUNTED TO $5,812,000

Workman's Board Reports Increase in Accidents

Toronto, Jan. 11.—Victims of some 9,916 industrial accidents in Ontario during the past year received benefits under the workmen's compensation act of $5,821,251. This total stands some $300,000 higher than last year's total of $5,565,43, while the number of accidents also shows an increase over last year's figure of 60,021, total accidents during the year numbered 460, an increase of 35 over those occurring in 1925.

Details of the operations of the compensation board during the past twelve months were made available yesterday by Chairman V. A. Sinclair of the compensation board. The statistics indicate a year of record activity and utility upon the part of the compensation law. Daily payments have averaged 66, in comparison with 646 during 1925, and the daily total disbursed has averaged $1700. The number of mail, new handled per day totals between 3000 and 6000 letters and the number of claims handled daily averages 225.

IS A RECORD

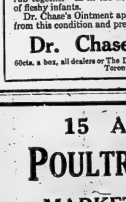

One of the features of the year's work is that the number of accidents reported constitute a record in the history of the legislation. Investigation of reports show that a great many minor accidents have been reported involving medical aid only, indicating that many cases formerly dealt with as first aid cases are now being reported for medical aid purposes. The amount awarded for medical aid during the year totals $988,485, in contrast to $875,836 thus expended in 1925.

During the year allowance has been added to the list of industrial diseases and considerable expenditures have been made on account of such cases, resulting in the collection of a considerable amount from those engaged in active mining operations. Hope is expressed by the compensation board chairman that lucrefater costs in this department will be materially lessened, due to increased precautions applied the district in the mines and to more rigid medical examination both before and during employment. Compensed air or caisson disease has also been added to the list for which compensation is awarded, due to deep water work which is being carried on in Toronto.

No work at the board is declared to have been largely increased during the year by the greater number of accidents which have been handled. Very slight staff increases have been declared to have been required to handle the additional work.

Keep Baby's Skin Soft as Velvet
Prevent and Relieve Eczema

Mrs. Albert Bishop, 38 Lakeville St., Amherst, N.S. writes:—"In one week my little baby was entirely relieved of eczema by the use of two boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment. He had sores all over his face."

EVERYWHERE Dr. Chase's Ointment is known and appreciated by mothers who have with gratitude witnessed the benefit it has brought to their suffering children.

Chafing and cracking of the skin is often the beginning of eczema. The trouble develops where two surfaces of skin rub together—as in the neck, armpits or between the legs of flabby infants.

Dr. Chase's Ointment applied after the bath brings relief from this condition and prevents eczema.

SLOW BUT SURE

Petersboro, Jan. 11.—Justice came slow but sure to a local resident who stole an overcoat from another man at a dance held in the city during February last year. After stealing the overcoat the prisoner absconded, to parts unknown, returning to his native heath on Saturday and being apprehended by the police shortly after his arrival. He pleaded guilty and was remanded for sentence.

ON THE MAT

Kingston, Jan. 11.—The Board of Police Commissioners was called to meet this afternoon at 2 o'clock to deal with complaints were made about their conduct while on duty.

LIVESTOCK NEGLECTED

Kingston, Jan. 11.—The inspector of the Humane Society came upon a very peculiar case near Sevley's Bay the latter part of last week, where the stock of a farmer was being kept in a barn, which had no roof and the animals were not being taken care of properly. The man was a cripple and could not take proper care of his stock, being alone on the farm and the Society required him to get the cattle and keep the horses in a better stable. His swine will likely be sold later.

BODY FOUND

Belleville, Jan. 11.—The worst fears of relatives and friends that Mrs. Albert De Bruge had met her life in the fire which destroyed the De Bruge farm residence on Saturday morning were realized that afternoon shortly after three o'clock when her charred body was found by a small party of searchers, led by Chief of Police William Burke, beneath the crumbled and still-smouldering ruins of the burned building.

ROTARIAN SPEAKER

Petersboro, Jan. 11.—Rotarian Lou Potvin, who was the representative of the Petersboro Rotary Club at the convention of Rotary international at Denver last summer, was the speaker at today's luncheon of the local club, and his glowing description of the trip taken by the delegates following the convention, left his hearers wishing that they had all attended the Denver gathering.

Rotarian Potvin stressed the good fellowship who participated in the trip and paid a compliment to the organizing efforts of Hart Seeley under whose direction the tour was made.

BELLEVILLE MAROONS WIN FROM QUEEN'S IN ONE-SIDED GAME—"GILLY" GOYER BAGS FIVE GOALS

Thomas' Crew Smother Students Queen's Never Dangerous

Belleville Intermediates playing heads-up, defensive and offensive hockey disposed of the Queen's outfit in easy fashion before a large crowd at Arnott's arena last evening by a score of 6-0. The Presbyterians were never in the front forth the time the first gong was sounded and the Maroons simply walked over their weaker rivals in every period.

The score just shouts indicates the margin that the boquetels had over the students.

The tricolor on last night's showing displayed nothing of the spectacular character and will remain one of the great setters of the group unless they can be bolstered in at least three positions. However, no credit should be detracted from the local team in their win. They displayed the dashing, strong brand of hockey, only the best of the current season and were all over their opponents from bell to bell. It was by long odds the finest showing they have made this season and after their brilliant game of last evening will there a score into the page of both the Cornwall and Kingston teams, who are regarded as the class of the "Big Six" teams.

A fast sheet of ice was provided for the students and the cash customers were given plenty of clever hockey. Little ice in the final game marred an otherwise perfect exhibition. During the major part of the route it was clean hockey and the fans left the Dull but Ice-box fully repaid.

Lou Mason who was billed to appear at the helm of referee was forced in the last minute to turn down the engagement, but "Billy" Hewitt made no mistake in selecting Mr. J. ("Mike") Riordon to fill the author of the "Pick and Shovel" column's shoes. "Mike" was on top of every play and at off-side he it only three inches was called back. And for those who were inclined to be a bit hasty may be had a place for them and their over-wrought systems were given a chance to cool off in the penalty box, otherwise known as the lockers. And the gray-headed sport scribe and official was none too lenient in dealing with the offenders as was evidenced in the last period when "Red" Legon and "Bill" Green were each sentenced to serve five minutes for mixing things a little too freely. All in all he kept things well in hand and will be welcomed back to Belleville at any future date.

The Queen's teams were inclined to bought at centre ice, mid-passes and short wide, all of which are supposed to be left out of the picture in a hockey game. They were literally made to look foolish by the clever Belleville forwards at times. Two or three times they showed flashes of good hockey in spasms but for the most part it was of the mediocre variety which would not many stick in Camp No. 1.

At different stages of the game "Benny" Morris was bombarded with a volley of shots from the Belleville sticks but the portly Queen's net custodian kept the score within reason through his smart work. Although two or three goals scored against him should have been easy stops.

"Gilly" Goyer was in tip-top form and gathered five counters, himself, half of the goals scored by the home team. Besides this he was partially responsible for the chalking up of the other one. "Gilly" played a perfect game at centre ice and his stick-handling and "in the hole" work was pretty to watch at times. "Gilly" is adding to his bag of tricks and his all-round game is better than ever before. His ability to stage an overtime in snaring the puck from the Queen's players and worming his way in for the shot is also one worthy of note and there was no comparison between the two although Reid was cap. of the Kingston team. Goyer was fast on his feet and threw his body around the rings around him. This same boy is unselfish with the puck and in fact the whole team was passing the game with cohesion and timeliness. The redressed Legon played a smart game but spoiled it by being into a fit of anger in the final stanza for which he paid in the timer's coop. Legon worked himself fairly into shape last night and scored miles but his efforts went for naught, when he struck the strong Belleville defence.

"Red" is a pretty stick-handler but his shots were being driven on both sides of the net. He was Queen's best marksman.

Morris in the Kingstonian's net was handed plenty of hard shots to handle in the first very poor support by the men in front of him. The Maroon sweep in two and three abreast and set up some slam bin plays in chance whatever to effect the saving of a goal. He has a good eye and picked off so long bar shots with the greatest of ease. He had dame luck on his side two or three times when the rubber careened off the goal posts.

The Belleville defence pair, Green and Goyer were easily the best to date Goyer was possibly the star of the left, and a couple of stiff, body-check from this burly defence man zaps the puck out of the danger zone. Green was steering the invaders off into the corners all evening and goals can't be scored there.

"Soup" was kept off the tally sheet only after the hardest of luck once especially when he was right through only to have his shot hit the goal post.

Although Green isn't the human "freight train," that "Soup" is he knows how to use his body and weight to good advantage. He and "Red" Legon had a couple or disputes but settle whiled were finished with the timers.

Bowen was handed plenty of work and he did it well. "Shorty" as usual is one of the best goalies in the loop and he has certainly earned his title, as to date only three goals have been scored against him since he took his place. He loses no time in batting the puck aside after a shot and gives the invading forwards no chance to bang in the rebound. Bowen has an eagle eye in his head and can gauge the long shots with accuracy Lou Whalen and Hagerman on the wings were in great form. The latter was rewarded fifty two goals and that former with the same number. Both boys stuck to their positions and played bang-up hockey and allowed the students little chance to break away. They kept their well-bottled up in their own end of the ice during eighty per cent. of the time and allowed them little chances to get into Belleville territory.

The Maroons are well fortified in the net and substitute with Frechette and Hibbard playing the roles. Both of them are capable relief men and can replace any man on the team without any noticeable amount of weakness. "Bunny" worked tirelessly and drove more than one stasher at the Presbyterians net. "Bunny" should have had at least two counters but for the work of Morris.

Hibbard's goal three minutes before the final bell was one of the prettiest pieces of work completed during the entire fracas.

"Benny" Wright on the visitors defence drew an unusual amount of comment with his speedy skating. Mayor and Grimmes accounted for the two goals for the students.

"Billy" Hughes was rolling more orders to his proteges every minute and laid down the law to them between periods but they were not successful in coping with the assault of the Maroons.

Cornwall continued their up-hill climb by defeating the R. M. C. team last night. But the cadets did exceptionally well to hold the fast skating Factory Town team to the low score of 7-4. Any team that can score four goals against Flinn in Cornwall or anywhere else must be reckoned with.

The Cornwall team handled Brockville at the Jock Harty and the race goes merrily on with Ralph Tilton and his speed boys on Friday's ice card for the league game here yet this season. Joe Smith and company only beat Brockville by one goal, 3-1 in Brockville and they showed that Brockville must surely have been very bad on their own ice on Friday night, but when the same team blanked them 7-1.

1st Period

Hagerman batted in the first goal on a rebound two minutes after play started. "Daw" hurt his knee when he fell, but returned shortly when Legon came in from the wing. Morris saved on Frechette's long drive. Whalen came through after a short rest. Legon beat Hagerman's game to drive it home for number two. Bowen had a narrow escape on a long one. "Gilly" missed a pass and he set on a lone effort for the third counter. Legon got through and Bowen batted it down.

"Gilly" sailed to the goal mouth but Whitton tripped him and saved a sure goal. He was penalized and "Gilly" drove the counter's pass in front of the net, a moment later. "Daw" Whalen got number four when the goalie failed to hold Legon's long drive one in from centre ice that Bowen didn't see. "Soup" smiled down but the shot was his when "Frankie" came to save! "Gilly" made it 5-1 for Belleville. Queen's were shooting from centre ice and "Bunny" Frechette on his own pants but Rodden called him back. Hibbard went off when he fell Grimmes was penalized for body-checking outside the blue-line.

Belleville opened an onslaught on the "Queen's end and Morris was called upon several times to save. Belleville went down three abreast but Morris was there. "Daw" was penalized on a tripping and ave Morris no chance to save on a pretty goal. "Daw" on a back hand shot neatly scored again what is his hat trick he rose bar. Bowen made a fine save "Gilly" and Green went down but the former was robbed by Morris. Legon was given the gate. Morris was given plenty to do as there was no let up on the Maroons attack. "Gilly" picked up the corner on a shot from the wing and Whitton missed a pretty pass. The Maroons scored but it was off-side. Wright went to the goal mouth but down went to the ice and made about the nicest save of the night. Wright had only Bowen to beat but the latter subjugated him.

3rd Period

Hagerman scored his second counter on a pass in two minutes after play started. "Gilly" hit the post. Play ranged up and down the ice with Belleville the aced. Legon went down when he hi Green. On a second time Legon and Green had a set-to when the referee and Bill crashed, they came to fisticuffs and each was given five minutes of cool off. Bowen was there on two man combination play. "Soup" hit the post on a close one. Bellamy drove one at "Benny" but he took it in his chest. Green had hardly returned to the ice when he was given another two minutes for slashing. "Daw" Whalen drove for a minute for slashing, and Queen's with a 5-4 advantage fought like demons to cut down the lead but Bowen was their master. Green came back and broke up a three man combination which looked as though it might get through to the goal. Wright was given two minutes for bouncing "Bill" into the boards near centre ice. Green took another swipe at Hagerman and was again given two minutes. Morris came out to save two labelled goals. Legon was penalized for slashing. McDowell picked out an empty spot behind Bowen to count Queen's second and last counter. Hibbard scored to make the score board read 9-2 and Goyer netted his fifth counter with less than half a minute before the final gong sounded.

Hockey fans will be provided with plenty of entertainment in a week with the local intermediates playing another game at home and the junior playing one game away. On Friday, over the Cornwall team will be here to try for their third feat with the Maroons. They need Friday's game badly since they will be on the road regularly after for a tough game with the Frontenacs in Kingston. On their past record Cornwall are the team to beat, but Kingston's fine showing in Brockville last Friday night stamps them as a team to be feared. However, it has been stated that the Island Town Six were playing away below their usual form against the Frontenacs

Queen's after the game here last night will be sent back against the cadets at the Jock Harty rink on Wednesday night of this week.

The Juniors will visit Trenton on Wednesday night with a load of our goal to retain in a four game series in which the total goals decide the winner. The locals will have the advantage as far as weight is concerned, but there is some sweet looking youngsters greeting the line-up. The real position is sure to be well-looked after by the midget Latchford. The defence of Farrell and Mel-lewis are sure to be seen to better advantage after one or two practices. There isn't a weak link in the forward line although it is possible that Manager Thomas may give one or two of the latter aspirants a trial. The two Canningas, Johnny Baker and "Red" Doran are a fast working quartette if they are allowed to remain on the ice instead of spending a good portion of his time in the penalty box. Jack

Cornwall Beats Cadets, For Third Straight Win

Cornwall, Jan. 11.—Cornwall marched up its third straight victory in the intermediate series here last night when it defeated the R.M.C. cadets by a score of 7 to 4. On the evening's play which was remarkably clean, being free from any deliberate rough work, Cornwall certainly deserved the victory. The Cadets were slow getting started, and at the end of the first ten minutes Cornwall led by 2 to 0. Penny getting the first and Al. Costain a minute and a half. Walker and Clark tallied in a minute and 28 seconds, respectively, the period ending with all square.

For Cornwall, Gillie, Tilton And Costain and Penny starred while Kingsman, Clark and Walker stood out for the Cadets.

Plainsman Hills' Ontarios last night defeated Pictons, 5 to 3, in ten minutes overtime. The game was one of the most exciting seen here for some time.

The fans went wild, and in the first five minutes of overtime Finnegan scored himself with glory when he won the game with a waist-high shot after taking a pass from Hamilton. In the last five minutes old Farnigan changed the verdict when he checked up his third goal on the year.

COUNTESS DIES IN BERLIN ATTIC

Rose Zu Sternau and Hohenau Was Once Famous—Noted in 3 Capitals

Berlin, Jan. 10.—The Countess Rose zu Sternau and Hohenau, who was known as the Hungarian pompadour, and who 30 years ago had courtiers, politicians, and other monarchs at her feet, has just died in Berlin in great poverty.

She was the daughter of a small tradesman in a Hungarian town and became a shop girl in Budapest where her beauty attracted the notice of a rich financier, who provided generously for her. She was, however, bored away from her lover by a Hungarian politician who had himself fallen in love with her, and she was soon immersed in a sea of political intrigue.

Her beauty, charm of manner, and wit fitted her to be a political asset, and in that role she appeared in Vienna. There she had great success. Her hate, with flourishing carried fashions, became the talk of the town. She was always seen at the races and she knew herself the luxury of a racing stable, choosing rose and white as her racing colors.

Accused of Conspiracy

Married with the impoverished Baron Schonberge zu Sternau, a title and respectable her position. Her brilliant career was brought to an end by the publication of an article under the title "I Accuse" by a Budapest newspaper in 1906, which declared that two ministers had sent her to Vienna to intrigue against Colonel Stephan Tisza, the former premier.

The position of the baroness became as impossible in Budapest as it was in Vienna, where she was said to be acting as a spy for the Hungarian Government.

She settled in Berlin and married Count Wenzel zu Sternau and Hohenau, who was more interested in theosophy than in money. He died some years ago, and in spite of plucky attempts to retain her position the countess fell on hard times.

She was a frequenter in Berlin gaming clubs, but few people knew that the elderly woman who eagerly watched the fall of the cards had once dazzled three capitals with her beauty. She died in an attic without a friend.

FOUR THOUSAND FEEBLE MINDED PEOPLE IN MONTREAL SAY STATISTICS

Montreal, Que., Jan. 11—(By Canadian Press)—It is estimated by the Mental committee of the Social Service that there are four thousand feebleminded people in Montreal of whom approximately 1,200 are under the age of 15. Special instruction, the report contended was necessary in order to enable these below normal even to obtain the basic necessities of life. The old idea that abnormal children benefit by association in close with normal ones had been proved a failure, it was argued. They were apt to become discouraged, resentful and finally truants, and the normal or supernormal child suffered from the drag.

SCHOOL KIDS OF ATHELSTAN HAVE FINE PORTFOLIO

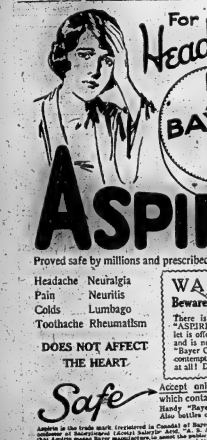

Montreal, Que., Jan. 11—(By Canadian Press)—Among all the portfolios depicting life in Canada, which various branches of the Junior Red Cross Society of the province of Quebec have recently prepared for distribution throughout the British Empire, the volume arranged by pupils of the Elm Tree School, Athelstan, is by far the best. This is the decision at which Mrs. R. H. Shaw, supervisor of juniors in this province has arrived.

In the little schoolhouse at Athelstan where the registration of scholars is but 12, and all but two of these youngsters not yet 12 years of age. Mrs. Shaw has located a Red Cross group with unusual knowledge of Canada's natural resources, and of the manners and customs of the people in different sections of the country. With the aid of this information the boys and girls have illustrated "Canada in Winter," "Canada in Summer," the making of maple sugar and the habits of birds. Some contributors to the volume, who have named themselves "Brooklet Beavers," have used their pants and skill in such ways as to portray realistically animals, common to the forests and streams of the Dominion. Whether this portfolio, which Mrs. Shawterms her prize volume will be sent to the headquarters of the Junior Red Cross in South Africa or Japan has yet to be decided.

HAMILTON MINISTERS RAISE OBJECTION TO SUNDAY SKATING

Hamilton, Ont., Jan. 11—(By Canadian Press)—Ministers and other citizens of this city are raising objection to Sunday skating having been approved by the park board of that city. Regret is expressed that official sanction has been given, although it is agreed that as long as Sunday golf is permitted it would be unfair to ban Sunday skating. There is no law against it and the Lord's Day Alliance has not taken steps to prevent it. But you could not skate at a rink where admission fee is charged, for such a rink would not be allowed to open—that would be business.

BEYOND ALL DREAMS

Another moment and the pretty violette young lady had passed into the apartment. The door was slammed Denaid felt as if he had just with a great loss, a severe disappointment. The dream-maiden no longer existed in her place was a beautiful and aristocratic maiden with a nameless love of adventure and pleasure—a lovely but unlovable creature.

"And she will marry wisely, doubtless" thought Renfrew, "when she has the chance in London next season."

Ariel Nicholine, princess by decent, sat on a large low ottoman in front of the fire, which blazed brightly in the low polished grate.

Outside the sun of Paris shone on teh snowy street, on the snowy roofs of the tall, gloomy opposite houses. Much snow had fallen during the night, and the wind was high and shrill. Still the sun shone, and the heaven was blue and clear.

Miss Bateman and her chance occupied the best rooms the best floor in the Hotel Charmettes. The furniture was not new, it dated back some score and a half years; but it had been handsome if its day, and even now the faded yellow velvet of the chairs and couches had a richness, and the rosewood tables and cabinet were of the best of that out-of-date wood. There was no carpet; only the floor was highly polished and there was a brilliant and large rug in front of the fireplace.

Miss Bateman lounged in a large chair; her hair was twisted up with pins preparatory to being frizzed for the evening. Miss Bateman wore a dressing gown and slippers—she has an unbelievable, in short; for during her long residence abroad Miss Bateman had fallen into many foreign customs, among others that of indulging in an easy and graceful undress during the morning hours, and also the little luxury of a cup of delicious coffee carried to her bedside every morning by Marie.

"Ah, I have it," cried Miss Bateman at length. "Here is the address in the Faubourg St. Germain, Rue de Varren—the Comtesse Lavalette, a sister-in-law of the prince, your poor papa; he would wish you—he would—have wished to call; and if she gives a ball during the winter there is nothing to prevent your going. You could not dance, of course, within six months only of your papa's death; but you would see something of the world, and in your proper sphere; it would be at least a little preparation for the whirl of fashion into which you must plunge next season in London, and you really have nothing of the world."

"I shall learn, I suppose, in time," said the young lady, in low, dreamy tones. She spoke English with the prettiest inflexion of foreign accent.

"You will learn; but it would be well to begin to learn something now. You will feel shy, amid the blaze and bustle of Mayfair."

"No; I have dwelt so long with the who are superior to me and my ways and to my thoughts, that I shall not feel shy. Are those fashionable Londoners to freighten me."

She smiled a smile which made her beauty entrancing, showing a gleam of pearl-white teeth small and even, and plantain e dimple in the damask cheek.

"To frighten you! Child, how old one make you to comprehend the ways of the world? You will find, Ariel, Miss Bateman continued, after a pause—that very few persons will comprehend your elevated way of looking at things. They will judge you correctly when the lover of your high ideal, your notion about preferring the good of others to our own, your manner of regarding art and music, and the whole history of the past, as if this life was one to be dreamed through, not lived through. You will be considered eccentric if you do not change you opinions, or, at least, if you do not conceal them and try to talk more like other people."

"But if I do not think like other people?" asked the beautiful girl, still with that smile on her lip.

"You will have to, ma cherie. The world will laugh you out of your eccentricities if you do not take care; and that will be painful. Ah! how can I make you comprehend? Do you think you can be practical for five minutes, Ariel? my dear princess?"

"I will listen to you, at least, and try to follow all you say."

"That is well. Now, to begin: You have only one hundred and fifty pounds a year of your own—remember, all the munitions of the world go, to supply you with a sufficient toilet, even for the year. You will live with your uncle for a time; but, of course, it will be his end and aim to get you well married, so that he may be relieved of the burden of your existence. Your aunt by marriage will feel more strongly on the point than your uncle. Believe me, they will be impatient to get you married, and annoyed if you do not speedily make a splendid marriage. It was what your father wished for you; you know that."

The princess was a Pole by birth. Her English mother had died when Ariel was a little child; thus she had not an English maiden's idea of love and romance as connected with marriage. Those elements vanished from the education of a sprightly, warm-hearted, impulsive system of a highly-born foreign maiden be she French or Polish. She is taught finally, to marry to please parents, to do her duty by him, to care for him, if love her children when Heaven sends them to her. And Ariel had been taught all these lessons—and the notion of love only crept into her head through the medium of the few poems and romances she had been permitted to read. Her father, whose she had loved and respected, had taken this view of the matter, and Ariel never dreamed of disputing it.

"I know that it will my duty to make a good marriage, if possible, Miss Bateman; and I mean to do so, if the opportunity arrives."

"Ah! I don't doubt you! But if you carry your high-flown notions into society you will be laughed at—voted eccentric; and many a rich and fashionable man among the English, who might be struck with your style and accomplishments, and might be willing to pardon your want of fortune on the score of noble birth, would hesitate to call a girl his wife who values not what the world values—who thinks ever rather of the dim, uncertain future than of the real tangible present—who is best to encourage humanity at large rather than first followings, and then leading, the fashionable world."

Now Miss Bateman was very anxious that Ariel should make a splendid match. Miss Bateman was a woman of the world with her own interest thoroughly at heart. She was not by any means an unprincipled person, neither was she noble minded; she was a very unsympathetic and cold blooded person. When the month of June arrived, Miss Bateman must place Ariel and her leather and in the care of their uncle, and look out for another situation for herself. This was a disagreeable necessity.

WHAT'S NEW

(From a Woman's Standpoint)

Rosy said tones are being accented in resort fashion displays on Fifth Avenue.

A Riviera craze now is the new sleeveless sweater embroidered in wool in vivid shades.

Using the chou for a trim is one of the new modes from Reboux and Marie Alphonsine which is small and thought well of, and this is not the fluffy show of other seasons but is more of a flat crushed rosette that lies almost flat against the ear on one side.

Paris now recognizes only two or three ornaments for using in the plain herdgear, and pins of real tortoise shell in light blonde or dark or tones are lovely, while small buckles of the same can finish a ribbon band; and new and smart is the small silver and that grips the fold of felt or taupe together, as silver is preferred to gold and is symbolic of that severe good taste which is prevalent in the best Parisian millinery.

Miss Bateman had left her youth some dozen years behind her. She looked her age. She had only saved about five hundred pounds. Clearly, she must turn her talents to account and work next year. Lately her place had been a sinecure; it would still be so through the winter, in Paris; and after that—if Ariel married a lord—she retained Miss Bateman as a companion at a salary of a hundred a year. And why not? Miss Bateman had determined that she should, and Ariel had promised to do so.

"If only she can win a real prize in the marriage mart," thought the lady.

A rap came at the door Ariel started up.

"A letter from Claud," she said. "Ah, I have been still among the dead." "Indeed, I do not," said Miss Bateman, shrugging her shoulders; "Claud is tiresome enough. Ah! five years since I had the power to hurt his eyes and send him off to bed; those days are passed."

CHAPTER V.

Marie entered the room from the passage, and flung a letter on the table.

"From Monsieur Claud," she said.

Ariel took up the letter—postmark, Freshen. The letter was addressed: THE PRINCESS NICHOLINE, Poste Restante, PARIS.

"For me!" cried Ariel, breaking the seal.

She read a few lines, and her face fell.

"He will not join us next week. Miss Bateman; he is enjoying himself so much at the house of his friend."

DINNER AND PRESENTATION TO HIS HONOR, THE RETIRING LIEUT.-GOVERNOR OF ONTARIO COL. HENRY COCKSHUTT

TORONTO, JANUARY 18TH

A rousing interest is being taken by the people of Ontario in the Banquet and Presentation to be tendered on January 18th to Col. Henry Cockshutt, retiring Lieut.-Governor of the Province.

The Banquet Committee, under the able Chairmanship of Mr. George Wilson and the Secretaryship of Mr. J. M. McIntosh of Toronto, is working indefatigably to obtain as large a representation of the citizens of the Province as may be possible, and all public bodies and organizations in the various municipalities are putting forth every effort forward assisting in obtaining the objective. The co-operation of the Railway Companies follows as a matter of course, and the question of transportation of the guests is receiving every attention.

A special train has been announced by the Canadian National Railways as operating between Windsor and Toronto, thereby serving the territory from which the attendance is expected to be particularly heavy. From other districts transportation requirements will be propelled adequately by he furnishing of extra coaches, or parlor cars as may be necessary on regular trains.

The Banquet Committee have arranged there at pitching points to form parties of ten or more, so that attendance may be taken of the special party fare, and this means of reduced transportation will at once recommend itself. Canadian National Agents and representatives at all points are thoroughly alive to the importance of handling the traffic orientating in their areas with coming and departure, and will be glad to give complete information and to help in organizing special fare parties for the benefit of those who desire to participate in what will be an outstanding event for years to come in the history of the Province of Ontario.

Local Druggists Have Modern Remedy for Colds

A Vaporizing Salve which is Rubbed Over Throat and Chest for Colds.

When Vicks VapoRub, the "external" method of treating sore throat, bronchitis, deep chest colds or croup, is applied over throat or chest, the ingredients are released as vapors by the body heat.

These vapors inhaled with each breath carry the medicines directly to the affected air passages, loosening the phlegm and relieving the congestion. At the same time Vicks acts as a counter-irritant, stimulating the skin, and thus helps the vapors inhaled to break up the inflammation.

Colds are usually relieved over night.

OWNER OF THEATRE ADMITS LAWS WERE DISREGARDED

Landis Exonerates All Ball Players --- Funeral Of The Late Mrs R. J. Graham Held

PEOPLE STAND IN BALCONY AISLE OWNER TELLS FIRE COMMISSIONER

Admits That Fires Have Occurred in His Other Theatres

RECORD QUESTIONED

Denies Receiving Notice of Unsatisfactory Conditions at Theatre

Montreal, Jan. 12.—When Sunday's performance in the Laurier Palace moving picture theatre here was in progress —a performance that ended with the sacrifice of 77 lives when a stampede resulting from a panic cry of fire caused a rush to the exits, with the consequent smothering of that number of children—spectators were standing in the rear aisles in the balcony. This was the testimony of two lads and one man given before Fire Commissioner Quinn, who was investigating the disaster.

Three hours were consumed in the fire commissioner's court and this was the salient fact brought out during the probe. Little fight was cast upon the cause of the blaze beyond that it had started in the balcony.

Overshadowing this was the examination of Ansem Lawand, proprietor of the theatre, who was keenly interrogated by Crown counsel, insurance company counsel and lawyers representing families of children who had lost their lives in the catastrophe.

Under the protection of the court, he said he was the proprietor of the Laurier Palace Theatre and the Mai-ouenve Theatre on Ontario Street East, and was interested in a Mount Royal Avenue bowling alley and billiard room. There had been fires in both theatres at the bowling alley and at a factory adjoining his home, the latter blaze affecting his home premises. As to roundsmanship for allotment of the city's firemen he said there had been conventions at both theatres for admitting children under 10 years old at 10 cents, and Laurier Palace Theatre for showing unapproved posters, for having people stand in the aisles, and for preferring to change the amusement tax.

The enquiry was adjourned until Thursday afternoon, when Mr. Lawand will be the first witness.

BARTY HANGED THIS MORNING

Hamilton, Jan. 12.—Twelve minutes after he dropped through the trap on scaffold here this morning, John Barty was dead. He went calmly to scaffold and died with a prayer on his lips.

Hamilton, Jan. 12.—John Barty was hung at 7.22 this morning for the murder of Mrs. Nancy Cook in June last. The murder was a particularly brutal one, Mrs. Cook having been beaten on the head with an iron bar when she frustrated the efforts of Barty to rob the cash register in the grocery store where she was employed.

Barty was convicted by a jury under Mr. Justice Mowat at the Wentworth assizes here and sentenced to hang on December 23. Shortly before this date, however, he was given three weeks' respite by Mr. Justice Lennox at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, and representation was made to Ottawa in behalf for a new trial. Th Minister of Justice refused to interfere and the sentence was directed to be carried out.

TWO CITIES PAY HALF INCOME TAX BELLEVILLE WELL UP IN THE LIST

Ottawa, January 12.—Canadian parliament has received income tax returns during the fiscal year ending March 31 1926, and while Montreal was the leading city, half of the total amount for the entire country was collected in Ontario. The totals by provinces were:

Ontario	$26,536,342
Quebec	18,261,878
Nova Scotia	693,363
Prince Edward Island	37,426
New Brunswick	717,187
Manitoba	3,126,523
Saskatchewan	827,761
Alberta	1,445,953
British Columbia	4,130,852
Yukon	30,365

Toronto and Montreal combined produced as much as all the rest of Canada. It is interesting to examine the contributions of various federal towns and cities. In eastern Ontario the heaviest taxpayers on account of income were Belleville, $220,000; Brockville, $81,850; Cornwall, $9,690; Kingston, $451,000; Niagara Falls, $71,940; Cobalt, $21,342; Timmins, $23,850; Ottawa, $30,045; Ottawa, $2,483,343; Pembroke, $10,237; St. Catharines, $92,-468; Toronto, $13,005,091; Windsor $123,404; Walkerville, $77,451; Woodstock, $6,788.

WHISKERS BACK

Men Insist on Having Something to Distinguish Them From Women

London, Jan. 12.—Whiskers and moustaches are coming back, barbers say. The imitation of men's styles and habits of women is given as the direct cause by those now engaged in raising hair adornments. With women copying masculine fashions in hair, cuts, dress and smoking, proponents of the beard say it stands out more than ever as a badge of masculinity and the vogue of the clean shaven man is on the decline.

Equal Status in the Empire Involves Sharing National Defence

REFUSES COMMENT

Canadian Premier Also Has Nothing to Reply to Bruce

Montreal, Jan. 12.—On arrival here this morning Premier J. G. Coates, of New Zealand, again, endorsed the belief expounded in this country by Premier Bruce of Australia, that the British Dominions should bear their full share of the cost of imperial defence. Premier Coates made his first entry into Canada today. Like Premier Bruce he will cross the continent on his return from Imperial conference and will stop off in various Canadian cities.

Mr. Coates believed national interest in the Empire would be a corollary to dependence on the Mother Country in matter of defence. He made it clear that he was referring to naval matters.

NOTHING TO SAY

Ottawa, Jan. 12.—Premier MacKenzie King had no comment to make on the statement of Premier Coates, of New Zealand to the effect that the Dominions must assume their full share of Imperial Defence or accept a position of national inferiority.

LOCAL POULTRY SHOW COMPARES FAVORABLY WITH THE BIG CITIES

Fifteen thousand dollars worth of fowl, one thousand birds, are undergoing the judging process today at the Poultry Show in the market building and judges and officials have agreed that the fowl could no be beaten in any show in the Provinces. "The birds are in better condition, better housed and better generally than most I have been in the cities", Mr. C. Webber, of Toronto, who is here in the capacity of the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, told the Press this morning.

Had the period of cold weather not intervened, the show would probably have recorded a larger entry but the finer birds are always shown, an official remarked, continuing by a reference to the fact that in some of the towns birds are not so well and comfortably housed, resulting in discomfort and often frozen combs.

Large Entries

Walter Moore, of Belleville, has some magnificent Buff Orpingtons, and Dr. Hadyn has many birds of the same kind which have been admired by the fanciers at the show.

LANDIS CLEARS ALL PLAYERS IN BALL SCANDAL

Says Risberg's and Gandil's Evidence Only Convict Themselves

Chicago, Jan. 12.—All baseball players involved in the alleged scandal between the White Sox and Detroit Tigers in 1917 were exonerated by Commissioner Landis in his decision today. The commissioner ruled that the fund raised by the White Sox was not collected or used to Detroit players for sloughing the series in Chicago, but was used because of the Tiger's achievement in defeating Boston.

The decision in part said: "In addition to the charge of sloughing the September 2 and 3, 1917 series, Risberg alleged that Chicago sloughed in Detroit two of the three game series at the close of the 1919 season. His only specific allegations are that he placed bets of money on each and that he believed that Gandil could use other players out of baseball because he was not out of baseball until first spring. I think it was two out of three ball games, and later saying, I myself lightly placed bets on all three games.. Gandil said that he noticed that Risberg played out of position so that he would not get a ball, which was even a word between him and Risberg or any Chicago or Detroit players about it and there was no testimony by Gandil or Risberg is evidence to that extent against them, but there is no evidence whatever supporting any charge involving any other Chicago player".

Mr. R. J. Graham will spend a few days quietly recuperating at his home after which, accompanied by his daughter Grace and son Bruce, he intends to travel for an indefinite period. The family appreciate the warm sympathy of the citizens in their bereavement.

TRENTON MAN SUFFERS LOSS OF HIS HOME

Flames Gain Headway While Occupant Sleeps Soundly

Escaping into the icy streets clad only in a night robe, Archie Bardsley, of Trenton narrowly escaped death by burning at noon yesterday. The man who was employed at the Glen Miller Paper Mill had returned to his home to take his daily nap and had retired to bed after raising sure the fire in the kitchen stove was in good order. He was awakened shortly after the rear of the flames which had spread from the kitchen roused him and he made a hasty retreat from the suffocating flames and deadly smoke. The house fell an easy prey to the flames which had gained much headway and in a short time it was levelled to the ground. Mrs. Bardsley was downtown shopping otherwise the family might not have suffered the heavy loss.

FINE YEAR

Life insurance sales reported by The Dominion Life Assurance Company of Waterloo amounted to $12,256,000—an increase of 21% over the previous year. The marked development in business which this Company has experienced during the past few years is clearly seen in the fact that production for 1926 exceeded the total applied for during the first twenty-one years of its history, from 1889 to 1910.

AUSTRALIA WILL EXTEND TREATY OF PREFERENCE

Prem. Bruce Says They Want Equivalent Advantages From Canada

Vancouver, B. C., Jan. 12.—"Our government is prepared to consider the extension of a preference on any Canadian product entering Australia in return for equivalent advantages on Australian products entering Canada" announced the Right Hon. Stanley Bruce, Premier of Australia on his arrival here this morning from Banff.

It is not a matter of sentiment, "continued the Premier", but of business. Our object is a reciprocal trade benefit between the various Dominions, and we in Australia would much rather buy from within the Empire than from outside source and I am only too conscious that the trade treaty between Canada and Australia will prove a success. He stressed the point that he considered that the appointment of an Australian trade commissioner to Canada would be a move in the right direction.

Premier Bruce will leave on the Canadian Pacific Steamer The Princess Adelaide for Victoria, from which point he will embark to-morrow on the S. S. Niagara for home.

ENTERTAINER IS HEIR TO A LARGE SUM OF MONEY

Saskatoon, Sask., Jan. 12 (By C.P.)—"Dance Hall" has smiled on Lionel Broadway, a well-known entertainer of this city, and formerly a member of the "Originals", the concert troupe of ex-servicemen.

Lionel has been notified by a firm of solicitors that he has fallen heir to an enormous fortune left by his uncle in Corsica. The estate is reported to include several castles, a great deal of land, a vineyard and money amounting to about a million dollars in currency.

A cablegram from the executors of the estate contains only one possible flaw to the new heir. Mr. Broadway securing full control of the estate. It requests that he bring with him to Corsica, a native Corsican, who is said to know another mysterious relative.

Mr. Broadway has made arrangement for a hurried trip to Corsica and will remain away at least two months, but he declares his fortune will be spent in Canada where he has found "the greatest happiness and success."

LADY LECTURER SAYS MUSSOLINI A NATIONAL IDOL

Took His Own Life in His Hands When He Repudiated Co-workers

Montreal, Que., Jan. 11—(By Canadian Press)—Mussolini has done more for Italy than has any other of her statesmen for generations." Mrs. Henry Joseph referred to the Fascist leader in this way when she addressed the Outremont and North End Women's Club. At one where own family connections were at first hand what she termed "the inner workings of Italy," she referred to the Socialists and the Fascisti as she had studied them on a trip three years ago and again last spring. She pictured Mussolini, "the man of a 100 wounds" briefly as a former Socialist.

"Because those of his own political belief," said Mrs. Joseph, "believed in Italy, he repudiated them, and, in doing so, took his own life in his hands. He risked his fate with the Fascisti. Italy has not had a fair deal for generations, but now Mussolini is seeing that she gets it, and matters are growing better and better. Mussolini has been misrepresented a great deal over here, but we must appreciate the good work he has done and the love he holds for his country."

MANITOBA HAS HIGHER DIVORCE RECORD FOR '26

Winnipeg, Man., Jan. 12 (By C.P.).—The sea of matrimony in Manitoba was a little rougher during 1926 and more domestic wrecks were tossed on the reefs of incompatibility than to the previous year.

The total of affairs is revealed by divorce statistics which show that while in 1925, 82 couples were released from the marriage tie, in 1926 the courts gave 110 couples their freedom.

A comparison based on the fiscal year figures confirms the tendency toward an increased number of divorces in the province. In the year ending April 30, 1925, there were 110 applications for divorce, of which 66 were successful. In the nine months April 30, 1926, there were 147 applications, of which 95 were granted.

Without exception the courts of the province were busier in 1926 than in 1925. Suits entered in the city county courts of the province numbered 7,876 of which 3,627 were in Winnipeg.

Criminal statistics for Manitoba show that in the assize courts during the 12 months ending April 30, 84 cases were brought to trial with a total of 41 convictions.

LANDIS REPORT WILL EXONERATE BALL PLAYERS

Forecast of Decision Given By Chicago Paper This Morning

Chicago, Jan. 12.—The "Herald Examiner" today said it had learned from "an authoritative source" that commissioner Landis decision will exonerate all members of the White Sox and Detroit baseball teams involved by Swede Risberg and Chick Gandil in gambling fixed series of 1919.

The newspaper continues that from the same source it learned the verdict would carry also censure for the White Sox who contributed $45 each in 1917 toward a pool of $1,000 for the Detroit pitching staff and will reprimand the Detroit players for taking it.

"GIFT FUND" IMPROPER

The "gift fund" as the paper says it will be termed, is characterized as "highly improper," but the decision will state that commissioner Landis has been unable to find any trace of "criminal intent" on either side." The verdict, the account continues, will be based on acceptance of the story of the 20 odd defendants, who testified at the hearing that the pool was given as bonus to the Detroit players for having been the Boston Red Sox, runners up for the pennant, which the White Sox won in 1917.

The original trade was told by Risberg, who came out of baseball exile to charge that the $1,000 pool was paid to Risberg and Gandil for having thrown a four game series to the White Sox on September 2 and 3, 1917, in Chicago. This story was supported and elaborated by Gandil, former first baseman, for the Sox, who came here to testify before the commissioner Landis.

The Herald Examiner says that the story told by the two former players were "Discredited in no corroborated by competent witnesses."

Physical Committee Plan Future Events

At a meeting of the Physical Committee of the Y.M.C.A. held yesterday afternoon it was decided to invite Phil Brockel to bring up both a volleyball and basketball team for a friendly game on Wednesday the 19th. On New Years Day the local basketeers sojourned to the Lindstrom City and enjoyed a game with Phil's cage ball players, but it is some time since the volleyball teams have met in inter-association play.

The advisability of entering teams in the Eastern Ontario Amateur Basketball Association was discussed but the matter was not definitely decided, being left over until after a representative meeting of the other interested parties locally, Albert College and the High School. This meeting will be held at the Y.M.C.A. on Thursday night at 9.30.

The committee voted to form a volleyball house league composed of four teams and the following gentlemen were appointed to captain the respective teams: Messrs. Armstrong, Silwell, Brown and Nurse. The various volleyball players in the Association will be chosen by one or other of the team captains so that everyone will be given an opportunity to play.

EXPECT RECORD TOURIST SEASON FOR THIS YEAR

Montreal, January 12. —The fishing and hunting seasons of 1927 will witness record incomes of Canada by United States citizens, it inquiries already coming in to the General Tourist Department, Canadian Nat. Railways or any indication. Already hundreds of letters have been received by C. E. Howard, General Tourist Agent, from people in nearly every State of the Union, seeking for information as to Canada's choice fishing streams and lakes, and hunting territory.

That the movement will commence earlier in 1927 than it has done in previous years, is indicated by the number of inquiries as to early spring fishing in the territory from Ontario eastward to the Atlantic Ocean. Many ardent fishermen who have previously visited Canada for their sport, know that excellent fishing is to be enjoyed before the time arrives for flies to be numerous. In Ontario the early fishing commences about June 1st, this date extending eastward as far as the New Brunswick streams, while along the south shore of Nova Scotia, fishermen are able to to commence their sport a month earlier. Although June is still some months away, ardent fishermen are making their plans in advance and are seeking the Tourist Department of the National System to advise them as to suitable territories and to place them in touch with reliable guides.

Looking still further ahead are many hunters, who spent part of last Fall in Canada and enjoyed such excellent sport that they are already writing in to make their reservations for guides and outfitters. The early hunter, it is generally known, usually succeeds in getting the cream of the sport and getting out of the woods before severe weather sets in, and already many Nimrods are making their reservations in preparation for the time when the moose, caribou and other big game trophies will be sought.

TORONTO MUST ECONOMIZE TOO

Toronto, Jan. 10.—Mayor Foster, in his inaugural address delivered at today's meeting of the 1927 council, stressed the need for guarding against too much additional capital expenditure over what the city is committed to now. He pointed out that "uncontrollable" expenditures, or debt charges in other words, have been in the past and will be in the future of most vital effect on the tax rate. The large capital requirements to be undertaken in the next few years will considerably increase the demands on the tax payers, the mayor said.

SERVICE CLUBS AID IN $2500 Y. M. C. A. DRIVE

Kiwanis, Rotary and Y's Men Will Solicit Subscriptions

Kiwanians, Rotarians and Y's Men numbering about one hundred members, assembled today at a joint luncheon in the Y. M. C. A. and expressed their endorsation of the work the "Y" was doing for the young men and boys of all classes and creeds in this city, and pledged themselves to assist the institution in its campaign his week to raise the sum of $2500, necessary if the work of the "Y" is to be carried on during 1927. The members of the three Clubs were given cards, and each man will devote a few hours of his time to the soliciting of subscriptions among the citizens.

Rotarian Harry W. Ackerman outlined the work the Y.M.C.A. was doing for our young men, boys and girls, socially, morally and physically. In the recent financial drive, few workers had turned out and Mr. Ackerman was certain that with the joint efforts of the Service Clubs and Board the drive this week, the objective would be easily attained.

Rotarian Charles Bishop also endorsed the efforts of the Y.M.C.A. Previous to his coming to Belleville, Mr. Bishop had been associated for a number of years with "Y" work and knew of no finer example of "applied Christianity" than in this work. In bringing together the young under decent social conditions, the Y.M.C.A. was maintaining and raising the standar dof morals among them.

STARTLING FIGURES

Hon. Hugh Guthrie advises that before another general election the Conservative party should try and bring about a condition which won't give it a better return than one-sixt cnt of 54 from the prairie provinces in the House of Commons.

At the general election in the prairie provinces the Conservative candidates polled more votes than the Liberals, so that it ought not to be difficult to bring about the condition desired by Mr. Guthrie. The results of the voting in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta were as follows:

	Votes	Seats
Conservatives	200,759	1
Liberals	199,853	23
U. F. A.	60,457	11
Progressives	60,301	7
Lib-Progressives	51,778	9
Labor	17,503	3

On a proportional basis the Conservatives should have elected 21 members from the prairies.

HAVE ANIMALS SOULS?

Thirteen members of the French Academy voted by eight to five that "animals have memory and, incidentally souls." Marshals Foch and Joffre participated in the discussion and both of them, we are told in a cable despatch, "accepted the principle that animals have souls."

"I had a dog called Bobby during the early days of the war," said Marshal Joffre. "He always knew several hours in advance when I gave the order to attack. Is that memory or intelligence? Is that soul or instinct? Marshal Foch told of a parrot which cried unceasingly "There we go" as the order was given for an important advance. "Perhaps he had a soul," said the Marshal, "but I am inclined to think he was just a mean, clever bird." Henri Robert, a noted criminal lawyer, said he had met "many soulless men," but never had appeared "in behalf of soulless animales" and he had no convictions on the subject.

This is a matter which even the French Academy cannot settle. There are many lovers of dogs, in particular, who cannot be convinced that their pets are not guided by something more than habit and instinct. They do not hesitate to ascribe canine intelligence to a distinct even if limited, reasoning power.

Nothing but ordinary observation is required to prove to the average person's satisfaction that animals have the faculty of memory. The possession of a "soul" is not capable of such ready proof.

REBUKED

Last autumn the Rev. Dr. E. B. Wylie, of Ottawa, moderator of the Ottawa presbytery of the Presbyterian church, made certain sweeping and shocking accusations against the Ottawa Collegiate institute, alleging the existence of conditions existed among the pupils. The charges, made publicly, caused much distress and anxiety among parents in Ottawa. The truth of them was indignantly denied by the school authorities. A judicial investigation was ordered, the investigation judge being Mr. Justice Orde. He has completed his work and submitted his report. The report is in effect a stinging rebuke to Rev. Dr. Wyllie. The minister, says Judge Orde "failed utterly to prove any of his sweeping statements. Although he was allowed very large latitude. "I find it difficult," comments the judge, "to understand how anyone occupying a position of responsibility such as Dr. Wyllie presumably does could have had so little regard for the effect of his words as to utter such sweeping and slanderous statements without being prepared to justify them when called upon to do so."

This result of the investigation is highly satisfactory, for similar slanderous statements have been circulated in other places than Ottawa.

SOLVING PROBLEMS

A well-known writer, who is a bachelor recently described how, after years of living in "digs" and furnished flats, he had taken a house of his own and started housekeeping.

The mysteries of this art, which for so long have been in the care of women, had still for him the entirements of the unknown, and he lived happily, if inexcepely, in that paradise of the early part of the month into which no bills fall.

But, even so, it is sufficiently odd to find a man writing about household matters and abandoning the traditional air of contempt with which men have hitherto referred to them.

We do, indeed, know the old bachelors who have their houses with a love exceeding the love of women for these things, and yet conduct their houses in a way that has made many a spinster sigh over the obstinate stupidity of men.

This seems to be one of the necessary corollaries of the modern trend. Men, who up to the present have been regarded as incapable of ordering half a dozen eggs and a pound of butter, are gradually being forced to cope with a variety of problems that never entered into the lives of earlier and luckier generations.

The situation was bound to arise, for in the words of the old song, "someone has got to darn his socks," and the girl whom he might marry openly declares that "she's bothered if she'll do it for any man."

The result of these circumstances is the evolution of a type, wholely peculiar to this century—the domestic animal, man.

The publicity given to the "cock-tail girl" has neglected this humbler creature, but an inquiry into the domestic lives of a number of young men, who for some reason are unable to live at home, would elicit some curious and striking information on this point.

The young bachelor of today, in preparation for the new Amazonian civilization, is rapidly mastering the world of domesticity.

Soon young men arriving late at their offices will proffer the same excuse as the pre-war business girl: "I'm sorry but I had to see to the house before I left."

Greed alone will teach modern youth to order a decent meal for himself in the evening. There is no doubt that he can grapple with the food question in the same spirit as the French housewife, who believes that on no manage bien que chez soi.

It is reasonable to suppose, in addition, that he won't make a worse taskmaster in the matter of servants than past generations of women.

If he shows the same success in other departments of domestic life, heaven knows what will happen to the already rapidly diminishing marriage statistics!

As a rule he cost is all right and he acts as rals of it. If Charlie wants to dress as he does he should not marry at all. If he marries he should stand up like a man and take the consequences.—Toronto Star.

OTHER MEN'S THOUGHTS

One day about noon Mr. Jones called up a friend and said:

"I understand that Brown was at your house last night and not in A-1 condition."

"You heard right," admitted the friend "He was here, and very much intoxicated."

"Terrible, terrible," ejaculated Jones. "By the way, was I there too?"

BELLEVILLE MAY LOSE TWO NOTED YOUNG ATHLETES

"Stan" Hagerman and Vern Weir Moved to Montreal By C. N. R.

Two of Belleville's most outstanding young athletes left for Montreal last evening in the person of "Stan" Hagerman and "Vern" Weir. Both boys who are employees of the Canadian National Railway were ordered to the Eastern Metropolis by the higher officials yesterday and packed their trunks and boarded the rattler last evening. Both boys were reluctant about accepting their new positions, preferring to remain in Belleville. However it is just possible that neither of them will remain at headquarters and may be retagged and shipped back home again. That just depends upon the mood and frame of mind of the C.N.R. heads in that city. Nothing would please either boy more than to be sent back home.

"Stan" will be a body-biter to the Belleville Maroons if Hagerman is forced to remain in his new abode. He was one of the cogs in the machine that Eddie Thomas had hoped to cop the laurels in group No. 1.

They are prominent athletes and the Canadian National team in the Montreal Industrial League need their services. Weir has been brought up in Belleville and received his education here. Entering upon a life of sports at High School he was the champion ship in different sports he graduated in to the ranks of the Belleville Junior hockey squad lasting only one season. Intermediates until this year when he decided to devote his time to basketball in which sport he excelled. Very pleasant shortstop with the Grand Trunk Amateur baseball champions in 1919 and has always been a supporter of the main sports of the town and can take care of almost any infield position. He has been noted for his genuinely cordial way on and off the field. Vern will be missed in local athletic circles if he does not return.

"Stan's" has been a like career. He played beside Vern in both hockey and baseball ever since the two were big

ANOTHER EGG RECORD

Kingston, — Jan. 12.—Mr. M. H. Vivian, 29 Division street, is a local farcier whose birds have been doing their "bit" in the line of production. He has a flock of fourteen S.C.R.I. Reds, in November they produced 216 eggs; in December, 277 and from Jan. 1st to 8th, 61 eggs. This is some record.

SEES ARCTIC OWL

Port Hope, Jan. 12.—While walking near Duck Harbour, two miles east of Port Hope on Sunday afternoon, T. J. O'Neil of this town saw a white Arctic owl in the snow. This bird is seldom seen in this district and is considered somewhat of a rarity.

CRIMINAL NEGLIGENCE

Oshawa, Jan. 12.—Sentence was suspended upon Arthur Giles, driver for Lake Furniture Company's truck when he pleaded guilty to a charge of criminal negligence before Magistrate A. F. Hind in police court today. Giles was also required to pay court costs and damages resulting from the accident, and listened to a warning from the bench, against "too much haste being prevalent among drivers of trucks." Giles must report to Chief Friend monthly.

The truck, driven by Giles about three months ago struck a buggy in which Mrs. A. Kinsman, of Harmony, was riding, at a point on King street east, near Harmony. Mrs. Kinsman was thrown from the buggy and painfully injured.

MAKES RADIO RECORD

Kingston, Jan. 12.—Fred H. Simpson, Jr., owner of Radio Station 2 AEL on Sixth street, Kingston, reported that he had been in communication with a ship off the coast of Florida on Sunday evening. When Mr. Simpson first got the signal from the steamship Stockholm, Station 2 AEL was surprised to hear the operator signal "Good morning." It was 7 p.m. Sunday here and 2 a.m. Monday on board the vessel, which was in the Baltic Sea. Although the operator on the Swedish steamer could not speak English, communication was established by means of the international code signals. The operator replied to forced.

Mr. Simpson's question regarding the reception with the signal signals easily readable. This is the best direct communication which the Kingston radio amateur has yet established, though he has several times talked with South America and the West Indies.

FACES TRIAL

Port Hope, Jan. 12.—John "Dodger" Lewis will appear before County Judge J. E. McGlade in County Court at Cobourg on Saturday, January 22, according to his counsel, W. F. McMahon. Lewis is at present in the County Jail at Cobourg awaiting trial.

Lewis was arrested here on December 10th by two Canadian National railway detectives and after a steamboat attempt to escape from custody was placed in the lock up at the Town Hall here. In Police Court the following day, Lewis was charged with theft from the "Moonlight" freight train on the Midland Railway north of Port Hope and with attempted theft. Trial in County Court was originally set for January 25th but was changed on application of Mr. McMahon.

POTENTIAL MURDERERS

New York, Jan. 12.—"The man who yells 'fire' is a potential murderer," Commissioner John J. Dorman, of New York, told the United Press in describing the stringent regulations by which fire departments seek to prevent such tragedies as that in Montreal Sunday.

In this city children under 16 years of age cannot go to theatres unless accompanied by adults. A fireman is stationed at each performance in the larger theatres and inspections are made frequently. Drastic regulations as to the number of exits and the amount of aisle space also are enforced.

A theatre fire resulting in a great loss of life almost invariably results in a tightening of the laws.

In Montreal a law forbidding attendance of unaccompanied children at theatres has been on the statute books, but apparently was not enforced.

ELECTRIC POWER FOR 'PEG MINING DISTRICTS SOON

60,000 Volt Transmission Line To Be Started From Great Falls.

Winnipeg, Man., Jan. 12. (By C.P.) —Power will be available for the Lake Winnipeg mining district by next March, according to H. A. Wentworth, president of Central Manitoba Mines Limited, who announces that the contract between his company and the Manitoba Power company has been signed.

Construction of this 55-mile, 60,000 volt transmission line from Great Falls will be started at once, and although Central Manitoba Mines Limited will not be ready for power until next October, the mining company will build a substation at the mine, reducing the voltage from 60,000 to 2,200. To assist possible small consumers in the neighborhood, the sub-station will be built larger than its own needs require through which the Manitoba Power company can supply other consumers.

This will assist companies such as the Selkirk Gold Mining and Eldorado whose operations have been delayed owing to high costs.

As mining and milling operations on the class of ore produced in the Central Manitoba mines district requires about 2 1-2 horsepower per ton ore milled, this power line, Mr. Wentworth states will permit of the treatment of some 2,000 tons of ore a day in the district.

SUFFER A HEAVY LOSS FROM HAIL

Winnipeg, Man., Jan. 12 (By C. P.) —Heavy losses from hail are by western prairies during 1926 were experienced by the underwriters according to H. Champion, Regina, secretary of the Canadian Hail Underwriters. Some companies, he said, lost considerable more than the sum total of the premiums received. The worst pots were western Alberta and south central Saskatchewan. Only in 1916 and 1917 was the damage by hail heavier than in 1925.

Mr. Campion came to Winnipeg to attend an executive meeting of the Canadian Hail Underwriters in preparation for the annual meeting which takes place in Montreal on January 25. At this meeting the hail rates are set. Those for 1926 ranged from 4-7 per cent in Manitoba, 4-9 per cent in Saskatchewan and 5-12 percent in Alberta.

BLEACHED BONES FOUND AT BASE OF A PRECIPICE

Rocky Pierce, Sask., Jan. 12 (By C. P.) —Discovery of bleached bones at the base of a steep precipice in this section, which rise above this little southern Saskatchewan settlement, has brought forth a story from the days of the fortunes, which explains the absence of grazing livestock on the fertile plateau.

Years ago ranchers were troubled by depletion of their herds through some mysterious agency. One night the cause was found. Hoping wildly toward the precipice, a herd of horses which had been stampeded by a violent thunderstorm, plunged through the darkness to their doom. Subsequently, it was revealed that many head of cattle had been killed in the same manner.

The toll exacted by the treacherous precipice, became so large that ranchers eventually moved their cattle to new grazing grounds. One of the loftiest beacons of the formation, became known as "Hoodoo" rock, for at its base was found the remains of a great number of horses and cows.

Today "Hoodoo" rock, a landmark of superstition, is seldom visited, and only the bleached bones of dead live-stock mark the narrow shelf along the rock side 100 feet below.

BEYOND ALL DREAMS

"Ah, he will never settle to study!" cried Miss Bateman. "He is idle; he loves pleasure, but he is foolish. I never understood that boy."

"He will grow wiser in time," said Ariel, reading on with a smile. "He will enliven my evenings, will he not, mademoiselle, while you go and dine in the salon with the visitors at the hotel?"

"You speak, child, as if you intended to avoid following you to dessert. I assure you that there are no people there whom you could even speak to."

"Not even Lord Ashcroft?"

"Yet you find them agreeable."

"I look at your age and mine—then I look at you. In my opinion, one may hardly associate with a few persons not on a par with you. You have your piano—you have books."

"Oh, I am not dull, only it seems to me, pardon me, a little hard that I am debarred even a glimpse at persons in another sphere—I who would like to converse with persons in all ranks. You have said that you will by and obtain for me leave to make a copy in the Louvre. You know how I love pictures."

"Well, yes; but I must not leave you alone a moment."

"Certainly not. Only when I wish to go there sometimes only to walk through the galleries. Marie may accompany me?"

"Yes," said Miss Bateman. "Now I must go and dress," the lady added. "At twelve your music-master arrives."

Down in his studio Renfrew worked away at his study of the Norman peasant women. After a night of confused dreams he had awakened more than ever confused it seemed to him that the cynicism of the Lorgnes must have had some mysterious power which does not belong of right of mortal.

And then while the afternoon sunshine was still bright, he went out once more wrapped in his great cloak, in quest of the picturesque who would lend money for two paintings—and once more Renfrew found himself near one of the entrances to the court of the Louvre. Just here, only yesterday—

Why, what was this? A carriage drew up close to the pavement, and there descended from it the dream-maiden—the Princess Nicholine. This time, however, Ariel was attired more in accordance with usage and fashion than she had been on the previous afternoon. She wore a long, rich cloak of very dark blue material, trimmed deeply with the costliest fur; her dress was of black velvet; her hat, of the same, was relieved only by the lappets of white lace. Where, then, was the debonnair jocund expression of last night when she had chattered, and laughed, on conversation to palpably unladylike. Miss Bateman would have said.

Acting on the impulse of the moment, Donald Renfrew hat in hand, he stood. If she perceived the salute, she made no sign; she did not either appear to, color, or look confused, or annoyed, to color, or even carelessly amused.

With the most perfect air of assured unconsciousness the princess walked on toward the great French art galleries followed by Marie, the bonne, still in her white cap and grey shawl.

"This is most provoking, most puzzling," said Renfrew to himself. "With what a calm contempt she received my salute. Can there be two—twin sisters, perhaps? It reminds me of Miss Amonstte and the infamous Jeune de la Motte; the dream-maiden is again the dream maiden, pure, lofty, calm, gentle; but that turbulent likeness of last night entered her dooms, and was received by Marie, the bonne. I will find out this puzzling matter. If my watch taking an advantage of the likeness, is daring to masquerade in the dress of the princesse, the princess should know it. I am determined to sift this story to the bottom. Let the old dotter in the Rue Adrienne go to Halifax! I will go into the Louvre and accost the Princess Nicholine."

And soon Renfrew was pacing swiftly along the crowded galleries, looking for the one pure face which had so fired his fancy; yet his heart beating, turned the whole world upside down for him, as it were now, will he find her, or lose her in all that wide palace of art? For he stayed so long to pause and meditate, and make up his mind, that Ariel had time to get lost in the surging crowd —on—on. Yes, she is tall and stately, like Mabel in the lyric, and he sees the sweet, pale, pensive face raised reverently to consult a masterpiece of Van Eyke, "The Coronation of the Virgin."

There among the clouds of glory, and the heavenly faces is one face purer, sweeter than her own?

Hentzer came up with her, and then his courage fell. He dared not address one word to that highly-born and beautiful maiden she knew that he had never spoken to her before—that the loud-voiced, beautiful virago of last night had been in common with the Princess Nicholine.

All at once he started out of his reverie; Marie, the bonne, was addressing him volubly.

Among the novelties noted this season in Paris shops were: A globular lampshade in pale yellow swandown, a white rabbit counter-pane on a burr walnut bed and a cushion covered with orchid embroidery.

Long knots of ostrich feather—unrutted—are being used in the same way as flowers were last season on dance dresses and the floating plumes are fastened to the waist of one side, and then lane quite loose. A contrasting shade to that of the dress is chosen.

KIDNEYS NEED LOTS OF WATER

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it may mean you are eating foods which create acids, says a well-known authority. An excess of such acids overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and lazy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels, removing all the body's poisonous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weath er is bad you have rheumatic twinges The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore water scalds and are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either unsault a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralized acids in the system, so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, can not injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink. Drink lots of soft water.

1927 OUTLOOK UNCLOUDED SAYS SIR HERBERT HOLT

1926 ENDED UNDER MOST HAPPY CONDITIONS FOR CANADA'S FUTURE

Many Factors Contribute to Favorable Outlook For 1927

WELL GROUNDED

Sir Herbert Holt Says Canadian Business on Solid Basis

Ottawa, Jan. 13.—Reports received by the Bureau of Statistics indicate that the year 1926 ended under conditions much more favorable to business in Canada, than prevailed throughout 1925 and preceding years. Factors contributing to this result, says the bureau, include the bountiful crops of the last two years, improved conditions in other countries with which Canadian trade is carried on, especially in the United States and the rapid development now in progress in power and paper industries.

HOLT OPTIMISTIC

Montreal, Jan. 13.—Discussing business conditions in general today at a meeting of shareholders of the Royal bank of Canada Sir Herbert Holt, chairman of the Board of directors, remarked that Canada had definitely emerged from the discouraging conditions of the past war period.

The year just closed had been one of steady and substantial improvement in almost every department of Canada's business life and it was gratifying to know that the Dominion's greater prosperity was well grounded on a solid foundation of expanding production and consumption. Canada, he contended, had attained the position of the world's leading producer of newsprint, coal production in maritimes had been the heaviest on record, manufacturing plants were active, the volume of employment was increasing, the net earnings of Canada's two great railways had shown a marked gain and there had been a record volume of building and construction.

Shareholders of the bank approved a resolution increasing the authorized capital from $20,000,000 to $10,000,000.

HOSTILE FEELING GROWS AGAINST U. S. IN MEXICO

Resent Alleged Attempt of "Northern Colossus" to Dominate Country

Mexico City, Jan. 13.—Anti American sentiment is being displayed, as the general public becomes cognizant of the gravity of the international situation which has arisen since the refusal of United States department of State over the ejectment of Bolshevist here. Manifestation against the United States consulate at Guadalajara was averted only by military intervention. The National evacuation against the United States and the attitude of President Calles in the international crisis denouncing at same time the "Northern colossus", which newspapers particularly the Universal are charging the domination of Mexico on the part of the United States at the behest of "exploiters who have invested money in Mexico."

At the Soviet legation it was declared that the Moscow Government was not connected with the Communist International and that the Soviet government would not be responsible for activities of that body.

C. N. R. EARNINGS

The gross earnings of the Canadian National Railways for the week ended January 7, 1927, were $4,295,515.00 as compared with $4,107,075.52 for the same week of 1926, an increase of $191,439.15 or five per cent.

WANT JOBS AS LIQUOR VENDORS

Toronto, Jan. 12.—The prospect of employment under the Government Control system is proving attractive to hundreds of applicants who are swamping the offices of the Attorney-General and Prime Minister with letters asking for positions.

In some quarters the impression prevails that about one thousand liquor stores will eventually be operated and that they will each employ about four officials, exclusive of drivers, delivery assistants, etc.

It is intimated that engaging of employees is to come under the Commission to be appointed under the Commission to be appointed under the new Act when passed. In the meantime applications are merely being filed.

HIT NITRO CAP, LOST 3 FINGERS

Hitting a nitro-glycerine cap which had been left from well blasting operations on his father's property, Dorland Bell, ten-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bell of Thurlow, was seriously injured and had a narrow escape from death yesterday afternoon. The boy had picked the cap up and laying it on a stump struck it with a hatchet. In the explosion which followed three fingers of his left hand with which he was holding the cap were blown off and his face and chest scorched. He was taken to the Belleville General Hospital by Dr. J. J. Robertson where the injuries were dressed. He will recover.

HAMILTON JAIL JUST A JOKE, SAYS JURY

Hamilton, Jan. 13.—The Grand Jury at the Winter Assizes in its presentment to Justice Logie today, recommended the building of a new Jail here. The present jail is described as obsolete and not worth remodelling. No appliances are referred to as "jokes", sleeping quarters unsanitary, corridors stuffy and illventilated and the gallows out of date, clumsy and not in proper location. The jurors also commented of the odor in the building and said the cooking utensils were obsolete.

FIRE IN BRIDGE STREET BLOCK IS CHECKED IN TIME

Stubborn Blaze Discovered in Basement of Old Hydro Shop

SOON UNDER CONTROL

Good Work By Department Smothers Flames—Little Damage

When they opened a trap door in the rear of the old Hydro building on Bridge street, W. F. Drake and Phillip Snider who are cleaning up the building in preparation for the occupancy of Mowat and McElligott's stock brokers, were greeted with a burst of flames from the cellar to which the door led. The workmen, with presence of mind, closed the door down to prevent a further spread of the flames and summoned the Fire Department which arrived in record time. Fire Chief Brown found a very stubborn blaze and one which was unusually hard to get at. When the fire fighters arrived, dense clouds of smoke were issuing from the front door of the shop and it was necessary to lead the hose in through the Downey Coal Office and a back door was broken down in the rear also to turn up to allow an opening for the apparatus. After repeated efforts skilfully directed, and a continual stream of water had been played on the smoking mass this fire was got under control, and a confined scorched and all damage was covered by insurance. According to Mr. Drake no fuel and coke was stored in the cellar a few minutes previous to the discovery of the fire after completing some work, and everything had appeared in good shape when the workman was below.

CHINESE INTEND TAKING FOREIGN CONCESSIONS

Reported to Have Asked Evacuation of Tientsin Chief Seaport

Shanghai, Jan. 13.—A report received here today said representatives of the Peking Government, called on certain leaders at Tientsin yesterday and "suggested" that foreign concessions there be handed over to the Chinese. Tientsin is the principal sea outlet and commercial capital of North China.

The move is not considered surprising as the recent case at Hankow where the Southern Government took over the British concession after an uprising among the coolies and caused the evacuation of British and United States residents is considered which Chinese leaders intend to follow elsewhere.

Los Angeles, Calif., Jan. 13.—Edna Purviance, formerly starred by Charlie Chaplin was said today for a rule in the marital drama of the multi-millionaire film actor and producer, following the disclosure by counsel for Lita Grey Chaplin that they are investigating the status of the actress on the Chaplin studio payroll.

It has been informed that Miss Purviance has been on the studio payroll at $250 a week for some years." Edward T. McMurray, Mrs. Chaplin's uncle and Chief counsel in her action for divorce, declared yesterday. "We are informed that during those years that she has not been working for Chaplin. If these facts are borne out, we will recommend to the receivers that this salary be stopped. The money should go to the Chaplin children for whom Chaplin has made no provision, instead of to some actress in France."

"Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 13.—"We see no cause for alarm," said Dr. J. A. Amyot, Deputy Minister of Public Health, in commenting on the result of influenza outbreaks throughout the world. The deputy minister explained that the Federal Department of Health received weekly reports of outbreaks of the disease from all parts of th world and that there was no official recognition of any serious spread of influenza. He was of the opinion that the rumor was without foundation. While quarantine officers of Canada were not empowered to hold any one entering the country with influenza, they kept strict watch and checked up on the disease wherever possible.

Cashier at Laurier Palace Freely Sold Tickets to Children

78 DEAD NOW

Saw No Attendant at Fatal Outlet—Two on Other Side

Montreal, Que., Jan. 13.—Tickets were freely sold to children under age and without adult escort at Laurier Palace Theatre on Boxing afternoon for the show which ended in fire, panic and the death of 78 children, according to the testimony of Annette Bordua, cashier of the theatre at the resumption of the coroner's inquest into the tragedy today.

She told the coroner she had never received orders not to sell tickets to unaccompanied children and had also refused to sell tickets to any children.

The first adult to leave the theatre, Miss Bordua stated, far from worrying about the safety of the children, approached the ticket office and demanded a refund of the fifteen cents he had paid for his ticket, because the fire had prevented him from getting his money's worth of entertainment. The cashier, however, was too busy getting out herself and he had to go without.

Miss Bordua said no attendants at the stairway and there was no trouble, but none near the far outlet.

NO TRACE RECEIVED OF DISAPPEARANCE OF TRENTON YOUTH

Although a diligent search has been instituted and there has been uncovered regarding the mysterious disappearance of Everett Brown 12 year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. David Brown of Trenton. All of the boys friends and relatives have been communicated with but nothing has been learned as to his whereabouts.

W. E. TUMMON M. P.

Mr. W. E. Tummon, M. P., gave a very fine address to the large gathering assembled in the ladies and military gallery before the Parliament of Quebec last month and also many accessions for the Kenny Men's Conservative Club to take up at their assembly meetings.

MAJOR PONTON'S ADDRESS

Major H. D. Ponton who has taken a very active interest in the welfare of the Young Mens' Club congratulated the Club on the result of their efforts in the three elections during the last two years, and stated that the Club had more than justified its formation and existence, and encouraged them to continue activity in their entertainments and social meetings to be ready at any time, as no one knew when the next Campaign would be fought. Major Ponton referred to the attitude of Premier King and Honorable Ernest Lapointe and their failure to give to the Canadian people the detailed results of the Imperial Conference, and the Conservative People were kept in ignorance as to what benefits the new "Status of Minor Chiefs" brought to Canada, and what responsibilities, financial and other wise is Canada committed to. Major Ponton declared the Policy of the Conservative party from Confederation to the present time was "Canada for the Empire and the Empire for Canada" and the speaker believed that if Macdonald King supported any measure or policy that would weaken in any way the ties that bind Canada to the Motherland public opinion in Canada would soon call in no uncertain way. Major Ponton referred to the efforts of W. E. Raney in his solitation to stopping the right of appeal of Canadians to the Privy Council, but public opinion in the Province of Ontario and particularly in the Province of Quebec was too strong against him. The speaker stated that in his opinion that Premier King and his Government were happy to see Premier Bruce of Australia leave the shores of Canada as no doubt his utterances and splendid speeches, although timely and welcome to the Canadian people, were not so welcome to Mackenzie King.

The enthusiastic gathering closed with a light supper, coffee and refreshments being served to the guests.

RECREATION BOWLING

The C. N. Shops and the Wolves and the men's senior league fixture at the Recreation Alleys last night and it proved to be a disappointment as far as the Wolves were concerned, the Wolves falling badly from their score of a week ago, but no doubt their John Doe score pulled them down considerably. The Shops rolled a very consistent game and went 2846 for their total score and are now going to give all their opponents a merry tussle before they concede defeat. The highest bowlers were A. Raslle for the Shops and E. Miles for the Wolves.

Two games were played in the Junior league. In the first game the High School were set back two points when the Coca Cola and Co. stepped into them in the third game to count two points, the High School winning the first and second game, while the Coca Cola won the third also the total, High bowlers were John and Berrage.

In the second Junior league game the Hudson-Essex had an off night when they played with the Bourbons and lost all four points, the Bourbons showing a reversal of form from last week and rolled up a nice total score of 2720. High bowlers were D. E. MacConnell and F. Montague.

V. O. N. REPORT

Miss Bertha A. Hall, Assistant Supt. Victorian Order of Nurses, of Ottawa, and the chief speaker expressed her pleasure at the gratifying increase in the V. O. N. work in this city during the past year. An increase in the number of calls made, all of which had necessitated the addition of a second nurse. Miss Fitzgerald—during the year. Miss Hall dwelt on benefits to be derived from clinics stating that there was no better way to keep well babies well and lower our infantile death rate than by proper selection of parents in the care of their children.

Miss Shores Report.

Annual Report

Miss Shore read her annual report: I have much pleasure in submitting the annual report of the Belleville Branch of the Victorian Order of Nurses for Canada for the year 1926, in comparing the report for 1926 with the one for the previous year, we find an increase in the work in all its branches.

In 1925 there were 262 patients cared for and 2,665 visits made.

In 1926 there were 415 patients listed and 3,412 visits made.

171 of the patients were classed under maternity service in some form.

86 were admitted as pre-natal cases. To these 227 pre-natal visits were made, 49 of the pre-natal cases were attended during confinement, 29 were dismissed to other care and there were still 17 on the books at the end of the year.

There were 18 emergency obstetrical cases which makes a total of 67 mothers and 67 babies to whom 1121 nursing visits were paid.

75 post-natal welfare visits were made to the mothers and the 276 infant welfare visits were made principally to infants of obstetrical cases. 120 medical cases were listed, 62 communicable, 58 surgical and 3 interrupted pregnancies.

There were 2,294 nursing visits of which 289 were free and only a small fee received for many of the others.

The non-nursing visits numbered 1,118 and included clinics, infant welfare, pre-natal, post-natal welfare, social service, tuberculosis, instructive, other instructive, etc.

The total amount received in fees was $1,292.25. From The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company $156.75. Collections from patients $59.50.

253 adult and 209 infant visits were made to policy holders of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. After April 20th the original arrangement with this company for the payment of $75.00 per month was discontinued and remuneration is now received on the per-visit basis.

It was found necessary in October to increase our staff, the work was becoming too heavy for one nurse and arrangements were made through the Central Board to secure Miss Florence Fitzgerald as our second nurse. She had so efficiently carried on the relief work during the vacation period and we were most fortunate in being able to arrange with her to carry on for the present term at any rate. Apart from the bedside nursing we feel the Well Baby Clinic work has been more beneficial than any other branch carried on by the local staff. A report of this work is being given separately. We wish to thank Mrs. Fitzgerald for her untiring efforts in helping to make this work a success.

The Chest Clinic under the direction of Dr. Proctor was opened in May. Ten clinics have been held with a total attendance of 38. Those who attend regularly are finding the benefit of correct diet instructions in health rules, realizing an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

One latest addition to the work is the Canniton School. This work is still in its infancy, having started November 1st. The School Board arranged with local Victorian Order Board for one day or its equivalent per week.

82 social service calls were made during the year.

We appreciate the co-operation of the Indigent Committee and are pleased at any time to assist in any way possible. We wish to acknowledge the donations which have been received from time to time.

Layettes which were made and donated by th Senior Canadian Girls in Training of St. Andrew's Church under the direction of Miss Brandon.

Layettes and clothing donated privately.

Mrs. Bell, on behalf of the W.C.A., medical profession for their support presented us with a full equipment and the Board for their ready co-for mother and infant, to be loaned operation, where and when necessary.

Respectfully submitted,

MARY E. SHORE, R.N.

In conclusion I wish to thank the

FRIDAY NIGHT'S GAME PROMISES LOTS OF ACTION

Stan Hagerman Will Be At His Old Place at Right Wing

Fans all over town are talking about the Belleville-Cornwall game here tomorrow night. It looks like a packed house and Eddie Thomas is prospering by hanging out the S.R.O. sign. The Factory Town aggregation have cleaned up on everything down East but they will stack up against a much stronger team here.

It will be glad news to the fans to learn that Stan Hagerman will be at his place at right wing opposite Daw Whalen. Hagerman did not play in the Railway-Dell Telephone League last night and retained his O.H.A. status. The black-haired boy is a player of strength and fits in well up on the forward line.

"Tally" Tilton and "Gilly" Goyer who are tied in the all-scoring honors, are bound to have a sweet little argument that will be well worth watching. It begins to look as though the group championship is between the locals and the Easterners.

It is rumored that there is a certain bout with a bundle of swag stepping into town with the idea of having every article placed on the Cornwall team. It is not likely that he will experience any trouble in meeting his requirements. Cornwall were lucky to win out last year and the Maroons are out tomorrow night to demonstrate that they are the superior team.

Wellan's Skip Canal will be ready for heavy draft and bie-ship navigation in 1926.

Eats But Can't Breathe, Too Much Gas

"I had gas on the stomach and after meals I was always bloated and short of breath. Since taking Adlerika I feel like a different woman."—Mrs. L. Worrall.

Adlerika gives the system a REAL cleansing and brings out old poisons which may have caused trouble for a long time. Unlike most medicines, it acts upon BOTH upper and lower bowel. Just one spoonful relieves GAS and takes away that full, bloated feeling so that you can eat better and sleep better. Even if bowels move daily, Adlerika brings out much additional poison which you never thought was in your system and which caused sour, gassy stomach, nervousness, sleeplessness, headache. No matter what you have tried for your stomach and bowels, Adlerika will surprise you. J. S. McKeown, Druggist, and other druggists.

BELLE THEATRE

A story of great adventure on the high seas, and the hunt for a treasure trove buried by a piratical old sea-lion on an desert island in the South Pacific makes "The Isle of Hope," the latest starring vehicle for the agile Richard Talmadge is picture of peculiar interest and continuous excitement. The production will be seen locally at the Belle Theatre tomorrow when it begins a two day run. A fire on shipboard, a mutiny, and the sinking of the vessel in which the erratic but lovable young hero embarks on his mission (without parental permission, by the way!) are only the beginning of a series of hectic incidents when he reaches the island. Here he discovers a beautiful girl bathing in a forest pool, and follows her to an old castle where she has lived during the years of her shipwreck. The fact that the auditionee clipper and crew have made their way to the sole complicating matters with plenty of fighting in which Talmadge pulls some entirely new acrobatic wallow. Jack Nelson directed the picture, which was written for the star by James Bell Smith.

FISH 40 YARDS LONG

Rome, Jan. 12.—A shark at least 40 yards long, is the talo brought by the fishermen of Ancona after a trip near the Ancona lighthouse in the Adriatic, Coastguard and lighthouse employes who first saw it took it for a submarine. The monster dived to safety after a torpedo boat gave chase and fired upon it.

Bryson three-year-old son of Crown Attorney and Mrs. R. C. Donnan, 52 Hillcrest Avenue, was the victim of a painful accident this morning. The little fellow was driving with his mother in the car, standing on the rear seat, when the automobile lurched into a rut precipitating the boy against some sharp object on the side inflicting a nasty cut above the right eye. He was taken to the hospital where Dr. Tennent dressed the wound and was later taken home by his mother.

BERGER IS USED TO ONE - MAN JOB

Washington, Jan. 13.—No longer a merely lowmo of his numerical and partisan earliest days, Victor L. Berger, socialism's lone representative in congress, takes his position good naturedly.

"All that is left me is the role of a progressive agent who must endeavor to stimulate public interest in certain live social legislation," he said, as he reflected on the certain prospects that he will also be without socialist reinforcements in the seventieth congress.

To Berger's fifth Wisconsin District which comprises both "Silk stocking" and proletarian wards in Milwaukee, belongs the distinction of having sent the first socialist to congress in 1910. He re-elected him twice, in 1918 and 1919, but he was denied admission because of his pro attitude. He won him in the elections to the sixty-eighth, sixty-ninth and seventieth Congresses.

"I realize that, being a one-man party in the house, I cannot pass any legislation," he said. "All that's left me is to interpret socialism and show people what we socialists would do if the responsibility of governing rested on us."

He hopes to push for a hearing in bill directing the president to convoke an international conference to revise the Treaty of Versailles, and investigate the origins of the World War.

He also wants an early hearing on an amendment of the president in the immigration law by which Indiands are allowed to enter the United States under the quota. Mexicans, while their wives and children are compelled to remain behind until the head of the family has become naturalized citizen.

BEYOND ALL DREAMS

CHAPTER VI.

NEARER THAN BEFORE

"Monsieur, you think that the Princess Nicholine is unprotected, and that you may follow her about as you wish, and annoy her. You are mistaken, she is well protected. If there were nobody else, I myself will protect her. Unless you turn away at once, and do not attempt even to raise your eyes to her face again, I will accost a sergeant de ville, and have you locked up in prison."

Marie was a strong, sturdy little woman, about fifty or so. She spoke French fluently, but with a strong German accent. She was warmly and sincerely attached to the beautiful young Pole, her mistress, whom she had nursed as an infant. She was desperately enraged at the notion of this handsome artist youth, a mere nobody, following the princess, with his humble incense of admiration.

She knew him already by sight, and that he lodged in the Hotel Charmettes; was an artist, a Highlander, and the step brother of a baronet; all these facts were sufficiently known and gossiped about by the servants of Madame Ardell, and the servants in a hotel soon became acquainted.

Marie, in the meanwhile, had a supreme horror of her young mistress being loved or followed by any save a wealthy man of title.

Renfrew was too manly to allow him self to become angry with a woman, and such a woman as this poor Marie. He smiled, took off his hat:

"I regret, mademoiselle," he said polite ly, for he divined, by a peculiar instinct, that Marie was a single woman; "I regret that I have made you uneasy, and I apologize. I am an artist, and the beauty and purity of the face of the princess are so rare that I confess I have followed her as a dog follows those whom he wishes to serve."

"To serve!" Marie opened widely her small, black eyes. "You cannot serve the Princess Nicholine. You——"

"Stop," said Renfrew, "I saw one who called herself the Princess Nicholine only last night, out in the wintry streets I conducted her to the Hotel Charmettes and I saw you, mademoiselle, let her in to the apartment on the second floor If you so cruelly guard the true princess, why give shelter to an insolent girl in her likeness? For I would stake my life that yonder lady, who is wrapt in the contemplation of yonder holy picture, is not one and the same with the rude and pretty lady of whom speak."

"For Heaven's sake—oh, monieur, and you saw? Well, it will be found out, that is all, and what a weak idiot I have been. Monsieur, you meet our Miss Bateman, who is mistress for this winter by the will of the prince—you meet her in the salon of the hotel where you dine now do me the kindness not to tell our mademoiselle, who can be like a tigress, what you have seen, otherwise she will write to the authorities of the town from whence we came, and the poor wild madcap child will be locked up in prison She would do it if she guessed, so as to throw off responsibility. She is a tyrant is mademoiselle, and thinks to make the young her slaves. Promise me not to divulge it."

"Allow me to hear the voice of the princess. I will not attempt to speak her; but do not drive me away when I approach you."

"I warn you, young man," cried Marie "that you are a foolish moth, anxious to singe your wings and to bring on your destruction—forbidden fruit is always the fairest and most tempting. Ah, I have traveled in my young days with the princess, the mother of the young one; and have known a young man at Moscow blow out his brains for the love of a lady less fair than the Princess Ariel.

"There was such a passionate gleam in the dark eyes of Donald, and the color came and went upon his brown cheek, while he watched the lightest movements of the Princes Ariel, that even Marie the bonne could see that he was indeed in a fair way to lose both head and heart If he were thrown into the society of the fascinating young Pole.

"I am not likely, to do that, mademoiselle. I know perfectly the princess would never deign to look at me."

But even while he spoke he saw the gray-blue eyes of the princess suddenly fill with light and meet his own. There was no gleam of recognition, but there was that indescribable something which, so he dreamed, spoke of sympathy, as between two kindred spirits. Instantly his whole being vibrated as from an electric shock. He who had forsworn love and lover's vows, now vowed to his own heart a deep and passionate fealty and faith to the Princess Ariel as long as life should last. He did not speak for a moment, then he said:

"Is it a twin sister of the princess who masquerades in her name?"

"Sister! are you mad, monsieur? Oh, I will not tell you. you will understand soon, only tell me that Miss Bateman shall not know."

"Aside me to follow you, and——"

To the intense surprise of Marie, the princes suddenly walked up to where the tall young student talking to Renfrew.

"Marie," said the princess. "I am losing time; I came here to study a few pictures, and it grows late."

Renfrew turned crimson; his heart beat loud and fast. He took off his cap to the princess. She acknowledged the salute with a very slight bow; and then in a moment she was joined by Marie, and the two walked swiftly off along the galleries.

Donald did not dare to follow. Ariel had maintained the distance which the peculiar foreign society in which she was reared demands, she had not appeared to look at him. Donald felt piqued and almost enraged at this coldness

Poor Donald, he walked on moodily through the rooms, scarcely looking at a picture.

All at once he heard a voice, which made him start and turn, and behold Miss Bateman, in the richest of fur cloaks and the most fashionable of headdress. The lady looked really radiant; the color on her cheeks was bright; her yellowish hair was arranged with taste and skill.

WHAT'S NEW

(From a Woman's Standpoint)

Green slightly deeper than Nile is to be much in vogue for outdoor next summer.

A white georgette frock trimmed with scarlet ostrich feathers and a floating scarlet chiffon scarf is being worn in New York by Mlle. Yvonne Printemps, the latest French actress to play there.

A shade which is considered promising for spring in millinery is vert de gris, or gray-green, which is softer in cast than is usual.

Royal blue is featured very much by the French for millinery. And it is thought that both this shade and pervenche blue will be much in the limelight for the spring season.

The Los Angeles Times remarks. "Doesn't seem possible when one looks at great-grand-mother's portrait at eight een and then looks at daughter, some age that it costs more to dress 'em now than it did then."

Caroline Reboux has used the panama in white for hats for the Riviera, and has made them with the plexi through the crown and through to the side brims where a flat flower is laid at the base of the crown, and on the under brim, as well, while this milliner also is using a great deal of the finest sort of milan, and taffeta, sometimes in the very bright shades.

TO-DAY'S THOUGHT

I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true; I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to live up to what light I have.

—Abraham Lincoln.

MAN OR MONKEY

An organization known as the American Association of University Professors has started a movement for more effective co-operation of various groups in opposing the spread of anti-evolution legislation in the states. According to the professors modern science is in more danger from laws that undertake to say what may and what may not be taught in Tennessee and Mississippi there are laws in force or supposed to be in force forbidding the teaching of evolution in state-supported schools, and in Texas all mention of evolution has been removed from the state school text-books. There are movements looking towards similar action in several other states; indeed, the professors heard of it at the legislatures in all in which bills prohibiting the teaching of evolution are to be introduced during the present year.

Those who object to the teaching of evolution in state-supported schools base their objection on religious grounds. They claim that the theory of evolution so far at least as man is concerned, is contrary to the teachings of the Bible and therefore of revealed religion. The scientists are naturally opposed to any restrictions on the freedom of teaching and they regard such restrictions as an attack on the principle of the separation of church and state in educational matters. The battle raged with great vigor some years ago, and then there came something in the nature of an armistice. Weary of the fight the conflicting parties seemed to have come to the conclusion that if they could not agree in believing they might agree in disbelieving. The evolutionists could not force their views on the unwilling, but on the other hand they could not be compelled to keep silence.

But apparently the peace was only temporary. The war has broken out again, and now there is every evidence that the battle will rage as furiously as it ever did, until people again get tired of a conflict which does not promise to decide anything or to give victory to either side.

Only an occasional rumble is heard in Canada of the rising storm in the United States, and this is reason for thankfulness.

A TOUGH RACE

"Alcohol is a narcotic of the worst type and is a racial poison," said the Rev. Ben Spence at a meeting of the Prohibition Bureau in Toronto on Sunday. That it is a narcotic is fact enough when it is taken in sufficiently large doses, and there is alcohol "too commonly used where prohibition is in force which even in small doses puts its victims to sleep permanently. But that alcohol is a racial poison—at least "a dangerous one—may be doubted.

From a time as far back as human records extend, people have been using alcohol more or less freely; but the well-known human race doesn't seem to be in any danger of dying out on that account. Nor has its use apparently impaired the virility of the particular race which use it most.

We know that the Anglo-Saxon race has been peculiarly addicted to the use of alcohol for at least fourteen hundred years, and probably much longer. We have it on the authority of Tacitus that the ancestors of the Angles and the Saxons who migrated to England used to drink frequently and very deeply of intoxicating liquors. Before ale and beer were in common use among the early English, mead was the drink most in vogue, and mead was a distinctly heady drink, more so than most ales. All down through the centuries for more than a thousand years the English drank deeply of mead and malt liquors and the people of Scotland and Ireland rivalled in their favorite and more potent beverage, whisky or potheen. We have it on the authority of Shakespeare's Jaques that three or four hundred years ago the Englishman could outdrink the Dane and even the "swag-bellied Hollander." We do not find evidence of racial degeneracy, physical, mental or moral, in the English, the Scottish or the Irish race, sufficient to indicate racial alcoholic poisoning. One does not like to doubt the oracular utterances of such an authority as the Rev. Ben Spence, and yet an explanation by him of this mystery this seeming anomaly, might be illuminating and profitable.

SECTIONALISM

"Canada," said Sir John Macdonald, "is a hard country to govern."

A few incidents of the past week or two rather support Sir John's contention Thus:

The Maritimes ask for special concessions including a 20 per cent. reduction of existing railway rates, the rest of the country to make up the loss to the railways.

Western interests that fought for almost precisely the same principle in connection with Crow's Nest Pass rates attack the Maritime demand.

Montreal newspapers, evidently fearful that deepening of the St. Lawrence waterway up to the Great Lakes will effect Montreal as a port, assail the entire project.

Toronto newspapers, reacting to a report that the new chairman of the International Joint Commission may be a Quebec man, clamor for the appointment of an Ontario man (Sir William Hearst, ex-Premier of Ontario, is one of the Commission's members now) on the ground that Ontario's claims are preeminent.

Where Canada comes in seems to be a matter of very secondary importance.

UNUSUAL CHARGE

Probably for the first time in Canada there is to be a prosecution on the charge of blasphemous libel. Ernest Victor Hall, of Toronto, editor and publisher of a new periodical of modern-istic type called The Canadian Inquirer, has been arrested on the charge of having published a blasphemous libel. If convicted, he is liable to imprisonment for one year.

According to decisions in the British courts, anyone is guilty of blasphemous libel who publishes matter which has reference to God, Jesus Christ, the Bible or the Book of Common Prayer which is intended and calculated to wound the feelings of religious persons or to excite hatred or contempt against the church or religion or to promote immorality; but matter couched in decent and proper language and published and intended in good faith to advance opinions which the publisher regards as true is not blasphemous merely because its publication is likely to wound the feelings of those who have contrary opinions or because the general adoption of the opinions expressed in such matter might tend by lawful means to alterations in religion or in the constitution of the church.

In general way the principles laid down in the English courts would doubtless rule here. The offence, if any, in this Toronto case, would consist not in the opinions expressed but in the language used.

OTHER MEN'S THOUGHTS

It is difficult to imagine how an inoffensive looking creature like the man who collects handbags of laundry here and there, could rise up so much trouble, as is reported in the cable despatches from Hankow—Brockville Recorder and Times.

Deer are getting so plentiful around here that it is scaring out of the count for rabbit hunters to run across them in ones, twos and even threes. We heard of one coming into town the other day and running Main street west. A story comes from Verity district to the effect that a young deer chased Andrew Clarke's farm dog home and right into the woodshed, the door of which was open. The story goes on to say that Mr. Clarke captured the deer right there and then by embracing it around the neck saved his dog from injury.—Dundalk Herald.

It was the plainest of speech that William Farquharson, the well-known agriculturist indulged in when he addressed the Canadian Club of Toronto the other day regarding some of the tendencies of the present time in the theatre world. Many of the plays current today he characterized as "filthy and dirty" and bringing ruin to the great traditions of the stage. Such criticism from an outstanding member of the theatrical profession carries weight, and indicates that the best actors on the stage today would be better pleased if they were not forced to have neither part nor lot in the production of unsavory plays. Mr. Farquharson suggests that the public itself should act as a censor by refusing to tolerate plays of a doubtful character, and by leading a remonstrance at such companies as do not carry out the right purpose of the theatre.—Toronto Globe.

HAVE YOU HEARD THESE?

The archbishop had preached a fine sermon on the beauties of married life. Two old Irish women coming out of church were heard commenting upon his address.

"I'm a fine sermon his reverence would be after givin us," said Bridget.

"It is indade," replied Maggie, "and I wish I knew as little about the matter as he does."

Pat found himself hard up, and without a flake of tobacco in his pouch. So he decided a very evident Scotsman coming along. He approached Sandy and asked: "Might I trouble ye for the loan of a match?"

"Ay!" answered the Scotsman, and gave him one—just one.

"Faith, now!" cried the artful Irishman! "If I haven't come out without any baccy, and the shops all shut."

"Ah," said the Scot, reaching out his hand. "In that case, ye'll no be needin' that match."

DEADLY SNAKE IS LURED FROM WOMAN'S ANKLE

Trincomalli, Ceylon, Jan. 13 (A. P.)—Strategy of the hostess saved a party of dinner guests here from a dangerous snake.

A British dockyard official was giving the dining to a few friends. Half way through the meal everyone was horrified to hear the official's wife order a servant to place a bowl of milk on the floor near her feet. Instinctively everyone knew that a snake was in the room.

No one moved. All sweated apprehensively about. Presently a large cobra was seen to glide from under the table and go to the bowl of milk, an irresistable bait. The woman grinned. The cobra, deadliest snake in the world, had been coiled about her ankle.

Apply Sage Tea To Darken Faded Hair

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn grey, streaked and faded hair beautiful by dark and glossy at once. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use preparation improved by the addition of other ingredients. It is known as Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound and can be obtained at all drug stores for only 75 cents a bottle.
While gray faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger.

APPOINTMENT OF WOMAN REFEREE MARKS NEW STEP

Governing Body in Basketball Selects Lady Official

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 11—(By Canadian Press)—The appointment of Mrs. Honor Geddes as one of the official referees of the Ladies' Ontario Basketball Association for games in the local group marks another step forward in the sharing of activities by the women of what were considered a few years ago as belong for men and men only. Women have taken up basketball, baseball, hockey, track and field athletics, soccer, speed boat racing, speed skating, swimming, golf, tennis and there have been several cases where women have ridden as jockeys, and there have also been reports of women boxers, but the appointment of Mrs. Geddes is the first case of a woman being appointed as an official referee by the governing body of a branch of sport in Canada at least.

BOTTLE OF MILK FOR CHRISTENING VESSEL

Chicago, Jan. 12.—Another step in a bi expansion program for the Lake Michigan route will be launched here on January 19 of the Madison, the latest addition to car ferries operated by the Grand Trunk Western System of the Canadian National Railways. Incidentally, the event will be in the nature of a tribute to one of Wisconsin's greatest industries, for, instead of the traditional bottle of champagne, a bottle of milk will be broken over the bow of the new ship to signify the State's leadership in the dairy industry.

CANADA CALLS EOR TENDERS ON ORIENT SERVICE

Second Time This Country Has Acted Shipping Lines For Bid

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 13 (By Canadian Press)—Tenders for an service between Canada and the British West Indies have been invited by the department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa. The tenders will be opened on January 20. The service is called for in the trade treaty negotiated in 1925 between the Dominion, the West Indies. Bermuda. British Guiana and British Honduras This is the second occasion upon which Canada has called for tenders for the service; last year it was said that none of the companies bidding were able to supply adequate service.

The trade treaty with a long list of mutual tariff concessions has been ratified by Canada and by the Islands and is only kept from becoming operative by the delay in the setting up of the ship services. Should the lines be established they will supply a faster and more frequent means of communication between these two parts of British North America than have ever existed before. At the present time the Canadian Government is paying $340,000 annually in subsidies to steamship companies to maintain a service which the Islands have claimed is quite inadequate to permit them to sell their natural products to the best advantage in Canada. To establish the proposed communications will cost Canada a great deal more money in annual subsidies

SERVICES CALLED FOR

The contract will provide for two services. The Eastern Service calls for ships calling fortnightly, all the year round, at Canadian Atlantic ports, Bermuda, St. Kitts, Nevis, Antigua, Montserrat, Dominion, St. Lucia, Barbadoes, St. Vincent, Grenada, Tobago, Trinidad and Demerara. The vessels are to be of 8,000 tons, capable of twelve knots with accommodation for 100 first class, 50 second class and 100 steerage passengers. Each is to have 10,000 cubic feet for cold storage. In addition to this a fortnightly freight service of 4,300 tons vessels with a speed of ten knots from Canadian river ports is summer and ocean ports in winter calling at St. Kitts, Antigua, Baradia, Trinidad and Demerara. Freight rates are to be subject to the control of the Government of Canada.

The Western Service is to carry mail passengers and freight between St. Lawrence ports in summer and Canadian ocean ports in winter calling both ways at Bermuda, the Bahamas and Kingston Jamaica. The passenger vessels are to be 6,000 tons with accommodation for 100 first class passengers and with a speed of 16 knots. Refrigeration is to be provided for 70,000 stems of bananas and for Canadian meats and dairy products. The freight steamers are to have a speed of 10 knots and refrigeration for 50,000 stems of bananas. A monthly steamer of about 1,200 tons with room for 20 first class passengers and cold storage space is to be operated fortnightly between Kingston, Jamaica and British Honduras connecting with the passenger vessels operating between the Islands and Canada.

The contracts will be for a ten year period. The entire subsidy will not be borne by the government of Canada; under the treaty 20,000 pounds annually will be contributed by the Barbados, Bermuda, British Guiana, the Leeward Islands, Trinidad and the Windward Islands.

More than a little interest in shipping circles has been aroused by the inviting of the tenders for the new service. It is known that several of the great shipping companies are anxious to secure the contract. The Canadian Merchant Marine it is said is among those tendering as a private company. Although the Government's own merchant fleet has not ships which quite meet the requirements called for, it is understood that they are prepared to build or reconstruct vessels to suit the trade if the contract is secured.

SULPHUR WILL CLEAR SKIN OVER NIGHT

Any breaking out of the skin, even fiery, itching eczema, can be quickly overcome by applying a little Mentho-Sulphur, declared a noted skin specialist. Because of its germ destroying properties, this sulphur preparation begins at once to soothe irritated skin and heal eruption such as rash, pimples and ring worm.

It seldom fails to remove the torment and disfigurement, and you do not have to wait for relief from embarrassment. Improvement quickly shows. Sufferers from skin trouble should obtain small jar of Bowles Mentho-Sulphur from any good drug [illegible]

LOCAL JUNIORS LOSE OUT IN FINAL PERIOD WITH TRENTON

Local Students, Maintain Heavy Pace in Interscholastic Game

The Belleville Juniors played fine hockey until ten minutes before time was called last evening, but they cracked badly and the Trenton team ran the score from four all to 8-4. The game was played before a good crowd in the Trenton arena and was a fine exhibition. The Belleville youngsters simply went to pieces and the home team grabbed their opportunity to secure a good lead on the round- they now have a comfortable margin of three goals and Eddie Thomas' kids will be handed a tough assignment on Monday night when they go to Trenton again with the final game of the series down here.

The local kids played lovely hockey in the first two periods and held their heavier opponents at bay but the wind seen had the playing power. A fast sheet of ice was provided and last night's game was much more speedy than the initial encounter, when Eddie Thomas' boys won by a 5-4 score. Both teams reported more to combination play and a good per centage of the goals resulted from this source. It was not the clean fast exhibition to be seen in these parts and the Trenton lads were the worst offenders in this respect. Some dirty work escaped the ye of referee Devlin in the opening stanza but thereafter he kept a close watch and quickly banished any players who were nasty in their tactics.

Manager Thomas took some new lads along and gave them a chance, one of them looked good and that was Young Simpson. While on the ice he worked like a trojan and his hard checking kept the Trenton boys worried. He plays his wing well and packs a wicked shot. He will likely remain on the squad.

"Moose" Darragh appeared for the first time on the defence. He is not experienced in the art of using his body and needs a little coaching in that respect. He is a big boy, but got tangled up several times when he was breaking away and has the puck. Percy was not on the ice but may be given a chance at some future date.

Pete Lakefield is a regular little wiz and in the net and although eight goals beat him he stopped three times that number and many of them were from close range. At least three of the tallies could have been saved had he been afforded the proper protection by the defence men. The Trenton teams circled the secondary defense several times to waltz in on the little net-minder to give him no chance whatever.

"Red" Doran displayed nice form and proven up to others and remained on the ice and played hockey. He has a few things to learn out with develop into a nice player with the necessary tuitage.

Johnny Baker and the Canning brothers were going nicely up on the forward line. All of them can skate and stick-handle and combine prettily. They were subjected to a rough passage by the sturdy Trenton defence but stuck to their guns in great shape. Henry Canning in centre ice was especially effective. This trio will be heard from before the end of the season.

The local defence is weak and needs bolstering and it is probable that efforts will be made to secure a player to fill the position.

Belleville youngsters had some rough breaks in the opening period and deserved at least two more goals.

Heaney in the home team's net grabbed off plenty and was given plenty to do although he was overshadowed by Lakefield. The long drives are apples-ace for Heaney.

"Norm" Johnston who did not play here was one of Trenton's best. He skates like a whirlwind and can stickhandle with the best of 'em.

Perry played fair hockey on the wing but Davis who relieved him. Frank Fillon on the defence was dangerous by his clashing tactics caused him to spend a good deal of his time in the penalty box.

Bowen scored two goals and was letter than he was down here. He does not break away fast enough and the forwards are shadowing him before he gets a start.

Some of the Belleville players made the mistake of waiting too long before letting the puck fly and were constantly being steered into the corner where goals are not scored.

The locals must get in some practice before Monday's game and step into Trenton with the idea of lowering their lead.

Both teams were equally treated in regard to the plastering on of penalities, most of which were deserving.

1st Period

Fillon went to the goal mouth and fell and a score was narrowly averted. Lakefield was treated a couple of times Trenton were kept bottled in their own end of the rink. Baker scored the first from a scrim-up. Simpson replaced Henry Canning. Trenton gave Lakefield some anxious moments. The home team were slacking badly. Fillon came in for rain alone but the goalie saved. Perry was penalized for tripping. Lakefield saved on two-man combination. Gen Fillon scored from the wing on a pretty shot.

F. Fillen penalized for tripping. J. Canning and Perry was given the gate for boohying into the boards. Henry Canning followed them for tripping.

Bowen went through but shot wide. Baker was penalized for clashing. Johnny Canning shot for the gate a moment later. Trenton scored but it was off-side Johnston was hurt and Parnell replaced him. Perry scored on round with another goal. Trenton went through two abreast but the puck hit Lakefield's pads. Doran scored on a nice shot from the wing. Henry Canning was put off for charging. Trenton's goal had a narrow escape. Davis scored on a pass Perry was penalized for tripping. Henry Canning went in alone on the goalie when he grabbed a loose puck. Simpson gave Henry a pass from the corner and he batted it in. Fillon put off for tripping.

Doran sailed down but was overhauled and lost the puck. Henry Canning put off for tripping.

2nd Period

Trenton went down and nearly scored on a two man combination. Perry chased every body by sweep and each Pete Lakefield unprotected making it 4-3. Henry Canning evened it again a minute later. Lakefield made a nice stop of a hard drive. Davis and Henry Canning were both put off for roughing it. Trenton missed a soft goal when Perry shot wide. George Fillon was put off for tripping. Perry was banished for cross-checking. Johnny was penalized. Bowen scored a lucky goal while deflected off Darragh's stick. Three Trenton men raced in and Lakefield saved both. Davis came in fast to tally after the rebound. Bowen scored on one that never left the ice the defence split wide apart. Davis picked off the corner for No. 8.

ALBERT COLLEGE DEFEATS VISITORS IN OVERTIME 3-2

Home Team Score 4 Goals in Quick Succession— Now Lead on Round

Last night the first game of the Interscholastic series in this group took place between the Red, Yellow and Black, of Campbellford High School and the Black, Green and Yellow, of Albert College. After 70 minutes of strenuous hockey Albert College emerged the victors by the score of 3 to 2.

There was a fair crowd on hand and to saw a fine game of hockey between two evenly matched teams. Although Albert team was a little heavier the superior team work of the knowledgehunters from the north kept the game lively throughout.

There were a good many minor penalties which were ably handed out by Gilly Goyer, the referee. Gilly made them play hockey throughout the entire game.

Albert have got to learn teamwork and use as the individual rushes were generally broken up by the defence. In Eadie in goal they have a cool headed goalie. Long ones are made to look easy and the two that had him were from scrambles or rebounds. Armstrong and Haig on defence both gave their best. Armstrong used his poke carrier and can stick handle. Urem, the red-headed boy is a hard working forward, continually checking his man. Mason and Chant the other members of the forward line work well on solo rushes but not enough team-work. Mason accounted for two of Albert's goals, slipping in the winning counter in the first five minutes of overtime.

For Campbellford, Irwin in goal surely tended a pretty game. He saved many times after the opponents had broken through the defence. The defence men team up fine, both lads being stockily built and their body-checking showed Albert the team up considerably. Blute, Ibey and McAvoy on the forward line are the goal getters. Blute and McAvoy are both on the light side but check like fiends and are nice skaters and stick handlers.

Towards the end of the game the pace which started fast and slackened considerably. The boys don't seem to be up to any good condition for my opinion I think both teams were glad to see it over.

Albert after play opened. Armstrong batted the guy-rope in in a scramble in front of C. H. S. net. Mason was penalized for tripping Ibey, then evened the count when he batted in a rebound. Play ranged from end to end both goalies showing their worth. Mason put Albert in the lead on a solo rush. Albert continually pressing Irwin saved nicely. Ibey evened the count when he batted in a rebound in a scramble in front of the Albert net. McAvoy penalized for clashing. Armstrong penalized for heavy bodying.

End of 1st period 2-2.

Irwin saved nicely. C. H. S. were playing their positions much better than Albert. Eadie made a nice save on a combination attempt by C. H. S. Irwin saved again. Ibey hurt. Dewey penalized. Albert went right through only to have Irwin save.

End of 2nd period 2-2.

McAvoy penalized for tripping. Both teams were trying desperately for the one goal to win the game. Play ranged back and forth throughout both goalies making beautiful stops. Both teams nearly scored before the gong but nice saves prevented.

End of 3r period 2-2.

OVERTIME

1st 5 Minutes—Chant hurt. Davison hurt when he took a slide body check. He had to retire. Both teams showing the effects of a fast pace and were slowing up. Mason gave Albert what proved to be the winning goal on a solo rush just before the gong.

A. C. 3—C. H. S. 2.

2nd 5 minutes—Albert were never in danger in the last minutes of the game. Ibey was penalized for chopping. Albert playing defensive hockey throughout.

A. C. 3—C. H. S. 2.

Chronic constipation conquered by Nujol treatment, said doctors

Copyright 1926 Standard Oil Co. (N. J.)

WE asked leading doctors all over the country to how they treated chronic cases of constipation. 80.7% said they recommended the Nujol type of treatment.

Here is a typical answer taken at random from hundreds of interviews: "Where hard, dry impacted conditions are present an chronic constipation Nujol type of treatment is especially successful. Laxatives and cathartics do not tend to correct the causes of constipation. In their place I recommend an intestinal lubricant in all obstinate cases."

Doctors Advise Nujol

Nine doctors out of every ten told us they were advising the Nujol type of treatment for their patients in place of laxatives—and for these reasons:

1. Nujol is not habit-forming;
2. A more natural method;
3. A lubricant is better than a laxative;
4. Does not gripe;
5. Is not irritating; and 6. Nujol gives lasting relief.

Unlike Laxatives

Laxatives and cathartics act by irritating the intestinal tract. They cause the bowels to frantically expel the contents of the intestines and thus rid the system of the drugs that pills and potions contain.

Nujol acts entirely differently. It contains no drugs, no medicine. Its action is mechanical. It merely softens the dried waste matter in the intestines and lubricates the passage so that the muscles of the bowels can expel the waste matter regularly, naturally and thoroughly.

Nature-given Remedy

Nujol appeals to the medical men because it is a simple, scientific and safe remedy for constipation, no matter how severe the case may be. It is gentle in its action and pleasant to take. Children love it.

Get a bottle of Nujol from your druggist today. Doctors advise it for constipation whether chronic or temporary. Avoid substitutes.

CORONER'S JURY HOLDS 3 CRIMINALLY RESPONSIBLE

3 ARRESTS MADE IN MONTREAL'S THEATRE TRAGEDY; GRANTED BAIL

Jury Holds Proprietor, Manager and Ticket Taker Responsible

STAIRWAY BLOCKED

Arie Sent Back Some Children Who Were Almost Out

Montreal, Que., Jan. 14.—Ascen Lawand, proprietor of the Laurier Palace Theatre, Cagnille Basay, ticket taker and Michael Arie, house manager were arraigned on charges of manslaughter in police court here today, in connection with the fire and panic in their establishment last Sunday which resulted in the death of 76 children. The coroner's jury held them criminally responsible for the tragedy. Preliminary inquiry was set for July 21st and bail was allowed at $3,000 for Lawand and $2,000 each for the other two. They were released at noon.

BLOCKED STAIRWAY

Montreal, Jan. 14.—Roger Arpin, witness before the coroners jury which last evening held Ascen Lawand, owner of Laurier Palace Theatre, Camil Basay, an employee and Michel Arie, house manager, "criminally responsible" for the death of 78 children in Sunday's tragedy, declared that at the first cry of fire he rushed for the stairs and had descended only three steps when a man stretched out his arms and hindered the way at the same time yelling to the children to go back, that there was nothing to fear. He succeeded in overcoming the man, who, he said, nearly choked him.

Romeo Colin identified Michael Arie as the man who blocked the stairway. He also declared that Rose Champagne, one of the victims had been sent back by Arie after starting to descend the stairway.

Jean Louise Palardeau corroborated the evidence that the man had blocked the stairway.

They will appear again before the fire commissioner's inquiry which will be resumed this afternoon.

DEPORTING ALL R. C. PRIESTS

Reported Five Young Catholics Have Been Shot at Leon

Mexico City, Jan. 14.—Pursuant to its belief that priests are inciting the Roman Catholics to rebellion, the Government has decided to deport all priests captured leading rebels. The war department is instructing all military commanders to send arrested priests to the capital whence they will be sent abroad. It is reported that several priests were captured in the states of Jalisco and Coahuila are enroute to Mexico City. Four priests were placed aboard a steamer bound for New Orleans yesterday.

Charges of anti-Catholic persecution are made by the newspaper Excelsior which says it has reliable authority for the statement that five youths, none more than 20, were shot and killed at Leon last Monday.

WELL'S IS HERO TO BEAVERBROOK

London, January 14.—Lord Beaverbrook in a front page article in the Daily Express welcomes the return to journalism of H. G. Wells. Wells, of course, has contracted to write a series of articles for the New York Times on world affairs, which the Sunday Express will also print by arrangement with the New York Times. "One may disagree with him mildly or violently," writes Lord Beaverbrook of Wells, "but never for those who control his services for the supremacy of Bernard Shaw, one must admit him to be the greatest and most conservative writer of his age. He has found ideas always new and often true. I know this by personal experience. I have always sought him out and secured as much of his company as I could get. I have often had recourse to his facts and to the enormous output of his brain. I feel in listening to him much as a manufacturer would feel who saw an early genius assessing new machine engaged in mass production. Wells paid a visit to Russia and wrote a series of articles for the Sunday Express. They were the best special articles of their kind I ever read. They increased the net sale of the Sunday Express by eighty thousand.

EXPECT A TRADE AGREEMENT WITH NEW ZEALAND

Preliminaries Being Arranged With Premier Coates at Ottawa

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 14.—Preliminaries to a trade agreement between New Zealand and Canada, will, it is hoped, be concluded during the visit to Ottawa of Premier Coates, Canada, by order in council, recently extended to New Zealand the benefits of the tariff concessions granted to Australia under the Australian Trade Treaty but the idea is that trade relations between New Zealand and Canada may be still further developed. To this end, Premier Coates proposes, during his brief stay, to hold a preliminary discussions with the Canadian Government although there is no expectation that an actual treaty can be concluded finally with. In all probability, New Zealand will later send a delegation to Ottawa to discuss trade relations further and possibly conclude a definite agreement.

Premier Coates was the guest at luncheon today of Premier King. Tonight he will be the guest of the Government at dinner.

BRITISH DRAWING OUT OF THREE CHINESE PROV.

Nationalist Party Working For The Unification of China

Hankow, Jan. 14.—Kuomintang, or the Nationalist party, backing the Cantonese in their fight to put China under unified control, has set forth a bid for Soviet political advice as a power which "still eventually relieve all oppressed peoples of the earth". He made this statement in addressing a mass meeting last night, and warned the throng against the possibility of counter revolution against Nationalists. Although evacuation of foreigners from Hankow, Wuhsang and other points down the river from here was carried out with a minimum of delay, British authorities yesterday were confronted with a difficult problem in connection with the general evacuation order issued in respect of all British subjects in the interior of Szechwan, Hupeh and Hunan provinces.

Many refugees in three interior states have to journey hundreds of miles by slowest forms of transportation in order to reach the river where they are be ing put aboard ships. In addition to natural difficulties the British are being hindered in charitable tasks by interest of the liner unions up the river.

EXPECT TROUBLE

It is stated Mrs. Chaplin is prepared to furnish the names of the five women who referred to in her divorces petition as "publicity and privately" with the family according to the film comedian who said they were after his money and not the children! Chaplin declared he would fight to the bitter end for his children who he had seen once in the past five months. He intimated he had "plenty of grounds" on which he thought the court would award him custody of the babies.

He laughed at the reports that his fortune was estimated at sixteen million. "I would be well pleased if I had three or four millions" he said.

WARNS SOVIETS AGAINST BRITON

Moscow, Jan. 14.—Confessing that the world revolution had failed, but insisting it would come sooner or later, Nicolai Bukharin, President of the Communist party of Soviet Russia and a potent figure in Communist ranks speaking before Moscow Communist National party, reiterated the Bolshevik fear that European countries, inspired by Britain, were preparing war against the Soviet.

Such a conflict, he said, might begin in the spring and although the Government's policy was peaceful he exhorted the people to "prepare themselves for attack. The Communist party and Soviet, he continued always would defend the interests of oppressed nationals even if they lived in Soviet's colonies, oppressed by imperialistic Governments.

The Count will receive $312,500 from his wife's father, Col. Henry M. Rogers, American says, and will be given partial custody of his small son, Peter. INQUEST and leaving again. The witness said they had been keeping company for 18 years. He stated that he knew that both of them took a drink now and then.

Chief William Sale stated that he visited the garage and was met with the odor of carbon monoxide gas on the entrance. The bodies had been removed at that time. The gasoline tank was empty and the radiator was warm indicating that the engine had been running for some time. Two empty bottles and two other bottles partially filled with home brew were produced in court. The Chief said he found these bottles in the car. Another empty bottle was also shown.

The Chief said upon visiting the Crosby home he found several casks.

Thomas Simpson who was the first to discover the bodies was the next witness.

The door of the shop was locked, he said. He found Crosby in a sitting position and Miss Teal was behind the wheel with the man's coat thrown over their knees.

Dr. Johnston examined the bodies of the two deceased on the morning of January 5th at the Undertaker's, took the stand.

Dr. Johnston stated that carbon monoxide gas is very poisonous which was no doubt the cause of the death.

Leslie Brimmell who prepared the bodies for burial noticed the presence of red blotches on the skin which are prevalent in the case of gas poisoning. Brimmell who took charge of the bodies in the morning said he believed that they had died about midnight.

Henry Leffler stated that he assisted in removing the bodies. He described the position of the two in the car. Both were rigid when removed.

Jay Faulkner testified that he sold Crosby four gallons of gasoline on the day previous. He related one or his own experiences with the deadly monoxide gas.

EMMANUEL TREE FOR THE KIDDIES

Although delayed due to various causes, the annual Christmas treat at Emmanuel Church was a splendid success and the programme presented was undoubtedly the best ever given in the School. The pupils had been trained by their revered teachers and their additions were excellent, reflecting great credit upon those who had tirelessly prepared them for the big night of the year.

BASKETBALL

A fast game of basketball was played at the Y.M.C.A. yesterday evening when the twin bill postponed game between St. Andrew's and St. Michael's girls was played off, this was the deciding game for the title to "A" section of the ladies' church league series and it proved to be the best game of the whole series to date. The St. Andrew's girls were returned winners by a twenty-five to fourteen score but there did not appear to be even that much difference in the play and at intervals the losers had decidedly the upper hand. In the first and final periods the Michaelites outscored St. Michael's but the latter made a strong stand in the second period and the St. Andrew's girls were outscored 7 to 4.

A week ago last Thursday evening the St. Thomas' girls won from the Baptist girls a game which decided the title to "B" Group of the ladies' division and it remains for the winners of last night's fixture to play off with the St. Thomas' girls for the Church League Championship. It is quite probable that this game may be played on Wednesday the 19th. when it is expected that Phil Brocket, formerly of the local Y. and now with the Kingston Association, will bring up both basketball and volleyball teams for interassociation games.

The teams in last night's play:—
St. Michael's—Forwards, C. Cruell (7), A. Wilkins (7); Centres, P. Melchior and S. Melchior; Guards, L. Wilkins, L. Melchior, E. Whalen.
St. Andrew's—Forwards, M. Roberts (18), L. Curry (7); Centres, Pye Holway, S. Symons; Guards, M. Fairbairn, E. Boyle.
Referees—Miss N. Merry, R. Morden.

Mrs. J. A. McFee who has been undergoing treatment in the Belleville General Hospital following an accident in which her arm and wrist were broken, has returned to her home.

The condition of Mrs. J. R. Gorman is improved today.

POULTRY SHOW OVER
Belleville's 1927 Poultry Show wound up last evening with a large attendance and the judges were particularly well satisfied by the splendid birds exhibited in the different classes. Charles Tebworth's game fowl came in for considerable notice and the fine spirited birds were a feature of the show. Charles Webber, of the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, gave interesting demonstrations of the killing of fowl and the proper bleeding. His candling demonstration in which the correct and most up-to-date methods were demonstrated will prove a great help to the housewife in choosing fruits in eggs. He explained the American process of preserving eggs which deceives the most cautious buyers and showed how to guard against the deception.

"Let there be liberty in things essential—liberty in things not essential—charity in all."

TO-DAY'S THOUGHT

All other passions do occasional good, but, when pride puts in his word, everything goes wrong—Ruskin.

KEEP SMILING

"Smiles," they say, "are cheap." Smiles are nothing but cheap. They cost very often, complete forgetfulness of self; for a man silent upon his work, otherwise concerned with himself, finds it a difficult thing to smile. But, whatever it cost, a smile is worth more. A smile is an index to character. In it one finds at once what he is looking for in the spirit of man. A smile is a light in a window on a dark street; it is silent kindness. Smiling cures indigestion and softens sorrow. A man can smile, if he likes, when he feels bad. But he must keep on feeling as bad if he keeps on smiling. Nature will not let him. A scowl makes all the muscles in the body tense, so that they fight each other. A smile relaxes them, enables them to work more naturally. But the great virtue of a smile is in its effect on others. True, "a man may smile and smile and be a villain," but not often; and so are we made that even a villain is generally better liked than a minister who frowns. A smile is a passport to friendship. A smile is a cheque on the bank of good fellowship, payable to bearer. The New Year is the season to resolve to keep on smiling.

NOT TIME YET

Reuters a fiction often enough and it will pass into a fact. The assertion that United States capital controls Canadian industry has been made so often and so dogmatically that most people have come to accept it. Over in London, judging from their newspapers, it is an established belief. One journal, which ought to know better, went so far recently as to declare that control of the C.P.R. had passed to New York. Even Canadian newspapers overrate American investments.

What is the truth? It is not easy to get at, exactly. The reason is that no dependable record is available of a number of things necessary to accuracy. Such as private transfer of securities between one country and another, the loss of foreign investments in Canada, etc., etc. But in one respect—the most important one—statistics are available. They are the figures showing the distribution of securities in joint stock companies engaged in industrial enterprises in the Dominion. What they reveal is that United States capital in Canadian industry is not one-half of Canadian cap ital, and less than 4 per cent. of combined Canadian and British capital. The figures are:

Canadian	$2,463,784,650
United States	1,194,000,000
British	522,000,000

And there is one other important fact often lost sight of. It is that when it comes to the great industry of agriculture, Canadian ownership is almost 100 per cent.

NEEDLESS FATALITIES

Almost never is a level crossing accident inevitable, but during 1926 the lives of 127 persons were sacrificed on crossings throughout the Dominion to speed and carelessness. The great majority of these accidents involved collisions between automobiles and trains, and in every case the motor car came off a very bad second.

If common sense and realization of the responsibility for the safety of others in the car as well as his own life are not sufficient to induce the motorist to take adequate precautions at level crossing, however bad, that cannot be done in the matter. There is no excuse, however bad, that cannot be calculated in perfect safety if the driver stops to reconnoitre before he passes the railroad tracks. This practice does not cause delay, but it saves many a funeral.

Regulations and laws cannot solve the difficulty, though perhaps they are of some assistance in fixing definitely the legal status of the parties to a crossing mishap. Equipment of all crossings with gates or other protective devices would be a vast undertaking of tremendous cost. It is the boast of manufacturers that motor cars are fool proof, but they are not proof against a fool driver, and it is only through education of the motorist with the express train complex that the present appalling death rate can be curtailed.

OLD PAPER

An interesting announcement is made by the publisher of the New York Times Hero-after there will be issued, for the use of public libraries and other institutions which may wish to keep files of the paper for future reference, a limited number of copies of each edition printed on rag paper. The reason for this is that in a few years ordinary newsprint made of woodpulp rots and crumbles, and the newspapers of today cannot be preserved long. The only hope of having them still in existence a generation hence is to print them on paper which will endure, as the publisher of the New York Times proposes doing.

His plan is suggestive of much. It makes one think of the huge amount of printed matter—books and monthly periodicals as well as daily newspapers—which is doomed to speedy decay. By far the greater part of the literature of today will in a few years be as though it had never been; it will have utterly disappeared, because the paper on which it is printed will have become dust. Only a small remnant which is deemed worth preserving in de luxe editions printed on good paper will survive. And among the rubbish which is not worth living there will doubtless be some masterpieces which the undiscerning taste of the time rejected or neglected—for it has often happened that the world has failed to appreciate its literary geants until after their death.

Two or three thousand years from now there will be no such exhaustive and illuminating records of our time as those which the ancient Babylonians left of their time on clay cylinders covered with hieroglyphics, or even the later Egyptians on their rolls of papyrus.

OTHER MEN'S THOUGHTS

Mrs. McPherson bills herself as an evangelist. It is said of her that she has pulpit personality developed to the highest degree. But Mrs. McPherson must know that those who will flock to her lectures will not be attracted through the turnstiles by the hope of getting spiritual solace; They will be there to get a look at the woman who the police prosecutor of California charged way her Bible for a few weeks and carried on an illicit love affair with Kenneth O. Ormiston.

The success of this lecture tour will not be gauged by the number who profess themselves at the penitents' bench but by the box-office receipts. That Mrs. McPherson will play to capacity business at each and every performance is regrettably something that can be taken for granted, but the churches wherein the old-fashioned Gospel is preached will have no overflow to cope with.—Hamilton "Spectator."

For so accomplished and experienced a politician as he is reckoned, Mr. Lloyd George has in fact made two profound mistakes in his dealings with Liberalism ever since the War. Both are to some extent the consequences of his position during the later stages of that great struggle, when party politics largely disappeared and the whole nation stood willingly behind the resource: the driving power, and the physical resilience which made him an admirable Prime Minister for an abnormal situation. In the first place, he has always rated far too highly the influence of popular demonstrations in constituting a leader.

It is not the crowd, but the politicians, who make a leader in the last resort; and Mr. Lloyd George has palpably failed to maintain the personal confidence of the men who have worked with him round a table. In the second place he has been too manifestly anxious to establish relations with other parties—any party—that would add numerical strength, or at least give the power of bargaining, to the depleted Liberal forces.—London Eng. "Times."

HAVE YOU HEARD THESE?

"But, madam," the lawyer's clerk explained to a film actress aghast, "the law compels me to record all previous marriages before I issue a license."

"Good heavens!" exclaimed her prospective husband, "and I've got a taxi waiting."

"What do you think of your new neighbor?" asked the young wife.

"Wasn't very favorably impressed," returned the husband. "Beastly lot of old rubbish in the moving van."

"Oh, but we must ask them in to dinner this evening," remonstrated the young wife.

"Whatever for?"

"Well, you see, the butcher by mistake left their joint here, and it seems only proper that they should come!"

Doctor—"I can't cure your husband of talking in his sleep."

Wife—"But can't you give him something to make him talk more distinctly?"

"Why do you keep two delivery boys here, Mr. Brown?"

"Oh, I send out one to find the other one."

To Banish COUGHS COLDS and BRONCHIAL TROUBLES Take Peps

PEPS tablets give off agreeable and highly germicidal fumes that bathe the throat and breathing passages and allay soreness and inflammation and ward off dangerous colds and chills.

By treating the throat and bronchials direct, Peps are ahead of druggy mixtures. Their pleasant balsamic nature and freedom from opiates make Peps safe and ideal even for children and weak-chested old folk.

When shopping a Peps in the mouth soothes the throat and relieves that annoying and persistent cough.

News Of Movies

BELLE THEATRE

The vaudeville Belle Isle Marauders threatened to give more trouble than a long string of Soviet Russia during the fanatic action of "The Isle of Hope," latest release, which is now being shown at the Belle Theatre. With nothing but a day on shore between ports, a mutiny on board, a sunken vessel, a shipwreck on a desert island, a beautiful girl who lives alone in a ruined old castle, a pirate's treasure stored in the dungeons, and plenty of fighting, Dick is an idle young man, suffering from sleeping sickness. The scorching adventures of a Conrad and a Robert Louis Stevenson combined seem to have been wrapped up by James Bell Smith, who wrote the story, and delivered to director Jack Nelson for development.

CAPITOL THEATRE

Leave it to Bebe Daniels to turn forth with something new! Fans have learned to expect naiveness, an dainty and charming as ever, is with us again—this time with a comedy that should win an honorary degree.

That's the reaction one gets from her latest production, "The Campus Flirt," which opened at the Capitol Theatre last night.

Bebe's story concerns itself with the adventures of a college girl who "hits hats" everyone failing to come up to her own ridiculous standard of beauty, subsequently is attacked at the hands of her fellow students provides one with a laugh each second.

How she finally wins Charles Paddock, "world's fastest human," playing a featured role; how she refuses to "flirt" with him in a local "hick" country of a hundred other situation will keep you in hysterics. El Brendel's inimitable escorting Andy Mumkin, his pet mouse, is a comedy classic. James Hall, the third featured player, makes a creditable screen debut.

"The Campus Flirt," directed by Clarence Badger, sparkles with genius and originality throughout. Photographed at the University of California, its track meet scenes are gripping as their thrilling realism.

The large Wurlitzer at the Capitol last night rendered a 100 to 4th chapter of the exciting serial film, "The Silent Flyer"—a thrilling story of the frozen north, which is becoming more interesting each week.

Another good comedy, several sport reels, and the Capitol Symphony Orchestra complete an unusually good bill at the Capitol—one that you shouldn't miss.

FAMILIAR TO MILLIONS A LANDMARK OF THE YEARS

Millions who have never visited England could recognize at a glance the Houses of Parliament standing grimly at the Thames-side. The Mother of Parliaments is known affectionately by people the world over.

The trapper in his hut and the lady in her limousine; the lumberman of the forests and the jewelled darling of fashion think of her as a bulwark, never changing, always steadfast.

So it is with H.P. Sauce to which the Houses gave their name. It is found on the table in palaces and

East and the West, the North and the South, and wherever H.P. is seen, here on the bottle is the Mother of Parliaments. Changes occur and old landmarks go, but H.P. Sauce remains high in popularity and the reason for this is the universal knowledge that it is absolutely pure and guaranteed free from preservatives.

Whenever you say Grill a steak or grocer's shop, you see—H.P. Sauce, and you are reminded of the Houses of Parliament. H.P. symbolises them—unvarying and dependable always.

LEADERSHIP OF "BIG SIX" GROUP STAKED TONIGHT

Cornwall Team Coming Up Full of Confidence For Big Game

The Belleville Arena will be the scene of the annual battle between the Cornwall and Belleville teams tonight. It looms up as one of the hockey thrills of the current season. The flying Frenchmen are coming up at full strength led by the well-known Ralph Tilden. If one may judge from the present season record of the two the locals have the edge. Belleville defeated Queen's by the one-sided score of 15-2 and Cornwall were only able to trim R.M.C. 7-4 and then night before last the Tricolor won from the Cadets 6-4.

Extraordinary—that's the values. Dependable — the quality, at Ritchie's Stock Reducing Sale.

However, one cannot judge by scores alone in doping out the situation.

There are still a few reserve seats left, reports Manager Thomas and these are still available at his downtown store.

The Easterners have a smart club from goal to subs, and the locals will need to be going at top speed to beat them. If they step along as well as in the Queen's game, they should win tonight. Th Maroons will be at full strength. "Doc" Whalen contracted a kink in his shoulder in Wednesday night's practice, but this will probably be ironed out in time for tonight's encounter.

Ernie Parks, formerly of Kitchener Seniors is billed to referee. Parks is rated as a high-class official and will make the boys play hockey all the way.

The teams will probably line up something like this:

Belleville		Cornwall
Bowen	Goal	Tilton
F. Goyer	Defence	Gillis
Green		M. Conlan
L. Goyer	Centre	Tilton
Hagerman	Wings	Art Conlan
Whalan		Pennie
Hilliard	Subs	James
Prechette		Joe Conlan

RECREATION BOWLING

The American Optical Girls and the Wanderers played off for the Fall League leadership as both teams were tied with 26 points each, and when the smoke of battle had cleared both teams were at the same place as when they started with two wins each. The Optical Girls got away to a good start by winning the first game by 41 pins and adding another 56 in the second game, giving them the first two points, but in the third game the Wanderers came to life and won out by 120, giving them two points as they won on the total score by only 3 pins, the last game another game in the near future. Miss Goyer was the highest bower with 626 for the Wanderers and Mrs. Rogers was the highest for the Optics.

The Senior League games were played in the Men's League last night and all proved to be interesting affairs. In the first game the Ontarios and Recreations were on the card. The Recreations won the first game by rolling 1072 but after that the Ontarios had the upper hand and won three points. Foster being the best bowler with 646.

The Ponies were the only senior team last night to count four points and the only team to roll over the 1,000 mark. The Ravers were the Ponies' opponents and could not seem to get going, but at that rolled close to 2900. High bowlers were A. Whalen and T. R. Barrett.

The Alemite and Carthage had quite a battle, the Alemite counting their only point in the first game, but losing the next two and the total, the Carthage rolling 1527 in the third game. Yerex was the big noise of the night with 699 for the Carthage and Anderson was next with 645.

RECORD NUMBER OF LIVES LOST R. R. CROSSINGS

During 1926 There Were 127 Killed and 367 Were Injured

The level crossings of Canada took the lives of 127 persons during 1926, and caused injuries to 367 others, according to statistics compiled by The Journal from the monthly returns issued by the Railway Board. There were reported to Board a total of 287 crossing accidents, and in 229 of them automobiles were involved. It is interesting to recall that as recently as 1912 there was not a crossing accident in all Canada in which a motor car was concerned.

In the last 12 months, 22 passengers were killed on Canadian railroads and 334 passengers were injured. In the same period 128 employes were killed and 1,741 were injured, and "others" killed totalled 276 and injured, 555, this classification including the victims of railway crossings.

Altogether there were reported the Board by Canadian railways accidents involving the deaths of 426 persons and injuries to 2,639 others. Fatalities were much higher than in the two preceding years and are believed to set a record. In 1911 the total of deaths was 318, made up of 17 passengers, 107 employes and 194 others; while in 1925 the number was reduced to 272, with only six passengers, 76 employes and 190 others killed.

The deaths on public highway crossings also showed a great advance in 1926. The highest previous figure, 94, was set in 1924. In 1921 there were 70 persons killed on crossings, in the next year the number dropped to 66 and in 1923 to 64. During 1925 the death list was 76.

In the first four months of last year there were only 13 crossing fatalities and in the first half of the year only 32. But during the last six months of the year 94 persons were killed, to bring the total to 127 and a new high record. The great majority of the dead were drivers of our passengers in motor cars which disputed the right of way with railway trains. The occasional buggy, wagon or sleigh was in trouble, but their total was not large.

Gates, Bells, Insufficient

A large proportion of crossing accidents occurred at unprotected intersections although the records show that gates, bells and watchmen are not sufficient in all cases to keep the footbarby beyond the danger line.

In December no passengers were killed, but 27 were injured; 11 employes were killed and 189 injured; 23 others were killed and 48 injured. There were reported 25 crossing accidents, in 20 of which automobiles were involved, with 19 deaths and 23 injured persons.

SCORING HONORS

Not including Wednesday's game Tilton of Cornwall and "Cully" Goyer of Belleville are the leading scorers in the group, each having counted six times, though Goyer has the better record as his half-dozen tallies were made in two games. Joe Smith and "Chummy" Lawlor are the leading Kingston goal-getters, while Clarke has proven the best sniper of the R. M. C. team. The scorers are as follows:

G. Goyer (Belleville)	6
Tilton (Cornwall)	6
Smith (Kingston)	4

FAREWELL PARTY GIVEN OLD NEIGHBORS LEAVING

A very enjoyable evening was spent on December 21, 1926, when about seventy friends and neighbors gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Colden, 8th Concession Township, to give a farewell party for Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Colden.

An appropriate address was read by Mrs. Robert Coupland and Mr. John Goodfellow presented Mr. and Mrs. Colden with a purse. Both parties replied, thanked their friends and neighbors in a few well chosen words and cordially invited them to visit them at their new home in Belleville.

A dainty luncheon was served after which dancing followed until the wee small hours of the morning.

Following is the address:

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Colden.

We, your friends and neighbors of this community have gathered at your old home tonight to spend one more, pleasant evening with you, not only for pleasure, but with regret for you leaving our neighborhood.

We know you are not going so far from us, but that we can see you often, but it is from our midst we will miss you where we have always found you both ready and willing to give a helping hand to those in need.

To show our appreciation for your past and our regret of you leaving us, we ask you to accept this purse with our best wishes for your future success in your new business and may it often remind you of your old friends and neighbors of this community.

Some of us remember, and some of us forget,
But for you within our hearts there is a warm spot yet.

Signed on behalf of your friends and neighbors

BEYOND ALL DREAMS

"Well now, monsieur," she said speaking English, "now you will consent to take me with you and to point out the chief beauties of each picture as we go along."

Donald at once consented, and with a good grace. He was naturally pleased at the attention to art women. And instinct told him that the way to get introduced to the fair princess was after all by means of this strange, vain, wealthy governess.

So, with the utmost alacrity, he held out his arm to Mlle Bateman to lead on, and he began to explain the different pictures, and to discourse of the various artists in a way that charmed her; for this lady was anxious to acquire as much surface knowledge of all things as possible. She wished to make a show, and appear, in the eyes of strangers always as a most highly cultivated and accomplished person. Here was not a genuine love of art; but a genuine desire to appear full of art knowledge, and she was clever in adapting what she heard, and in giving out the opinions of the really learned, as her own.

So Renfrew talked of Leonardo, and Michael Angelo, and Correggio, as only true painters talk, and Miss Bateman listened, and expressed her rapture, and asked him in the midst if it was his intention to dine in the salon of Madame Arbell that evening.

Before he could reply, they came suddenly upon Marie and the princess. They were watching the efforts of a young lady who was copying the "Broken Pitcher"—"Cruche Casse" — of Greuze.

It is charming!" cried Marie. "It is like the expression of—"

She paused, and turned red.

There was Miss Bateman, mistress of her and less for that winter, at least—there was Miss Bateman, looking upon the arm of the handsome artist, who was the insolent enough to be in love with the princess.

"Mais madame——" she began.

Now, Miss Bateman had not reckoned upon meeting her pupil in the Louvre. She had made a visit to the Rue de Varennes, and to the mansion of the countess, of whom she had spoken to Ariel, and she was the bearer of an invitation for Ariel and herself to attend a splendid ball on the next Wednesday. Elated at the prospect of fashionable gaieties, in which her soul delighted, Miss Bateman had strolled into the Louvre to spend all idle hour before it was time to return and dress for dinner.

Marie, meanwhile, had been busily engaged in telling the painter was madly desperately in love with her, that though a gentleman by birth, he was poor, and a soldier, and that she must not look at him—must not think of him.

"Then she talk to me of him, my angel Marie," asked the young lady, with a smile.

Happening to raise her eyes, she saw her very worldly—we governess be—ing on the stone, slender arm of Donald Renfrew. The faintest color dyed her clerk for a moment; but she smiled her welcome.

"Have you been long here?" she asked. "Ah! about an hour."

Miss Bateman had not asked Ariel to know how intimate she was with the handsome artist; but she could not be helped—and since Mrs. Bateman began to think Donald one of the most agreeable young men she had ever met in her life; since, also, she did not wish to lose his society, she was weak enough to do what she had refused to do for Ariel—she had referred to the past—to a moment of wounded folly, as she used to say afterward.

She introduced him to Ariel.

"This Princes Ariel, is a very excellent painter, Monsieur Renfrew, who is kind enough to instruct me as to the beauties of the various pictures."

Ariel bowed, smiled, did not look in the least degree confused, she looked turned crimson, and then pale, with emotion.

"What magnificence of coloring in the Meeting of Cesaro!" cried out Miss Bateman.

And then she went on talking at a desperate rate, repeating all that Donald had said.

She still firmly held his arm. She did not suffer him to speak to Ariel; but, indeed, it seemed to your Donald that he walked like one in a dream through all those vast galleries of art. There was the chattering, middle-aged woman on his arm, and ancel of him walked the dream-maiden —for so he always called Ariel in his thoughts—trapped in her mantle of velvet and fur, erect, the turn of the head, the glimpse now and anon of the pure, pale profile. Will he ever forget his sensation as he followed in her steps "so near, and yet so far?" Will she give him one more look?

She did at last, one smiling and sweet but cold, he fancied, as the sunshine gleaming on the winter snow.

"If monsieur," she said, speaking in clear, dulcet tones, "would like to see the sketch I have made for a picture, he might point out my faults and give me advice."

"You are to take lessons in Italian painting, and sinning. Of course, monsieur, as an artist, has no time to give lessons," said Miss Bateman thoughtfully; "otherwise——"

She paused. She was doing a very foolish thing, and she knew it; at the same time she was getting every moment more and more fascinated with Renfrew. She wished him, to be her friend—nothing more, of course; the disparity of years forbade the thought—so she told herself; still, her friend he must be, and if he came daily to instruct Ariel he would become the friend of the family, and she really felt lonely and friendless in that huge, cold, cities ing Paris.

In a recent New York furor among the uptown dressmakers of southern wear fashions, nude is mentioned without exception as the shade most in demand for day-time wear and in many instances it is described as taking the place of white, the neutral shade being considered more becoming to a larger majority of women. It is chosen in sports and more formal wear.

OPTOMISTIC REPORT BELLEVILLE'S CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OUTLINED

A Year of Solid Progress in The City's History Reviewed

ANNUAL MEETING

Manager J. O. Herity Outlines Splendid Prospects for 1927

Bringing to a fitting conclusion its efforts for the year just ended, and with a resume of its varied accomplishments, the Commerce officers, members of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce assembled last evening in the Chamber of Commerce Rooms for their annual meeting.

Gracing in retrospect with the Capable Manager Mr. Owen Herity, over the progress Belleville has made during 1926—as outlined in the report submitted at the meeting—one could not but be struck with the realization that if the Chamber of Commerce, Belleville is fortunate in having an organization which during the year has accomplished an immense part for the good of the City—a unit whose value is far reaching and in-estimable.

Obvious was many evident to the members attending last night's gathering—the Chamber of Commerce is our best means of representative expression of civic development. Through the active participation of several hundred public spirited citizens of Belleville is this organization, un- which is non sectarian, non political and non partisan, is the progressive mind of the community which has given efficient support and direction.

In the absence of the President Elect Mr. F. W. Ward, Alderman A. H. Collins occupied the chair and in the course of his opening address compliment ed the retiring officials on their work throughout the past year, expressing the opinion that if 1927 were as productive of results as the year just ended, then Belleville was in a fairway to a marked advancement in business and industry and civic improvements in every line.

Increased Membership

Following the addresses of the retiring President Chas. Hynes, and the President Mr. F. W Ward, Mr. Owen Herity read and expounded upon a detailed report of the work of the Chamber of Commerce, during other things, Mr. Herity stressed the need for an increased membership if the organization is to accomplish anything, and every one the projects contemplated.

A get together banquet is being planned for January 20th, when the County Council will be entertained by the members of the City Council and Chamber of Commerce. It is proposed to have the Hon. M. R. Motherwell address the gathering.

New members admitted to the Chamber of Commerce last night included Messrs W. A. McMillan, T. A. Hutchinson and T. M. Webster.

Hold Meeting

It was suggested by Mr. John Elliott that the Chamber of Commerce during the coming year conduct a series of educational meetings for the purpose of providing members and citizens generally with information regarding the aims and ideals of the Chamber of Commerce and that prominent speakers be secured to address these meetings, that citizens of Belleville having a knowledge of what is being done in other centres might take a great interest in the work of bettering their city, and of making it an ideal place in which to work and to live.

PRES. ED. WORTH ASKS SUPPORT

Having been honored by being elected President of the Chamber for the year 1927, I welcome such an appointment as an opportunity to serve the community. Knowing from personal experience the efficient manner that prospective industries are taken care of I can with not hesitation recommend the advantages of locating here in Belleville.

I visualize the Chamber as an institution which should encourage further industrial development, enter to the needs of those already here and assist any new ones that will put our city on a higher place. Every business or professional man should be a member. WE NEED YOU, WE WANT YOU, not only your financial assistance but your helpful suggestions or constructive criticism.

I appeal in one and all for your hearty co-operation so that we may create for Belleville her share of that prosperity which every industrious shows is coming Canada's way in 1927.

F. W. WORTH.

PAST PRESIDENT HANNA'S SPEECH

In laying down the gavel as President of the Chamber of Commerce for 1926, I desire to thank my fellow directors, for their courtesy and assistance and for the generous interest they have taken in the affairs that help to make Belleville a better city, both industrially and socially. We have met problems and difficulties during the past year with an average attendance of 81 per cent.

ALAN SPRAGUE WINS THE SENIOR ORATORICAL CONTEST OF B.H.S.

Florence Barber Best of Junior Students — Many Fine Speeches

A good sized crowd, excellent oratory and some fine entertainment featured the H.ph School Oratorical contest held in the City Hall last night. The contest was held under the auspices of the Literary Society of Belleville High School and the speakers winning the Junior and Senior awards were: Florence Barber and Alan Sprague.

The Belleville H.ph School furnished snappy music at different intervals throughout the evening, and a very clever little entertainment was supplied by a "Uuriole Gang" who sang a collection of modern songs.

Another enjoyable feature of the evening was a little playlet put on by the Intra Murals, entitled the "Hoodlie System."

The Speakers

The Junior speakers and their subjects were—Betty Burnough, "Book Friends" Florence Barker, "Influence of Music," Catherine Gallagher, "1927—Valuable Year," and Arnold Brown, "Mussolini."

The senior speakers were—D. Smith "Ancient and Modern Means of Transportation." Alan Sprague, "Contribution of Canada to Constitutional History." Albert Burke, "Good Citizenship and Its Development." Walter Prentice, "How best to Preserve World Peace."

16 BELOW

While most of the citizens would have been willing to bet the mercury dropped to about 25 below zero last night, 16 below was actually the lowest level the silver thread hit. Many unofficial thermometers showed from 18 to 20, but all gradually moved up to zero about 11 o'clock.

VACCINATION IS ONLY METHOD TO CHECK SMALLPOX

Dr. Cronk, M.O.H., Urges the Necessity of Preventing Epidemic

In connection with the present appearance of small pox in the city and surrounding country, a letter from Dr. C. B. Cronk, Medical Health Officer, is timely and should be carefully read.

There is nothing like an epidemic here and no cause for alarm, but it is advisable that everyone should recognize the symptoms and know the correct methods of combating this dread disease. The letter follows:

Dr. Cronk's Letter

The Citizens of Belleville,

At this season of the year when small pox is so prevalent throughout the country, a few words concerning this disease may not be amiss.

Small pox is a highly contagious disease, characterized at the onset by severe headache, pain in back, vomiting and a high fever. This condition lasts from three to six days, when the rash appears, the fever goes and the patient feels better it is then that the rash appears, first as small red spots which in a few days become papular and later form a crust. The incubation period, that is, the time between the patient is exposed until he becomes ill, is from nine to fifteen days, usually about twelve. The infectious one of the serious problems in controlling the disease as a person may be exposed and travel across the continent before becoming ill. No one can afford to have small pox both from a social and an economic point of view. Society can ban an outcast and the marks or pitting from the pustules on the skin may persist for life.

Economically no one can afford to be away from business three or four weeks or perhaps have their business closed for that period of time to say nothing of the hardship this may inflict on others.

Small pox is a preventable disease and no one in this day need have it, the statistics often show that during many years and in a large percentage of cases gives immunity for life. It is a safe and simple procedure and at the worst only causes discomfort for a day or two with a little fever and soreness around the vaccinated area and with the great percentage of cases there is no reaction at all. We owe it to ourselves and our families to see that we and they are protected by vaccination and we also owe this to the community in which we live.

Sincerely,

G. S. CHONK,
M.O.H., City of Belleville.

KIT KAT MEMBERS HAD TO APPEAR IN COURT

London, Jan. 13.—Nearly three-score fashionably dressed men and women today crowded the Marlborough Street Police Court and tried to look dignified as they answered charges of violating the liquor laws at the well-known secret night club, "Kit Kat," in Haymarket.

Police raided the club on December 11 and summoned the manager and secretary and nearly sixty members, mainly for the alleged consumption of alcoholic liquors after the hours prescribed by law.

Some of the members pleaded not guilty and their cases were adjourned, while others entered guilty pleas and paid fines of £10.

The "Kit Kat" Club's membership includes peeresses, dukes, cabinet ministers and members of Parliament.

Toronto, Jan. 15.—The bite-tempered regions of southern Ontario were comparatively balmy in contrast with the northern frigidness of famous White River, Ont., where early this morning a temperature of 50-below zero was unofficially reported.

At the same time Toronto and district experienced an unusual drop. Private thermometers registered from ten to fifteen below zero in various parts of the city. Listless housekeepers found an epidemic of burst milk bottles and garage and motor repair shops were especially busy. Fuel men were swamped with orders. The cold wave came down last night with a bitter wind from the north. Out door sleepers were driven home early. Old timers seemed to have tired or spent his strength on the way down. At Lake Simcoe it was 30 below, at Rosedale Hill 10 below, while at St. Catharines, on the sunnier side of Lake Ontario only four below was reported. Western Ontario offered more temperature at from two to twelve below zero.

RUNAWAY YOUTH FOUND WORKING NEAR KINGSTON

Trenton Boy Got Job With Farmer — Back Home

Ernest Brown, thirteen-year-old son of Mr. David Brown, 102 Pinnacle, who preferred to wrest a living from the world to returning to school and to departed from home two weeks ago, was found working on a farm six miles from home last night. The lad, according to his story, upon leaving Trenton headed East, stopping off at Kingston where a search for work proved fruitful, securing a job on a farm.

The boy's absence has caused considerable anxiety to his parents and a wide search was instituted. As date passed with no word from the boy who had taken only $10 with him, the family became alarmed and they were much relieved this morning when Chief Bain of Trenton notified them that the errant youth had been found.

The property of Ernest was delivered through the Kingston Police Force to the C.N.R. station where he discovered the little fellow hanging about apparently friendless. He questioned the boy and learned that he was a runaway, and when the friendly host had suggested that he return to his parents he protested and stated that he wished to remain with his present employer. Chief of Police Robinson of Kingston communicated with Chief Trenton department and Chief Bain advised him to hold the boy who was escorted home today by his sister.

Chief Robinson had read in The Intelligencer of the boy's disappearance and had subsequently maintained a strict watch for him.

PULLETS LAYING BIG EGGS; BRING REGULAR PRICES

Selling as Firsts at Fifty to Fifty-five Cents Dozen

Pullets in this vicinity have made a record for themselves and on the market this morning their eggs were in so large they sold as first class, bringing 50 and 55 cents a dozen. One woman who had a large flock of pullets eggs stated that she had no apology to make in asking the price of twenty eggs as the dealers paid the price, gauging them as firsts. Butter sold at 55 cents a pound and a large quantity was brought in. Cream sold at 30 cents a pint and honey at 20 cents a comb. Chickens were reasonable, selling at 75 cents each, some very large ones at $1.00.

Outside Market

The outside market, unlike the inside department, was quite small as few apples and vegetables being offered and a small quantity of meat. Apples, due to the mild weather and favorable weather anxiety to get off the market, were reasonable, selling at 25 cents a bushel for splendid eating varieties. Potatoes were sold at 25.00 a bag and cabbages at 10 cents each.

CHRIST CHURCH A.Y.P.A. GIVE SPLENDID PLAYLET

"The Bells of St. Mary", a pretty and clever playlet put on by the girls of the A.Y.P.A. of Christ Church in the Parish Hall last evening was a great success and attended by an almost capacity house. The girls taking part all displayed excellent stage presence and a keen sense of humor which put the play over in excellent style.

In the mock wedding Gertrude Ketcheson acted the part of the bride with good effect, Helen Symons took the part of the groom in a talented manner, Kae Symons made a charming flower girl and Kathleen Trump played the part of the father excellently. Miss Marvin Meeck was splendid in the part of the best man. Misses Margaret Christie, Ruth Twining, Neil Perry Bowen, K. Beare and Lela Thompson were the pretty bridesmaids.

A chorus of the boys and girls was a splendid feature and piano accompaniments by Miss Margaret Symons were appreciated.

In the second playlet "Fifty Minutes to Play" Mrs. Ketcheson, Misses Janice Adams, Peg Jenks, Margaret Gymer, Madeline Bell, Ada Edwards and Lela Thomson played the various parts splendidly.

CHARLIE FEELS HURT OVER HIS WIFE'S CHARGES

New York, N.Y., Jan. 15.—Charles Spencer Chaplin is ready to fight for his Children and will answer his wife's charges in a counter suit for divorce, it was learned this afternoon when he arrived here yesterday from the Pacific Coast, placed upon his wife's facts by the blame for the former's "cruelty, terrible accusations" made against him in the divorce charges filed by his wife, Mrs. Grey Chaplin.

It's cruel and unjustified—this onslaught on me," he said. "I can't understand all this bitterness, except that I know it has been instigated by my wife's family; she must be devoid of feeling. I love my children.

"The unfair, malicious and wholly untrue statements of Mrs. Chaplin," said Chaplin's lawyer, "furnish sufficient grounds for a suit for divorce for cruel and inhuman treatment."

Mr. Walter Turner Made President — W. H. Robb Presents Paintings

NO MONEY NO FIGHT: ARMY WANTS BACK PAY

Shanghai, Jan. 15.—An uncensored Reuter's despatch from Hankow today indicated that the closing of British banks and other business institutions there as the result of the anti-foreign riots has placed the Cantonese Government in a deeper state situation. The ensuing reaction cut off a big source of funds for the Cantonese, which collected taxes on business transactions.

With the Chinese New Year, February 7, approaching, when ages in long custom demands settlement of all debts, the Nationalist troops of many provinces were said to be demanding their pay, long years in arrears.

The Cantonese were reported desperately trying to persuade the British to resume business and make possible a continuance of Hankow's economic life. The correspondent declares the Southerners have found the British concession, which they triumphantly took over, a "white elephant". Closing of the British Banks stopped the money promising source of nationalist revenue and now there is no business to tax.

Portions of the Cantonese Army in Kangsi province have revolted because of non-payment of wages and troops from Canton, the cradle of the Nationalist movement, are refusing to advance toward Chekiang Province, one of the goals of the Southerners, until their arrears are paid.

NO MURDER AT STAR'S CHANGE IN PRO. TENNIS

Monte Carlo, Jan. 15.—Rumors of a defection from the ranks of amateur tennis has not caused the slightest ripple of notice along the riviera.

Leading club secretaries soon after the season did the right thing by the "Amateur Laws." They sincerely believe she was at the top of her game last season and that another year would have seen her fighting hard to keep her title.

"If Suzanne can come home and settle in 1926 with an income of $5,000 a year, there is no one who would question her move," one said. The difference regarding amateur standing, however, are serious matters.

The Riviera, fonts world looks on as the most wonderful and accomplished in working overtime to check up on the activities of the various play ers in order to avoid any further trouble.

fervent Prohibitionist, who prided so much about their principles, had nothing to say about Mr. McKenzie King's actions in appointing as Senators recently Mr. Cavanagh, a prominent brewer and Mr. Hugh Guthrie, a rabid anti-booze leader. Particularly he addressed his remarks to the local Ministerial Association which body he characterized as a semi-political organization.

Mr. Reid urged that the moral of the people be kept at the right pitch even though no election was imminent.

Mr. R. Tamosen

before the election of officers Mr. W. Ev. Tamosen M.P., spoke for about twenty minutes, giving a brief picture of present conditions in the House. Conservative members, he said, were a fighting body and the King Government would have some explaining to do." The House was more than a little curious about the Premier's course at the Imperial Conference and a question would be asked in the coming session which Mr. King might find embarrassing. "Ernie" Tamosen has not lost his grip on the affection of the party by any means, if last night's reception means anything.

R. C. GREEN WINS PRAISE IN GUELPH

The Guelph press have appeared recently to use very complimentary references to the work of Mr. Reginald Green, who assumed the position of organist and choir director of St. George's Church of that city, after occupying a similar position for a good number of years at St. George's Church here, and, taking a very prominent part in musical affairs in the city. The following extract is gleaned from an account of the Christmas services in Guelph St. George's Church: "The chief feature in the services was the singing of a number of boys that have for months been training under the supervision of Mr. R. G. Green. The boys, some of them very young, sang correctly. They took a solo part in the anthem and their voices rang out in such a way as to make every head in the pews observe a tone, rarely heard on this side of England. If they represent the beginning of Mr. Green's training with the boys' voices, Guelph can look forward to some wonderful work in the future and those boys are fortunate who can get a place in the class under the direction. The frequent presence of a number of Guelph's musical people proves that the organist of St. George's must be living up to his reputation, and is producing something worth-while from his wonderful instrument."

And also the following: "The first of a series of organ recitals by Mr. R. G. Green in St. George's Church on Saturday afternoon created a wonderful success. The attendance was more than the most sanguine anticipated. Many coming to hear the performance and many others attracted by the reputation of the organist. Everyone was very much pleased with the recital. They had had an hour crowded with the most wonderful music. The lighter parts of Mr. Green's program found an appreciative audience. It was in Bach's "Fugue in G Major" and in Sibelius' "Finlandia" that he excelled. It is most fortunate that St. George's Church and the city of Guelph have been able to secure the services of an organist with Mr. Green's modest ability.

R. G. Green is a son of Rev. A. L. Green, of Belleville.

ment be their association in the same capacity, would be behind the organization in any progressive steps suggested. He thought that an educational committee to take up educational questions with the teachers of the school should be appointed.

In nominating Inspector I. J. Lyons to the position of Treasurer, the nomination assured him of the backing and sympathy he might look for from the League.

Some Plans

Upon the announcement by Dr. Malott that Mr. Harrison P. Lewis, chief magistrate and officer for Ontario and Quebec, would speak at a public meeting to be held in Bridge Street Sunday School on January 18th, the assembly was asked to get behind the meeting and interest as many friends as possible in the promised lecture which was certain to be of great interest and value to naturalists.

It was decided that the League should meet in club rooms which had been adopted in the Bell Telephone Company's building. Mr. Wallace Hubbs, removed from a portfolio which resembled Pandoras box some splendid copies of paintings of wild life, for the members and his family to adorn the walls of the new club rooms. The magnificent gift Mr. Dan Hubbs' collection of nature in the bird-sanctuary at his woods was referred to by several of the members.

Vote of Thanks

At the conclusion of the meeting, a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. W. H. Robb and his family for their generous gifts to the club rooms was moved by Dr. Malott and seconded by Miss Helen MacQuade.

Mr. Robb referred to the four charts of bird life which had been procured for the League and which will be handed over to Miss Templeton to use about the schools of the city.

OTHERS INTERESTED

Letters were received from Mr. and Mrs. Leo Riggs and Rev. and Mrs. D. C. Ramsay and others interested expressing their sincere appreciation and extended their attending the meeting but assured the members of their active interest in the future.

ALAN SPRAGUE

and Dorothy Bishop, "What I Expect College to do For Me".

The judges were Miss Gardiner, the Rev. Stewart and Mr. D. C. McLaren.

All the youthful orators rendered their speeches with a fine effect and a clear voice. Florence Barber being the best among the high school speakers while Alan Sprague seemed to give the best effort among the Senior orators. Arnold Brown was the smallest speaker to mount the platform.

The Winning Address

Mr. Sprague's address whose address betokens his future statesmanship, which will probably put him in the foremost political arena in this country, gave a comprehensive resume of the history of Canada from the earliest days of settlement, dwelling at length on the Constitutional Government of the United States with that of Canada, pointing out the merits of the American administration as compared with Canada's executive and system of Government. The salient and just system of Government was commended by the judges in the statesmen who have contributed towards shielding Canada's growth and prosperity. He pointed out that Central Government was necessary for ideal administration. As a case in point he mentioned that the Federal Government had taken to override the insulting attitude of the Provincial Government in the British Columbia as regards the admission of Hindus.

Miss Florence Barber, a young musician of great promise, gave an authoritative address on the influence of music. Her points were splendidly presented, her thoughts a co-ordinative, and her address proved both instructive and interesting.

A vote of thanks to the judges was moved by Miss Dorothy Robertson.

The Entertainment

A short play was put on by the Hockey Team entitled the "Huddle System" Mr. Cleo Colling and Mr. Bob Redfern were the chief charactes in this humourous skit.

The second and last item on the program was a collection of popular songs the artists being Gardiner Duff, Arnold Bryans, Tom Burns, "Nig" Rose and Rod. Palmer.

New combination school at Thurlow-ford is to be opened February 1st.

cent, thus showing that your directors have taken their position seriously. At each weekly luncheon we have had the pleasure of entertaining many out of town visitor, many of whom were visiting different cities looking for opportunities for industries. We have also been privileged to have with us many of our own members. These luncheons have been provided by your directors and while they may have been an additional burden, the joy of meeting with our fellow members, and these visitors and exchanging views, has had the effect of encouraging many of our citizens to greater activities, and has engendered a fellowship, which aided by the Rotary and Kiwanis clubs has established a friendly feeling among our citizens, that is the envy of neighboring cities and towns. Our relations with the members of the City Council during the past year have been friendly, and I trust in the future to come, the Chamber of Commerce and the City Council will co-operate and attract to their assistance all bodies and social organizations, so that the spirit de corps now existing, may not only be continued but strengthened.

In closing I wish to pay tribute to Mr. Herity for his energy and untiring efforts to promote the interests of the City of Belleville, and look forward to a year of activities, under the guidance of our new President, Mr. Worth, who has served as faithfully and energetically as director for a number of years.

MGR. J. O. HERITY IS OPTOMISTIC

The Seventh Anniversary of the organization of the Chamber of Commerce was observed in Belleville definitely established in reputation as one of the most beautiful, progressive and substantial cities in all of Canada. The former chronic pessimism has disappeared and in its place there has arisen a spirit of hopefulness which has already made itself manifest in many forward movements. The immense possibilities of twenty years are completed achievements in 1926.

To this new Belleville spirit we may attribute such accomplishments as the development as the erection of the Parks' Commission and the resultant splendid recreation and park facilities of Belleville fair, the clean, well paved, and brilliantly lighted streets; the new Albert College; the modern system of public schools; the Quinte tourist park; the establishment of six important and prosperous American branch industrial plants; splendidly presented, her thoughts a co-ordinative, and her address proved both instructive and interesting.

A vote of thanks to the judges was moved by Miss Dorothy Robertson.

MUST LAST 10 YEARS

Paris, Jan. 15.—Premier Poincare's economics have balanced the 1927 budget but many small fortunes have been raised a great cry about their own budgets which are badly out of balance.

The French guards' usual complaint was what they called the government's "parsimony" in clothing them. The guards get a new overcoat every ten years, a coat every five years, and a cap every three years, while a pair of trousers is officially admitted to be worn through in two years.

evidenced by greater use of paint; greater attention to lawns and boulevards and the planting of flowers and shrubbery. In brief, every good thing that goes with the highest type of twentieth century city and that has made Belleville a conspicuous example of what is best in urban life and development in Canada.

It would be idle to pretend that the Chamber of Commerce was directly responsible for all the notable achievements above mentioned. What the Chamber of Commerce did was to create in Belleville a mental attitude for progress such as has made it possible for forward looking citizens to make their dreams of community advancement come true. Had there been no inspiration, no passion for better things, the municipal life would have been dwarfed and stunted by greater contentment or would have attained only mediocre success.

Belleville Industries Active

It is a great satisfaction to all progressive citizens and ratepayers to know and to realize that the notable industrial expansion that Belleville has enjoyed in the past four or five years is continuing without abatement and there is promise of greater things for the immediate future.

Owing to extremely unsettled political conditions in Canada the past two years as well as to the persistence of post-war depression, 1925 and 1926 have not been generally remarkable for the establishment of new industries or of branch factories in the Canadian dominion. Almost everywhere farms and cities have done well to hold their own. Losses of population and closed factories of produced factories have been fairly general.

During the year 1926 four new industries, big, established, Dominion-wide, Belleville, while three others have been provided under new management and some of these others, important expansion has taken place.

The four new industries are the Frontenac Breweries Ltd. Gas Co., the Hudson Lumber Co., the Belleville Wine and Fruit Co., and the Art Stone Co., Limited.

Prosperous Plants

Scarcely less important than the securing of new industries is the keeping of those already established in prosperity. It is in accord with universal experience when a proportion of newly established industries fail or are entirely discontinued or require reorganization. Never Belleville, so old established industrial statistics, has a full per cent. of all manufacturing industries that are nearly always prosperous, never recent, either fail or be compelled to reorganize. With so high a degree of permanency among manufactures it is still readily be seen how fortunate Belleville has been because of the survival and successful establishing of its later acquisitions.

Recession and Growth

It is equally gratifying to learn that some of the older industries have been meeting with more than usual demand for their goods the past season. Augmental working forces have been needed in a number of cases and others are planning further expansion.

Space will not permit reference to a number of other industries which contribute in an important manner to the economic and business life of Belleville. This is especially true of Belleville's railway industry, the Canadian National Railway, with its yearly payroll of more than a million and a half dollars. But the forward look for the year 1927 with confidence and optimism and have substantial reasons for believing that this will continue to be one of the best years ever experienced.

The improved outlook has been reflected by the number of new industrial locations. Never since the present industrial commissioner took over the duties has so many inquiries from important manufacturers, looking to the establishment of branch factories, been received. Also, a number of outstanding negotiations are proceeding with a number of these and there is good reason to believe that some of these will locate in Belleville as their Canadian home.

Eastern Ontario Chamber of Commerce

One of the most important and far-reaching works that has yet been undertaken by the Belleville Chamber of Commerce was the successful effort which culminated last June in the holding of a convention in the city and the organization of the Eastern Ontario Chamber of Commerce.

For years it has been realized by all leading Belleville citizens that Eastern Ontario was lagging sadly behind in the industrial and economic race. Practically no effort of the province has been forging ahead while conditions have been static or retrogressive in the eastern section of the province. Thoughtful men who have been giving careful study to the matter, have decided that what the city needed more of all was the spirit of co-operation and a united endeavour to look out for our own interests. In the matter of electrical development for instance, it was realized that that part of the province east of York could by was being grossly neglected while Toronto and the western district were having their wants looked after on a large and comprehensive scale.

To promote this and other aims and needs of the east in an effective manner, the Eastern Ontario Chamber of Commerce was organized at a meeting held in Belleville on June 17th. More than 100 delegates were present and among them were the mayors of the larger cities and towns including Ottawa, Peterborough, Kingston, Brockville, Smith's Falls, and Ottawa. Dr. Holloway, mayor of Peterborough was chosen president of the new organization and the manager of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce was named secretary-treasurer.

The executive of the association has since held a number of meetings and has also gone to Toronto to lay the united opinions and requests of Eastern Ontario before the members of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission.

Electric Rates at Belleville

Ever since the Hydro Electric Power Commission took over the Central Ontario system from the Seymour Power Co. interest in 1910 that organization has been collecting about $20,000 a year more than was necessary from the citizens of Belleville and has therefore been building up a surplus that now amounts to about $200,000. Over the same period a deficit of almost the same amount has been incurred at Peterborough, largely brought about by the operation of an unprofitable line of street railway that was unloaded onto the Hydro Commission at the time the Central Ontario system was taken over. The only fair inference therefore seems to be that Belleville's money is being sent up to Peterborough in order to provide the citizens of that generous minded city with electrical transportation that they themselves are unwilling to pay for.

In order to make effective protest, Mayor Graham and the Manager of the Chamber of Commerce went to Toronto and interviewed the Commission. Forcible representations were made that but three is urgent need for greater Belleville wanted the most unjustifiable imposition removed. The Commission promised consideration and redress but so far nothing has been done and it may be necessary in order to more vigorous action in order to make the Commission understand that Belleville means business.

New Members Received

During the year a number of new members have been added to the roll support and a more wide-spread interest such as can be secured only by the use of membership. Among those taking out memberships the past year were: Jos. T. Delaney, F. Davey Dix, Hon. Peter McGibbon, Geo. E. Dobbs, Edward Bernatchez, Alfred H. Ferris, E. J. Murray, J. R. Burgess, W. N. Belair W. H. Thomson, M.P., J. A. Thomson Dr. C. B. Coughlin, Fred Ponton, C. A. Payne, Dr. R. W. Tennent, M. F. Hawkins, R. E. Calling, H. H. Rowe J. E. McPherson, Tom Hutchinson, Walter McMullen, Thos. Webster, sr., W. Hodge, L. B. Stafford, Jos. Keeling jr., Sam. Harry Ilkelton, Ed. Ferguson and G. A. C. Wrin.

Three of the members, we greatly regret to say, were removed by death. These were: T. S. Carman, veteran publisher and captain of industry; W. H. Latimer, public-spirited merchant and business man and Thos. Manley, contractor for many important buildings and public works in Belleville and elsewhere.

Goodwill and Kindness

Of the goodwill and the kindness that have been manifested in so many different ways towards the Chamber of Commerce and its management by individually, and in particular by the citizens at large, by the members of the board of directors, it is impossible to speak with too deep appreciation. The manager expresses to all his most sincere gratitude and his best hope is that we may unitedly succeed in building here a greater and a finer city such as our Subscribers for subscription and for running notes:

"The expectation makes a blessing dear;

What it were.
—Sir John Suckling.

C. OF C.

The report of the Chamber of Commerce is a revelation to the average citizen. We all know that from time to time some notable improvement is made in the city's life or a new industry comes here to provide employment and bring business to us. But not the outsider some idea of the realization of the enormous amount of energy and thought which goes to the accomplishment of these things.

Even the ordinary member of the Chamber simply pays his annual dues and forgets about it. To that extent he is helping along the good work, but Mr. Heray's plea for more co-operation should not go unheeded. The personal interest and pushing power of every member should be added to the yearly financial contribution.

The Intelligencer has already received the year's operations of the Chamber briefly so today we do not go so fully into details. But every citizen interested in his or her city should get a copy of the Chamber's annual report and read it carefully. The inspiring messages of President E. W. Worth and past presidents Charles Hanna together with the clear, frank statement of manager J. O. Healy should be read and digested by every one of us. The importance of the work carried on by the group of keenest public-spirit men in the local Chamber of Commerce cannot be over estimated.

CARRYING ON

With no elections in sight, the spirit displayed at the annual meeting of the Belleville Conservative Associations annual meeting last night was rather surprising. The party stalwarts aided and abetted by a group of younger men, were out in force, anxious to keep the party organization intact and in fighting trim.

No mistake we make in entrusting the presidency to Mr. Charles A. Payne. Mr. Payne has already made his mark in the legal world and won the respect of his professional confreres as well as the great mass of the citizens. He is marked out as a coming man in the public life of the city and of the province.

Another young man, Mr. R. J. E. Graham, was made vice president. "Bob" Graham in spite of his youth, has already been mayor and alderman, serving both years in City Council altogether. Bigger things are in store for him. It is freely predicted. Even those politically opposed to Mr. Graham admit and admire his sterling ability and loyalty of purpose.

The Conservative party, locally is fortunate in the class of younger men who are coming along and into whose hands will inevitably fall the task of carrying on the affairs of this country. The wonderful victories in the past Federal and Provincial elections were achieved by the joint efforts of the old party stalwarts and the enthusiasm of the younger men—not forgetting, of course, the wonderful work done by the Women's Organization.

An amusing and interesting echo of the last campaign was Mr. George Reid's snappy speech at last night's meeting. During the heat of the fight the Prohibitionists kept lamenting that though they were all Conservatives at heart they were compelled by their principles to vote against the party they loved.

Mr. Reid thinks it is curious (and we agree with him) that, no Prohibitionist has uttered a word of protest against the Liberal party's edict at Ottawa for his Senate appointments. The elevation of Mr. Donat Raymond, a retired millionaire hotel keeper and Mr. Cavanagh, an outstanding brewer to the Red Chamber must have wounded the tender feelings of the erstwhile Prohibitionists, but we have heard no outcry. Can it be they are too deeply hurt to make their sufferings known? Or that in very truth their recent rantings were just a disguised attempt "to get Ferguson"?

If Mr. McKenzie King would only contend to be a Conservative, for a few days, no doubt the Prohibition organizations would meet and pass resolutions condemning him for "selling out to the Liquor Interests".

GERMAN "SUBS" OPERATED RADIO WITH FREENESS

Submarine, Diamonds, Auto mobiles, Furs. E:c.,Are But Few Items

Washington, D. C., Jan. 15.—The radio gossiping of German submarines and their kidding of French radio stations took a positive hand in helping the United States Navy to carry the American Expeditionary Force across the Atlantic without the loss of a man.

The story of the part the buzz of the enemy radio played in this accomplishment was told by Rear Admiral John Halligan Jr., during recent hearings on the Navy Department appropriation bill. His story follows:

"It has caused a great deal of worry and I have heard many people ask the question how it was that our transports were not torpedoed whereas other classes of vessels were torpedoed in these waters, and some of the empty ships were bound were torpedoed, but in no case was a transport carrying troops successfully attacked by a submarine.

"During the war the Allies built and established radiocompass stations on the south coast of Ireland, the east of England and the west coast of France. The German submarines used their radio very freely, not knowing that these compasses existed. They talked to each other and talked to German stations and they were open to the use of French stations, called up the French radio stations and jushed them.

"Every time a submarine used his radio, his position was cut in from these radio compass stations on shore. His position was plotted on a chart in the operation room of our headquarters in Brest. Each message gave the submarine's latter, so that we were able to plot successive positions of the same submarine.

"After studying their movements for some time, we discovered that they operated in a rectangle, extending approximately 400 miles offshore and including a group of about a hundred miles south of them between the bottom of the rectangle and the coast of Spain, and also from the to the eastward near the coast of France. They apparently had selected the crossing of Under sea boats in the day of Blenzy, the east and westbound ships to the coast of France and the north and southbound routes to Gibraltar, and the Azores, and in the begining of the war they had decided to occupy that rectangle.

"We never got them outside of that rectangle except on routes to the Azores of coming to and from the Mediterranean."

"Our method was to meet the convoys 300 miles offshore with our destroyers. The destroyers, before leaving Brest, were given three routes, A, B, and C. A being the best route. That according was to the southward of the rectangle. Then up to the northward equal be B and C through the rectangle.

"Destroyers flashed the word 'contact' as soon as they got the convoy and thereafter we controlled their movements from Brest.

"If this southern route which they generally used remained clear of submarines, we had no further communication with them until they got to port. But if a submarine appeared threatening that route on the way to the Azores, or to the Mediterranean, we would simply tell them to use route B or C."

By Regulating the Stomach and Bowels With Baby's Own Tablets

Winter is a dangerous season for the little ones. CUSTOMS SEIZED MANY STRANGE THINGS IN 1926

St. Albans, Vt., Jan. 15.—A submarine, a pack horse, a diamond ring or what will be the accumulated stock of the Vermont customs district could provide them all. Infinite variety of goods and materials to the tune of $317,000 is found in the inventory of 1926 customs seizures completed by Collector Harry C. Whitehill.

Liquors, diamonds, automobiles, furs and butter—these are but a few of the items in the list of contraband. The 22,321 bottles of alcoholic beverages contain a selection of which any drinking bartender might be proud, ranging upward from the homely ale to the rare liquors of France. In the automobile line, the connoisseur might choose from the 137 confiscated cars specimens of 26 "makes".

Even in the age of the automobile, the transport of liquor, and merchandise used many modes of conveyance. The contents of six railway cars were seized during the year, consistian of hay, straw, shingles, lumber and scrap steel as well as liquor. The miscellaneous freight was valued at $470. Five boats were captured from rum-runners. Of these, two were ordinary motorboats, but the others were home-made submarines, contrived for the purpose of evading the border patrol on Lake Champlain. Twenty-one horses and equipment were seized, about one-half of them while transporting liquor in vagons or on packs.

There were 2,200 cases of fines, penalties and forfeitures reported during the year in the Vermont customs district, including regular seizures of merchandise by the customs officers, and fines and penalties imposed for violatiogs of the tariff act of 1922.

In the six railway cars were found 20,960 bottles of ale. The seized automobiles, valued at $44,515, contained 40,000 bottles of liquor. The five boats, appraised at $223, carried 2,316 bottles of ale. Horses and horse-drawn vehicles were appraised at $2,481.

NEW SHOE STYLES FOR YEAR 1927

Chicago, Ill., Jan. 15.—Simpler and more comfortable shoes are required to meet the demands of 1927 shoe styles, Fashionable women must trip through the coming season on heels one-quarter to seven-eighths of an inch higher than the highest that have been in vogue.

Other edicts of the shoe stylists, who attended the National Shoe Retailers' Convention are that vamps will be shorter; toes will be more rounded, and all these features combined, say the stylists, will make any foot appear two sizes smaller than it really is.

Light colors and two-tone effects will be favored. Manish designs will prevail for sport wear. "Step-in" types, ties and airy open shoes with straps will be popular.

Mainly About People You Know

STRANGE COINCIDENCE

By a strange coincidence two members of the same family, Mrs. C. Hannah and Mr. John Hayward, son and daughter of Mrs. A. Hayward, 11 Everett street, were operated upon for gangrenous appendix yesterday in the Belleville General Hospital, Mrs. Hannah was rushed to the hospital in the morning and operated upon, while Mr. Hayward upon developing similar symptoms, was operated upon in the evening. Both operations were performed by Dr. J. J. Robertson.

PRESENTED WITH LAMP

The Beaver girls' baseball team held a social evening at the home of Manager Allan Meagher on Thursday evening. Mr. and Mrs. Meagher were presented with a beautiful floor lamp in recognition of the former's services last summer. Previous to the presentation, progressive euchre was played. The Beavers are looking forward to another brilliant season on the diamond.

MISS JONES' SHOWER

Miss May Jones, Octavia street, was the guest of honor at a surprise party given to her at her home last evening by about thirty of her young friends on the eve of her wedding. During the evening the bride-to-be was presented with a miscellaneous shower and a happy time was spent in opening the many pretty gifts. Refreshments were served at about 11 o'clock and the gathering broke up after wishing Miss Jones all happiness in the future.

SUCCESSFUL DANCE

Last evening the "Goodfellowship Club" entertained at a most successful dance in the G.W.V.A. hall and the one hundred couples present enjoyed a splendid evening. The novelty dances were features of the entertainment and valuable prizes were awarded the winners. The music for dancing was supplied by Mr. Charles Goyer. Dainty refreshments were served at midnight. The capable committee in charge of the affair were Mrs. Birk, Miss Eva Watkins and Mrs. G. Plumpton. The young people reluctantly departed for home at about 2 a.m.

FRENCH STUDENTS

Due to the excellent training which Ontario Business College provides for its students, applicants from the four corners of the earth arrive in Belleville to attend the school. Of these outstands a goodly number come from our Sister Province, Quebec. Some of the boys who come cannot speak much English. Two newcomers arrived this week, Mr. Georges Peasanit of Rimouski, and Lionel Martin of Trois Riviera. Two student graduates also returned to their homes in Quebec this week, Mr. Adelard Brisebois of St. Eustache and J. Edmond Blouin of Rimouski. Belleville is proud of a fine institution like Ontario Business College.

LETTER FROM JUDGE WILLS

Magistrate Mikel received a letter from His Honor Judge Wills, who is at Barbados. He is feeling well and enjoying the delightful weather. "This is a very warm climate and very regular, does not vary 6 degrees in the 24 hours—about 2c all the time. This place is a very quaint one and is very English in construction. All along the streets, which are very narrow, the fences are brick or stone walls from 5 to 7 feet high."

ALUMNI ELECT OFFICERS

The Belleville district Queen's Alumni was formed last evening at a well attended meeting of Queen's graduates held last evening in John Street Church lecture rooms. Following inspiring addresses by Professor Mathison and Professor Gordon Smith each of whom spoke on the work of the Alumni, Mr. Charles Cameron was elected president; Dr. R. W. Tennant, vice-president; Mr. Kenneth Hill, secretary, and Mrs. W. J. Doyle and Miss Merry the committee.

A large number of mourners were in attendance and there were many beautiful floral tributes. The bearers were L. Harris, J. Donegan, C. Jeffrey, B. Bundy, J. Martin and S. Lummiss.

Social and Personals

Mrs. R. J. Wray was called to Kingston today due to the serious illness of her son, Lawrence Wray, who is attending Royal Military College.

Miss Yeomans was in charge of the delightful "bird lunch" served at the conclusion of the Jack Miner League meeting in Bridge Street Community Hall last evening.

BROCKVILLE BEATS QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY

Brockville, Jan. 15—In a closely played O. H. A. intermediate game here this evening Brockville took the measure of Queen's by 6 to 2. Kennedy netted 2 goals and Lacoque and Woodcock got 1 each for Brockville in the first period, and Polton scored for Queen's. There was no scoring in the second frame, but in the last frame Pelton managed to slip another counter in.

Brockville lost the services of Woodcock and Kennedy in the last period through injuries, and had to play without relief. Pelton was the outstanding player for Kingston with Garand and Lacoque showing up best for Brockville.

Queen—Goal, Mills; defence, Pelton and Gourlay; centre, Lindsay; wings, Berry and Grimes; subs., Bolster and Donald.

Brockville—Goal, Murray; defence Lacoque and Sheridan; centre, Kennedy; wings, Woodcock and Fregeau; subs., Garand, Ashell.

Referee—C. Devlin, Kingston.

FAT WOMEN, FAT MINDS

London, Jan. 11.—Too many fat women have fat minds, said Lady Borrett, president of the Medical Women's International Association.

"Half the trouble in middle age with women is due to lack of mental stimulation," lowered the doctor in an address. "Mental exercise is just as necessary to women as to men, as an active mind needs an active outlet. Men have their work to occupy their minds, and women need something, too. Inertia of the body is partly bad, but inertia of the mind is worse; it helps to produce that worst of all middle-age horrors—fat. A fat body usually indicates a fat mind, and fat means a very serious increase to the work of the body."

HAS OPENED

25,000,000 OYSTERS

New York, N.Y., Jan. 15.—John Sheridan, of the Waldorf-Astoria kitchens, estimates that he has opened 25,000,000 oysters in 27 years, but in all that time has never found a pearl of value. He has found, he says, as many as four pearls at a time, but they were, so small that jewelers considered them hardly worth valuing. Moreover, he complains, the oysters of today are not like they were in the good old days, for then an oyster connoisseur felt he had only gotten well started after eating two dozen raw.

Sheridan computes his record as an opener on a basis of 240 to 360 oysters an hour, eight hours a day, six days a week, with deductions for holidays and time out to wash his hands occasionally.

It will have a special steam heating apparatus and be divided into three sections; each section in itself constituting an intact serving unit with a disposal exit at each of the three doorways done. In this manner the assembled company will be served directly from this table and from their respective seating units in such by the 180 waiters.

BELLE THEATRE

A remarkable, "inside view of the sinister workings of the German intelligence department during the world war forms the basis for tense drama, suspense and thrilling action in "Her Man o' War" with Gerda Goodall's first starring vehicle which will be the big feature picture at the Belle Theatre on Monday and Tuesday.

This material, rather than the battle scenes to which one is accustomed in war pictured, supplies the grim menace that lies behind the comedy and romance with which the picture is packed. It is a plotting of the wits of an American prisoner, who is really a spy, against the cunning, expert and scientific head operating the of the German secret service, Professor Krantz, William Boyd in the prisoner, Frank Belcher, the professor.

The fact that the action takes places in a war torn Europe and American picture—a quiet sector behind the German lines—takes the plot out of the usual theatrical and gives enhances the drama and melodrama, but gives a quaint and beautiful setting for the romance between the star and Boyd.

Despite grim danger and thrills that keep the audience fairly spine tingling and hair ar-rise, the love story and the comedy element of "Her Man o' War" predominate. Jimmie Adams, Christie comedy star, and his partner in hilarity, Kay Deslys, supply a great deal of humor, and the triangle of love interest formed by Miss Goodall, Boyd, and Grace Darmond, the latter playing the German spinster, furnishes still more effective comedy throughout up to a really snappy, happy and satisfactory climax.

Other members of the cast are Robert Klein, Mikhael Vavitch and Jeanie Stephan. Frank Urson directed "Her Man o' War," which was adapted from Fred Jackson's story by Jeanie Macpherson and Garret Fort.

CAPITOL THEATRE

Patrons of the Capitol Theatre are promised an interesting vaudeville entertainment commencing Monday. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday the feature vaudeville offering is "The Little Irish Girl"; a new Warner Brothers Production, starring Dolores Cortello and John Harron.

The Vaudeville offering for the first three days of the week will be "Shorty" Morris, a one-man revue complete in himself, with a refined singing, dancing, talking and juggling act with some music thrown in for good measure.

An added stage attraction will be the appearance of Miss Annie Marsh, who will be remembered as the winner of the Charleston Contest conducted by the Capitol Theatre early in December. Miss Marsh will again demonstrate the fastest in Charleston steps, an attraction that will surely please every lover of the modern dance. Regular admission on prices will prevail for this bill featuring programme, and indications are that patrons will find it necessary to be there early to get a seat.

A new order issued by the Soviet Government forbids all persons in military service to enter saloons.

SIR AUSTEN CAN SWITCH MONOCLE VERY QUICKLY

Geneva, Jan. 15.—The adroitness with which Sir Austen Chamberlain swaps his monocle for his horn-rimmed reading glasses is always a source of amazement to members of the Council of the League of Nations. Sitting around the big table they frankly admit their inability to keep their eyes from taking in the magician's trick.

Addressing the assemblage, the British foreign secretary's gold-rimmed monocle at the end of a black ribbon slung around his neck, is securly in place. The moment he is obliged to read from a document, he raises his right eyebrow, leans back a bit, and the monocle falls into his lap. But while it is falling, the heavy reading glasses have already walled his eyes.

The operation takes a fraction of a second. So fast is it that there appears danger that he might scoop up the descending monocle with the glasses, but he never does. He pinches he alternates the eyepieces several times a minute without batting an eye and with never a hitch in his speech.

ENDANGERS LIFE TO SAVE STATUE

Bucharest, Jan. 15.—The statue of Carmen Sylva, the late Queen Elizabeth of Rumania, was one of the sentimental treasures lost in the midnight burning of the royal palace. An old soldier's attempt to rescue it was a drain on the score of the fire.

When the flames swept through the roof and down the walls of the throne-room, a bearded old sergeant-major rushed to the statue of her who was his queen in his youth and tried to drag it out. It was far too heavy. He struggled vainly until the flames burned off his beard and ignited his uniform. Gasping, he brought his heels together, saluted and staggered back as the statue plunged into a pit of flames.

WIVES ARE NOW TOO SCARCE IN OLD TURKESTAN

Samarkand, Russian Turkestan, Jan 11.—(By Canadian Press).—With the men of Turkestan outnumbering the women three to one, polygamy is fast disappearing and men who once had as many as nine wives are now having a hard time getting one.

The Soviet census, just completed, shows the great disproportion of men to women in Turkestan. Indeed there is a virtual famine of women, especially of marriageable age, which the local officials believe can only be met by the importation of women from other parts of the Soviet Union.

Turkestan's 10,000,000 population decreased last year nearly 20 per cent. because of a sharp decline in the number of marriages and in the birthrate. The consequence of this is that the price of women and girls of marriageable age has increased from 500 to 5,000 rubles which is quite beyond the reach of the poor man.

Polygamy, which formerly was the rule throughout Turkestan, is fast disappearing. Before the Bolshevist revolution, rich landowners boasted up to nine consorts while the deposed Emir of Bokhara had 300 wives. Now the native Mohammedan has difficulty in purchasing and maintaining the wife.

An old Uzbeg, who made a living by begging, told the correspondent that 25 years of labor before the revolution established him to buy a wife, but after six month's abode with him she fled and sold herself to a wealthier Moslem.

Because of the shortage of women, Turcomans, Uzbegs, Tadzhiks and other Moslem natives are marrying Russian and Christian women who, unlike their Mohammedan sisters, demand no dowry or fee for themselves. Such marriages previously were unknown in Turkestan.

By reason of the great demand for them as wives, the women of Turkestan enjoy a privileged position unknown in any other country in the world. Their husbands do all the housework, cooking, washing, ironing and milking and generally showing their spouses the utmost difference.

EUROPEAN MATRONS TO

Paris, Jan. 11—Joint action of the powers to safe guard foreign concessions in Shanghai is now foreseen in French official quarters. The latest reports from the French consul at Shanghai have been rather alarming. Although no aggressions have occurred.

It is felt here that the 40,000 inhabitants of the foreign concessions could not evacuate the foreign colony unless adequate defense was offered in the event of an attack.

Movie Sidelights

The celebrities of Hollywood lead a dog-fancier's life. They have many and sundry pedigreed pets. Mildred Davis has 26 of one species and Douglas Fairbanks owns large kennels. Clara Bow has a Mexican hairless pup. Adolphe Menjou, Harold Lloyd, Wallace Beery, Jack Holt and Richard Arlen also possess dogs.

The news film has lost its popularity with French audiences and some theatre managers have already taken it from their programs. The chief cause for the patron's coldness, it is declared, is that the films are too old when they are shown. An effort is being made to speed up the developing and distribution of the news films so that they may be exhibited when they are still "hot."

When Vilma Banky went to New York for the holidays she found that her mastery of English during two years in Hollywood did not include a speaking acquaintance with a lot of American variations. "There is much more slang spoken in New York than in Hollywood," the Hungarian actress said.

Josephine Dunn recently spent a full day taking a "ten-minute shower"... Her ablutions were registered by the cameras, and the repetitions made necessary by the demands of the script and the shifting of studio lights gave Miss Dunn the unwonted bath.

Greek, the little Swiss clown who for years has amused the most hardened habitues of European music halls, has made his first film, hailed with acclaim by the French critics. The picture is entitled "His First Film" a comedy-farce in which he appears in the last scene only.

LION'S AIRPLANE TRIP

Queer cargoes are the rule rather than the exception on the London-Continental air service. Recently a circus manager wanted a full-grown lion sent from Paris to London. Within a few hours a specially constructed cage had been built in accordance with plans to accommodate the animal.

Often twenty or thirty pedigreed dogs and cats leave London by air in a single week.

Whilst handling parcels, an air goods porter at Croydon, the London air port, was amazed to find one labeled "Cremated Human Remains." Several times air liners have been converted into hearses for transporting bodies for burial in different parts of Europe.

Gold, platinum and silver in large quantities—the total to date exceeds in value £10,000,000 sterling—travel along the airways link ing London with all parts of Europe.

ANTI-FILTH LAW MUCH CRITIZED

Berlin, Jan. 15.—Ridicule and derision continue to fall upon Germany's new censorship law aimed at trashy and indecent literature.

Writers, artists and actors are continuing their campaign against the measure, although their protests were unheeded when it was enacted by the reichstag.

The liberal political parties are on the alert, for possible confirmation of their suspicions that there may be an effort to use the new boards of censorship as a means of stifling free speech. The law will operate through the boards of censorship of nine members each, including a neutral president. Two members represent authors and artists, two the art dealers and publishers, two the organizations and school teachers and two the youth and welfare organizations.

If six members vote against a book or periodical its sale and circulation will become illegal. Newspapers and magazines of the type of political and literary reviews are exempted.

THE WEAVERS

We stand before the loom of life as weavers,
Weaving life's pattern in the web of time;
God in our hands has placed the threads for weaving
And in the Christ reveals the plan divine.

Here, they lie day, the Master's cheek to serve us,
Ours is the task to weave the grand design;
And with the threads of faith and loving strands of gold!
Weave in the web of time a life divine.

Here stands the loom, and here the web is waiting;
Let in our hands the mystic threads behold;
What lovely task awaits the day's creating,
Weaving with joy these shining strands of gold!

THE ETERNAL FOUNTAIN

Who can be old where the field is falling?
Who can be old where the game is young?
Where no one cares that the years are falling
Nor stops to watch where the clock is hung.

What if the hair is thin or graying?
What if the brow is furrowed deep?
As long as the heart can still keep playing,
No one watches the twilight creep.

Who can be old where the May wind's drifting
Down the field where the keen shots ring?
Who can be old where the clouds are lifting
Over the hills in the heart of spring?

Spirit and spring—let the scythe be bound rover
Walk outside till the light is gone;
Just one week through the turf and clover
Drive back years that are crowding on.

—Grantland Rice

LET ME TELL YOU

SAVING SPACE

In a small kitchen, it is absolutely necessary to keep the dishes washed up as you go along, so that you conserve space and energy.

COOKING CEREALS

When cooking cereals, have the water boiling hot and the salt in the water before you add the cereal.

SPOIL EASILY

Keep cereals in a covered glass jar, in a cool, dry place, as they spoil very easily.

GIVES VARIETY

You can vary the monotony of poached eggs by serving a mushroom sauce over them.

TESTING EGGS

When you doubt the freshness of an egg, put it into a tumbler of water. If it sinks very well, if it floats it is unfit to eat.

SPINACH OMELET

A delicious omelet is made by adding a cup of cooked spinach to the eggs just before they are put into the frying pan.

EGG FILLING

Hard boiled eggs chopped up with may onnaise dressing make very palatable fillings for brown bread sandwiches.

PREPARING ROASTS

To prepare roasts, cover with salt and pepper, and sprinkle over a little flour. If the meat does not seem very fat, add dabs of butter or pork on top.

BEYOND ALL DREAMS

"I should be very pleased to introduce the princess," said Renfrew, looking down and trying to speak as coldly as possible.

"It is kind," said Ariel, speaking soft ly and clearly in English.

And so it was settled.

CHAPTER VII.

ARIEL'S PAINTING

For that day, and many others, Donald made an step further in intimacy with Ariel. They'all left the Louvre, and he saw the ladies into a carriage, and that evening he sat next to Miss Bateman at dinner, and played dominoes afterward with her in the salon. The young lady, Miss Davis with the stout mama and aunt who dropped their h's, was very beaming and friendly. But Miss Bateman and Blake, he had not seen that day; but Miss Davis asked after the Frenchman timidly, as is true, but still pointedly enough to make Miss Bateman utter some severe remarks. The next day, at eleven o'clock, the Princess Ned drew into the Rue Castiglione and showed him her own design for a picture; an old man and a young child gathering dry sticks in a summer wood. She and seen the original as a street of the German town where she had passed her childhood; but the wood scene was a composition of her own.

Donald was delighted with the vigor of the sketch, the warmth of tone in the wood scene. Ariel was a gifted master. She possessed sympathy and imagination her mind was ready to receive all noble influences, her love of the beautiful was a part of her nature; but she had been reared in a certain code, and it would have seemed like blasphemy to her to step beyond it.

This sweet afternoon, this impressive evening, only increased the love of poor Donald almost to frenzy. He could not rest sleep, he neglected his work, when his friends came to see him he was impatient to escape from their chattering and questioning.

Donald was man enough to keep his own secret. Not a soul guessed it. Not Miss Bateman, with her pointless work in her white, plump hands, and dressed in her dark-green silk morning-robe; not his friends, who clothed him about the house he was giving, and the model whose face occurred again and again in his sketch-book.

He had the wit to laugh at their insinuations and at his own sufferings. His friends had no suspicion of him nor even Marie, the model-girl, the pretty, the impertinent—least of all, Ariel, the object of all this mad, silent worship. She was delighted to find herself making progress in drawing. She liked to hear Renfrew talk of art. Now and anon he talked, indeed, of other subjects and still she listened.

She found, it is true, that the young painter had thought some of her thoughts that he had the cause of humanity at heart, that he longed generously to do did, for a time when the poorer and more oppressed should be freer and wiser, and better and happier; but still she was the Princess Ariel—she was miles apart from this young artist.

Her governess sat knitting or empty ed on point-lace during the whole of the lessons. The young people were never left alone. Still, Donald knew that never once did this girl, reared in foreign fashion, raise her eyes to his to give what he would almost have laid down his life to obtain—a stolen glance No, the eyes that met his were frank as their gentle, cold as they were beautiful.

And, meanwhile, Donald did not paint did not sell his pictures, and money grew low in his purse; and he began to see that, if he did not soon exert himself he would be without funds in huge Paris. He dined every day in the salon of Madame Ardell, and talked to Miss Bateman, and listened to her playing and Miss Bateman thought him admirable. She often visited her studio. It is needless to say that he concealed all the sketches he had made of the princess Ariel from that vivacious lady.

The other interesting man who attended the princess were an old and ugly Italian gentleman, who talked her singing, and odd a lady called Signora Tabrinelli, who caught her Relish.

"And she cares no more for me that she does for Gavia, who teaches her singing, 'she is crooked and stupid. No more! no more! She has my blood in her veins—she is made of marble—am I shall go mad!"

It was one evening—one night, rather, that Renfrew talked thus wildly to himself. He had left the salon; he had bidden Miss Bateman good night, and had returned to his own rooms, and he found lying on the table a polite little note from Madame Ardell, asking for the pleasure of Blake or Durand, to whom, indeed, he had often lent money in his turn, and he must act to work and make little sketches such as the dealers will buy when they are executed by a clever artist. Yes, Donald would have to work

CHAT WITH A CATERPILLAR

By R. W. Cumberland

One day, on a rustic lonely road,
And the autumn wind blew chilliest,
I overtook, amid the dust,
A hastening caterpillar.

"Whither away, my little friend,
In your suit of black and brown?
Some pressing business must this day
Be taking you to town."

The caterpillar looked up at me,
Then smiled and bumped his back,
"Do you think I can travel safely?"
He asked, "in the wagging track?"

I'm a little afraid of the wagons,
But it looks so smooth and straight,
And I'm very much in a hurry,
For I have to keep a date."

"I'll watch the track for danger," ,
I answered and looked behind,
"But I'd like to know your errand—
That is—if you wouldn't mind!"

"It's rather a difficult matter,"
Said he, "to understand;
But I feel that a change awaits me,
And the hour is close at hand."

"I must wrap myself in a garment
Spun up from the sun and the air,
I must hide me away in a dark place
So that none may find me there."

"It's a very delicate process,
And I hope I shall not die;"
The caterpillar looked anxious,
But I answered, "So do I."

"And now," he said, "with your pardon—
Yet I trust I have some claim—
Is yours a similar errand?"
And I told him, "Much the same."

"And do you come out of the darkness
With a pair of beautiful wings
That bear you aloft past the treetops
And the place where the noisy birds sings?"

"Ah, yes," I said, "That's the problem,
And let him solve it who can,
I'll answer for you, my insect,
But the case may be different with man."

"For some told that the souls immortal
Outlive the sun and the moon;
And some that he lies for ever,
Unasked, in his blind cocoon."

But the caterpillar was musing
To look at a high stone wall,
And I ought to be near the writer,
If it isn't too warm in the fall."

I think I'll just try that exercise,—
The one about six feet high,"
So he smiled and bowed and nodded,
And I bowed and was satisfied.

JUST IN PASSING

A thing of beauty is a joy forever:
Its loveliness increases; it will never Pass into nothingness; but still will keep
A bower quiet for us, and a sleep
Full of sweet dreams, and health, and quiet breathing. KEATS.

AMBIDEXTEROUS PEOPLE

It is estimated that ninety-five per cent. of mankind are right-handed.

Many scientist are convinced that if we exercise the right lobe of the brain and become ambidexterous our lives would be happier and far more useful than they are now. While it is difficult to eliminate the share of heredity and age of education in the subsequent production of right-handedness, it is believed that left-handedness is to a great extent hereditary. A London elementary school teacher who teaches his pupils to use both hands states that the children who put their pencils in their cheerful and better scholars than those who are right-handed. They are, he adds, quicker in alertness and decision. The whole of the teaching goes on quicker and better with such children.

Sir Robert Baden Powell has advanced the equal training of both hands for many years. The value of ambidexterity from the military point of view, he says, is most important. He regards no soldier as thoroughly trained who cannot mount his horse from either side, use to the right.

his weapons with either hand, and shoot as quickly and surely from the left shoulder as the right.

The military history of the Boers and Japanese would seem to confirm this conclusion. Both races train themselves to use both hands alike. With the Japanese this accomplishment is fostered by their manner of perpendicular writing, each word being placed underneath, and not as with us, alongside the preceding one. As soon as they go to school they learn ambidexterity. Whether this accounts for the quickness of their wits remains to be proved, though Sir Baden Powell is convinced of it; their astonishing manual dexterity and military genius, he believes, are traceable to this alone.

"And how often does the left hand show itself to be fully the equal of the right?" asks Sir Baden Powell. "Look at us piano playing. Is there any difference between the capabilities of the two hands? And in violin playing the distinct finger-work of the left hand is just as important as the bowing of the right. In hand weaving, typing, cricket, the left is just as efficient. The surgeon, the dentist, is compelled to train his left." The hero of Mafeking additionally particularly interesting is the fact that after a short time of training the left hand acquires a deftness and delicacy of touch which is unknown as a rule to the right hand.

SINICAL SADIE SEES

TO KEEP WELL IN WINTER

People who resent rough, cold, and general Rakeishness as the inevitable results of the winter season are labouring under a fallacy. There is no reason why people should not keep quite as fit in the winter as in the summer. All that is needed is common sense and a little forethought in regard to food, clothing, and general life.

This sums up the contents of an article in the Journal of the Institute of Hygiene." Valuable hints are given on how to keep well in winter. "The habit of spending a considerable proportion of the time striving to acquire warmth by keeping in close proximity to a fire in a room with closed windows must be condemned," says the writer. "Some degree of warmth may be obtained in this way, but it is superficial in character, and of much use in preparing the body to face the cold winds and low temperatures that must inevitably be met with out of doors." Adequate ventilation indoors and the maintenance of a temperature as low as is consistent with freedom from a feeling of chill should be the rule.

The truest warmth, it is pointed out, is the inward glow produced by muscular activity. Efforts to keep warm by wearing excessive clothing defeat their own object, says the writer, and just as winter clothing follows the bound rules of hygiene, so is winter diet only a modification of a general hygienic diet. It is added that research has shown that fats contain the property of replacing to some extent the action of the sun's rays. This action is little understood, but it is a most obvious and inconvertible.

Grandma is Their Doctor

"ON an old-fashioned bureau, in a house I know, lies a large-sized new Testament with the binding well worn, and with it a much-used old copy of Dr. Chase's Receipt Book. When the calves have the colic or the neighbor's baby the earache, 'Grandma' hands out well-assimilated advice from the Dr. Chase Book. When 'Grandma' herself feels 'run-down,' Dr. Chase's Nerve Food stands ready on the dining-room table among the salt and pepper shakers."

In these few simple words Miss Bert Smith, Wrp's Mills, Ont., beautifully describes the way in which many a grandmother is a blessing to her family and to her neighbors as a guardian of health.

And what finer encomium can be paid to Dr. Chase's Receipt Book and Dr. Chase's Medicines than the statement of such members of experience as the one here described.

Just as in this house, Dr. Chase's Almanac hangs on the wall in the great majority of Canadian homes, and the Receipt Book mentioned must will be found one or more of Dr. Chase's Medicines ready for use in case of emergency.

If you did not receive a copy of Dr. Chase's Almanac it will be sent free by The Dr. A. W. Chase Medicine Co., Limited, Toronto, Canada.

'SQUEEZE' SWELLS SALARY OF THE CHINK SERVANTS

Shanghai, Jan. 13 (A.P.).—Chinese servants are receiving better treatment as a result of their penchant for causing aggravation.

It is generally impossible to place the blame for occurrences in the household because of the servants' trait of not telling on one another. For this reason, the "number one boy" is the most important personage in the foreigner's menage. Usually he is charged with providing other necessary servants and is responsible for their good conduct. This entitles him to an "squeeze" or commission on the wages of his subordinates.

Servants' wages are low, but they are supplemented by commissions on every financial transaction which occurs in the household. The "number two", cook, house coolie, "ki-mundy" or doorkeeper and "chit coolie" or messenger have special perquisites, with the permission of the "number one", to eke out their income.

GLAIMS HASTY DECISION AIDS LEADERSHIP TODAY

San Francisco, Jan. 13 (A.P.).—Ability to decide quickly is the most important element in leadership, declares Prof. Walter Brown of the University of California School of Business Administration.

"The real leader, whether he be good or bad in his decision, is he who first commits himself to definite action," Professor Brown believes. "The best formula in when in doubt, do something. It is indeed true that 'he who hesitates is lost.'"

SQUIRRELS TAKE LOST GOLF BALLS AS WINTER FOOD

Winnipeg, Man. (By Canadian Press)—Many a mislaid golf drive on the Windsor Park and Kildonan municipal courses, last summer, found their way into the winter larder of the squirrels, that abound in the wooded area of these two links.

While removing trees which presented too severe hazards to the approach of certain greens, workers discovered several hundred golf balls which apparently had proved an unpalatable find for the squirrels. Most of the balls had been badly nibbled. Seized with hunger the squirrels had abandoned their home and the "discovery nuts."

Before the course were covered with snow, groundsmen had gathered in a total of 2,604 golf balls.

It is estimated that if all the penalties exacted through these lost balls, the stroke sacrificed would take an average professional player over a marathon course of about 600 miles.

WINTER CLOSES MONTREAL PORT

Montreal, Que., Jan. 11—By Canadian Press—Winter has set its seal on the port of Montreal, and the huge plant under the administration of the Montreal Harbor Commission will sleep until Spring.

Eighty-two craft, including units of the Harbour Commission fleet, are hibernating in Montreal. This fleet, which includes ocean-going steamers, lake boats, ocean, oil tankers, tugs and barges, is said to constitute a record for the port in point of numbers. Vessels of different types always winter here, but many now in Montreal go to Sorel for the months during which the St. Lawrence is ice-bound. Others have been forced to stay here instead of engaging in ocean or coasting transportation business.

The severity and suddenness with which the winter descended on the St. Lawrence in particular, and Canada in general, resulted in a tie-up of navigation and eventual blockade of the route from Montreal to Sorel and the sea. Up until December 24, it was optimistically but mistakenly held in shipping circles that the ocean-going steamers would be liberated through the efforts of the local Government ice-breakers, Mikula, but the other craft surrendered in circumstances sometime previously.

RATS SWARM IN ART DISTRICT

London, Jan. 13 (A.P.).—There are fewer artists' models in Chelsea, London's Greenwich Village, but more rats. It has been brought out in the reports dealing with rats wealthy borough.

The models are not so numerous as formerly, a good many artists having moved their studios to other parts of the city. The rats have come in because of the housing conditions, declare the authorities.

"The place is swarming with rats and general conditions are deplorable," says a city surveyor's report. "The tenant showed me three rats which she had caught the night before, and said that they run over the beds. She said they 'caught some' rats every night."

GOOD FISHING IN MAN. LAKES

Winnipeg, Man., Jan. 12 (By C.P.).—Fisherman on Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipegosis have had an exceptionally fine "harvest" during 1926. In Winnipegosis the catch was much better than the previous year, and although Lake Winnipeg did not make such a good showing, the 3,000,000 limit was passed a month ahead of the allotted time.

According to S. J. Walker, Dominion Inspector of Fisheries, 30,000,000 whitefish under incubation in the Saskatchewan hatchery at Fort Qu' Appelle.

GERMAN MUSIC LIFE DOMINATED BY A WOMAN

Berlin, Jan. 8.—Ask any German musician who Queen Louise is and he will think instantly, not of the Prussian queen extolled in history text books, but of Frau Louise Wolff, senior chef of Berlin's oldest concert bureau.

Frau Wolff held sundisputed sway over German musical life. Her word is law with critics, directors of orchestras and the musical Maecenases. Beginning with Anton Rubinstein and Hans von Bulow, and continuing via Marcella Sembrich, Artur Nikisch, Karl Muck to Wilhelm Furtwaengler, Dimitrius Ghanslut, Fritz Kreisler and the other contemporaries there is hardly a musician of note for whom the path has not been smoothed in Germany by the indefatigable Frau Wolff.

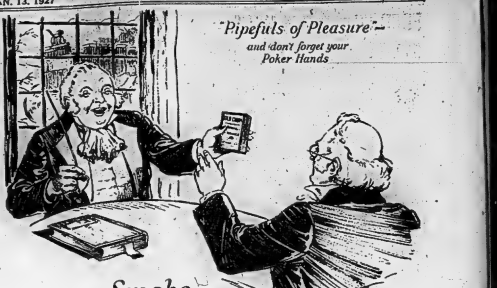

Succeeded Her Husband

Frau Wolff became a professional woman rather by accident. Daughter of an Austrian government official she married Herman Wolff, editor of a Berlin musical review, in the late seventies. While the young couple was still honeymooning, Anton Rubinstein came to Berlin from Russia to begin his triumphal tour through Europe. He needed someone to look after his business and personal affairs. Herman Wolff was suggested. Wolff succeeded so well in putting Rubinstein "over" that the latter's ardent rival, the German pianist Hans von Bulow (first husband of Cosima Wagner), pleaded with the young impresario to manage him also. The artists invoked his assistance. It was not long before Herman Wolff was in the managing game for good. After his death, shortly before the world war, Frau Louise took over the business.

Launched Philharmonic

"My greatest difficulties came when the war broke out," Frau Wolff said, "as I had already contracted for the concert halls for the whole season, when the war caused the artists, especially those from the enemy countries, to cancel their dates. All through the war we struggled for existence, but tenacity and faith in ourselves sustained us."

One of the greatest accomplishments of Frau Wolff and her late husband was that of launching the Philharmonic subscription concerts which are given in their fortieth season. They were directed first by Hans von Bulow, later by Artur Nikisch and, since the latter's death in 1921, by Wilhelm Furtwaengler.

THE LEITER MILLIONS

The Illinois Supreme Court has ordered payments by the three children of the late Levi Leiter of approximately $1,000,000 in the estate to be held for the 11 grandchildren of the financier.

Most of the fund will go to the children of the late Lady Curzon, Joseph Leiter, defendant in the suit brought by the Countess of Suffolk, to remove him as trustee of their father's estate, had contended that $1,000,000 paid him when he purchased the Leiter coal lands, should be divided among the heirs as income, and was part of the estate.

Infant deaths in Tokyo last year totalled 20,668, or about 25 per cent. of Tokyo's entire death rate during the year.

Perchoon from Michigan, where 95 of every 100 automobiles are made, won against all comers in national and international livestock events last year.

MAROONS DEFEAT CORNWALL IN CLOSE CHECKING, HARD-FOUGHT GAME IN "BIG SIX" BY 3-2 SCORE

Cornwall Undoubtedly the Championship — Local Head Parade.

Team to Beat For the Group s Have Three Wins and

EASTERNERS RESORT TO DEFENSIVE PLAY

With both teams playing fast hockey the Belleville Maroons triumphed in a hard fought contest last evening at Arnott's arena last evening by a score of 3-2 The locals were forced to the extreme limit to squeeze out their second win. The cash customers who jammed the auditorium to capacities were provided with thrills, aplenty and left the city feeling that the Factory Town aggregation is one to be feared in the race for the group honours.

The visitors relied upon their perfected system of defence to stem the tide but towards the dying stages of the encounter threw their whole team into the fight but were unable to break further into the score column.

On the evening's play the Maroons deserved to win, and their ceaseless efforts should have resulted in at least three more goals. The brilliant goalkeeping of Hilton combined with dame luck on their side robbed the locals of several counters.

In the Factory Town squad the Maroons endeared to mount the group team they have met this season by a long way. They can skate fast are clever with the stick and are versatile at moments in the modes of back-checking. John Dennenny their well-versed coach has drilled them in the Ottawa system, a style of protecting their goal, that of skating back-and watching the attack of the opposing forwards. At times the Maroons were met by six men in the break through and since Filion is a wizard on shots it was extremely difficult for them to carry the puck through.

A little more combination work at times on the part of the Belleville players would have undoubtedly resulted in goals had they slapped the rubber over to one of their team-mates. The check-ing was intense on both sides and the pace was tiring but the locals aloud up well under the shutting play and demonstrated to the fans that they can step with the best of them although Cornwall made a desperate effort to ward off the fate of the fire in the last few minutes. A fast sheet of ice was provided by Fred Arnott and the teams got through somewhat slow in starting get away and plenty of action resulted.

NEW OFFICIAL SATISFIES

Ernie Parkes who made his bow as a pedal official was on top of every play and made the boys dish up the brand of hockey that thrilled the patrons.

He lent no time in banishing those who laid a little too heavy an with the hockey but all in all it was clean hockey and the players realised that in order to win they must remain on the ice. Off-sides were checked up closely and two goals were discounted on forward passes. Parkes gave plenty of advantage to both teams and will be welcomed back at say time. Ernie has had lots experience in Senior and Professional ranks, and nothing escapes his watchful eye.

Cornwall have a fine team and measured up to last year's showing. Dentras was not missed to any great extent and would not have added a great deal of prestige to their attack.

Long shots were their specialty and they allowed no opportunity to pass with out peppering Bowen, a good many of them come from centre ice.

The play lagged a little fit fine but after Mr. Arnott's goal, a lone effort toward the end of the first period added new life and "Daw" Whalen scored the equalizer a minute before the end of the session.

Penny drew an unexpected penalty in the second period when Gillie coated for Cornwall and L. Goyer and "Stan" Hagerman for Belleville. The score sheet was untouched in the final stanza. There was no individual stars who stood out prominently above their fellow players. The members of both teams were too busy watching those who were opposite them to stray away alone to any extent.

Frank Goyer played masterful hockey on the Maroon defence and to him now a lion's share of the credit for the evening's achievement be his boy speeded up with a burst of speed and never let up from bell to bell, he also kept the forward line going with a word of encouragement when they showed signs of faltering.

Besides playing a brilliant game on the defence he engineered a host of dangerous rushes.

Fresh developed keen judgment in judging the Cornwall players and when an opposing player hits "Soup" he soon realizes that he has struck something worth while. When the locals were a little slow in getting apart it was Frank who forced the play into Cornwall territory.

"Daw" Whalen was an incessant worker and was steaming along in great style per "Daw" one goal from the corner was only scored after some hard-plugging on his part. It was Belleville's first counter and sent the visitors into an uproar.

Lawrence Goyer's goal was by long odds the prettiest of the whole evening. It was a nice effort well-executed and justly earned. He stick-handled his way through practically the whole Cornwall team to the wing where Filion shot and flip the rubber neatly into the corner of the net. He kept Tilson well in tow all evening and did not allow Cornwall's little centre man to break away many times. "Gilly" however, might have passed the puck several times with flank men on both sides of him. It was a ticklish job to try and split their strong defence and on the two occasions several times they have reached in goals being scored. He outgamed his man on numerous occasions in commencing his tricky cohorts.

BOWEN BRILLIANT

Jack Bowen in the Belleville goal was in brilliant form and saved beautifully several times after it appeared as though he would result. The majority of the shots were drifted from outside the defence, the Cornwall players finding it difficult to break inside the Maroons stone-wall. Bowen handled a total of forty shots as against thirty-eight that Filion turned aside.

"Fat" Hagerman kept the whole Cornwall team bottled up their own end of the rink when two of Belleville's play ers were resting in the penalty box. Like a flash, he was back-checking the visitors with unusual skill and showed them up with unusual ease to put out. His one goal early in second period sent the cash customers into a frenzy. "Stan" Hagerman has been out of action and his place would be hard to fill. He was right on the job when L. Goyer passed out to him from the corner and "Stan" made no mistake.

"Bill" Green surprised the fans with his showing. He played a lovely game and displayed his best hockey of the season. He is in fine condition and never once during the whole sixty minutes was he relieved, and was only off the ice for a two minute penalty for a minor offence.

"Bill" should have hung up at least one goal but dame luck was not on his side.

"Bunny" Freebette was the real hard luck man. Twice he went in on Filion but over anxiousness cost him goals, the puck being driven against the boards behind Filion, "Bun" as a relief man cannot be beaten and goes like a house afire on the ice. He is always ready to receive a pass and ever selfish about giving one, in fact it looked from the bench playing that he was not used enough last night as he was going nicely.

Johnny Hibbard skated himself dizzy while he was on the ice and his old army-going poke-check was responsible for breaking up more than one rush. He was accidentally struck over the head with Art Contant's stick and had to retire. Hibbard's presence on the ice does not weak en any position.

Milton Contant, and Penny were probably the pick of the visitors. Both of these boys were very effective and are of the main cogs in the Cornwall machine.

They know where and when to pass the puck and are like lightning on their skates.

Penny plays an exceptionally fast game on the wing and must be watched very closely.

Milton Contant was the pick of the Cornwall defence and bore the brunt of the attack throughout he is a nice skater and stick-handler and scored Cornwall's only tally on a solo effort, and lost for "Bill" Green stopping him in his tracks near the end of the first period or might have had another as he was right through but Green stopped him about with a stiff body check, he rushed well and broke up many well meant Belleville rushes goal ward.

The Contants essentially make up the Cornwall team with Milton, Fee and Art all taking prominent places.

Ralph Tilton clever little centre man did break into the scoring column. He was baffled pretty well to the most from here forging all of the play. "Gilly" Goyer went through to drive it over the net. Green was penalized for a heavy body-check. M. Contant scored the first goal when he came in unmarked. The local forwards weren't working well together, "Daw" drove one that hit Filion on the chest.

"Bunny" was put off for bodying a man into the boards. "Daw" scored to even the odds on a soot from the corner a minute before the bell closed the period.

2nd Period

"Gilly" drove one at Filion and Green nearly batted it in. Belleville had all the best of the play on the face off. "Gilly" shot from the corner and Hagerman batted in the rebound, for counter No. 2 "Gillie tied the score for Cornwall on a long shot. Lawrence Goyer scored a beautiful goal all alone to make it 3-2 for the prettiest goal of the night "Soup" went through but was tripped by M. Contant who was given a penalty Filion had a narrow escape, on a three man combination play. The Maroons scrut down very abrupt but the pass was intercepted. "Bunny" missed an open net on a labelled goal. Cornwall drove a couple hard ones at Bowen and Hagerman combined but Hagerman shot into Filion's pads.

3rd Period

Play opened fast with both teams forcing the play. Bowen saved nicely on Penny's shot. Gillie was put off for tripping. Bowen was saving plenty of close range. Freebette planted one dead on but Filion saved. Hibbard received a clip on the head from A. Contant's stick. It was accidental. Freebette and Green went through on a beautiful effort but Freebette was tripped by Art Contant who was given a three minute rest. Freebette followed him for two minutes for flooring a man into the boards. "Soup" missed a hold one that hit Contant's pads directly in front of the net. "Gilly" Goyer was put off for charging the puck. Green scored but it was offside. "Gilly" Goyer got his second penalty for hitting Art Contant with his stick.

Bringing Home the Bacon

All manner of birds and animals have at some time or other been elected as mascots. Pigs as a rule are never elevated to such a position of honor, but the one in the photograph is an exception. While Miss Evelyn Evans of Brooklyn, voyaging around the world on the Canadian Pacific flagship Empress of Scotland, was on a shopping tour in Funchal, Madeira, she bought this domesticated pig. Her fellow passengers promptly elevated the animal to the post of cruise mascot of the Empress of Scotland. And now the porker will be "taking the air" of foreign ports in the four corners of the earth before the Empress sails back to America from her 50,000-mile voyage.

Here and There

The fourth Eastern International Dog Derby to be held from Quebec city February 21, 22 and 23, promises to be the most keenly contested ever held. It is expected that over 20 teams will be entered for the race.

Christmas tree shipments from Quebec to the United States ran to 450,000 over Canadian Pacific lines last year, and present expectation is that this number will be equalled at least this year. Revenue to farmers of the provinces from this source ran to $100,000 last year.

Four carloads of silver foxes, pained at $750,000, have left Prince Edward Island in one shipment for the Western States: Wyoming, Utah, Colorado, Oregon and Washington. Viewed as a livestock shipment, it is said to be a record one. A number of prize winners were among the pack.

Dog teams will be used this winter by the Hudson's Bay-Marland organization to prosecute oil development work in the Mackenzie river in North-eastern Alberta. This is the area where the quest for oil started following a discovery report by Dr. G. S. Hume, head of the Dominion Geological Survey.

Christmas travel over the Canadian Pacific routes to the Old Country has been heavier this year than ever before experienced. Special trains have been run from Winnipeg directly to the ship's berth at St. John, N.B. The westerners credit this heavy movement to England for Christmas to the excellent conditions that prevail throughout the west.

The hundred settler families from the British Isles brought out by the Scottish Immigrant Aid Society to form the Clan Donald Colony are doing splendidly according to a field supervisor's report just submitted. When they landed at their destination they found houses, barns, houses, barns and equipment ready so that no time was lost in preliminaries.

Turkish tobacco, grown in Alberta, is better than that grown in Turkey or Greece, according to a Mr. Baker here, who grew 1,000 pounds as an experiment last season. He plotted out three-quarters of an acre to ten varieties of tobacco seed. The crop was harvested just before the coming of frost, and of the ten varieties Turkish, White Burley and Orinoco thrived best.

"Nearly 1,050 overseas vessels entered the harbor of Montreal and over 350 coastal vessels docked there in the season just closed. This makes a very gratifying showing compared with the 1,255 overseas and 215 coastal vessels of the previous season. During the period of open navigation over 113,850,000 bushels of grain were shipped from the port of Montreal, payments totalled 2,000,000 barrels.

Canada scored again at the Chicago Exposition when the blue ribbon grand championship in the Clydesdale stallion division went to Forest Favorite, owned by Haggerty and Black of Belle Plaine, Saskatchewan. Last year the University of Saskatchewan took the coveted honor with Green Meadow Perfection. This year, it is said, the veteran Canadian stallion was an easy winner over all others.

"There is better hunting today in the Canadian Rockies than was the case when while men first began systematic exploration of them nearly fifty years ago," said Tom E. Wilson, of Banff, one of the outstanding pioneer mountain guides, when interviewed at Canadian Pacific headquarters recently. Mr. Wilson was the first white man to discover Lake Louise and Yoho Valley. A plaque or statue has been erected in the Yoho Valley in honor of him, by the Trail Riders of the Canadian Rockies.

SCIENTIST DISCOVERS GAS - EATING MICROBE

Berlin, Jan. 14—Motor trucks has brought in a new microbe. Prof. Carl Neuberg of the Kaiser Wilhelm Institute declares. It is a gas eater, he says, which lives in and thrives upon the drops of gasoline that fall upon the highways or collect in the gutters.

It is quite probable, Professor Neuberg thinks, that the motor-traffic microbe is new only in the sense of its just becoming known to science. He is endeavoring to find out where the little gas-eater lived and by what means he subsisted before the automobile came into existence.

FORD COMPANY'S MULTI - MILLIONS GREW FROM $28,000 INVESTMENT

Story of Marvellous Industrial Accomplishment Is Read At Tax Hearing

Detroit, Jan. 13.—How $28,000, which comprised the cash capital of the Ford Motor Company at its organization in 1903 grew to $277,643,706 in surplus sixteen years later was read into the records of a tax hearing here today. It was the bearing on an appeal by nine former minority stockholders of the Ford Company from an additional assessment against them for 1919 income totalling some $30,000,000.

90,000,000 in Taxes

The story of the growth of the Ford industries was told by Joseph W. Davies, former Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, representing the estates of the late John F. and Horace E. Dodge. The seven other appellants, including Senator James Couzens, from whom the Government seeks an addition $9,000,000 in taxes, agreed to let Mr. Davies's statement stand as their opening argument.

The fight Mr. Ford made to refuse the constantly growing profits of the company in expansion plans was told by Mr. Davies. He told, too, of the rebellion of the Dodge brothers against this policy, a rebellion that resulted in a suit in equity demanding distribution as dividends of a surplus of $32,000,000. The suit brought a distribution of $19,000,000 of the surplus and election of Henry Ford to buy out all minority stockholders. A threat by Henry Ford to start a new factory of his own in 1919 after losing the Dodge brothers' suit, forced them to sell out to Ford, Mr. Davies declared.

Valuation of Stock

"It is upon the valuation of this minority stock, taken over by Henry Ford in 1919, that the present suit hinges. Counsel for the minority stockholders are endeavoring to show that Daniel C. Roper, then Commissioner of Internal Revenue, authorized a valuation of $6,025.24 a share of March 1, 1913, up on the time of the sale of the stock. The Government contends that the valuation should have been some $1,500 a share, the ensuing profits therefore being greater and a greater tax being due the Government.

The right of the Government to reopen the case after having fixed a market price on the stock and having accepted the tax payments on that basis, is being challenged by the petitioners.

COATS OF RAT SKINS

London, Jan. 13 (A.P.).—"Gustlik" is the new name of the common rat when offered for sale here in the form of a coat which retails at from $175 to $200. "Rat" is too common place, for dealers explain, and "Gustlik" with a foreign flavor, was decided upon. From 200 to 300 pelts are required for an ordinary coat. They are bought from rat catchers at four shillings a dozen. The skins are dyed and are also made into stoles and women's hats.

COTTON FIRM MAKE ELEVEN MILLIONAIRES

Glasgow, Jan. 10.—Eleven millionaires is the record of the family of J. and P. Coats, cotton manufacturers. James Coats, who founded the business in 1824, became a millionaire, as did his three sons, and all their grandsons.

The present head of the family is the young Lord Glentanar, a director of the firm, a former officer in the Black Watch, and one of Britain's most "eligible" bachelors. His father left a fortune of nearly £5,000,000.

James Coats started his business in the Scottish village of Ferguslie. When the father and son James died the business passed into the hands of Thomas and Peter. Peter was knighted and had a son who became Sir James Coats. His brother Thomas was father of the first baron in the Coats family, Lord Glentanar, father of the present senior member.

ONCE PEDDLER, MADE FORTUNE

Started In Small Way, But Became Very Wealthy Operator

New York, Jan. 13.—Th. fortune of Joseph H. Steinhardt, who rose from a fruit peddler to be head and sole owner of Steinhardt & Kelly, Inc., produce merchants doing an annual business of more than $150,000,000, will pass to his widow, Mrs. Lola Steinhardt, and her children, under his will filed in the Surrogate's Court.

While no definite estimate as to the value of the estate could be obtained yesterday, Norman D. Fruhling, a lawyer, who is actively engaged in Mr. Steinhardt's business, said that the business itself was worth more than a million dollars, and that Mr. Steinhardt carried an insurance policy of $400,000, of which the firm of Steinhardt & Kelly, Inc., is the beneficiary. In addition to this the testator owned the stock of the Warren Washington Realty Corporation, which owned a seven-story building at the corner of Warren and Washington streets in the heart of the market district. He owned stocks and bonds the value of which cannot be determined at this time.

Mrs. Lola Steinhardt, the widow, of 1010 Fifth avenue, inherits all personal effects, gets a life interest in the stock of the Warren Washington Realty Corporation and inherits the residuary estate for life.

The entire party had left Campbellford with the intention of visiting the circus, which was in Peterboro that day.

HOUSEWORK AS TONIC

London, Jan. 13.—Take a hammer and drive nails, or grab a scrubbing brush and clean up the floor, or do duty about a house and the matter of "nerves" will become something of the past, was the advice handed out by Dame Mary Scharlieb to a crowded house of women at the Institute of Hygiene.

"Household work is one of the greatest cures that women may take for "nerves," continued Dr. Scharlieb, who is dean of the British medical women, and has been practising here more than fifty years. "Neurotic girls and women can get the greatest advantage from a week's work of any kind. The woman who stays at home is able to occupy herself in a variety of domestic tasks which are beneficial to mind and body alike."

The Magistrate on account, he said, of the fact that Lemburg appeared desperately poor and was ill, imposed the minimum fine and costs amounting to $17.50 or thirty days. PONTIAC MOTOR BETTERS CRACK TRAIN RECORD

Beats New Santa Fe Train Between Albuquerque and Los Angeles

When the Santa Fe's new crack train the Chief, raced into Los Angeles on its first run inaugurating the 68 hour service between a Chicago and Los Angeles it set a new train schedule for speed between Albuquerque, N.M., and Los Angeles, but it failed to break the remarkable record made by the Pontiac Six last spring between these two points. The Chief, the new train, takes 25 hours and 26 minutes to make the run, while the Pontiac Six set a time record of 23 hours and 29 minutes, just lacking three minutes of slashing two hours off the best train record.

It was only fitting that the inauguration of the new fast service on the Santa Fe that the Chief train should be welcomed at the Los Angeles station by the Pontiac Six and Chief Yowlache as representative of the Indian Chieftain Council. It was a fitting reception in that the name Chief and the name Pontiac both perpetuate the memories of the fast fading race. And incidentally because the Pontiac is the symbol of speed between Albuquerque and Los Angeles.

To Engineer Walter Reid, for more than 26 years an active engineer in the service, fell the honor of guiding the first Chief into Los Angeles, and as he alighted from his cab Chief Yowlache pulled up in the Pontiac Six, climbed out, firmly grasped the hand of the little engineer, and in the name of that great Indian Chief, Pontiac, congratulated him on his remarkable speed and the dependability he has displayed in his 25 years of service.

"What would old Chief Pontiac have said if he had been told that some day the White man would race across the continent, taking but 68 hours from Chicago, and enjoy comfortable beds and meals while doing it?" mused Chief Yowlache. "We have come a long way since his time."

LOCAL JEWELLER FEATURES REAL DISCOUNT SALE

Famous Longines Watch Included in Borbridge 20% Discount Sale

Speaking of January Sales, Borbridge the Jeweller has announced one that is a genuine 20 per cent. Discount Sale on everything in the large stock of this enterprising firm, Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, Rings everything in the store offered throughout the month of January at a reduction amounting to 20 per cent.

Prominent in the Sale which Borbridges are featuring is the famous Longine Watch—and in this time the manufacturers of this watch are celebrating their sixtieth year in business.

Sixty years ago, the business world of 1867 was quite different than the complicated bustling structure we know today. For then the cabbieram was still dobbinsly new; there were no typewriters, no telephones, no adding machines no electric lights, not even gas mantles to harness the sputtering flame that danced on the wall.

But fortunately there were men of character and vision. It was one of these who laid the foundation of an organization which is now celebrating its 60th anniversary. Six decades ago, Albert Charles Wittnauer, one of the founders of the watch industry, introduced to the this country the Longines Watch already renowned throughout Europe as perfection in time pieces. Himself a lover of fine watches and an extreme competent craftsman, he fathered this young business with an energy that made it successful. In addition he influenced into the business his own personal ideas about dealing with others, and he became remembered not alone as proficient in the art of watch making, but in the art of making friends.

In 1906, Albert C. Wittnauer, laid his burdens upon the shoulders of his young brother, Emile J. Wittnauer. The younger man, as the President of the concern, and for the next eight years he guided its destines with marked success. It was he who in 1925 founded the Brighton Watch Case Company. This proved to be an expression of his taste in creating beautiful designs typified by a unique and distinctive craftsmanship and here, as in the other enterprise, his progressive ideas and methods bore rich fruit.

Succeeding Emile as President in 1916 came his sister, Martha A. Wittnauer, the present incumbent, and to her clear perception is due much of the success of the firm since that time, and the plant is constantly proved to its capacity to meet the demand for its product.

Such is the firm behind the Longines watch you choose. Record of sixty years of successful watchmaking. And if you choose one this month—at Borbridges you benefit by the 20 per cent. reduction throughout the month of January.

PROPER CARE OF YOUR WATCH IS MOST IMPORTANT

Expert Local Watchmaker Gives Advice on the Matter

How long can a good watch give service and perform properly provided it be given proper care and is not injured in any way. Here are a few facts that will enable you to prolong the life of your watch by giving it the necessary care.

The balance wheel of your watch turns 18,000 times an hour, or a distance of a minute, 18,000 times an hour, 432,000 times in one year. Is it any wonder, then that your timepiece needs to be oiled and cleaned occasionally watch is one of the most wonderful You wouldn't think of neglecting the machines in the world. care and oiling of your motor car such Almost any watch will run for months a journey, yet if you have trouble with after the last particle of oil in the bear-such an intricate mechanism as your watch you wonder whats the matter with the blame thing.

Recently we consulted John Rowntree, prominent local Jeweller and watch maker of Bridge Street, and agent for the famous high class Kruen watch; and we learned these interesting facts:

Men's watches should be cleaned and oiled at least every 12 to 18 months. Cleaning wrist watches, until they run irregularly or stop, however, is never recommended.

A small watch will give its owner warning and stop as soon as the oil thickens, because of the little power required to run it. A large watch however, will keep on running on account of its greater power, after oil lubrication has disappeared, frequently doing considerable damage.

LABOR OF A WATCH

The balance wheel of your watch turns or ticks five times each second, 300 times a minute, 18,000 times an hour, 432,000 times a day, and 157,680,000 times a year. So you can readily see that the oiled and cleaned occasionally watch is one of the most wonderful

DODGE BROTHERS TO ANNOUNCE NEW CAR

Biggest news of the week from Parkdale Motors agents for the Dodge Brothers Motors for Belleville and vicinity is the announcement during the week by the President of the Dodge Brothers incorporated that within a few months Dodge Brothers and their subsidiaries will introduce a new line of motor cars. The new line of cars will in no way conflict with the present line of Dodge Brothers cars—the present types—but occupying a considerably higher price field and produced in only limited quantities.

Combining Dodge Brothers well-known dependability with Dodge Brothers well known performance and striking beauty of appearance, of appointment and design, these distinguished motor vehicles will, it is believed set a new and higher standard in fine car performance.

Dodge Brothers will continue to produce their present line in maximum quantities to meet a demand which, during the year just ended, was very much the largest in their history, reaching the record total of 230,000 cars.

No definite announcement further than the above has as yet been made as to just what this company will produce but it is our guess that it will be a high class six cylinder model. But we don't really know anything about it, so you'll just have to wait for the promised announcement; meanwhile, the latest Dodge models are on display at the show-rooms of Barkley and Lerge on Front Street, and your inspection of these at any time is invited.

THRILL SLAYERS DENY ACCUSATION

Leopold and Loeb Plead Not Guilty To Charge

Ottawa, Jan. 15—Ontario's speed- and Richard Loeb, "thrill slayers" of Bobby Franks, denied on the witness stand today that they were guilty of mutilating Charles Ream, taxi driver. Ream is suing for $100,000 civil damages.

Although "Dickie" Loeb was visibly nervous when he was cross-examined, he avoided contradicting his story that he had never seen Ream until the present trial began.

Leopold repeated his alibi, contending he attended a party on November 19, 1923, when the assault is alleged to have occurred. He was supported by his brother Foppy. Leopold, who said "Babe" was sleeping with him on the night in question. The defense rested its case soon after 10 o'clock and attorneys began summing up. The case will go to the jury this afternoon.

Leopold and Loeb will be permitted to remain outside Joliet prison walls until the verdict is brought in. They appeared in court Tuesday, after attorneys had obtained a writ of habeas corpus to force them to face Ream.

Bodil Rosing who at the age of 16 played at the Royal Theatre in Copenhagen and a few years later gave up the stage to become a wife, retires to domestic work via the aftershave, now that her two children are grown.

"Being a mother has made me a better actress" Miss Rosing explained. "Motherhood has given me sympathy and understanding that can be attained in no other way."

People Who Need Health Building

Should Enrich Their Blood by Using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills

There are conditions of health in which no particular organ appears to be at fault, yet the patient is miserable and unable to pursue the ordinary duties of daily life with vigor and enjoyment. The remedy needed is a medicine that will benefit the whole system rather than a part. The blood reaches every part of the body and an improvement in the quality of it is quickly followed by an improvement in the whole system. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills make a prompt and lasting improvement in the blood, and bring new health and strength to ailing people. The value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in cases of this kind is proved by the following statement: Mrs. W. F. Nash, R.R. No. 1, Belleville, Ont., writing on behalf of her husband says: "For the past two summers my husband has taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills with much success. He was in a weak condition, did not sleep well at night, tired all the time, and had taken three boxes he was feeling and looking so much better that it was very noticeable. That the pills were all they were recommended to be. We feel very grateful and advise the use of the pills in all cases of weakness."

These pills may be had from all dealers in medicine, or by mail post paid, at 50c a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

As New York Sees It

Woe to the stranger who braves the dark areaways and streets near the Manhattan side of Brooklyn bridge. Urchins whose homes are in the shadows of the massive towers of the bridge have organized for the winter, and armed with snowballs are preying upon the strangers who dares to cross the bridge territory. Except for the youngsters through dark hallways and forbidding looking areaways is easy. The victim of a snowball attack seldom gives chase.

Subway conductors are not always brutes, as alleged by the stenographers. A young man, very much under the influence of bottled cheer and quite mindful of his situation, early one recent morning asked a conductor to put him off at Brooklyn bridge. When the bridge was reached the obliging conductor shook his inebriated passenger out of a stupor. The man left the train mumbling thanks.

It may have been a post season settlement of gridiron differences but it was a schedule game, at least on Broadway's program. A day after the football season and sleepy laborers emerged from the subway for their day's work, a group of night club patrons wandered into Broadway, and bought a load of bread from a bakery truck driver. Then the game started. The loaf of bread was the ball. Forward passing and punting featured the game. A policeman broke up the contest because of unnecessary roughness.

A belated Christmas story: A young woman of modern enlightened brought a neatly sealed package to the 45th street post office. The stamp clerk began weighing the package and noticed a pierced pen nibs. The young woman demonstrated and plaintively exhibited a perforated letter for the stamp was which she had applied with great care. The heartless clerk was unaffected.

The boots are back on Broadway. Winter has brought them out en masse—overalls, corduroy and plain boots—to help varying areas of chiffon hose. Beryl Hatley, who achieved local renown when she appeared at a recent ball in a costume composed of boots—shoes herself in them for the street.

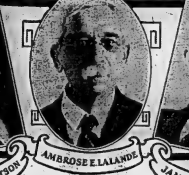

The cheap haberdashery stores and eating places along Seventh avenue have a psychic neighbor. A "Celestial" has established a store to tell what 1927 has in store for all who care sufficiently to "come inside", and the passerby is assured that "no charges", whatever that is, may depend upon it.

The rage for antiques here takes frequent homely turns. Now it's lamps, and the old oil burner which endeared the early teens down and puffed into extinction just before the era was put out for the a tide, is in demand. A plain, every day glass lamp that sold in small towns once for twenty-five cents now fetches dollars.

Another object of art, if not of use, for lovers of antiques is the old fire gong. A colored youth from the south dwelling down Lexington Avenue, was salient and amused at the exhibit. "Why", said she, "when I come from, it was only the down-and-out that thought of sleeping in four posters. No body was classy less he hid a brass bed."

Nearly Century and Half of Service

A total Canadian Pacific Railway service of 140 years was terminated January 1 of this year with the retirement on pension of Henry R. Ibbotson, Ambrose E. Lalande and James McKenna, travelling passenger agents in the service of the company.

The official records of the company indicate that these three well-known officials have served respectively 44, 33 and 43 years in the employ of the company. Their railway careers began in each case during the construction of the Canadian Pacific lines from the north shore of Lake Superior to the Pacific coast.

Mr. Ibbotson entered the services of the company in Sept., 1883, as advertising agent in the general passenger department at Montreal. In 1910, he was appointed travelling passenger agent, and has served in that capacity ever since. He was charged, during his first years with the company, with the distribution of advertising throughout the city, in addition with the publication of passenger literature. During the construction of the company's lines from the North Shore to the Pacific, Mr. Ibbotson engaged many of the laborers for construction purposes.

During his long service as travelling passenger agent for the Canadian Pacific, A. E. Lalande has conducted some outstanding parties across the continent. His services began in 1873 as Quebec and was passenger agent and city ticket agent of the South Eastern Railway Company until 1880. In 1887 the South Eastern passed to the Canadian Pacific and Mr. Lalande was appointed travelling passenger agent at Montreal. In this capacity, he has served ever since. In 1889, Mr. Lalande accompanied the medical convention to Banff and Victoria, the first convention to be held at Banff. Eight years later he had the honor to accompany Lt. Hung Chang, Viceroy of China, on his return from Queen Victoria's Jubilee. Mr. Lalande was made Knight of the Double Dragon by the Chinese potentate.

Mr. McKenna's services as travelling passenger agent began in Quebec in 1883 and he has acted in that capacity in Edmonton, St. John and Boston. A great many years of his service has been in the Maritimes, New England States and Quebec. He became well-known to the regular trans-Atlantic travellers, it having been his duty to meet the Atlantic steamers at the Canadian ports, Quebec and Montreal, in summer and St. John and Halifax in winter. Mr. McKenna retires from the Canadian Pacific to-day having seen in their employ for 43 years.

VARYING SPEEDS ALLOWED IN THE NINE PROVINCES

Joliet, Ill., Jan. 16—Nathan Leopold's limit for automobiles will be the highest of any Province in Canada if the supposed law setting the maximum at thirty-five miles per hour becomes effective. Latest information available here shows that, while the laws of some Provinces are indefinite on the subject, the speed limits of Canada range from fifteen miles an hour in Prince Edward Island to thirty miles an hour in several other Provinces.

The following shows the limits of speed permitted in the open country throughout the Dominion: Alberta, reasonable; British Columbia, thirty miles; Canadian National Parks, twenty-five miles; Manitoba, reasonable; New Brunswick, reasonable; Nova Scotia, twenty-five miles; Ontario, thirty-five miles, under construction just before the car was put out for the a tide, is in demand. A plain, every day glass lamp that sold in small towns once for twenty-five cents now fetches dollars.

When Afternoon Hours Are Matters of Moment

Is your back as well as shoulder things that your natural desires for wear dressy effects have been disturbingly suppressed, you will be glad to know of mind and this in this frock. For it is made on those becomingly simple lines, yet with such skilful cut and finish that it achieves an unusually rich and haughty air. The Medici sleeves fall loosely above the elbow and then fit smoothly into the tight cuff, while the frock blouses smartly above the hips and then falls straight and slim from the novel double belt, with an inverted plait in front for fulness. A beige or green satin crêpe with cuffs and collar trimmed in old-gold metallic braid would be charming, as would a heavy crêpe de Chine or a light weight silk sleeves of sheer jumpers.

MANY TOWNS SPRING UP IN ROUYN DISTRICT

Montreal, Que., Jan. 15 (By Canadian Press)—New towns are springing up almost monthly in the Rouyn mining district of Quebec. The latest will be called Mercier, after the provincial minister of lands and forests. Application for its charter will be made at the next meeting of the Quebec legislature.

The site for the proposed town is located several miles from Rouyn Landing, at which point a start is being made for the accumulation of canoes and power boats carrying goods by water to the new mineral district of the province. Some 50 lots have been laid out within the bounds of the municipality and so close behind the application seek to found a model town, special administrative powers will be sought from the legislature.

CUSTOMS CHANGE IN JERUSALEM

Women Doing Noble Work In Bettering Jewish Modes Of Living

Toronto Ont., Jan. 15 (By Canadian Press)—Mrs. Archibald Silverman, of Providence, R.I., visiting this city, told of women's work in Palestine. She is vice-president of the American Zionist Organization and of the American Hadassah. "Jerusalem is not all of Palestine," she explained. "It is chiefly outside the city that the Jews are colonizing. The ancient Jerusalem must always remain inside the ramparts. The Hadassah is doing much to bring health and sanitation to the old city."

Women's work was chiefly capitalization and organization. "The sound-have realized," she said, "that no land can be built up on the graves of infants or in unwholesome hovels." The infant mortality rate among children under a year had been reduced during the last ten years from seven deaths in ten to an average of one and a half. The dread eye diseases prevalent in Palestine had been reduced from 95 per cent. to 14 per cent. Typhus and malaria had been almost entirely wiped out. Mrs. Silverman was a guest of the Hebrew university with its doors open to all who wished to enter regardless religion, race or creed. "Hadassah does not discriminate but extends the hand of healing to Jew, Arab and Christian alike," she said.

WHAT'S NEW

(From a Woman's Standpoint)

Lace for evening is evident in dinner frocks, while in shawls for wear over the dance frock it has met with pronounced favor and these shawls, woven in a kind of Chantilly design, are developed in two shades of a color, the flower motif being usually in a darker shade than the shawl itself, or else it is a distinct contrast to the color of the ground.

Paris reports Spring it to bring more of the softer neutral colours, first being eucalyptus, the real grey-green of the foliage; a new shade of beige will also pink and more grey in it has yet to be christened and grey in all tones will be much worn for early tailleurs and probably navy blue, while the navy reds now worn are to disappear completely, and saffron yellow is to return to favor for evening.

From the smart wardrobe Mlle. Printemps took to New York, a Paris authority says the confusion to be dread from these dresses are that skirts will be draped to look longer that the found stions on which the draperies are long

Crippled Widowed Mother Was Inspiration of Gallant Effort

Toronto, Jan. 17.—With the winning of the Catalina Island-California mainland swimming marathon, George Young, bell hop in a local hotel and sole support of her crippled and widowed mother, has risen over night to fame and fortune. Little known outside of the few places in which he competed in swimming races, the 17-year-old youngster has jumped into front page prominence in newspapers the world over through his plucky fight against cold water, tides, wind and waves.

Went by Motorcycle

Carrying with it a prize of $25,000, the winning of The race meant a great deal to George Young. The money was untold riches for the youngster who had his mother to support. With Bill Hastings, I also a swimmer and diver, Young left Toronto ten weeks ago for the coast Transcontinental was expensive, as the two youths rode a decrepit motorcycle. They had trouble continual ly; at one time their iron steed falling them completely, but they got a ride along the way. After considerable difficulty, the two arrived in Los Angeles and made their home with Torent, friends, while George started training for the long grind.

An Adventure

During this period of the "great adventure," several letters came steadily back to the mother. They told of the cold water, the difficulty George had with the brine—he never had swam in salt water until he made the trip to the coast—he told of financial difficulties and the hope he had of walking up the beach—the winner over one of the greatest gal axies of long distance swimmers who had ever competed.

Youthful confidence — strength, brash and above all, love for his mother—brought Young to the backnacle of success and today his home town of Toronto resounds with his praises.

HIGH SCHOOL ATHLETES HOSTESSES AT TEA

The Belleville High School Basketball team proved themselves perfect hostesses at a tea given by them in the Y.M.C.A. on Saturday, and a large number of parents and friends of the young hostesses dropped in to tea during the afternoon. The tea room where Miss Clarke and Miss Evelyn Dull presided at the pretty tea table, was decorated in the Belleville High School colors, black, scarlet and heliotrope, scarlet carnations forming the tea table. The members of the basketball team made most efficient assistants in the tea room.

The pretty home-cooking booth was in charge of Miss Mary Blakely and Miss Brandon told interesting fortunes to many patrons. During the afternoon solos by Misses Florence Barber and Loren Ridley were enjoyed very much and the continuous musical programme by the 14th School Orchestra, composed of Miss Agnes Hay, violin; Miss Margaret Byers, T. Byrns, Lorison Kelly, R. Orr, A. Jones and Wm. Farrell was an enjoyable feature.

Miss Margaret Fairbairn, captain of the team, who was responsible for the arrangements proved her ability in that capacity.

4 CHILDREN DIE IN TORONTO FIRE

Toronto, Jan. 17.—Four children, the eldest only four years of age, were burned to death in their home on Fairlawn street early Sunday morning, when fire broke out in the absence of their parents. The victims were children of four years; Josephine, three; Lorena, fifteen months, and Ellison, two months old children of Mr. and Mrs. Augustus Jefferson.

The house was a two-storey frame and brick building. When it was discovered that the flames were in the bed named as the children slept, it was completely gutted. The fire is believed to have been caused by an over-heated stove.

The parents were visiting friends a short distance away. Learning of the fire they returned to the home, but the father was prevented from entering the doomed building by police, though he made several efforts.

The baby Ellison, was sleeping in a carriage not far from the kitchen stove, which is thought to have started the blaze. The three older children were in bed upstairs. Firemen who entered the smoke filled house found them completely cremated by the police commissioner of Thorold of charges of drunkenness and suspended made by Rev. Maxim Chawrik, Ukrainian minister. Rev. Mr. Chawrick produced no witnesses to substantiate his charges and in connection with a Ukrainian electioneering party, claiming that it was the duty of the police committee to get the evidence.

FROZEN NORTH HEARS WESTINGHOUSE PROGRAM

Frozen in the mid Arctic ice, 67 degrees north, and 115 degrees west is the steamship "Baynauk" located at Bernard Harbour, Coronation Gulf, and within a comparatively short distance of the North Magnetic Pole.

Messages have just been received by G. A. Wendt, of the Canadian Westinghouse Co. Ltd., advising that all the transmissions from Westinghouse Station KDKA, Pittsburgh, on December 25th, and from Westinghouse Station KFZX, at Hastings, Neb., on December 26th, were received at Bernard Harbour.

These acknowledgements were transmitted by the wireless of the "Baynauk" to Aklavik, in the Delta of the Mackenzie River near Alaska, and then through to Edmonton.

Many messages were sent out from the boat to their friends in civilization, with the result that a number of messages have been received by Mr. Wendt for transmission to Bernard Harbour on Saturday night, January 15th, which is the date of this season's third prearranged radio transmission to the Arctic and Sub-Arctic. Greenland and Iceland had.

gathering, the "I knew him when" club is holding meetings. Tales of the swimmer's modesty, his speed and strength, are related. It recalled that one year ago today, Jan. 17th, 1926, "Bill and George" went swimming in the outdoor tank at Sunnyside, Toronto's amusement centre, when the temperature was hovering around the zero mark.

Today Mrs. Young, overwhelmed with telephone calls and interviews, is not "at home," The mother, an invalid since the Wawa Hotel fire at Lake of Bays, Muskoka, when she was injured, has nothing to say. Her heart is too full for words.

Young's return from California's will be the signal for a civic welcome when Toronto will turn out in force to welcome the boy who met some of the world's best and defeated them in one of the greatest swimming contests of endurance, grit and courage in athletic history.

FAME AND FORTUNE

Los Angeles, Jan. 17.—It remained for a 17-year-old kid, friendless, unknown, grey-eyed and slope-shouldered, to step in the lanes and limits of the best-trained and best-known swimmers of the world and swim the Catalina Channel.

YOUNG FINISHES ALONE

So as to render the triumph of his gangling, thin-faced, dark-haired youth complete, he is not one to let too many wish to go on in school with the smaller children of his own age—a complete triumph in the powers that rule the deep and smile on the theory of Anglo-Saxon supremacy over the waters destined that 17-year-old Georgy Young, of Toronto, alone of all of the 96 greatest swimmers in the world, should finish the swim unaccompanied the 22-mile strip of frigid, rocking water.

Somewhere out in the grey fog and mist where Young left the boats a lot of heroes to sink beneath the roaring waters, while the Canadian boy pull through to the lights of Wilmington and Point Vicente, and touched the sands of the mainland. That touch was worth $25,000 to Young. His amount of money was put up by William Wrigley Jr. for the first finisher in the Catalina Channel swim.

$75,000 MOVIE OFFER

Besides Wrigley's $25,000, which pays formally into the boy's hands at a celebration in his honor here on Tuesday night, the Canadian boy today was enjoying the golden maple of success in the form of reported moving picture and vaudeville offers of $75,000.

From a computation of Young's purse, which was the most interested by any of the channel swimmers, it was evident today that the Canadian boy had won between 27 and 28 mile.

While the headlights of several hundred automobiles and the searchlights of a dozen water craft were playing on the scene off the pebbly shore of Point Vicente, where George Young won the race, five other swimmers were floundering in the grip of a turning tide, and gradually gave up.

CIVIC WELCOME

Toronto, Jan. 17.—Civic recognition of the youthful Toronto conqueror of the turbulent Catalina Channel, and of his widowed mother, who stayed at home and prayed for her boy's success, is foreshadowed in a resolution to be introduced to the Board of Control at its regular meeting this week by its newest member, Controller B. B. Wrigley.

Mr. Wemp declared that he would move before the board that the city give George Young a civic reception and suitable recognition for his wonderful swim, and have his mother at the presentation.

CITY'S CONGRATULATIONS

Upon receipt of the news announcing George Young's triumph in the Catalina Island swim, Mayor Foster yesterday wired the city's congratulations to the Towagmac, the company which holds a 35 per cent interest in the Aldermac-Mackey property in Beauchastel township, Quebec, announce that Noah Timmins has exercised his option and is now ahead with a big program of development. Options have just been announced on a block of the Amulet-Goldfield and a block about a mile square will probably go to the Towagmac holdings. The company announced that it has $285,000 in the treasury and with the disposal of the remaining 140,000 shares of its stock now being offered to shareholders at $1.00 a share, there will be a balance in the treasury of approximately $900,000.

Area Mines will begin work immediately on a small shaft which will be sunk immediately after the apex of the vein is reached, on the side of the vertical drill hole which failed to penetrate the Amulet ore body. This shaft will be sunk to a depth of 100 feet and from the point of progress made by the drill-crew who failed to penetrate the ground. In the meantime the last hole is being continued and another set-up will be made when that hole is completed. Purchasers of fairly fast work is being made by the Amulet drill at the other end of the ore body. The fact that they are now sinking a shaft at this point shows considerable confidence in what lies below.

"The Chinese have come for water, but that is all evident there. And militarism is another curse of China. If you in Canada have a responsibility here, you also have one there."

Mr. Stewart told of the misery of the Chinese. "Millions of people have just given up a baby," he said the speaker.

"Clothing from China is beautiful as women know that. But go out in the streets and the great masses of the people wear cotton gowns, and millions don't wear anything at all. And what are we doing about that fact?" queried the speaker. Mr. Stewart told of the orphanages where Chinese child are seen being clothed and taken care of.

"If you come to China today poverty and sickness would impress you most.

"You and I have the remedies for these diseases," pleaded the speaker. If you and I could banish these things what of the poor ignorant Chinese?"

There is a vast task to be done in China.

The speaker told of the terrible conditions in the jails in China.

If you stood at the Chinese Universities which your money has made possible, and saw the Chinese students lined up on Graduation Day ready to step out in the world as doctors, lawyers, dentists, etc., you would rejoice.

"I congratulate you on your wonderful victory and the honor you have brought to the city by your achievement," said his Worship in his message.

KINGSTON WILL VISIT LOCAL "Y" IN FULL FORCE

Limestoners Bringing Up Strong Vollek Ball and Cage Teams Wed.

In conversation with Phil. Brock of the Kingston Y.M.C.A., over the phone, it was learned at the local Association headquarters on Saturday, that the members of the Kingston Y Basketball and Volleyball teams would be pleased to accept the invitation of this Association to pay a visit on Wednesday, the 19th for friendly games. Besides the above mentioned teams, Phil will bring along a team of lady basketeers in the party. The latter, he stated, were very keen for a game and asked if they could be accommodated. Needless to say they were extended a very hearty invitation to come along and were promised they would have a game.

St. Institution will have a very busy day.

All of which means the Campbell night next Wednesday as in addition to the games with the visitors from the Limestone City, there will be a final game in the ladies' division of the church league played, the St. Andrew's and St. Thomas Girls being the contending parties. A few short games of volleyball mid way in the evening's program will supply the necessary exercise for a continuous evening, with but one order of events. In basketball, Kingston have always proved a worthy opposition for the local cageball artists and "Brock" in a late communication claims that his volleyball players are coming right along, having reached the stage where they play a steady game of systematic volleyball.

The businessmens' gym class which supplies the majority of the volleyball players locally, has received of late quite a number of new members all of whom show considerable aptitude for the game, so that as far as the local Association is concerned, there will be no scarcity of available material from which to pick a team, in fact Wednesday night's card will be without doubt, one of the most entertaining that has taken place

DESERTS HIS MANSION TO LIVE ON THE FARM

Erie, Ore., Jan. 17—Few women—give us the opportunity—would eschew living over an executive mansion. The wife of Governor Isaac L. Patterson does. She prefers to live on a farm.

The governor's large farm, which Mrs. Patterson describes as "the most beautiful place in the world in the summer time," is just fifteen miles from Olympia, state capital. Mrs. Patterson is a collector of antiques and historical works which she shelters in her country home.

Alaskans are sounding out the possibilities of their climate for the establishment of large fur farms. One farmer has already made plans to raise 500 mink each season.

MINING GOSSIP

Area To Sink Shaft

Area Mines will begin work immediately on a small shaft which will be sunk immediately over the apex of the lode-pod on level 400 feet. The object of this shaft is to enable the ore to be more readily handled, and to facilitate the development of the lode-pod. Drifting will also be carried on at the 400 level, as speedy as the nature of the ground will permit. Up to the present time the Pet hole is being continued and another set-up will be made when that hole is completed. Furthermore a raise has been started from the 300 level drift at the other end of the ore body.

The shaft sinking at the Area Mines has reached a depth of 100 feet, and the work is being pushed as rapidly as possible. It is expected that the shaft will be down to the 400 level in a few days for this is where the main ore-body is encountered. It has been reported that the Area Mines has struck a very rich vein of ore, but this is denied by the officials of the company. The ore body is a large one, and the values are fairly high, but not as high as reported by some traders in the stock has "left Area off the sheet" for the last clearance or two. This means in semi-technical language that he has not delivered the stock he sold to other brokers. This procedure is a customary one when a broker is trying to conceal his ultimate identity until the demand for the stock he is coming from a distance. Once it is delivered, church, residents will be able to trace it pretty well through the transfer company, and the story will be out.

One of the heaviest Area holders is not a bit perturbed inasmuch as the Area situation though he is far from pleased that his Area holdings on paper are worth a quarter million less today than a few days ago.

Dupre Mines

Quebec, January 17.—At a meeting of the shareholders of the Dupre Mines, a report was given out by J. Beaupre, engineer of the company showing that the electrical survey of the property had been carried out successfully, and that the diamond drilling would be started without delay on the north group of the mine which is located at proximity of the Waite-Montgomery property.

C. W. D. Mines

South Porcupine, Jan. 17.—The announcement that at last director of the Consolidated West Dome Mines had decided to allow the shareholders a more active part at the affairs of the company is fraught with interest for the Porcupine Camp. Recent events which have occurred at the Consolidated West Dome have had the effect of strengthening the hands of local optimists with regard to the general view of this property. Still more encouragement is contained in the news that notices of the annual meeting on March 9 have been sent out from the office of F. H. Hutchinson, trustee of C. H. Mynaston. This is taken to forecast the eventual control of C.W.D. in the hands of the Hollinger group. This will mean that the policy of development, now being followed will be proceeded with.

Barry-Hollinger

Strength in Barry-Hollinger was an outstanding feature of the week-end market, the stock selling very close to the dollar mark again. One recent development is reported to be ahead of sanking on account and to show improvement in value, length and width of shoot. The Barry will be getting into steady mill strike this month, and from now on is likely to work steadily up from viewpoint of production.

TO-DAY'S THOUGHT

You cannot in any given case by any sudden and single effort will to be true, if the habit of your life has been insincerity.

—F. W. Robertson

A HAPPY OMEN

The despatches tell of a picturesque incident recently in Johannesburg, South Africa, which reveals something of the fine sentiment that persists in showing itself in the British Empire, when the East of Athlone, Governor-General of the Union, presiding, more than seventy distinguished veterans of the Boer War met to honor no others than General de Robert Baden-Powell, and Commandant Sarael Eloff, respectively defender and assailant of Mafeking and heroes of the 217-day siege which stirred the world 27 years ago.

General Baden-Powell commented on the sporting nature of the siege. The Boer leader, he said, easily might have poisoned the water supply of Mafeking but instead he challenged the British defenders to a cricket match." The form of the Boer leader, replying through an interpreter, stated Britain had done her duty by the Boers, and he felt the two races always would be friends "in spite of the intrigues of politicians."

It does not merely happen that Britain so often makes fine friends of her once time enemies. It reflects the British genius for conciliation and compromise and her graceful habit of friendly and well-bred gestures which do more than any quantity of words to foster such friendly feelings and to deprive of its barb the sting of defeat.

WELCOME VISITORS

Canada welcomes the visit of Hon. J. C. Coates, Prime Minister of new Zealand, as she welcomed the Premier of Australia. They are on their way home from the Imperial Conference, and it will be of interest to compare their reactions to and impressions of that historic gathering. We have views of Mr. Bruce, and will listen to Mr. Coates.

On the subject of Imperial relations the Premiers appear to hold similar opinions. In an interview at Montreal Mr. Coates "endorsed the belief expressed in this country by Premier Bruce that the British Dominions should bear their fair share of the cost of Empire defence." In the same interview Mr. Coates had little to say about the Conference.

Such visits as these have a considerable effect in educating the ignorance which prevails, unfortunately, in every Dominion concerning the problems, the policies and the public men of the other British nations. At the same time the Dominion publicity and careful attention given to the views of visiting Prime Ministers indicates the essential community of interest of the Dominions.

DOING NICELY

Those who foolishly talk about the disintegration of the British Empire or greet their dismal views count old England having passed into dotage, might find a wholesome corrective for these hasty impressions in the statement recently made by Mr. Montagu Norman, Governor of the Bank of England. Speaking of credit to the tune of some three hundred million dollars, which the Bank of England has year obtained from the American Federal Reserve Bank and the firm of J. P. Morgan and Company, Mr. Norman states that these will run their course and automatically take care of themselves. They are not likely to be renewed, for the simple reason that the British Government has not been compelled to use this reserve fund. Despite the coal strike and all other industrial and economic troubles pressing heavily upon England, the authorities have managed to get on along without having to dip into the American credit line. It was a security in case of emergency, obtained at the time England returned to the gold standard. The reactions of the latter have not thrown the industrial trend to such extent as to drive Great Britain into falling back upon borrowed money. Apart from this marginal guarantee, British finance stands soundly upon its own merits. The conclusion arrived at is that the economic situation is so far amended that a continuance of foreign credits of this sort will not be necessary.

All of which entirely agrees with the estimate made by Mr. C. W. Barron who on his return from England set forth his views in the Wall Street Journal. He tells us that before the war England was valued at about a hundred billion dollars with twenty billions in foreign investments. And today England is valued at one hundred and twenty billions with twenty-five billions of outside investments; one in twenty years, twice the wealth of France and almost twice that of Germany. Like other European nations, England has still great problems to solve and some bumpy roads to travel. The fact by no means warrant the inference that the prosperity of the British Isles are on "easy street" or anywhere near it. But if there is no room for jaunty optimism, neither is there any for the cynical canard that England is going "to the dogs."

Jim and Bill Discuss Questions of the Day

This conversation was overheard in a Toronto Street Car, between two travelers—it is an interesting side light on what the man-on-the-street is thinking:

First Traveller:—"What did you think of Mr. MacMein's speech?"

Second Traveller: 'Well, he talked all about Canada's foreign markets, but he didn't give us much news about our home market. Evidently the Government thinks the home market will take care of itself, while they endeavour to sell our raw materials and farm products abroad, where people work and where manufacturing is considered more important than it is in Canada. How long are we Canadians going to depend on the prosperity in other countries for our prosperity? Just think, we are now duty depending on the prosperity of European countries, United States, England, Japan, etc., for the development of our great resources. If they are prospering they buy our raw materials, and manufacturers there, and then pay us for the raw materials with a finished product. We are just like a donkey with its head through the fence eating grass and tramping down nice, sweet clover that is growing around its feet. If Canada is going to act merely as a huge reservoir of raw materials for the rest of the world to draw from for their manufacturing plants, we might as well adopt a colonial policy at all. It doesn't require a very large population to the numbers of wood and drawers of water for the rest of the world. One man can hack out the tools with which one hundred men work in a factory."

First Traveller: "I don't think Mr. Malcolm knows the difference between a favorable trade balance and an unfavorable international balance. Canada had both last year, but the Government only told us about the favorable trade balance, and nothing about the huge debit against Canada."

Second Traveller: "What's all this national unity that else. Robb talked about?"

First Traveller: "Well, you see, there are Liberals, Progressives, Liberal-Progressionists, Progressive-Liberals, Liberal-Progressives, U. F. A.'s, Independent Labourites, etc. When they all get together at Ottawa and vote Liberal, that's national unity. They're just plain Liberal, that's all."

Second Traveller: "What is this Senate Reform we hear Mr. King talk about?"

First Traveller: "Appointing three Liberals to the Senate."

Second Traveller: "What is a Liberal-Protectionist, anyway?"

First Traveller: "Well, its just like this. He is a Liberal running in a manufacturing constituency, where protection is needed, and where he himself is interested in several industries that need protection. When he is at home he's a protectionist, but when he is in Ottawa, he just votes plain Liberal."

Second Traveller: "Miss MacPhail is an Independent, isn't she? What is that?"

First Traveller: "Well, an Independent is one who looks passage for England, and then says to the captain, 'Captain, you can run your old scow over to England if you like, but I'm going back to Ottawa.' That's being independent with the captain, isn't it?"

Second Traveller: "I wish we married men could be so independent."

First Traveller: "That fellow, Mr. Mackenzie, has a rishi solution for Canada's troubles."

Second Traveller: "You mean protection of our wares, that will build up a larger home market, and permit us to hold our immigrants in Canada?"

First Traveller: "Yes, if the people understood half as much about the principles of protection as they have under stood Mr. Meighen's concientious effort to save Canada for Canadians we would find it easier to book orders for Canadian products, such as I am trying to sell. With the home market protected my job would be a pleasure, instead of a drudgery."

Second Traveller: "Funny thing, a friend of mine was showing me some of the presents she had bought for her little girl. There was a German stocking, at least toy, a Japanese doll, a Czech set of dishes. French perfume, and I noticed the tags were printed in the U.S.A. Can you beat it? I said, Thank goodness its a Canadian Christmas you'll ever have."

First Traveler: (pushing the button) "Well, here's where I go down and face the cold wind, and endeavour to explain why I can't get more orders. So long Jim."

Second Traveller: "Good-bye, Bill."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

FROM FLORIDA

Mr. J. T. Warren has received from Earl H. Carter, who recently left on a trip to Florida, a letter of much interest. M. Carter says:

Fort Lauderdale, Fla., Jan. 7th, 1927

Mr. J. T. Warren,

Belleville, Ont.

Dear Friend:—

I suppose you will be a little surprised to hear from me away down here, but nevertheless I am here, and intend for quiten my friends in Belleville.

I sure had a wonderful trip down here practically all-paved roads and wonderful scenery. Coming through the Alleghany and Blue Ridge Mountains in Virginia was wonderful, also the cotton fields in Georgia.

I am now on the south east coast in the storm stricken district. One could hardly imagine what the storm did here. The ocean seemed to just sweep in over the land and flatten everything. However they are building it up very fast again. There are only about one-tenth of the tourists here there were last winter, so that makes it quite dull.

The northern part of Florida is very beautiful. Lovely cocoa-nut palms and many other different varieties. Pine trees tapped for turpentine, and groves of oranges, grape fruit and lemons found on the ground. The climate here is surely fine. Sun shining every day just like one of our finest days at home. I was in the ocean bathing on Christmas day and New Year's day. I imagine I see you taking your skates from around the coal stove. I don't think there is a head of a stove down here, at least I have not seen one.

I saw a whale that the sharks chased ashore weighing twenty-five tons. Also a porpoise the fishermen brought in weighing fifteen hundred pounds. I could write a book on this trip.

I must say I am proud of the little Chevrolet. I drove a distance of two thousand and sixty-four miles down here for twenty-two dollars and fifteen cents. Used one hundred and four gallons of gas at from sixteen to twenty-four cents according to the State tax. Changed oil five times. Used five quarts $1.00 and had one puncture, cost 35c to change in Augusta, Georgia. So you see they don't hold you up on the repairs. Nearest de-

D. 2. C. P. S.'s lease new pier at Vancouver. 2. 2. 3. Forster.

The appointment of J. J. Forster which has recently been announced to the position of Steamship General Passenger Agent at Vancouver marks another step in the wonderful growth of the Canadian Pacific service on the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. Forster's advancement from the time he joined the Pacific Ocean service in 1913, has been coincident with the growth of the Port of Vancouver. Up until that time the Company's shipping facilities had been more directly under the Railways department, but with Mr. Forster's appointment as General Agent at Vancouver, at the time when the Empress of Russia and the Empress of Asia were added to the Pacific fleet, a new department was formed, the Canadian Pacific Ocean Steamships.

More recently the Empress of Canada and the Empress of Australia began to run from the Pacific to meet the increasing traffic, a further indication of the tremendous growth of the port was the opening this fall of a new pier that has now put Vancouver on the level with the great ports of the world.

ANATOL SHULKIN HAS MADE THE SUBWAY FAMOUS

New York, N.Y., Jan. 15.—Shivering slumber in subways provided inspiration for a painting that has put the underground railways in art and brought recognition to the painter that used them as his boudoir.

The painter, who has immortalized the subway stations, where the penalties sometimes sleep, is Anatol Shulkin, who came to New York from Russia as an immigrant in 1912, when he was 13 years old. The painting, under the title "Half Past Five", is one of a group of his canvases placed on exhibition at the Art Center Gallery as part of its January exhibit.

Struggling masses of humanity striving for entrance to a subway train while burly guards "strong-arm" them into the doorways, in the interpretation of the rush hour painted by Shulkin, in the grotesque light of the tunnels, the crowds are caught at the moment when guards would be about, ing "plenty of room up front!" although every car is packed.

The subway scene, Shulkin said, is not an attempt to put something new in art, but it is fancy born of his recollection of nights spent in the subways when, without money to pay for lodging, he slept in them. His lack of funds was due, he said, to the fact that his family would not aid him in his attempt to become an artist. It was intended that he should become an engineer, but when he refused to study that profession he was unwelcome at home.

He attended classes at the National Academy and made his way as best he could. At the age of 22, Shulkin's dream of an artistic career fructified with the present exhibit, his paintings being shown with those of such famous artists as Hodler, Anisfeld and Mestrovic.

The United States health department records show a falling off of about 5,000 cases of diphtheria a year since the children have been immunized against it.

ECHOES

How sweet the answer Echo makes
To music at night
When roused by lute or horn, she wakes
And far away o'er lawns and lakes
Goes answering light!

Yet Love hath echoes truer far
And far more sweet
That ever, beneath the moonlight's star,
Of horn or lute or soft guitar
The songs repeat.

'Tis when the sigh—in youth sincere
And only then,
The sigh that's breathed for one to hear—
Is by that one, that only Dear
Breathed back again.

I remain,

Piles Disappear

No Cutting or Salves Needed

External treatments seldom cure Piles Nor do surgical operations.

The cause is inside—bad circulation. The blood is stagnant, the veins flabby.

The bowel walls are weak, the parts almost dead.

To quickly and safely rid yourself of piles you must free the circulation—send a fresh current through pulsating pools. Internal treatment is the one safe method. Ointments and cutting won't do it.

J. S. Leonhardt, M.D., a specialist, set at work some years ago to find a real internal remedy for piles. He succeeded. He named his prescription HEM-ROID, and tried it in 1000 cases before he was satisfied. Now HEM-ROID is sold by druggists everywhere under guarantee. It is a harmless tabloid and J. S. McKown's, who will gladly refund the purchase price to any dissatisfied customer.

TEN YEAR OLD MARQUIS KILLS FAMILY GHOST - 'LADY IN BROWN'

Delivers Knock-out Punch And Spook Never Re-appeared

By Sandows Brackley

London, Jan. 17—The famous — and infamous — "blonde spook" of Raynham Hall has just received a perhaps fatal punch by the solar plexus, delivered by a tiried youngster of 10.

The boy who is thought finally to have banished the diabolical creature is little George, Marquis of Townshend, and his rals in the neighborhood — he is just above stumming with commonered ad-his own age — are very fond of his tainment.

My correspondents in Norfolk where Raynham Hall is situated, sends me the following account of the ghost's last appearance prior to its banishment: "Lady Townshend was giving a little week-end party. Among the guests was Captain Murryat, "the distinguished author of adventure and mystery stories." After dinner, the assembage fell to discussing ghosts in general and the "blonde spook in particular.

"Pressed to give her personal version of the mysterious wraith that suddenly declared its being in Raynham Hall, Lady Townshend laughingly disavowed any first-hand knowledge of the amateur "liar," she added, significantly, "there is a family portrait of the Lady in Brown, one of the Townshend ancestors, in the Hall. The servants who have encountered the ghost swear that there is an uncanny resemblance. And, by the way, she went on, still in a jocular vein, the portrait hems directly over the bed in the room that you are occupying, Captain Murryat."

"Captain Murryat slept the night dreamlessly, he informed the guests at the breakfast table.

Murryat's Vision

"That, mind, however, told a different story. The message broke in on an early hour, the captain like the rest seeking out his room directly. Just as he was about to bolt the door, he heard a faint sound halfway between a moan and a giggle, in the corridor. Hastily snatching up his pistol, he opened the door and remained frozen to the spot with awe.

"There, hovering noisily in the corridor, stood — or rather wavered — a hideous travesty of the Lady in Brown of the portrait. The details of the dress were identical, but the expression of the face had altered terribly. Instead of the secretive smile, the spook displayed a leering grin, while the blood-lust-eyes seemed to bore throughthe Captain's face.

"He instantly took aim, fired, and the ghost, he declares, melted like mist through the wall.

Efforts were made to keep the occurrence from the wide open ears of the little Marquis, but, boy-like, he managed to pry the story out of a superstitious servant.

"Immediately George's interest and combativeness were aroused. On the night following that in which the Captain had unavailingly shot at the 'blonde spook,' the Marquis determined on drastic measures of retaliation. Unknow to his mother, he climbed out of his bed shortly before midnight, put on his bath robe, tall boxing gloves and waited. On the stroke of 12 — he was well up in ghost lore — the spectre appeared.

"Noiselessly the figure of the Lady in Brown entered from the doorway leading to George's dressing closet. The mysterious stranger was still wearing the Elizabethan ruff and flowing dress that it had on when the Captain encountered it. But the smile was softer, and there was no menace in the eyes.

Delivers Kidney Punch

"Nevertheless, the little Marquis assured off; delivered a kidney punch at the ghost, which promptly disappeared. He waited for further developments. There were, weirdly enough none, and it is now generally believed that the fist of a scrappy child has definitely banished from Raynham Hall a terrifying visitor. But the Marquis, although his mother admires his nerve and grit, has made a new set of sleeping rules for the boy. One of these is: No boxing gloves in the bedroom.

"Since the marquis knocked out the spook, investigation 'below stairs', has developed a fresh and startling theory as to the identity of the apparition. Several months ago, just before the ghost began to appear with renewed vigor, a maid who had been found untrustworthy had been dismissed and forbidden the primises.

"This woman, was a provincial actress down on her luck. Possessed of considerable skill in mimicry, she is believed to have studied the ghost's every movement prior to her dismissal, and is a matter for secret speculation whether or this woman, after her dismissal, did not get back into the mansion and pure by out of spite, impersonate the spectre to have revenge on those who had sent her "over." If that is true, her appearance must have been fully as terrifying as Captain Marryat made it out."

GERMAN CABINET GETS NEWS FAST FROM AMERICA

Hindenburg Reads Few Newspapers; World Doings Read to Him

Berlin, Jan. 15.—Every time the President Coolidge, Dawes, Kellogg, Mellon or Borah issue a public pronouncement, there is unusual activity in the press division of the German Foreign Office in Wilhelmstrasse.

It is because there is a standing order in the department that press reports of the utterances by these American statesmen should immediately be brought to the attention of President von Hindenburg and the other members of the government.

The manner in which these pronouncements as well as other newspapers facts are communicated to the German leaders is different in each case and is interesting. Take the Mark Cannon as an instance.

HINDENBURG LIKES COMICS

President von Hindenburg reads but few newspaper articles from a daily from his home town, Hanover. The sheets of the world's items is communicated to him orally each day at 11 a.m. by the chief of the government's press bureau, Dr. Zechlin.

Zechlin goes at his job from a purely technical point of view, that is, he translates the news in the order of its importance. Following the news comes the leading editorial of the day and newspaper jokes on persons in the public limelight. The editor-in-chief then gives a resume of the day's report internationally, and it is reported that Zechlin has become a favorite of the president by his judicious selection of humorous material.

The president also receives a daily press report on military matters. Soldier that he is, he watches the minutiy of defense with keener interest than any other governmental department.

MARX READ GERMANIA

Chancellor Marx confined his reading of newspapers chiefly to the Germania, the Berlin daily organ of the Center party, and the Kreuzzeitung, the Prussian organ of the Conservative party for the Rhineland. The chancellor is a native of Cologne.

Dr. Marx also received a daily digest of news from the press division. In his case, however, interest centered particularly in the provincial press. As the political head of the country, he was anxious to know what the folk out in the country thought.

Foreign Minister Stresemann was the most ardent newspaper reader in the cabinet. He personally perused about a dozen newspapers daily and then rang up the government press division to make sure he had not overlooked anything. He particularly desired to know what leading foreign journals had to say. Several leading ones were always kept busy, putting together comments and items from the world press.

In contrast to Dr. Stresemann, the minister of defense, Dr. Otto Gessler, would tell everybody who came to hear a that he never read any newspaper. If he did, he claimed, he would soon jar his nerves at reading all the attacks to which he was reading all the attacks to which his department was constantly subjected. When one watched Gessler in the Reichstag, however, as he answered the attacks of the opposition, one was inclined to think that somehow he found out, after all, what the press said about him.

The minister of the interior, Dr. Wilhelm Kuelz, personally went through the leading Berlin dailies each day and marked the closer reading whatever items especially interested him. These were then cut out by his secretaries and given him for perusal whenever he had a few moments' time.

Plans for erection of a tunnel between Montreal and Longueuil, under the St. Lawrence, were submitted to Parliament.

Honey Used Many Ways

Honey, sweetens life in many ways. This is apparent when we see the various uses to which it is put. Formerly it was used mainly as a spread on bread, but today there are a great number of other ways of using it to vary one's menu. Though the best way to serve honey is as natural or raw form in desserts, as a sweetener, it is used to a large extent in cookery both in the baking of cakes and the making of bread to which it imparts the property of keeping fresh for a long time—this is a point which all good house-keepers should note.

Besides, this it is used in the making of candies, both as a center stuffs in chocolate coated and as an ingredient in the many other kinds of sweets, for which recipes are to be found in all good cook books.

A very appetizing new spread is now manufactured by inverness, Quebec, with peanut butter to make what is called "Honey-nut Butter."

Apart from eating directly into table use, it is used to make most excellent vinegar and by many to be equal to the best produced.

The manufacturer may sweeten his tem per by the use of it as an anti-freeze. It has been found that equal parts of honey water and alcohol make a mixture that have proved very satisfactory to some who have taken the precaution to use it as an anti-freeze, and connections are tight, so that no leakage can occur. for pieces where water cannot pass through honey will.

We can realize the value of honey as a natural food when we see some of the large breakfast food companies now advocating on all packages of cereals put out by them the use of it as a sweet ener.

VETERAN OF MANY WARS DIES IN WINNIPEG CITY

Winnipeg, Jan. 17—Field-Marshal Earl Haig's first sergeant-major, when the present British commander-in-chief was a subaltern in the 17th Lancers died in Deer Lodge Military Hospital, Friday.

He was Sergeant-Major Stephen Sales, 72, a veteran of many campaigns, including the Great War. Most notable was the event of his death. He was in possession with the 108 Battalion, in which he enlisted in May, 1916, but was too old for active service and after a stay in England went back to Canada in October, 1917.

Sergeant-Major Sales, who was well known by Major-General H. D. K. Keller, C.B., C.M.G., M.D. 10, was at one time chief of the Liverpool, Manchester police force and previously was on the strength of the London Metropolitan police force.

CALLS FOR FULL INVESTIGATION

Conservative Leader in B.C. Wants Campaign Funds Probed

Victoria, B.C., Jan. 17—Demands for an investigation into campaign funds was made in the Legislature yesterday by R. H. Pooley, House leader of the opposition. While defending such contributions in general, provided no strings were attached to them, the Conservative Chief declared there was a suggestion as revealed at the customs inquiry at Vancouver, that some persons had been influenced by payment of this kind.

"It is suggested people have been bought," he said, "such being the case, then it is our duty to investigate and find out whether it is so or not."

Mr. Pooley delivered a general attack on the government. Dealing with campaign funds Mr. Pooley said that they, attorney general had said that there should be an investigation consequent on the evidence given before the customs commission.

"The evidence shows that many matters call for investigation" he said.

THEY SEE RED!

Newark, N.J., Jan. 17.—Red-headed men are reckless drivers in the belief of a boat taxicab company and hence that concern refuses to employ any man whose hair is red.

"In our 14-years of experience in hiring competent cab drivers we have found that 98 per cent of red-headed men are reckless drivers," said James F. Byrne, employment manager for the company.

IF YOUR SKIN BREAKS OUT USE SULPHUR

Just the moment you apply Mentho-Sulphur to an itching, burning or broken out skin, the itching stops and healing begins, says a noted skin specialist. This sulphur preparation, made into a pleasant cool cream, gives such a quick relief, even to fiery eczema, that nothing has ever been found to take its place.

Because of its germ-destroying properties, it quickly subdues the itching, ends the irritation and heals the eczema right up, leaving a clear, smooth skin in place of ugly eruptions, rash, pimples or roughness.

You do not have to wait for improvement. It quickly shows. You can get a small jar of Rowles Mentho-Sulphur at any drug store.

TORONTO YOUTH WINS CATALINA CHANNEL SWIM

Canadian Swimming Marvel Only One to Finish of 96 Starters

Wilmington, Calif., Jan. 17.—George Young, seventeen-year-old swimming marvel of Toronto, swam twenty-two miles from Santa Catalina Island to the California mainland, defeated ninety-six of the world's best swimmers, and won $25,000 offered by William Wrigley, jr., for the first swimmer ever to cross the San Pedro channel.

The official time of the Canadian amateur champion was 15 hours 45 minutes. His average crawl stroke throughout was 61 to the minute. The race started at 11.21 a.m. Saturday morning and finished at 1.06 Sunday morning, after all the swimmers save Young had given up the struggle.

Ener Meyer of Cincinnati, came the closest to emulating Young's unrivalled feat. He was a mile and a half from shore when he succumbed to the cold.

Young went into the lead early in the first stage of the marathon, and never was headed after overtaking Norman Ross, of Chicago, who was among the vanguard at the start.

Young took advantage of currents from the northwest and, although he covered probably many miles more than the 22 air line miles across the channel, he was aided by the drift of the current. He maintained confidence and cheerfulness throughout the long grind.

Committee of judges, headed by David F. Flemming, chairman of the Marathon arrangements committee, met late today to formally award Young the $25,000 prize for the first crossing. The $10,000 prize offered for the first woman to finish after a man, was retained by Wrigley.

Young was greeted by cheering spectators who gathered around blazing beacon fires at Point Vincente when he landed after a desperate fight over the last half-mile with tide, and time. When almost on the beach Young was carried back to sea, but gave a remarkable demonstration when he refused the last fifty yards before walking ashore unassisted.

Brotherton, the inventor of the machine-gun used by France, has returned to New Brunswick, his home province, after 35 years absence.

JUNIORS TAKE NEW LINE-UP TO TRENTON GAME

Intermediates Face Kingston Frontenacs in Two Games This Week

The Belleville Juniors will travel to Trenton tonight when they will attempt to lower the home team's lead of three goals on the round. Had the Maroons maintained a steady front in the last ten minutes of the game up there last Wednesday night the score might at least now be tied on the rounds. Eldie Thomas gave several kids a chance last Wednesday night but they did not live up to expectations and some new kids who were out to practice on Saturday evening will be taken along. The Juniors are woefully weak on the defence and Mr. Thomas has been experimenting with some promising-looking boys in the hope that one or two of them might fill the vacancy.

The forward line will practically be the same with "Bud" Galway, a High School boy on the defence. The locals must cut down the lead or at least hold the Trenton team even, if they hope to win this section of the group. The final game of the quartette will be played here.

The Intermediates have two tough games facing them this week. On Wednesday night the Maroons will step into the lair of the Kingston Frontenacs and the locals must win in order to remain in the race of the leaders. On Friday night the same team will be here for the grand tilt. Two games in a row with the Frontenacs is considered tough sledding and if the locals can cop both of them they will be faced with one more real hard route, that with Cornwall at home. H. M. C. play Kingston tonight while Cornwall will be at home to Brockville.

FIRST SPEECH ACROSS OCEAN

London, Jan. 15.—The first speech ever delivered by trans-Atlantic radio-phon was heard successfully in London today, when Robert Lieber, president of a moving picture corporation, spoke from New York to the annual convention of salesmen of his company at a hotel here. Mr. Lieber's voice was projected through loud speakers. Excellent transmission enabled the Londoners, over six thousand miles distant and listeners, to listen in easily to the speaker in New York.

THE CYCLISTS OF COPENHAGEN

I do not know how many automobiles there are in the city of Copenhagen, but I should not be surprised to have some one tell me that outside of a few hundreds, they could be counted on the fingers of one hand. I do not know why there are any hand-repair shops in Copenhagen, but if anyone does wait, it surely occasionally, it cannot be enough to maintain many such stores. I do know, however, that in that city of 750,000 men, women and children there are half a million bicycles—which surely are not that except for their purpose and those about to die, every one has a bike. At the rush hour when offices open and shut the streets remain with them. I have looked down on the Veste Boulevards and seen them as far as the eye could reach. They seemed to step on the heads of all with out stumbling. Denmark is the cyclist's Paradise or rather his Arcadia, for wherever you wander over that pleasant land, the wheels of fortune never breaks and the predestrian does not exist to demand his old fashioned right of way.

OTTAWA RETAINS LEAD IN N.H.L. BY WIDE MARGIN

Auriel Joliat, Speedy Canadien, Scores Only Goal

Ottawa, January 17.—The Ottawa Senators maintained their sturdy position in front of the National Hockey League pack by trouncing the Bruins of Boston, 5 goals to 4 in a hard, fought tussle here Saturday night. The locals won the sparkling contest which thoroughly thrilled the 5,000 fans in attendance, by taking the aggressive at opportune times and then falling back on the defensive when their citadel was threatened.

The losers had at least an even break with the rest, while "Sad Sam" Jones on the night's play, especially in the third period when within one goal of tieing up the count, they overwhelmed the Ottawa forwards and rent a continuous rain of pucks on the local net. But the wingers' defence was ironclad and absorbed the heavy mawling to retain their slim margin.

Montreal, Jan. 17.—Auriel Joliat, rollicking daredevil of professional hockey, heralded his return to play in the National Hockey League after a one-game suspension for fighting by scoring the goal which gave Canadiens a 1-0 victory over the Montreal Maroons before a capacity throng of 12,000 at the Forum Saturday night.

After two periods of fast, open hockey—a delightful contrast to the heavy man-to-man play which has characterized previous meetings between the two teams in the past three seasons—the third session started with the vast crowd nerve-wracked as it awaited the inevitable break and the goal which was certain to decide victory to one side or the other.

Toronto, January 17.—A greatly improved Detroit team made its bow to local hockey fans here on Saturday night, when the Cougars played St. Patricks team in a National Hockey League fixture, and the Cougars, forced the Green Shirts to divide the points the contest ending in a one-goal tie after 20 minutes of overtime had failed to break the deadlock.

Pittsburg, Pa., January 17.—Pittsburgh failed to break its losing streak Saturday night and lost its fourth straight National Hockey League game, 2 to 1, to the New York Americans. The game was tied until a minute before the close, when Reise scored the winning goal with a spectacular shot. Mr. Breen made the initial American tally in the first period and Langlois accounted for the Pirates' lone marker.

MAY DISPLACE MANNEQUIN

London, Jan. 15.—Mannequins will no longer be needed at big stores in the future if there is new invention comes into universal use. Mrs. Sobuskis and Lady Mayfair will be able to try on their frock themselves while still wearing their fur coats.

The scheme is something between a ghost mannequin and electricity. The would-be purchaser enters a small room and stands in front of a full-length mirror. Her body is made to "fade out" by special lighting, leaving the head in the mirror. Then a headless model dressed in a particular dress "comes through" and fits exactly under the head of the purchaser. If the means is successful several gowns could be tried on without the removal of any out-door garment or the use of a mannequin.

EMIL WORMSER JAILED

New York, Jan. 15.—Emil Wormser, millionaire resident of Riverside Drive, and convicted head of the Port Chester rum ring, was sentenced to two years' imprisonment and fined $10,000 today. Three confederates were given lesser sentences.

The rum ring, which was reported to have had control of approximately $10,000,000, operated vessels landing smuggled liquor at Port Chester and nearby shore points.

DEATH TO POISONERS

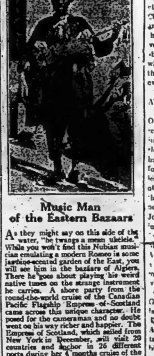

Paris—French jurors, who since times out of ten acquit women murderers when the murder is used as a weapon, have recently shown extreme severity when poison has been administered. Within a month, two women have been sentenced to the guillotine in France. Hitherto an unheard of occurrence. Both had poisoned their victims.

Lenient jurors usually inclined to overlook the results of nervous fingers upon the fingers were merciless. They discarded the "passionate" element which has stayed so many murderers from the knife, and voted guilty "without premeditation." The court had no other way open than to pronounce sentence of death.

Antoinette Scierri, a nurse, who poisoned five of her patients for ten excitement at the receipt of out of wedlock children, and Melanie Becard, of Douai, who administered poison in small doses to her husband in order that she might marry her paramour are in the death house.

BOTH CANADIAN BRED

Lady Mary, the Plymouth Rock hen which broke the world record by having laid 323 eggs in one year, was bred and is owned by French Brothers at Newmarket. She defeated a Wyandotte rival by four eggs in the year. The Hamptonian Princess which was thought to be the world's champion, having in the Hampton Agricultural Institute contest accounted for 320 eggs, is also a Canadian-bred hen having come from stock originally purchased from the Ontario Agricultural Institute.

Music Man of the Eastern Bazaars

As they might say on this side of the water, "he twangs a mean ukelele." While you won't find this Nubian musician emulating a modern Rosene in some Jazzine-accented garden of the East, you will find him in the bazaars of Algiers. There he goes about playing his weird native tunes on the strange instrument he carries. A show party from the round-the-world cruise of the Canadian Pacific Flagship Empress of Scotland came across this unique character. He posed for the cameraman and no doubt went on his way richer and happier. The Empress of Scotland, which sailed from New York on January 8th, will visit 20 countries and anchor in 26 different ports, staying her 4 months cruise of the world.

My European Excursions

NORWAY, THE WORLD'S LAST ARCADY

Norway is notably a country where the traveler will use his motorboat. If he is Coxe enough to illustrate his notes with a few thumbnail sketches, he will bring back with him as delightful a pocket album of nature in Switzerland and practically unseen as the heart of any lover of beauty could desire. Looked at from the east, Norway's 125,000 Kilometres look like the stern and jagged menace of an Irish shillelagh, but looked at from its tapering foot to the north, it appears rather like a beautiful bush flowering in the blue Gulf Stream which laps its coast. All ruggedness has been cut and the beauty which lacks ruggedness is usually too flimsy and ethereal for admiration. So Norway by the very outlines of its coasts and borders can both flagellate and flower. Add to this the wonderful farm scenery which its valleys and coasts over its mountains and fjords, its sublime solitudes, its costume beauty, its peasantry, its forests and meadow-rimmed villages and you understand why I once wrote:

Fjord and forest, fastness and fjeld,
Viking haunted homeland by the northern sea.
Sun-swept green cragland and golden flower land,
Norway, the world's last Arcady!

THE CARILLON OF BAUDELOO

One of the most delightful features of the life of people who live in the old countries of Europe, is the manner in which old sensations are rendered as nine day wonders. I know a railway station where the townsfolk still come every evening to see the train ask that town. So here at Gheat in Belgium. Nearly three hundred years ago the great Hennepin was imprisoned but founder, gave the Carillon of Baudeloo to the people and the sensation of wonder and beauty at its every stroke has lasted till today. Full and mellow and clear the old Flemish songs are thrown on the summer evening air, and below stands an entranced group of citizens, every bit as charmed as when the crowd first gathered to hear the chimes centuries ago. I have seen the same before the Rathaus bell in Munich, in America I fear the beauty of the sensation would have been thought commonplace after the first week. Here it sounds with every chance of being "a joy forever."

THE TOWERING SOULS OF TOURS

The capital of the old province of Touraine is still one of the most fascinating cities of old France. In history is as old as Rome. It had a Christian bishop in the year 300, and it prides itself as the place where the best French is spoken. If history is your principal interest in being here, you can drive deep into its past and cot many a glance of Caesar Augustus, Constantine, Charlemagne, on his way, Richard the Lion Hearted is buried here and at the Castle of Chinon near by, Charles VII received Joan of Arc. Wander about its streets and squares and you will see statues to Balzac, Rabelais and Descartes, who lived here. Here also lived Plantin, the great printer. Cardinal Richelieu, Descartes, Alfred de Vigny, Honore de Balzac and latterly Anatole France, whose villa is just outside the city. Tours is in the heart of the Chateau region and thousands of Americans visit it every year en route to he castles about its country side—all worth seeing, but not if you let them obliterate the interest in Tours itself where I would rather spend a week than rumble up the stony stairs of every chateau in France.

AT YE OLDE CHESHIRE CHEESE

"If you'd dine at your ease, try 'Ye Olde Cheshire Cheese,' at the famous court in the Wine Office Court." I've not been there and had our plateful of the famous lark pudding. The old inn has stood here off Fleet Street, London for three hundred years and three hundreds of William Shakespeare and others dining in its predecessor before the one was built. In all years the notable of all lands have dined here. Dr. Johnson, Goldsmith, Tennyson, Dickens in their days. Asquith, Richard Burton, Rudyard Kipling, Rothschild and Prime Minister Baldwin in this day. As for Americans, they all have been in and out in the summer time is without man or woman from the States, either, Tennyson or Dickens say, who does not come Roosevelt, Joseph Choate, George Harvey, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge and Mary Miles Minter about that pudding there are more tales than ever were told during Arabian Nights. "How do you make it?" asked one fair American. There's no answer to that question. It has been a secret for centuries. The Sphinx might know, ask her. Judge its size from the fact that sixty persons can have a plateful from it and six sturdy men carry it from the kitchen!

An air mail service for Canada is likely. The Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Postmaster-General, remarked in an interview that the Postal Department had "always had under review with keen interest the successful activities of the United States air service and that something similar may be started in this country shortly. Definite announcement one way or the other would be made early in the New Year, said Mr. Veniot.

Northern Ontario has 2,600,000 square miles of mineral lands, of which only 7 per cent. has been explored and of this only one per cent has already produced metals to the value of a billion dollars. Such was the summing up of Dr. Arthur Bateman, Secretary of the Ontario Mining Association, speaking before the Canadian Club. "Twenty years ago," he reminded his hearers "Northern Ontario was practically a wilderness. Today it is the centre of a large and growing industry."

A combined service to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company of 143 years was celebrated on January 1st with the retirement from the activities of travelling passenger agents of Henry E. Dibblee, Ambrose E. Lalonde and James McKenzie. The official records of the Company indicate that these three well-known officials have served respectively, 44, 53 and 43 years in the employ of the Company. Their railway careers of these men began in each case during the construction of the Canadian Pacific lines from the north shore of Lake Superior west to the Pacific Coast.

To further assist agricultural development the Canadian Pacific Railway will operate forage, crop, seed, poultry distribution and demonstration cars in the Alberta district, starting this January. Following the practice of previous years the company will co-operate with the Provincial Government, says Thomas S. Acheson, General Agricultural Agent, Western Lines of the C.P.R. The special cars will centre upon Lethbridge, ranging between the international boundary and Calgary, eastward to Loombe and the Saskatchewan boundary, and west to Red Deer and Rocky Mountain House.

BELLE THEATRE

A story of the war with a brand-new twist—that has all intelligent people interest by virtue of its different plot.

This is the problem for Mlle. Mata of War," featured leading picture everywhere. Estelle Jenia Goudal, recently elevated to stardom by that of her splendid performance in "Three Faces East," portrays the star role in this picture which is scheduled for show ing at the Belle Theatre today and Tuesday.

Unlike other war pictures, this story is laid behind the German lines during the war, rather than in Allied territory. It concerns the adventures of two American doughboys, who are held as prisoners by the Germans. Calline themselves deserters, they are in reality spies, and the manner in which they gather valuable information and the unique method which they employ to transmit it to their American companions on the Allied front families the plot material of the piece.

Miss Goudal is cast as a German "mystery spy" who, from one of the prisoners is forced to work, by the German authorities. Here is the love interest, and their adventures make it a most unusual way. The acting is Alsace-Lorraine and practically all of the action takes place behind the lines, with no actual battle scenes included.

William Boyd, who, triumphed in "The Volga Boatman," greatly augments an unusually strong supporting cast, in the leading role opposite Miss Goudal.

PARIS FAVORS YELLOW SHADES

London, Jan. 17—Paris changes her mind about colors so quickly that the only way to keep in fashion is to run out and buy the very minute a new color is on the market.

In place of the popular red we are to have yellow, red Bluy-Coat-School pullover, also yellow-green and mustard. In yellow, there lurks many a pitfall. In the old days one bought a dress, some thing to go underneath it and shoes and the business was over. Colors were simple and straight forward.

Now there are all mixed up, and you cannot wear an old-fashioned complexion with a new-fashion color. It is very hard to have to buy what is practically a new complexion with every new hat.

There is a fashion just now for wearing colors that clash. Two shades of mauve are not with a queer blue; wine color will on ordinary violet. They look wrong. That is why they are smart.

Having bought your new hat, Madame the milliner says quite decidedly, "Now your face is hopeless. You must go and get the right complexion . . . to model." She sends you to the hairdresser, and perhaps you are supplied with "henna curls" as your color.

Paris Fashion Notes

White for both sport frocks and evening gowns is emphasized in the wardrobe of Yvonne Printemps, designed by Jeanne Lanvin. Gold and silver decorate the evening models.

• • •

Pink and white are combined by Lelong for a charming two-piece crepe de chine evening gown. Pale Cameo pink forms the top of the jumper, the lower portion of which is widely bordered with blue and a line of gold. The pleated skirt is made of blue crepe. The cape for this ensemble is of blue Turquoise crepe, trimmed with gilded crepe.

The newest sweaters are made in "Cote of Mail" style of an extremely supple and light metallic material of dull gray color.

• • •

Belle made of cut crystal, alternated with silver or metal plates are very smart. They are worn on sport dresses of navy blue. Gloya red or violet woolens as well as on long, light colored sweaters.

• • •

An afternoon gown of Parisette green crepe de chine is trimmed with silver ribbon and gray, which edges the bottom of theskirt. The green velvet coat which covers it, designed by Poiret has collar and sleeves also trimmed with gray fur.

• • •

Red and blue are re-edged by Redfer in a charming ensemble. Diagonal red stripes make the original jumper. The upper portion of the jumper giving the effect of a vest and they trim the ends of the scarf from the collar of the coat.

Evening slippers of silvered leather are now in vogue. Some have a rose tinge. Others a slightly lavender hue.

Draped on the side of the waist and finished in a large graceful bow, an evening gown of gold lame is embroidered with real roses. A dash of deep yellow velvet hangs at soft folds from the bow. The model is from Louis Mathieu, Paris.

• • •

Green, mauve or blue suede gloves exactly made to match the frock, the wrist of which is embroidered in tiny old gold beads is the latest creation of Parisian glove makers.

AS NEW YORK SEES IT

A new form of the telephone greeting for New York girls has been adopted by the office of a theatrical producer. The operator at the private switchboard answers each call with the formula "Good morning," followed by the name of the company.

"Give a thought to—" seems to be the popular beginning for slogans in recent months. The Brooklyn Association supposedly started it with "Give a Thought to Brooklyn." Since, have appeared "Give a Thought to safety" and "give a thought to laugh month."

European hand telephones, with which the cinema has made Americans acquainted, now may be purchased in New York for $100 and up, installed.

For Backache

DR. A.W. CHASE'S KAL-KOMFORT KIDNEY PILLS

For They Who Are Lost

Those who go down to the sea in ships do not venture forth on untortured paths. Executives who start the day's program of work without charting a path ahead often drift into port at night after a very roundabout and tiring journey.

The home executive, who attempts to manage her day without a work plan usually finds that her housework is never done but even good executives are interested in finding out how other people plan their work, and work their plan. In fact, in any one field of business there are many principles that apply to all successful planning.

"The best-laid plans of mice and men" do not all vanish into thin air. This is the message that home managers have given in reporting on their work plans. We look most favorably on those plans that do not demand too close a division of time during any one morning or afternoon. If, for example, one attempts to set a piece of work for attention between 10 and 10:15 in the morning and another between 10.15 and 10.30, we greatly doubt the wearing qualities of such a schedule. It is wiser to aim for the accomplishment of certain tasks within a longer period—an hour or more—thus allowing for greater flexibility.

These work plans that work are systems rather than schedules in the strict sense of the term. Systems which have proved to be a balance-wheel rather than a force which drives one to follow the clock.

Blue Monday and washday are closely associated, but not when one has a good work plan. Many housekeepers report an arrangement similar to this: "By dividing the laundry work into sections according to the method required, and spreading it over several days, I avoid fatigue and am always fresh at 3.30 to welcome friends. Every purchase of clothing, house linen, furnishings and equipment is made with first considering the cost of upkeep in time and effort." Others arrange the cleaning in the same way. On the other hand, certain duties repeated during the day may be done at one time with a saving of time and effort as this home-manager reports: "Washing the dishes only once a day saves time."

Above all, have a plan of some kind, but work it out for yourself so that it may fit your own particular use of youth ouse, the type of furnishings, the amount of cleaning necessary, and the kind of menus you serve. You may send laundry out, or you may have it done at home. You may do more or less sewing mending and cooking—than your neighbor does. No one, therefore, can make a satisfactory plan for you without knowing a great deal about all these conditions.

WHAT'S NEW

(From a Woman's Standpoint)

Lace trocks in natural color are being featured by a smart New York house for southern wear.

Further evidence of compose styling is seen in the fostering of three different shades in a frock, recently presented by a dress designer.

Rhinestone embroideries are featured for evening frocks for southern resorts by Lucile.

• • •

The Duchess of York, took with her to Australia a number of beautiful colorful feather fans in varying flower shades to tone with the evening dresses in her outfit and one H.R.H. carried recently via 14 several totes of wear.

• • •

The latest for scarf in Paris is made of close-cropped fur and arranged in a smart knot at the side with single pointed ends and is newer than the small an last necklets stone marten, baum marten and sable, which have been the favorites of early winter fashion.

• • •

A New York hosiery firm for spring are featuring several new shades that accent the light tan, Nude, and mauve tone and peap is the name given to a light blue shade; eglsh is a tan with a suggestion of pink; Indian, a shade similar to eglsh Athena's darker; pastille, a dark mauve color; duda, an emphatic rose-taupe shade, which, is mentioned by this firm as a favorite for the spring season.

A Frock Inwests Wisely in Vests

SUTTHICE 1220

To assert 1900 anew one might write a book on "The Two-Piece Frocks Its Origin and Its Future." Those of us who struggled through the shirt-waist tucked-under-the-shirt era have some idea of the origin, but who can guess the future of this ever-aging fashion species? The author who contemplates writing this history would do well to preserve the above illustration as representing one of the most outstandingly attractive versions of the two-piece frock in 1927. It is very smart for sports in white flannel or jersey with a gaily striped vest, while for general wear all stripes or shantung will be found popular.

BEYOND ALL DREAMS

It was surprising how this love maiden had stolen his energy, and made all the ordinary joys of life seem worthless in his sight. He knew that this state of mind was morbid and unhealthy still it seemed that he had not the power to cast it off. His stove was fireless, and soon he shivered with cold.

At that precise moment there came a rap, loud and imperious, on the door of the studio. The key was inside, so Donald had to cross the room and unlock his door.

Durand and Blake immediately entered the room.

"Cleft" cried Durand, "what art thou doing, my Donald by the light of the lone lamp, and without fire, and without wine, and without friend? Art thou in love? But no, for then, like me, you would be cheerful and merry. I am the time in earnest, I adore the luminous Pole to whom you sly dog, give lessons in painting. Ha, ha! Does he not look guilty?" for Donald had turned a shade paler at mention of that name.

"Now what do you think? Where do you suppose I met this infidelity, which lends the life about of a nun under the roof of the Hotel Charniere?"

"Where on I left?" Donald answered speaking with as much indifference as he could assume, while his heart beat with fierce eagerly.

"Well, I came upto your room one day when you were out; but you had extraordinarily left the door of the back, and so it was supposed you were upstairs in your own apartments. I entered my friend, and found him reading the bird flown. Still I sat down and waited, supposing you would return in five minutes, and I was not mistaken. I gone up the street. But you did not come in, and then, when minutes had passed, I began to have a view of your sketch-books which lay on the table, and there I found a new face—a face to drive a man mad with its exlas beauty. Again and again this face. In different costumes had you clothed you, divinity? Now she was in the act of full sweeping robe and white hood, kneeling at a roadside cross; then she wore the peasant costume of Normandy, and sat at along a quaint old crooked street with a basket of flowers on her arm; again she was a lady and gentleman in pearls, and silks, and basins of lace, seated in a carriage which stood in one of your London streets—by Jove! I tell them—but she still with the same living face on foot. I fell in love with your works in chalk, and said that I resolved to see the original. could not imagine whom she was. At last all at once it struck me that I had seen the remue to the effect that you were giving lessons to some young lady in the house in a moment I perceived that this was the model, and I resolved to see her in the flesh, and without letting you know; for something told me you would put like me to see this lovely creature."

Durand paused; his dark eyes dancing wickedly; he saw that Donald was at sales with the attempt at a smile on the lips; but Durand was no deep reader of human faces.

"Well, down-stairs I stole as if nothing was the matter! went out into the street and crossed opposite, where under an archway sits an old woman who sells doubtful chestnuts, and I commenced to watch the windows of the Charnieres. All at once, behold at a window on the second floor—one of the windows of the drawing-room—appeared a slender form in the white plain collar and black wideknit robe of a Provincienne, and the face, the golden hair, the deep-grey eyes. My friend, I at once confessed that you were supreme at a likeness; I recognized the pitying sun, the very fine, and without fire, and without wine, and without friend? Art thou in love? But no, for then, like me, you would be cheerful and merry. I am the time in earnest, I adore the luminous Pole to whom you sly dog, give lessons in painting. Ha, ha! The Irony of Love

By Charles Garvice

CHAPTER I.

THE MAN

Behind the bar of the Eldorado Saloon, the principal building and ornament of the camp of "Jumping Jane"—if a rickety structure of planks and canvas may be called a building—the landlord lay back in a broken chair, preparing himself by a doze for the arduous labors of the evening. The saloon, for the present, was empty of customers; but the sun was setting, and soon the little band of miners would come lurching in, tired to the limit of endurance, hungering for anything that should break the tedium of a day's toil which would have made an English dock laborer shriek promptly and implacably.

It was in the early days of "Jumping Jane," so called, by the way, because the drunk a old prospector who discovered the little auriferous valley possessed a wife belonging to that strange damsel's well called "Shakers" or "Jumpers." He had ill-treated her during her life but he had been firmly convinced that he had made up to her for all his hard usage when he honored her memory by conferring on the camp the name she had borne during her short and unhappy career.

It has been observed, with truth, that there is one secret which cannot be held by any human creature; you may confide your identity, even your sex but you cannot keep secret the presence of gold. Within a few weeks of the discovery in Black Horse Gulch, new had streamed to the spot, a camp had been set up, and life, with all its varied energies, was seething lotty where, but a few days previously, there had been only silence and solitude; and before the last claim had been staked out, the Eldorado, like a half-fledged bird, had arisen in the midst of the tumult.

The man who by sleeping behind the bar was the original proprietor he had none—like most of the others—from no one knew where. He was a thin and by no means drooping-looking man, and had been openly known as Jack, he would not be able to run the Eldorado for a week for the saloon of a mining camp, especially one in one was the Jumping Jane in its early days, is a place where strength reigns omnipotent; and how could a man whose only support a set of burly ruffians, nearly all of whom were, strongest than the individual who had been presuming enough to undertake the upsailing task?

But Parchment Joe, the philosophers and bankers-down-on-their-luck friend had shaken his wicked old head and smiled.

"Gentleman Jim is neither a giant nor an athlete," he said, " and the best of you boys could knock the stuffing out of him easy enough; but, all the same, I'm not mistaken he's good enough to beat the biggest and strkest of you."

And Parchment Joe's estimate proved correct. The first row, probably prompted as a test, occurred on the opening night itself, when Bully Jack and Pike-face, coming from words to blows, proceeded to wreck the saloon, to be instantly confronted by the muzzles of a revolver which, Gentleman Jim—otherwise "Mr. Brown"—had produced from his side pocket.

"Look here, boys," he said, in his low and somewhat tired voice, "when I put up the Eldorado I meant it for a place where you gentlemen could have the time with a place of amusement to drink and play cards in; but if you seem to think that I intended the saloon for a fighting crib. A little mistake on your part, that's all. But get rid of it. The best and brightest of men look ridiculous when he's flung on his back with a bullet hole in his shirt."

There were other revolvers in the saloon besides that which the landlord held in his thin, white hand; but, strangely enough, no one fired; and, from that time to this,nay no shilled in its irreplenery by the mere uplifting of the proprietor's hand. It followed that Gentleman Jim could have been the most popular man in Jumping Jane Camp if he had chosen to occupy the proud position; but it soon became evident that he had no desire for popularity and his social and business aloofness and reticence which in a manner, set him apart from and raised him above the others.

But the mantle of popularity which he had declined to wear had been bestowed freely on his son; for, when Gentleman Jim had come to the camp, he had been accompanied by a lad whose physical strength and genial temper were strongly contrasted with the slight figure and reticence and reserve of his father. These two, father and son, so strangely dissimilar, lived, when the saloon was closed, in a little hut on the edge of the camp; similar to but apart from the others; but the lad had quickly fallen into the ways of his fellows; and after working a claim which his father had staked out when he had first arrived upon the scene; and young Herb, during the week and the amusements of the round of which he was a member, differentiated from his mophenomyzons in only three particulars: he was always sober, had a partiality for cleanliness, and was possessed of a rugged sincerity and candor which his companions sometimes found embarrassing.

ANOTHER FISH STORY WHICH HAS AROUSED THE DOUBTS OF CRITICS

Directly Inspector Russell of the N. A. FARMER OBJECTS TO THE ODOR OF WASTE WHEY

Gets Damages of $50 and Costs From Cheese Factory

Before the Honorable Mr. Justice Legie the civil action brought about by William Cave against the Highland Cheese Company, was operated at the court house yesterday afternoon, Some of the witnesses were late in arriving and after some of the evidence was heard the case was laid over until today and the case of Cane and Sanderson proceed with.

In the former case J. D. Harris of Port Perry, acted for Cave and H. C. Gennan on behalf of the Cheese Co.

William Cave, the plaintiff, was the first witness. He stated that a ditch which runs along his farm the whey, etc., from the factory was supposed to through a ditch which runs along his farm and creates an unpleasant odor. He said that the factory was built some 25 years ago. A cesspool was formed some years ago in which the, waste collects. The witness stated that the nuisance is especially marked in the hot summer days.

Mr. Cave did admit that the Cheese Co. built the ditch wider and deeper a few years ago with the idea of preventing the corruption from collecting in front of his house, but this had not proved adequate to the situation.

Mr. Harris—"What would you compare this smell to?"

Mr. Justice Legie (smiling) "Odor of Picardy".

Mr. Cave said that two representatives of the Cheese Co. tried to create an outlet one summer, but it was unavailing. In the spring of 1925 Mr. Cave said he rented the farm and moved to another section of the country. Mr. Cave stated that he believed that the odor was injurious to his family's health.

In the case of Cave vs. the Highland Cheese Factory, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, damages must be abated within six months.

Judgment was given in favor of the defendant in the case of Cave vs Anderson and the costs are to be paid by the plaintiff if demanded.

Requests Further Protection For Women and Children in Industry

Toronto, Jan. 18.—"It is still the opinion of workers of this province that the best thing that could be done in the matter of temperance and moderation is to allow the sale of beer by the glass," said William Varley in presenting a brief for various Trades and Labor Organization connected with the Trades and Labor Congress appearing before the Ontario Government today.

Since our request for beer and wine sale was framed, we have had on election the evidence that we want. But while we still think beer should be restored to its ancient and historic status as a beverage."

Premier Ferguson made no comment as to whether request would be considered or not. "I am not prepared to say," he said. "For the information you bring to us, I suggest that, to further temperance sentiment in the province, we should have a pretty full programme for our session which starts in a few days' time" said the Premier. "A number of things you mention have already been dealt with by the Government and in some we have gone a long way, in others I cannot agree.

"When we meet the legislation will be able to decide," said the premier regarding provincial adoption of the proposed federal old age pensions bill. "I note that some of other provinces have reported against participation in the scheme."

Toronto, Jan. 18.—The trades and labor congress of Canada, through the Ontario executive and members of various trades organizations waited on provincial cabinet ministers today. The delegation urged the enactment of an eight hour day law for all industries, legislation for the further protection of women and children in industry, co-operation on the part of provinces for Dominion wide labor laws and the bringing of all young persons under the minimum wage act.

INSP. T. GURNETT IS TRANSFERRED TO KITCHENER

To Be Succeeded Here By W. H. Lougheed of Windsor Station

District Inspector F. C. Gurnett, of the Ontario Provincial Police, after two years and three months service in Belleville, has been transferred to Kitchener, Ont., where he will assume the higher responsibility of District Inspector in that section.

District Inspector W. H. Lougheed will come here from Windsor, and District Inspector H. Gardiner, of Kitchener, is to be transferred to Windsor. These moves will take effect on February 1st.

EFFICIENT HEAD

Many important criminal cases have been handled by the Inspector, the outgrowth of the conditions and his name is an anathma to law breakers. He was fair and just in prosecutions and always freely co-operated with all branches of the law enforcement system.

In conversation with the Press this morning, Inspector Gurnett expressed his great regret at leaving Belleville. "I have never been in a place before where I have met so many people that I liked and formed so many happy friendships as in this city."

Mrs. Gurnett will be much missed in Church and society circles. She has taken an active part in many of the organizations of the Catholic Church and endeared herself to a wide circle of friends.

District Inspector Gurnett came to Belleville from Toronto where he held position of efficiency in police circles.

EXPECT JOHNSON TO BE DEPOSED

New York, N.Y., Jan. 18.— The world today says that Ban Johnson has been deposed as czar of baseball by the American League," unless seven club owners "go back on a promise made to Commissioner Landis, December 17th, 1924. Club owners of the league with the exception of Phil D. Ball, of St. Louis signed a statement of assurance to the commissioner on that date that Johnson's "misconduct will not be considered cause for action from office will follow" the paper says.

Landis was asked to overlook Johnson's misconduct when he became president of our league since its inception"

WOMAN DOCTOR MISSIONARY DIES SUDDENLY WHILE IN PEKIN, CHINA

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 18.—Miss Jean Dow, M.D., Honan, thirty-one years missionary in China, was with the Presbyterian Church in Canada and latterly with the Honan Mission of the United Church of Canada, died at Peking yesterday, according to a cable received last night by Rev. A. E. Armstrong of the Board of Foreign Missions. The cause of death was not given.

Rev. J. A. Dow, of Kelowna, B.C., and Dr. W. G. Dow, of Owen Sound, Ont., brothers, and Mrs. (Rev.) J. A. Cranston, Toronto, sister, survive. She was born at Perquin, Ontario.

The late Dr. Jean Dow had remarkable scholastic and missionary career. She had passed into High School at the age of ten and when fifteen years old became school teacher. Graduating from the Toronto Medical School in 1895, she was designated a missionary that year and was sent out by the Montreal section of the W.M.S. of the former Presbyterian Church.

ROTARY GETS A NEW ANGLE ON CHINESE RIOTS

Dr. J. L. Stewart, Long Resident in East, Gives Other Side

Dr. J. L. Stewart, a professor in a Chinese University, and a resident of the Far East for over twenty years, gave his Rotarians rather a new angle of vision on the disturbances in China, at yesterday's luncheon, Instead of picturing the Chinese as half savage mobs, incited to rapine and murder by Soviet gold, he treated them from the standpoint of patriots, jealous of the standing of their country, possibly misguided but justifiably resentful of selfish foreign aggression.

The leaders of the revolt are all men educated in European and United States Colleges, Dr. Stewart claimed, and they are actuated by the highest motives. They want a cessation of the unfair advantages which the white races have raised in China—the right to control their own trade and tariff—to live under their own laws and retain their own empire. The Chinese, in a word, want to be treated as a sovereign nation by other nations.

Anti-British

This rising feeling of Nationalism has been cleverly turned against the British by the other peoples concerned, particularly by Soviet agents because Britain is the predominant factor in the Chinese situation, holding the bulk of the trade and the richest concessions. Other nationalities hope in the scramble to pick up some of the pieces if Britain is forced to let go.

Dr. Stewart said that the Chinese were not anti-Christian, but anti-foreign, particularly anti-British. So when they kill a missionary or drag his wife around by the hair, it does not mean any antipathy to Christians but just a patriotic abhorition against the foreign devils.

Many Guests

The Rotary had as their guests yesterday most of the ministers of the city and a number of others. Mention of the alterations at the Quinte the luncheon was held at the New Queen's Hotel.

Last evening a group of Rotarians motored to Trenton to take part in an inter-club meeting with Cobourg and Trenton. The survivors this morning report a good time.

25 KIWANIANS GO TO THE CITY

Local Kiwanians are planning a big day tomorrow, for the Club will journey to Toronto as guests of the Toronto Kiwanis Club at their city at luncheon. Approximately twenty-five members signified their intention of going. The details of making the trip, the purpose of which is to decide the permanent location of the large silver cup which is awarded by Kiwanis International to the club scoring the highest number of points in the year's gatherings. If the Belleville club representatives to the number of at least twenty-five go to Toronto tomorrow, the silver cup will be retained by the locals.

Kiwanish Billy Mills of Kingston, district Lieutenant Governor spoke briefly at the luncheon today, giving an interesting and instructive talk on the aims and objects of Kiwanis, and the duties of its members. The speaker traced the remarkable progress of the organization since its formation in 1915, being today the largest service organization on the continent with 1546 clubs and one hundred thousand members. Board on service through the organized efforts of fellowship, the club, while non-political, religious and non-charitable, yet practices applied Christianity, and expresses in its true sense, and works for the welfare of the community.

OVER 30000 WAR VETERANS WERE PLACED ON LAND

Some Amazing Successes in Post-War Settlement

SOME WORTH $20,000

Interesting Review of Nine Years' Work—$4,000,000 Repaid Last Year

Ottawa, January 18.—More than 30,000 ex-soldiers have benefitted under the soldier settlement legislation, of 1917 and 1919. Over 24,000 have received direct financial assistance, and 6,000 have been given free grants of Dominion lands without financial aid.

In a survey covering nearly nine years of operation, Major E. J. Ashton, Commissioner of the Soldiers' Settlement Board of Canada, gave the proportions of successes and failures among the soldiers who took up land. "During 1925-26," stated the Commissioner, "soldier settlers paid well on to four million dollars into the Dominion Treasury, a sum which, in addition to covering all administrative costs, more than sufficed to provide the funds used during the year for general colonization purposes, including advances under the 2,000 British family scheme.

"There were 17,521 settlers with payments due in 1925-26. Of these 2,429 made their payments in full, 6,920 made part payments, and 4,541 made no payments. As at November 30 last, 918 had repaid their loans; of these 518 were still farming and 400 had sold their farms. Among those who have repaid their loans are men whose success in the difficult post-war years has been amazing. Some who started with little are today prized by their bankers as worth $10,000 to $20,000, all made from the land. They are by no means unusual among the cases which have passed from out of our jurisdiction and are a credit to Canada and to the communities in which they live."

Major Ashton stated that while there is no reflection intended upon the settlers in less fortunate circumstances, their cases have been constantly before the public. Attention to new "doings" is another phase of the situation which has been in the background far too long, he says. "That soldier settlement has produced a considerable crop of failures is admitted. What is not generally realized is that its successful farm yield is large a part of its general numbers as do successes among the general farming public and that today among the successful are men who are also a leading part in Canadian agriculture.

"Almost nine years have passed since the inception of this work in February, 1918, a period of time during which considerable change has taken place in our civilian population. Death and recurring service disabilities have taken a heavy toll. From these and other causes 7,500 returned soldiers have abandoned their undertakings. The quality of the land, severity of weather conditions, wives who could not endure the loneliness and the nature of the reclamation work have been factors which contributed to the total."

"Interest has been remitted in large amounts, arrears of indebtedness consolidated and spread to lessen the weight of early payments, livestock has been revalued and revaluation of land, is being talked of. A natural result of all this has been that the spotlight has been turned on the affairs of those soldier settlers who are in the worst difficulties from the large number who have been as successful at farming as they were at soldiering.

"Canada has a large investment of faith and cash in her soldier settlers and it is only fair that she should hear of the achievements of some of those men whose success redounds to her credit as well as their own."

THREE GO CRAZY AFTER THE VISIT OF FAITH HEALER

Doctor Warns the Public Against the Emotional Dangers Produced

London, Jan. 18.—Controversy rages in Cheinhford over the recent visit of Pastor Jeffreys and his "divine healing" mission. Three people, two women and a young man, who had attended his meetings, have been certified insane and taken to mental hospitals, in one week.

Dr. Walter, medical officer to the board of guardians, said: "Pastor Jeffreys and similar faith healers play a great deal on the emotions of their audience. I saw crowds coming away from his meetings in a semi-hysterical state, but—with normal people the hysteria wears off. It is only unbalanced and neurotic people whose reason is affected.

Two or three cases of women being the result of exhaustion are known to me. It is said that a boy with an arm that had been paralyzed for years was told by Pastor Jeffreys to wave a chair round his head with his paralyzed arm. The boy did so, but a doctor later declared that he was in a worse condition than ever.

One of the people who have been certified insane is a young woman named Bert Grrin, but his relatives state that they are convinced that Pastor Jeffreys had nothing to do with his insanity.

The relatives and friends of the two women, however, take the opposite view, and are incensed about it. The women are sisters, Mrs. Andrews and Miss Beatrice Woolberton.

The Pastor has headquarters at Southend, where five people were certified insane after his last campaign.

The Rev. H. Grey, the precentor of Chelmsford Cathedral, said in a sermon: "It is always a danger to play with people's feelings, for that is what it comes to. Pastor Jeffreys could help doing some good through the spirit of God working in him, but he also does harm. His emotional appeal attracts some people to a remarkable degree.

MARKET SPOTLIGHT ON MINING STOCKS

EDWARD M&M FACILLIOS

The Grover Daley Mines has strengthened its treasury very materially in the past few weeks, undertaken a very extensive development campaign on its Rouyn property. The company is capitalized at $1,000,000, of which half was issued for property, and a million shares have been sold, or optioned, leaving 500,000 shares in the treasury. Approximately $150,000 is reported to be in the treasury in cash at the present time and about $50,000 will be added when the present option is completed.

Arms sold down to 50 cents today. In the face of this, attention should be called to the fact that ten times the number of shares outstanding have been traded over in the last three weeks. This means a large, short interest in the market, sooner or later these operators must cover and buy to cover their oversales. We have no hesitancy in advising the public to buy at present prices. There is said to be no more than 400,000 shares in the hands of the public. It is believed that the actual figure is closer to 300,000. This is a good opportunity to buy this stock with every confidence.

PICTURES OF WILD LIFE TO BE SHOWN TONIGHT

Harrison F. Lewis, Chief Migratory Bird Officer of the Dominion National Parks, who comes to the city this evening to speak in Bridge Street Sunday School Hall, brings with him a lecture which is filled with interest for young and old. From the Department of the Interior, with which he is connected, he brings unusually fine pictures of bird and animal life taken under great difficulties showing the creatures of the wilds in their natural setting. When he announced his intention of visiting Belleville, the Jack Miner League sponsored his promised visit and secured the Bridge Street hall and splendid lantern which he will use in his illustrated lecture. Such is the gown illustrated, which is modish and easy in a Pearl Kid trimmed in harmonizing color, with novelty stitch in black, duck blue and green with dashing bands of gold, fuchsia, rust color or beige. MINING GOSSIP

Buckingham Mines has acquired two groups of claims in the Quebec field and has completed the necessary financing for their initial development. The new claims consist of a group of ten in Dasserat Township about one mile southwest of the Nipissing holdings, on which a sixty-foot break has been exposed showing traces of copper, and also another group of thirteen claims lying to the west of the Cerona holdings.

Lake Shore was the outstanding market feature on yesterday's market, moving up through the eighteen dollar mark. Half a dozen reasons were given for the advance. The most popular one was that extremely rich ore had been opened in the mine near the Tech Hughes line. However, it would seem that there is something more than another, and of or behind the advance, which places a market valuation of over $36,000,000 on this property.

Recent advances in the Kirkland Lakes have been of a proportion not yet generally realized. Lake Shore is selling at over $36,000,000, Tech Hughes at $32,500,000 and Wright-Hargreaves at over $20,000,000 against a market valuation of only some $21,000,000 for McIntyre and less than ten millions for Dome. Therefore the three Kirkland Lake stand next to Hollinger in the matter of market valuation, and the three of them together pretty nearly equal Holly in market valuation.

News should be out from the Rouyn camp very shortly of the start of sinking operations on the Area property to get through the boulder clay that foiled the drill crew. This crew, proving incompetent to penetrate the boulders, a shaft will be sunk down to bedrock and a drift set up at bottom to tap the indicated ore from there. In the meantime the drill has been moved a couple of hundred feet, according to a dispatch over the Moyley wire, and a short hole will be sent in from there.

J. B. Tyrell, managing-director Kirkland Lake Gold Mining Co., has just returned from an inspection of the company's mine at Kirkland Lake. Mr. Tyrell reports the general progress of work is now held up.

The development on the 2,250-foot level is fully justifying expectations. The first 60 feet low grade, in then ext 115 feet high grade ore is found and work is still progressing good quarts.

The results from the mill are satisfactory. Approximately 150 tons per day have been treated with an extraction of about 90 per cent. Sinking is going ahead to the 2,500-foot level.

DRINK WATER IF BACK OR KIDNEYS HURT

Most folks forget that the kidneys like the bowels, sometimes get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidneys begin drinking lots of water. Also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is intended to flush clogged kidneys and help stimulate them to activity. It also helps neutralize the acids in the urine so they no longer irritate thus helping to relieve bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink

PLEASANT EUCHRE PARTY

At the home of Mrs. Lancaster, 52 Gordon street, last evening, a very successful euchre party was held by members of the Daughters and Maids of England and their friends. About thirty persons were present and a very enjoyable time was spent. The gentleman's first prize went to Mr. W. Looker, while Mrs. Follwell was the winner of the ladies' first prize. Mr. Thos. Gill received the second gentleman's prize and Mrs. Pallent the second ladies' prize. Mrs. Keegan and Mr. Savage won the consolation prizes. After the game a dainty lunch was prepared to which all did ample justice. Songs and music were rendered and a real spirit of sociability and happiness prevailed. Much praise is due to Mrs. Lancaster and family for the able manner in which they entertained the guests and the hospitality shown them. A happy gathering broke up at midnight looking forward to more pleasant evenings during the season.

WINTER IN CANADA

A timely booklet, handsomely printed and tastefully illustrated has just been issued by the Natural Resources Intelligence Service, Department of the Interior, with the title, "Winter in Canada." It is an intelligent appreciation of our distinctive winter sports, and a creditable attempt to bring them to the favorable attention of winter tourists.

Canadian winters, as the booklet points out, have unique attractions for those interested in the out-of-doors. They are not the alternating things picturned on the United States movie screen with hungry waiters dotting a bleak and frozen landscape while the heroic "Mountie" braces in "his mat." We are not now speaking of the Pacific Coast, where the ruddiest boast that they pick roses in December and play golf in January, but from the Rockies to the Atlantic there is a particular charm to zero temperatures and the recreations they bring which the department does well to emphasize.

The booklet describes with delightful verve the pleasures of skiing, snowshoeing, skating, tobogganing, bobsleying and curling, and assures prospective tourists that if they dislike themselves suddenly they will find the low temperatures invigorating and healthful. It is more than the truth, as some millions of Canadians can testify. The sombre majesty of the winter woods, the gleam of untrodden snow and the glitter of ice-coated vegetation are described in a way which ought to appeal to all of those who are seeking new experiences and beauty in a new dress.

MEMORIES ARE SHORT

The death in Germany was announced a few days ago of Houston Stewart Chamberlain. To most newspaper readers in this country the announcement probably meant but little; and yet it is not so many years ago since it would have attracted a good deal of attention for there were few names in Europe, outside of Germany, more thoroughly hated. He was what was described as a renegade Englishman. He came of a family that had distinguished itself in the British service, but he had taken a German wife—a daughter of Wagner, the great composer—and, as the saying is, he had become more German than the native Germans. On the outbreak of the war he espoused the cause of Germany and he became the bitterest kind of an enemy to his native country. For the way he served Germany by shining England he was awarded with an Iron Cross—a very high honor, or a very deep disgrace, depending on the point of view.

But the war has been over for some years and it required the announcement of his death to remind many people that such a man as Houston Chamberlain had ever lived.

WOMEN IN POLITICS

Wilhelmina Magliffy, chairman, after a review of the recent vote in Ontario, that the women suffrage has multiplied the electorate but has left the balance between groups and parties what it was before equal suffrage was established. In other words, the tendency of women is to "divide on political issues, just as men have been the tendency of the men. This seems to be the experience of the United States as well as of Canada. If there is to be a woman's party, distinct and separate from the men, there are no signs of it yet.

For the present the women are learning the art of their new powers. We are but at the beginning of an experiment. What the later developments may be there are no means at present of telling.

AUTHORS' EARNINGS

There has been some discussion in the British press lately about the relative rewards of certain authors, publishers and literary agents. A Scotch newspaper points out that Mr. W. M. Heinemann, Mr. John Lane and Mr. J. M. Dent together left a sum of less than $80,000. (Of the late Mr. John Lane's share of $19,000 over $6,000 went to literary agents—Mr. Pinger and Mr. A. P. Watt—left $73,000 and $81,000 respectively, but Mr. Charles Garvice and Sir Rider Haggard amassed much greater fortunes.

It would appear that authorship as a profession is more paying than publishing; after a novelist attains a certain position he can count on a large augmented minimum circulation for every fresh book—moreover the high prices paid for film rights give him a share in the emoluments of the dramatist.

Senor Blasco Ibanez has notably made a larger sum out of novel writing than any other man of the day, but then he has had the whole world for his audience. In England Miss Ethel Dell would probably stand at the top of the list, but taking a long term of years, perhaps Sir Hall Caine has been the most successful.

For English writers it is the American market which counts the most. The 200,000 odd copies of Mr. Hutchinson's "If Winter Comes," sold in Britain compared badly with the 300,000 sold in America.

It is probably that Sir James Barrie has made the largest income in the whole history of English literature, but he has made it by his plays.

A typical instance is to hand in "The Constant Nymph," by Miss Margaret Kennedy. The book has sold many editions both in this country and in America, but it is said that Miss Kennedy's first cheque on account of play rights run into tens of thousands.

These sudden waves of fortune which are the reward of the novelist seems to come purely by accident. Miss Kennedy wrote two books before "The Constant Nymph" but was always a very modest seller.

THE FLAPPER

Two hundred and eighty-four students of the university of Santa Clara, California, voted on the question of the type of girl which, in their opinion, is most desirable for purpose of matrimony. Sixty-four per cent. of the ballots were in favor of the "old-fashioned" girl; 13 per cent. favored "medium-mannered" girls; 14 per cent. of the voters were non-committal, and only seven per cent. voted for the modern girl, or "flapper."

Probably when these young men voted they had in mind some characteristic type of the old-fashioned girl and of the modern girl, and no doubt in most cases it was their mothers whom they compared with the flappers of their acquaintance. It is to their credit that so many of them decided in favor of their mothers.

Similar voting by manly and well-bred young men anywhere would be likely to yield similar results. For the manly man is more powerfully attracted by the womanly woman than by the woman who inclines to mannishness. The latter may be acceptable to him as an acquaintance and even as a "pal," but she is not likely to kindle in him sweeter and romantic affection, for his nature craves in a life-companion the qualities of character which are supplementary to his own, not similar to his. If he is manly he is likely to be attracted by a girl of feminine type rather than by one who either possesses or pretends to possess masculine qualities.

The modern girl, or flapper, is distinguished by a sort of superficial masculinity. She aims at boyishness in appearance and manners and talk. For her many friends she makes a piquant and pleasant comrade, but in most cases when they choose a wife it is the girl with marked feminine qualities that they want. And that is the type of girl that is called old-fashioned.

"TOOTHLESS" LAWS

General Smedley Butler, of the U.S. marines, is the officer who, obtaining a long leave of absence, accepted the responsibility of enforcing the Volstead Act in the city of Philadelphia—and after many months of strenuous effort was forced to confess failure. Recently he was reported to have denounced the Volstead Act, and when asked for an explanation he replied:

"I am emphatically in favor of prohibition and have not said or even intimated anything to the contrary, but do consider the Volstead Act and all other dietetic enforcement laws silly in the extreme."

So it is clear that General Butler's quarrel with the Volstead Act is that it is inadequately equipped with teeth. To be effective, he thinks, it will have to be made more terrible. More force will have to be provided in compelling people to observe its and heavier penalties imposed for violating it.

Even now the cost of enforcing the prohibitionary law in the States is pretty heavy—something like $40,000,000 annually. General Butler and other anti-dent prohibitionists would have the cost exceeded indefinitely. Possibly the Act could be fairly well enforced if General Butler could have his way—if the U.S. army as well as the U.S. navy were pressed in to the enforcement service and largely augmented for that purpose; if martial law were to take the place of the civil law for enforcement purposes; if a thorough system of espionage were organised and people's houses could be searched by armed soldiers at any time without warrant or previous notice; and if the use or possession of strong liquor were made a capital offence. For a time these drastic measures would probably prove effective; but they would not be likely to last long. Even the boom of prohibition adequately enforced would speedily be considered to dear at the price.

GOOD BOOKS ARE ASKED BY SMALL TOWN READERS

Chicago, Jan. 17—Main Street looks away from philistinous pot bellies and bramble circuitries for its reading, say officials of the American Library Association.

In an average morning's mail, Julia Wright Merrill, executive secretary of the committee on library extension of the organization, said the Wisconsin Free Library received the following requests:

From Glover Leaf Farm at Stone Lake, Wis., something on the life and work of Wilfred Grenfell. Wolf Creek wanted something by John Burroughs. West Bend asked for Monroe's Principles of Teaching. Colfax for Adams' History of Civilization during the Middle Ages, and Bruce for Wells' Outline of History.

Forty-four per cent. of the total population of the United States, or 50,469,208 persons, the library association has found, are without access to public libraries. Miss Merrill's work is to lay the foundation to serve those people either by mail from existing libraries, or by the establishment of branches of main libraries.

FIFTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE ROYAL BANK OF CANADA

Sir Herbert Holt, President, Believes No Other Country Offers as Good Opportunities as Canada. — Dominion Must Reduce Taxes and There Must Be Further Elimination of Unnecessary and Unproductive Government Expenditures.

C. E. Neill, General Manager, Stressed Valuable Assistance Given By Bank in the Development of Canada's Foreign Trade—Royal Bank Has 900 Branches, and 11,656 Stockholders—Shareholders Authorize Increase of Capital to $40,000,000—C. E. Neill Elected a Vice-President of the Bank.

The 58th Annual General Meeting of the Shareholders was held at the Head Office of the Bank in Montreal.

President's Address

Sir Herbert S. Holt, Chairman, said in part:

The Report and Balance Sheet of the Bank, which it is my duty to present to you to-day, disclose a most satisfactory position.

You will be interested to learn that the erection of our new Head Office building, which was announced last year, is being proceeded with as rapidly as possible and we expect that it will be ready for occupancy by May 1, 1928. The foundations have been completed and the steel structure should be finished during the early summer. The building will cover the whole block bounded by St. James, St. Peter, Notre Dame Dollard streets, and will rise seaward.

The record of Canadian external trade in the past three years reflects both the increased buying power resulting from increased stability abroad and the recent growth of Canadian production.

The relatively large increase in imports is a direct reflection of the improvement in our exports, our larger purchasing power and outside capital investment. The greater volume of manufactured goods coming into the country, however, indicates another aspect of the situation which may legitimately suggest some misgiving.

With the improvement in trade, there has been a steady betterment in Federal Revenues during the year and some reduction has been effected in our national debt. The last fiscal budget wrought a measure of relief to certain classes of taxpayers through the revision of the basis of assessment and alteration of the system of collection. Taxation, however, is the subject to which governments to follow the lines of least resistance and impose taxation where it can be lifted easily found, whether it results in the punishment of thrift or the discouragement of productive enterprise. While Canada needs is to follow the example set by the United States in the reduction of all taxes and in the cost of government; so that by economies due to the efficiency of administration we may secure a substantial reduction in the total burden of taxation rather than a change of incidence. Canada has frequently shown that she is not without courage in facing her economic problems and there are indications that a bold co-operative policy of administrative economy on the part of all governments would meet with strong public approval and support. Returning, as we believe, a period of more rapid development, it is essential that every effort should be laid upon a curtailing and capital expenditures severely restricted to purposes which will add to the productive power of the country.

Steady Improvement in Business

We have definitely emerged from the discouraging conditions of the post-war period. The year just closed has been one of steady and substantial improvement in almost every department of Canada's business life, and it is gratifying to know that our greater prosperity is well grounded on the sound foundation of expanding production and commerce.

Country Offers Great Opportunities

The world over, capital is seeking profitable investment and enquiries concerning Canadian conditions are coming from the United States the United Kingdom, and all parts of Europe. It has been estimated that three billion dollars have been invested in Canada by the people of the United States. Far from deploring this large volume of foreign investment, Canadians should welcome every assistance in the task of developing our latent resources, but there is now sufficient capital in Canada so that we shall expect to finance a steadily increasing proportion of the new undertakings within our own borders. The economic strength of the Dominion lies in its vast potential resources of arable lands; its forests and fisheries, its immense mineralization and reserves of water power. The more rapid flow of capital and labor into the basic industries of the country which has taken place in the last two years is additional evidence of the increased confidence in the country and its progress. However, Canadians should not become so thoroughly immersed in the work of the moment that they fail to appreciate the fact that no other country in the world affords the same opportunities which now surround us, nor that any fully developed country can hold forth the promise of the rapid expansion which lies ahead of Canada.

General Manager's Address

The General Manager, C. E. Neill said in part:

At our last Annual Meeting before consideration of the Balance Sheet, I referred to the acquisition of the Union Bank of Canada, and spoke of the benefits we expected to derive therefrom. I am glad to be able to report that our expectations have been fully realized. The Union Bank of Canada had an exceptionally good business in our Canadian agricultural communities. We have already succeeded in increasing this connection and we expect to develop it still further under prosperous agricultural conditions.

The strong position of the bank has been fully maintained. Our cash, including bank balances, now stands at 22.20 per cent. of liabilities to the public, while our liquid assets are 54.20 per cent. of liabilities to the public.

It will interest you to know that in order to provide facilities in the West End of London for the convenience of overseas customers we have arranged to lease an office in the new building of the Sun Life Assurance Company, which is now in course of erection. The building faces both on Pall Mall and on Cockspur street and directly adjoins the Canada Building. The site is a splendid one and our West End office will fill a long felt want.

Banks Help External Trade

The service rendered by Canadian chartered banks in facilitating the internal and external trade of the country is of outstanding importance to the business community, and I regret to say the value of this service is not always recognized. The gathering together of accurate credit information, the work of assembling collections, trade acceptance, and various other facilities made available are invaluable, and the basis of competition between banks should be on an increasing degree be the quality and extent of such services. In this connection I would like to say unreservedly development in Canadian banking efficiency has been the improved facilities offered for export and foreign exchange trade.

Since the bank first commenced to establish branches abroad over twenty-five years ago, we have acquired a full intimate knowledge of foreign markets. We have done our utmost to use this knowledge for the benefit of Canadian trade by placing foreign buyers in touch with our exporters and lending advantageous sources of supply for Canadian importers. The requirements of our foreign branches are familiar with Canadian products, and it goes without saying that our connection in this respect has been numerous, more particularly since the majority of our foreign branches are located in countries which are not competitors of Canada, but rather buyers of our products and consumers of our necessities. Five years ago, we found that the volume of enquiries pasing through head office reached the stage that a special department advisable, and our Foreign Trade Department was then established. The success that has marked the gradual expansion of the bank abroad has also been one of great development of Canada's foreign trade, and I know that no one this past quarter of a century we have been able to facilitate the movement of Canadian goods to the value of many millions of dollars, and at the same time serve the interests of the foreign countries where we are established. In putting their exporters into contact with Canadian firms interested in their products.

May I add that we hope the shareholders of the bank will not forget how great a part they may take in the extension of the bank's business and profits, by giving the Directors and Management their individual support. We have now 11,656 shareholders. The active support of such a large and influential body is of the greatest value and cheer to open the doors, to assure brisk business and to call upon the individual interests and in the interests of the bank as a whole.

Authorized Capital Increased

A resolution was passed increasing the authorized capital of the Bank to $40,000,000.

New Vice-President Elected

At a subsequent meeting of the Board of Directors, Sir Herbert S. Holt was re-elected President and Mr. E. L'Estrange Pease, Vice-President, for the ensuing year. Mr. C. E. Neill was also elected a Vice-President.

During 1926 there were 712 cases in police court of which 590 were convictions, sixteen dismissed and 81 withdrawn. At the end of the year there were 31 cases pending. Probably the outstanding feature was the fact that there were 161 more cases in 1926 than in the previous year.

The amount of fines collected was $12,283.00, the total amount of fines with costs imposed being $21,691.34. Property stolen or lost totalled $28,437.05 of which $24,102.02 was recovered.

Among the suggestions made by Chief Friend is the purchase of a new car for police purposes and some recommendations in regard to traffic laws.

For Deep Chest Colds

All colds should be treated with vapors, for vapors alone can carry the medication DIRECTLY to the air passages and lungs.

Vicks is a "vapor" treatment inhalative form. For deep chest colds you first apply hot wet towels over throat and chest to open the pores, then massage briskly with Vicks for 5 minutes, spread on thickly and cover with a flannel cloth.

Vicks not only penetrates like a poultice or plaster, but the ingredients, vaporized by the body heat, are inhaled all night long.

This double action usually checks the most stubborn cold overnight.

GIRLS MAY SMOKE BUT PET — NEVER!

"If you are a girl, you can have your cigarettes without effecting your religion; you can be thoroughly modern and thoroughly spiritual."

So said Miss Dorothy Richards, pretty graduate of the Fraser University, now taking a postgraduate course in social work in New York at the opening session of the National Student Conference of the Y.M. C.A. and the Y.W.C.A., last week.

"You can believe in the tenets of behaviorism and still believe in God" the young social worker added. "You can be a fearless scientist and be a loyal Christian at the same time."

Miss Richards was quite ready to admit that it isn't popular on the average campus nowadays. She said candidly that as a university woman she thought certain morals were more slipping at the universities. Morality wasn't fashionable. Nor was "Christian philosophy." The intellectuals of the class rooms in these enlightened days weren't reading the Bible Miss Richards said, they were reading Henry L. Mencken instead.

"Morals" is a much misunderstood term, according to Miss Richards. She is a modern and, therefore, she said: "I can see nothing wrong in co-eds smoking, but I can see a great deal wrong in their petting." She checked herself for a moment and with a somewhat embarrassed smile continued:

"I don't know that I ought to speak of petting, but it's very much misunderstood by the old school of folks, too. I believe the sex desires of young men and women are practically the same. Why, therefore, shouldn't be frank. And it seems to me that frank girls when urged to that might handle the situation best by saying, 'No thank you, I'd like to, quite as much as you, but you know it isn't the thing for either of us'."

cases ended in death! So a recent Canadian investigation showed. Those were not cases of infectious disease — communicable — of typhoid! They were cases where a person had sustained some slight injury—a cut, a burn, a wire prick —and where the wound, being thought not serious enough for careful treatment, had been neglected. Blood-poisoning and death resulted.

When you or your children sustain any injury, ensure against infection by painting Zam-Buk. This balm soothes the pain, stops bleeding, and by destroying all germs prevents blood-poisoning, etc. Hence no time need be lost from work or pleasure by wound who uses Zam-Buk. All dealers, 50c. box.

TRENTON JUNIORS RETAIN FIVE GOAL LEAD FOR FINAL

Litzky Defeated By Home Team in Fast Game By 7-5 Count

Belleville Juniors put up a good game in Trenton last night, but it was not strong enough to cope with the brawny and better scoring home team and as a result they lost the fracas 7-5 and are now five goals down on the round which will be a handicap to overcome in the final game here.

As was the case in the first game in Trenton the locals defence was elaborate weak and the blue and white outgeneraled them continually, to walk in and shoot the midget Litzkiford representative. The forward line gave the winners a mere argument and skated themselves into exhaustion trying to stave off the Trenton crew.

The homesiders deserved the verdict and they are undoubtedly the better team of the two. Their decided advantage in weight is a big point in their favor and they handled out the bumps right and left.

Bowen the burley defence man was moved to centre ice where he played a fairly effective game. He drives them in with great force and is a nice stick-handler. In the latter department the Belleville forwards fall down badly. They throve them on both sides of the net but failed to register many of their shots on the bunting.

"Ginger" Edger of Brownsville who was in charge warned the boys repeatedly to keep clean hockey and he had the game well in hand at all stages. A few off-sides escaped his eye and it appeared as though Trenton's second goal was scored on a forward pass.

As one time there was only six men on the ice three of each team resting in the cooler.

Young Litzkford played another matchless game and scored repeatedly after the Trenton sharp-shooters had broken through to direct hot shots at him. Latch fired one in on way he blanked for the defeat.

Heaney in the Trenton net was also given a busy session and displayed every judgement in picking them out of the air. The most of the latter's saves were driven from the area of the blue line.

Norman Johnston was one of Trenton's best. This youngster is a fast skater and can handle the stick. His goals were the result of being in a scoring position and he was always on deck when a pass was handed him.

Perry is another youngster who is improving at every appearance and play is a fine game for him. Fillon the other sturdy defence man was in good form and called down on some beautiful body checks. He holds well and combines nicely.

CANNINGS STARRED

The two Cannings were the pick if the Belleville team with Harry having it over his brother Johnny. Harry's two goals were both well earned efforts. The second was the prettiest piece of work of the whole evening, he taking the puck from one end of the ice to the other to finish the defence and after shooting Heaney aside neatly shaved the rubber into the net.

Young Johnny Canning played a smart game was also rewarded with two goals. He teams up well with his brother and gave a good account of himself generally.

Johnny Baker worked hard and hung up one goal from a scramble in front of the goal to open Belleville's scoring.

Simpson was prominent with his back-checking and took every opportunity to pulpoit Litzky with a shot.

The two defence men Galloway and Amo were given their first real under fire and with a couple of games together tonight do a great deal better. They did not use their bodies as much as they could have done. Doran was not used to any great extent.

The Trenton team as a close-checking and smart squad and the Maroons with their backs to the wall will be fighting to the last ditch to overcome the five goal lead.

The smoke nuisance in the Trenton rink is if anything worse than it is here and at times the players were barely dis cernable fromone end of the rink to the other.

The locals have one more chance to redeem themselves with the alternative of hanging up their sticks for the season.

Play-ground fast with Litzkford giv ing one a couple to handle. Bowen drifted in long one post Latchford to open the scoring. It was a soft goal. Trenton were having much the better of the play at this stage and Litzkford was peppered pretty continually. Baker covered the count on a scramble in front of the net. Henry Canning went and the puck went in off Fillon's skate. Perry scored on a pass but it was off-side but Edger didn't see it. Litzkford were penalized for a trip from the wing. Baker was penalized for slashing. Henry Canning scored on an end to end rush. He flipped the puck easily behind Heaney. Bowen scored number 4 when the defence gave Latch ford an opportunity. Score at end of 1st period 4-3 Trenton.

2nd Period —

Belleville's set was attacked and two or three near-goals resulted. Johnston put off for bodying into the boards. Fillon penalized for tripping. Henry Canning penalized for illegal body-checking. Johnny Canning was cheered. Amo followed him for cross-checking. Harry Canning missed through a perfect pass from the corner. Fillon tore in on Latchford but the kid was there. Johnny Canning put the puck from the corner to bat the rubber in for a tie score of 4-4 Perry and J. Canning were both put off. Baker was also given the gate a minute later. Fillon sailed down left wing to drive home number 5. Score 5-4.

3rd Period

Bowen was penalized for heavy body checking. Johnny Canning scored on a pretty pass from Calway. Boll engineered some pretty onslaughts. Fillon and Baker were penalized for mixing it. Simpson went away for slashing

Henry Canning put off for tripping. Johnston took Bowen's pass for number 7 a minuter later.

BAN: JOHNSON BLAMES LANDIS

Chicago, Jan. 18.—The Chicago Tribune said that Ban Johnson, President of the American League openly charged that baseball commissioner Landis was responsible for tarring the reputation of Tris Speaker and Ty Cobb. Breaking a silence that began last September when the directors of the American League, meeting in Chicago, voted to give unconditional release to Cobb and Speaker, President Johnson declared that neither of the two would ever receive a release or put on an American League Club, although he paid high tribute to the former Detroit outfielder.

Mr. Johnson, the Tribune said, declared he had accepted "implied challenge" of Commissioner Landis to have all facts in Cobb-Speaker baseball drama and would take stand next Monday morning. Previously league meeting called by baseball head. He said his testimony at that meeting would prove American league acted to protect Cobb and Speaker and that Landis alone was to blame for cloud of rumors about their names. "I don't believe Ty Cobb ever played a dishonest game in his life," Mr. Johnson said. "If that is correction he seeks I gladly give it to him. But it is from Landis, Cobb should demand an explanation."

The American league ousted Cobb, but it was Landis who blundered the story of his relationship with Landis.

INJURY PREVENTS MANAGER FROM PLAYING BALL

New Pilot of Cleveland Had Brilliant Career Nipped In Bud

Cleveland, January 18.—Jack McCallister, new manager of the Cleveland Indians, owns his high place in baseball partly on an injury which for years say robbed him of his chance to play in the big leagues.

Jack once had one of the fastest pair of legs in baseball, and as a youngster, fresh from the sand lots of Marietta, O., he raced through the minors Straight for stardom under the big tent. But he never made the big league and he will be the only manager on the major circuits next year who never played a game of big league baseball.

Injured On Eve Of Stardom

After a season with the Columbus association team in 1900 McCallister went to Hartford in the old Connecticut league, and at the close of his first season there he was booked for a tryout with the St. Louis Cardinals.

Jack went home for the plaudits of the home folks and to play in an exhibition game for the townsmen and was thrown him since his first "charley horse."

During the game the homefolks carried him from the field and his chances at a place in a big league also were taken from him forever, for in sliding for his plate he broke a bone and he was out of baseball for two years. When he did get back his legs were gone.

Then Studied The Game

Without his legs, Jack used his head.

He performed the inverse brain tion from practice to theory with the result that he soon said beard in staid baseball. While playing with the Columbus team he became a life-long friend of E. S. Barnard, president of the Indians and then sports editor o a Columbus paper, and in 1913 Bar nard, then business manager, made him scout for the Tribe.

Later, when Tris Speaker was made manager of the team he became head coach and right-hand man of the veteran Speake and was chief arbiter in most of the clubs difficulties and it continued to study baseball and gained a wide reputation for his knowledge of the American league players.

When Speaker stepped out of baseball there was much conjecture about his successor, but McCallister, the managing league player with the bad leg was selected over a number of applicants, many of whom had starred in the majors for years.

FARMING IN VIRGIN ISLES UNDEVELOPED

Washington, Jan. 18.—The desirability of building good roads and further developing agricultural possibilities of the Virgin Islands, America's recently acquired possession in the Atlantic, is under consideration in connection with a survey of conditions painted by Captain Martin E. Trench, U.S.N., retired. As governor of the islands he is administrating the affairs of the islands for the last fifteen months.

The Virgin, of St. John, the smallest of the three composing the group but comprising 20 square miles of land, is said to be a natural for wheel traffic. Practically all of the food supplies of the islanders has to be brought from the United States. The department of agriculture has started an experimental station in St. Croix and is sending out field agents from there to the other islands. Cocoa, with its 80 square miles, is devoted largely to the raising of sugar cane.

Both islands could be developed profitably in the islands. Governor Trench believes, and the islanders themselves are anxious to raise vegetables, an industry that is almost entirely neglected.

Homesteading is another question. The land is held in large estates, the titles going back to the days of Danish ownership of the islands, and is tilled by "squatters" or rent-payers instead of by home builders.

ST. ANDREW KIDS SCORE TWO WINS IN CHURCH GROUP

Intermediates Down Christ Church and Juniors Trim Baptists.

The Intermediate and Junior groups in the Belleville Sunday School Hockey League got away to a splendid start Monday evening. BANK OF COMMERCE SEES GOOD PROSPECT FOR CANADIAN BUSINESS

The drop in prices of farm products, a decline in steel and automobile production and in the volume of bank debits, reflected during the past month, should not be ignored in considering the state of business, but these factors do not, at present, offset many favorable factors regarding the general situation, says the Canadian Bank of Commerce monthly letter. There are many favourable features.

After almost a year of uncertainty, the outlook has recently improved and in the closing months of 1925, and purchasing by the public and the preparations for spring trade indicate that 1925 was exceptional and does not serve as a fair basis of comparison. In 1926 industrial conditions have been severely handicap at critical periods. The industrial depression in Great Britain caused by the prolonged coal strike and the important products and unfavourable developments were noticeable in other markets. These factors, however, did not occur any year; the real question is the effect they have on the whole economic structure, and it is certain that for the past year business has not suffered materially from the adverse influences just mentioned. The result, of course, has been increasing if the farmers had enjoyed a better season, but there is reason for thankfulness that some conditions, which might proved luminient, did not prevail and that, as the farmers had been able in previous years to liquidate most of their old debts, a greater proportion of the proceeds from this year's crops will be available for fresh purchases. The conditions in these countries which absorb our surplus products gives good grounds for believing that a substantial improvement will take place which should be of benefit to the Canadian farming community.

ALBERT COLLEGE BUTCHER'S TEAM LOSE TO B.H.S. IN OVERTIME 5-4

SUFFER SECOND STRAIGHT DEFEAT

High School Kids Display Great Work in Extra Period

Ritchie Wolves Triumph Over Meat Carvers in Fast Game 4-3

Overtime games in the interschool hockey league seem to be the fad and last night's exhibition between the High School and Albert College was no exception. After battling for sixty minutes the two squads were knotted up 4 all and but two minutes of the extra stanza had elapsed before Young put his team ahead with a long shot and the High School skated off the ice with their first win. The School played defensive hockey and on their fighting finish deserved to win.

The Albert College boys had the better of the play in the opening stages, but the players came back with the hard-earned goals, toward the last to cart home the verdict.

There was very little to choose from between the two teams on the whole. The Collegians played smart aggressive hockey and the High School excelled in combination work.

The interscholastic games are real fast and Wednesday evening's game between the Centenary team, last year's champions, and Albert College is sure to be a humdinger.

Chant looked the best of the Albert College team. This boy is a real clever player and around him centres the whole attack. He was practically the whole works up on the forward line.

Bond played a fine game as did his partner, Armstrong.

Vince Naphin, Ray Ross and Gallo, were all played brilliant hockey for the High School. Cleo Colling did played rare form in the rool and went to his knees to make some pretty saves after the Albert players had broken through on him.

Tommy Bloch opened the scoring for the winners when he tatted in the first goal on a mix-up.

Albert combined well splitting the defence waltzed in on Colling and Chant drove the rubber home. The game boy duplicated the feat a minuter later.

Raymond Ross scored the equalizer a few minutes after the second period commenced.

However, Bond put the tricolor in the lead after a pretty effort.

"Bud" Galloway sank one into the twine from the wing and Naphin scored one just before the end of the second hour.

Armstrong tied the count for the only score of the third period which constituted overtime with the result that Young drifted one past Eady for the winning counter.

Tomorrow night's game will be a fine exhibition and hockey fans will do well to keep an eye on these latter interscholastic days.

How London Men Keep Fit

Not all people fit up their luncheon hour by limiting themselves with meals, says London Answers. There are exceptions.

A commercial magnate of the city of London, complimented on his health, confessed that daily, in an luncheon hour, he ascended the 345 steps of the monument but a look around and descended. His one-time 19 stone of flabby fatness had come down gradually to 11 stone four of muscular hardness.

Another man, a solicitor, has a very light luncheon and then goes into one of the city churches for half an hour. It rests and clarifies his mind.

The managing director of a big firm has his luncheon and does what, over the weather, walks to a city bridge, takes his hat off, and leans on the parapet watching the river. He says that it is a mental tonic, and it has made his hair grow. At one time he was almost completely bald.

A stockbroker occupies the better part of his luncheon interval by going for a tube journey. His object is psychological, a helpful sort of self-delusion. When he returns from his trip he has the same best-for-work feeling as when he arrived at the station in the morning.

If you wished to see the head of a certain firm between 1.15 and 2 you would be told that he was at luncheon. True in one sense, but not wholly. After his fruit, and coffee, takes in his room, he locks the door, takes off his shoes, and sleeps, "finest thing in the world," he says.

If you ever wondered how some people make money and a lot of it, these instances throw a little light on the subject.

GETS THREE YEARS, THANKS MAGISTRATE

Fort William, Jan. 17—Dan McDonald, 24, came second in a long race through streets and back lanes of this city last night. His reward is three years' hard labor in Stony Mountain, handed out this morning by Magistrate Failing.

McDonald entered a cafe, ordered a cup of coffee and a packet of cigarettes. He lingered over his "meal" and waited until the waiter moved to the other end of the lunch counter. Then he leaned over, pressed the keys of the till and scooped up some $170 in hard cash.

A policeman, patron of the cafe, and several other citizens joined in the chase and McDonald proved to be an excellent runner. Paul Imperium, a Greek, however, is a better one; he caught McDonald but resisted a good beating before reinforcements came to his rescue.

"Thanks, old-timer," was McDonald's comment when he was given a thirty-days stretch by the police court.

ENGLISH AND FRENCH TOBACCO

A correspondent writes to the London Times After his return from France London:

The tobacco industry, and the match-making industry, both wholesale and retail, have been nationalized in France for years and years.

What would be the relief to our income tax if the British government got all the profits, both wholesale and retail on all tobacco and matches sold in Great Britain!

But the profits of France from the monopoly are a miserable figure. For they produce the cosmetic tax "tabac" that only a patriot would buy, and matches that you can only indulge in of acute necessity, for few of being made sick by their fumes.

Let the French government spend some millards on buying English tobacco, which can be bought very cheaply in bond. Realized at less than our English duty. Well prices it would realize an enormous profit.

Millions of honest Frenchmen will cease to become pipe-smokers. Year by year more tobacco can be bought, and the demand will grow greater and greater.

The government which adopts this wise policy will be so popular that it will stay in office—who knows?—for.

Thought, then, is rapidly coming to be considered the most valuable of possessions of mankind. Without it, no happiness, no love, no friendship, no hope, no progress, no comfort would be possible. In the advertising which thought has turned men from absorption in animality and the "taste of the flesh" to the development of the mental and spiritual qualities native to man as the creation of God, the Spirit, distinguishing him from the beasts of the field,—in that degree has civilization advanced.

The modern world, which is awakening the powers and possibilities of thought and is attempting to measure intelligence is largely bounded and circumscribed by the self-imposed boundaries of time.

We are apt to provide time to care for physical needs, to our bodily requirements. But are we equally careful to provide hours in our day for the refreshing and renewing of our minds? May not much of our restless dissatisfaction with the world around us arise from disregard in this connection with lines to Florida.

BELLE THEATRE

Few screen players have had a more thorough dramatic training than has Vadim Uraneff, who plays an important character role, that of a pathetic cripple, in "The Flame of the Yukon," a Metropolitan Production featuring Irene Owen and Arnold Gray, which will be shown at the Belle theatre tomorrow.

Uraneff was for three years with John Barrymore's greatest stage successes, "Hamlet," acting first as an actor and later as producer of novel and fantastic prologues for the play.

He has staged and helped write two successful plays, "The Show Shop," and "The Song of Sonora," both of which were produced at the Booth Theatre, New York City.

Uraneff, a mere youth in point of years, has been on the Russian stage as a member of the Imperial Theatre Company. He came to Hollywood in 1926 in answer to Barrymore's urgent summons and accepted an important character role in "The Sea Beast." Since then he has played in "Siberia" and "The Flame of the Yukon."

The supporting players in the picture are Matthew Betz, Jack McDonald, Vadim Uraneff and Winifred Westwood. The story is dramatic and thrilling.

CAMELS FOR THE WEST

Northern Farmers May Import Animals From Russia

Saskatoon, Sask., Jan. 18.—Camels from Northern Russia are to be tried out in lieu of horses by a number of Greek and Bulgarian farmers in the Rosthern district, who plan to import between 50 and 100 of the animals. They claim that the camels are longer lived, can subsist on hay and straw without grain, are faster walkers than horses, and can work longer hours. A camel is in its prime at the age of 50.

Henry Herring, who heads a syndicate of eleven farmers, has written to Hon. W. R. Motherwell, federal Minister of Agriculture, asking him to facilitate matters by opening negotiations with the Soviet Government, now buying western Canada horses, for permission to export the camels from Russia.

BEYOND ALL DREAMS

"Why do not the police stop such impostures? It would not be allowed in England," said Renfrew angrily.

"Then Blake spoke:

"We know a clip is imposture and folly," said the young Yorkshireman; "but for all that there are studies to be made in a piece of that kind which paint rich colours allowed to repose, and I for one am going, because I am sure we shall see some beautiful and clever, and wicked, and anxious, and vain, and silly human faces. There is also Paolo, the impostor, himself, to study. I mean to make a sketch of his head. Will you not put on your greatcoat and come with me?"

"I have no money to fling to this mountebank."

"There is no need," rejoined Blake calmly. "Paolo makes no charge whatever; he takes nothing. Those whose fortunes he tells wrap up what they mean to give him in white paper, and lays it on his desk." Many cads of students from the School of Medicine, and the art-student and law-student type, likewise have put pebbles, coppers, bone buttons, in the white papers, and, of course, nothing could be done to them. Paolo never examines what has been placed on his table until all the people are gone and the house cleared. I mean to give him a two-franc piece. There it is in this paper."

"And I a gold half-napoleon," cried Durnal.

"And I nothing" said Donald. "I have nothing; no change in sight."

"You must come," said Blake, pulling him by the arm. "I will put in a two-franc piece for you."

And so it was settled.

Within half an hour from that time the three friends were climbing the wide, magnificent staircase of Paolo's hotel in the Rue Taitbout.

CHAPTER VIII.
PAOLO.

On the first landing, which was richly carpeted, lighted by soft, subdued lamps, and ornamented by immense China jars, in which grew evergreen shrubs, stood two footmen in dark purple livery. They bowed politely to the three young men in their neat fur-trimmed coats and student caps, and asked whom they should announce.

Blake gave out their names. The footmen opened a door, and called out the three names. Immediately the three young men found themselves in a large salon, showily furnished in crimson velvet, with many gold-framed mirrors against the walls. This room was nearly crowded by a number of fashionably dressed ladies; there were also many gentlemen present, who appeared to belong to the upper classes.

The room was brilliantly lighted. Numbers of persons were chattering gaily with their friends; some were a little annoyed to be recognized, perhaps. A few were promenading the room, others leaned upon the couches. Perhaps scarcely one out of all the assembly would have owned that a restless curiosity respecting the future had brought him or her to the hotel of Paolo.

The three young men walked arm-in-arm.

Suddenly Renfrew paused; he recognized no, fewer than four persons with whom he was acquainted, seated on the velvet couches—Miss Maria Davis, of Brighton, with her aunt Agnes and aunt and Miss Bateman!

The latter turned crimson with confusion when she saw Renfrew.

"Ah," she said, with a laugh, and putting her fan up to her face—coolly as for the night Miss Bateman flourished an elegant fan; she was attired in the black velvet dress she always wore at the dinner hour at the Hotel Chamierre—"Ah," she said, when Renfrew stood politely smiling before her, "who would have expected to meet you here, Monsieur Renfrew?"

"And who would have imagined that you would condescend to visit such a place?" retorted Donald.

In her heart our hero detested Miss Bateman almost more than any human being of his acquaintance he kindly knew why, but a peculiar instinct warned him that this woman would be dangerous in the future.

"I—oh, I had to chill a life, and one wishes to see something, and this is at least amusing. So chill a life!"

Renfrew thought of the beautiful Ariel left alone up in the yellow salon, with no companion save Maria her governess—so compelling her to dine alone. To the life of him he could not help saying this:

"And chill for the princess, also?"

"She?" Miss Bateman looked spiteful for a moment. "She? You forget she is a child—a young girl to whom I still give lessons to practice. I am surprised you should even mention her."

And then Renfrew perceived a pair of dark, handsome eyes fixed upon him A pale, aristocratic-looking man of thirty-two or so, seated in a lounging-chair near with a magnificent jewelled snuff-box in his white hand. A man rather handsome moustache and beard, and black hair. Not a clever face, not a stupid face. It is said that these few persons best described by negatives—surely this man was one of those persons; and yet a remark able man. The manner in which he stared at Renfrew roused the hot blood of the young Highlander—it was so cold by insolent.

How is it that those strange feelings of antagonism rise in our breast at the sight of some people? It must surely be upon instinct, at times—the same instinct that makes the dog growl and snap a some persons and fawn with joy at the sight of others. Had the man heard the mention of the name of Ariel? Renfrew thought so. At that moment a door opened, and a man servant called out, "The Earl of Courtwood."

Immediately the pale man arose and walked toward the door, a murmur ran round the assembly:

"Courtwood—richest fellow in Yorkshire; first old place in the North of England; not married—led a thoroughly fast life; time he settled down; pity the estate should go to a distant branch —the Copelands of York; sure to marry soon."

Now these, of course, were English people who spoke thus and their words sank into the heart of Renfrew. He was at once possessed by a mad fear and dread of the eyes of that pale Earl of Courtwood after resting on the fair sweet face of Ariel.

Miss Bateman sat up, and a certain light shone in her eyes. Renfrew saw it in a flash that what had dreaded Miss Bateman would endeavor to bring about a meeting between the rose-tint and her sun-fair pupil.

He spoke a few polite words to the woman of the world, and then passed on with his friends. It was not long before the pale earl came sauntering out, with the utmost unconcern pointed on his cold face. As he passed Renfrew he looked at him again with the same cold, hateful stare which had annoyed him before.

"An English swell!" asked Durand, in broken English.

Indeed, Durand could only speak about a dozen words, which Blake had taught him, and he forgot them again at once.

"Yes, a splendid specimen!" replied Blake. Then he added: "A fellow who despises all mortals whose names are not in the 'Peerage.'"

After awhile it came to be the turn of the three artist friends to go into the room of Paolo. They chose to go together, and so were admitted into the presence of the "Seer."

"Singing "Black Bottom" and White Top

Many of the best skirts are in tiers these days, mourning, no doubt, for the length to which they used to go. But just to show how gaily it has adopted countenance, this skirt stops its tiers three-quarters of the way around, leaving a plain panel down the back of the frock. The waist is likewise in the swing, with its sweet blousing above the narrow tie belt, and with the graceful line of the batwing sleeves. A youthful combination for this frock would be a skirt of black satin crepe with a blouse of cherry red; or a rich blue for the crepe de Chine of the skirt and with a touch of silver thread for the embroidery on the lighter blue blouse.

The Irony of Love By Charles Garvice

Gentleman Jim was waking from his doze when the flap canvas which served as a door was opened cautiously, and a young girl peered in. She was small of stature, and slim; but the scattered shaft which she held over her head, and the rough, clumsily made skirt, which she had outgrown, could not altogether succeed in concealing her girlish grace. Her name was Phenie Wilde, but she was never called anything else than Phenie; she had dragged into the camp one afternoon soon after it started, in company with a nearly worn-out mother and a quiet exhausted father. They were dead now, but Phenie still remained at Jumping Jane; a girl quite unprotected save by a dauntless spirit, an independence and a courage which was more than amply sufficient to shield her.

Resting on the closed eyes of the man behind the bar, she stole in, and, taking a man's coat from under her arm laid it softly on the counter. Gentleman Jim's arm shot out and fell on the coat and her hand. "!

"Hello, Phenie!" he said, holding the hand which struggled to escape. "What is it?"

"It's Rafe's coat," she said, half, assumedly, half defiantly. "It was torn all up the back when he was fighting the other day with Billy Yates. Legge my hand!"

"In a moment, Phenie," he said. "What was he fighting about?"

"Oh, nothing worth it. Yates had given the Jenkins' little kip a clip over the ear. Rafe's fond of the kid—he's a regular stowaway all the kids—and he put down his tools and went for Yates three and then; it's Rafe's way."

"Yes," assented Rafe's father, with his weary smile. "It's his way, and you've got to put up with it, Phenie. Throw down the coat to me. What didn't you take the coat to the hut, Phenie? By the way, it was very kind of you to mend it. I doubt whether Rafe's worth the trouble."

"Well, I smoked it out of the hut without his seeing me," she replied, ignoring his thanks, "and I'm feared to take it back, lest he should fetch me. I thought, if I brought it back here, you'd take it home on your arm and lay it down somewhere, promiscuous like where he could happen on it. He won't know it's been mended."

"I dare say not," said the landlord, with a nod. "What are you afraid of, Phenie? Rafe's not unkind to you?"

"No," she said, "but I don' want him to think—that I'm like the other girls, and—and running after him."

"They do run after him, certainly," observed the father, with a whimsical smile. "Unfortunately for him, Rafe's got the family look—" He checked himself, and pursed his lips with an air of reticence.

"He ain't a bit like you," she declared almost indignantly.

"No," he said, laughing softly. "I'm the black sheep of our lot. But, Phenie, my girl, why trouble about Rafe's want coat?" He caught her arm and swung her gently round, and looked into her eyes. She met his gaze defiantly for a moment, then the lids fell, and she pressed her lips together tightly, as if to still the old as I look, and that's saying a good deal. Anyhow, I'm old enough to know what's the matter with a girl when she mends a man's coat, and doesn't want him to know that she's done it."

WANTS ITALO-ARAB RACE

Senator Bianchi Suggests Inter Breeding in Colonies

Naples, Italy, Jan. 19.—Elimination of the Berber race in Italian colonies of Northern Africa and the selection of a "new Arab breed" which having as an ethnopsilogical affinity with Mediterranean types, might form a superior Italo-Arab race, is advocated by Senator Lodovico Bianchi former Minister of Instruction.

In a letter his views at a lecture last night on "over-population in relation to eugenic principles," declaring that with the "already jaded" Italy would have a population of eighty millions. Prof. Bianchi emphasized that the absorbing power of Italy was to supply work and food for double the present population. However it was necessary to find a new outlet for emigration.

17 PERSONS ARE HELD ON CHARGE MANSLAUGHTER

Priest's Housekeeper Mistreated By Parishioners is Found Dead

Chicago, Jan. 19.—Seventeen persons, including five young married women, their husbands and seven other men, faced manslaughter charges today after the death of the housekeeper employed by their parish priest at Downers Grove, Illinois.

Indictments, which also charge conspiracy and rioting, were returned yesterday. The housekeeper, Mrs. Anna Rocinski, aged 60, died last Wednesday according to the charges, from heart disease, a shock resulting from being mistreated after she had been ejected from the rectory of the Rev. Bolesaus Nowakowski, pastor of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church.

The trouble was said to have grown out of charges that the housekeeper had written anonymous letters charging some church members with expulsion. The letters were reported to have followed a disagreement between the priest and parishioners over a school assessment lately made.

The defendants are held in $6,500 bond each.

SPLENDID TALK ON WILD BIRDS

Government Bird Expert Tells of Their Value To Agriculture

"It is not necessary to kill the last bird or pair of birds to exterminate any insect—once you reduce the number of a few survivors, extermination' follows." S. Harrington Lewis, Government Migratory Bird Officer told a large and appreciating audience who attended his lecture last evening in the Bridge Street Methodist Church. He also dealt at length on the interest the human race has taken in birds from the pre-historic days up to the present day—particularly and properly, apparently, as a food value to the later times when man's interest in birds was first awakened. Legislation reasons for the preservation of the protected friends now stands practically the same as in the days of powerful rule in exterminating the insect life which is an enemy to vegetation.

As Illustration

As an illustration of the work of the birds in exterminating harmful insects the speaker quoted the case of a cuckoo killed at 6 o'clock in the morning which bird's stomach when examined contained 280 caterpillars. The useful sparrows are most effective agents in the destruction of weed seeds. In the stomach of one sparrow over 9000 weed seeds were found while the bird was killed and dis-

JURY DISAGREES IN TRENTON SUIT

John Fuller Charges George Shonker With False Arrest and Assault

Before the Honorable Mr. Justice Logie the damage suit brought about by John Fuller, of Trenton, against George Shonker, of the same place was opened yesterday afternoon. The jury after being out for some time disagreed and His Honor had the case over until the March assizes. Col. E. D. O'Flynn was the defending Attorney while T. H. Y. Wills, of the firm of Porter, Payne and Wills, acted for the plaintiff.

The charge was one of false arrest, assault and false imprisonment. It appears that on the 12th of July, 1925, the plaintiff went to the defendants home to deliver bread and at that time a purse containing $12.00 was missing from the Shonker house. Fuller was taken to the police station where he denied any knowledge of the affair and was finally allowed his freedom. News of the arrest leaked out about the town which caused the plaintiff partially ostracized for the loss of his employment.

John Fuller the plaintiff, in his evidence stated that he was a delivery man for the Lees Bakery at the time and was earning in the neighborhood of $30.00 per week. On the morning in question he went to the Shonker home as usual to deliver the bread. He said that he passed Mrs. Shonker on the way to the kitchen. Mrs. Shonker who was in the yard followed him in and paid him for the bread and informed him that he need not call again.

NORRIS TRIAL HALTED ON DEFENDANT'S ILLNESS

Austin, Texas, Jan. 19.—The trial of Dr. J. Frank Norris on a charge of murdering Dexter E. Chipps at Fort Worth will be resumed in District Court here tomorrow following a day of recess because of the defendant's illness.

D. Moore, Norris' attorney, stated positively this today that the defence would be ready to continue when court reconvenes in the morning.

Dr. Norris remained in bed at his hotel, suffering with inflammation of the throat and a severe cold. He insisted on going to court this morning, but his attorneys persuaded him to remain in bed.

YOUNG'S OFFER IS REFUSED BY HIS TRAINER O'BYRNE

Toronto Lad is Deluged With Movie Contracts Following Victory

Los Angeles, Jan. 19.—George Young will receive the full $25,000 prize offered by William Wrigley Jr. for swimmer the San Pedro Channel, his trainer and manager, Henry O'Byrne, told today.

Although Young's contract with O'Byrne calls for the trainer getting 40 per cent. of the prize, O'Byrne will not accept the money, he said today.

Intention All Along

"It was my intention all along to give the boy the entire $25,000 if he won, but I had the contract drawn up to prevent any others from getting the best of him," explained O'Byrne. "Now that the prize has been won, I shall live up to my original intention and let him keep the full prize."

On the balance of the youth's earnings this year, however, the 40 per cent. share with O'Byrne stands.

The only contract which has been signed for the 17-year-old swimmer is one for a five-day appearance at a Hollywood theatre at $1,000 a night. Proposed contracts for his appearance in the films, on the stage, for endorsement of chocolate, and as a writer of his own experiences, await his signature.

$50,000 Offer Waiting

One definite offer from a motion picture producer for a $50,000 contract is under consideration. O'Byrne said a decision may be made in a day or two.

The bustle of interviews and business conferences has little appeal for Young, who says he wants to get back all the money he can now, help his mother, and then settle down to obtain some schooling.

BLASPHEMY CASE ADJOURNED

Toronto, Jan. 19.—Owing to illness of Crown Attorney Forsyth, the charge of blasphemous libel, preferred against E. V. Sterry, editor of the Christian Inquirer, was adjourned until January 25 when the case came up in police court today.

Sterry, who also faces a charge of theft of $200 from a Chinaman, was remanded in two bail bonds of $1,000 each in January 25.

SAIL IN TWO WEEKS

Opposition Shown in Some Quarters By Radical Newspapers

London, Jan. 19 (Canadian Press Cable),—Scenes familiar in the time of war were re-enacted at Chatham today when marshal detailed for duties in China assembled to commence their preliminary journey to Portsmouth. Three hundred marched to the station with full field equipment, headed by regimental band and were frantically cheered by spectators as they marched along. They were joined by another 200 mariners from Plymouth, Portsmouth, supplying the remaining 400 necessary to make up the quota of 1,000.

Official quarters again stressed that their service is being done in the no way intended as departure from the policy of non-aggression. In this connection the Daily Herald, a radical newspaper, today says: "If it is intended to impress Eugene Chen, Cantonese Foreign Minister, that it has the power to do justify such demonstration, put a nation like ours cannot make a demonstration and then draw back."

The marines will sail for China near the end of the month from Portsmouth and Devonport according to the Government will be used only for defensive purposes.

CHINA DEMANDS CANCELLATION OF UNFAIR TREATIES

London, Jan. 19.—The Daily Express has received a special cablegram from the Cantonese Foreign Minister, Eugene Chen, in which he says:

"Chinese nationalism demands back the lost independence of China by cancellation of the unequal treaties on which the regime of foreign imperialism in China is based."

The Minister rejects the moral technique of European diplomacy, based on lunge, of finesse and chicanities," and traces briefly the incidents leading to the British abandonment of the concession at Hankow He reiterates the statement that the British on January 3 bayonetted several Chinese. . .

SAILOR SWALLOWS SHIP HALTED FOR

Boston, Jan. 19.—Two false teeth in a seaman's throat led to a call for help from the British steamer Zingtofel on January 12. The steamer Ilsongsis, of the Hamburg-American line, steamed the call, and arrived here today with the seaman aboard. He was taken to a hospital.

The Zingtofel left Philadelphia Jan 3 for Hamburg. During the night of Jan. 11 Eric Jonsson, a Swedish sailor awoke to find that two false teeth had dropped from their pivots and lodged in his throat. There was no doctor aboard and Jonsson was in danger of suffocation. The steamer flashed a radio call for help.

The Thuringia picked up the message, but due to bad weather was unable to come alongside until afternoon. Six men manned a lifeboat, carried the ship's doctor through heavy seas to the Zingtofel and brought the seaman back. The doctor was able to relieve his suffering, but could not remove the teeth, which now have worked farther down into his body.

MRS. CAVE LOSES ACTION AGAINST W. W. ANDERSON

Jury Awards Plaintiff Decision With Defendant Paying Costs

The case of Cave vs. Anderson the fourth of those on the civil docket to be tried before the Honorable Mr. Justice Logie was opened yesterday morning. The action is one brought about by Mrs. Amelia Cave against Willoughby Anderson for slander and false statements which the plaintiff is alleged to have uttered at the Town Hall at Amelisburg, on June 10 1926. The case was awarded to the plaintiff and the defendant must pay the damages.

At that time Mrs. Cave was summoned to answer a charge preferred against her by William Masters. Mr. Anderson who is the Justice of the Peace in that locality assumed upon her a fine.

Mrs. Cave in her action says that Mr. Anderson told her previous to the trial that "She was a bad woman and that he could put her in jail." Mrs. Cave stated that Anderson spoke in a very rough voice to her asking why she did not appear on the previous Saturday evening when the trial was originally scheduled.

Mrs. Cave said she did not take Anderson's preferred hint.

The evidence of all the witnesses on the defendant's side of the case was to the effect that Anderson had not even talked to Mrs. Cave that evening.

Mrs. Cave when on the stand grew very emotional and upon Mr. Mikel's questioning got excited and had to be assisted from the stand by her husband Mrs. Cave was very emotional and the tears streamed from her eyes as she told the jury and the Court of the harm done by Mr. Anderson's statements. She declared that she would not go back to live in Prince Edward County under any consideration. The Cave's have now taken up their residence in Ontario County.

Mrs. Cave told of going to the Town Hall at Amelisburg on the evening in question and related the events that took place there. He stated that Mr. Anderson talked with his wife before ascending the bench.

Mr. W. W. Anderson in his evidence said that he had acted in the capacity of J. P. for 21 years. He told of meeting Mr. and Mrs. Cave on the week previous. At that time she vehemently declared that she would not appear before him, although she had been summoned.

He advised her that to take the law into her own hands.

Mr. Anderson declared that he did not know the woman previous to that time and to his lawyer Magistrate W. C. Mikel, K.C., he made no reference to her past character.

He denied speaking to Mrs. Cave on the evening of the trial as she had stated. Mr. Anderson repeatedly declared on the stand that "Mrs. Cave was not truthful."

Sturgeon Dempsey stated that Mr. Anderson did not speak to Mrs. Cave that night.

William Masters said that the defendant did not go near Mrs. Cave.

George Cunningham stated that Mr. Anderson walked straight through the Hall and spoke to no one.

Carman Adams said he went with the defendant from his home to the Town Hall but no mention was made of the trial.

Bribery Usbd?

Some of the most important evidence of the whole trial was submitted by Henry Langstaff who stated that he met Mr. and Mrs. Cave on the road and that the former had offered him a sum of money to give certain evidence against Mr. Anderson. Mr. Langstaff said he refused to bribe and mentioned it to no one until last autumn when the accusation was thrown up to him. William Cave was recalled and denied all knowledge of the affair.

At 12.45 after the Jury had been charged they filed out.

Both Mr. Harris and Mr. Mikel in summing up their evidence made strong appeals for their clients.

JURY DISAGREES

The same day at noon George Shoniker called the Duke shop and Fuller was told to stay in re. The defendant arrived in his car within a few minutes and the matter of the theft of the purse was broached to the manager of the Bakery who stated to Fuller "John there's something here that you're not cured of and if it's right I want it straight and if it's wrong it must be settled."

Fuller denied connection with the affair but offered to go to the Chonker house to talk it over. Shoniker offered to take Fuller to his home in the car and the latter accepted.

As they passed the police station Shoniker stopped there and told the plaintiff in so saying "We'll settle this matter here."

Fuller said he was taken into the office, and grilled by the police but denied any knowledge of the theft.

After some questioning he was told to remain there and later the purse was brought in and shown him. When he revealed nothing he was told he could go home. Later, he claimed news of the arrest spread among his friends at Trenton.

Later he lost his job with the Bakery and was forced to do odd jobs. This situation arose he said through the alleged connection with the theft case and Fuller entered an action against Shoniker.

HAS MARRIED 73 COUPLES IN LESS THAN ONE YEAR

Winnipeg, Man., Jan. 19.—(By Canadian Press)—Winnipeg's most popular "marrying" clergyman for the year 1926 was Very Rev. Father P. Oliviér, vicar-general, of St. Vladimir and Olga's Ruthenian Catholic pro-cathedral. He married 73 couples in 11 months.

Rev. Father Oleiaw, in attempting to account for his own high record, said that he had one of the largest parishes in the city, his jurisdiction numbering in the neighborhood of 20,000. His people are of the Slav race and marry early in life of clergy of the United Church, who was an "also-ran," in accounting for the unemployment situation with regard to marriages and giving in marriage with many of the clergy, blamed the girls. He urged a campaign of publicity to induce Winnipegites to bring in marriage-by bachelors who were just hovering out of reach of the altars. His advice to the girls was to shut their eyes and jump. The water might be cold at first, but one became used to it and swimming with a companion was easier than battling the waves of life's sea alone.

A powerful sermon was preached by the Rev. A. L. McTear.

ARENA
BAND SATURDAY NIGHT

BANQUET GIVEN COL. COCKSHUTT BRILLIANT AFFAIR

Toronto, Jan. 19.— Ontario took Henry Cockshutt by the hand last night and said: "Well done, Harry."

More than two thousand banqueters, thronging with them from farm, village, town and city the sentiments of the trio of thousands they represented, assembled in the spacious Coliseum Arena at the Canadian National Exhibition Grounds to drink to the continued words of Premier G. Howard Ferguson health and prosperity of one who, in the "has discharged his duties, in a manner never excelled by any other Lieutenant-Governor."

COLORFUL EVENT

It was a colorful event in a colorful setting. The black of dinner jacket and full dress contrasted sharply against the snowy bank of banquet cloth into which the arena had been transformed for the occasion. Military scarlets in their pre-war dress of Bismarck red lent appealing shades of warm color to the scene. Persons of varied hues hung everywhere. Over the entrance, to the arena were draped Union Jacks, completing by roundfall at the termination of the proceedings of Col. Cockshutt's change to his "flower-in-the-button," "reopen your franchise, Live God, and honor the King."

A GREAT NIGHT FOR ONTARIO

It was a great night for everybody. It was a great night for the sky, loudest man who sat in the place of honor at the brilliantly decorated head table with the Prime Minister on his right and the new Lieutenant-Governor, W. D. Ross, on his left. Mr. Cockshutt was visibly affected. Contributions to the wealth of eulogy which flowed his way from George Wilson, chairman of the banquet; Sir William Mulock, Chief Justice of Ontario; the Premier; and his colleague, Mr. Ross. Well, last night Henry Cockshutt blush and grew misty-eyed at the praises that they sang for him.

BELLEVILLE TEAM WIN HONORS AT OSHAWA SPEIL

Looks as if our local Curlers are due to bring their home city a lot of credit and good advertising before the season is over. The first round of the Ontario Tankard series is completed with Belleville winning group honors in Oshawa yesterday, stimulating that city and Cobourg.

The province is divided into four groups, the winners of which, after having been declared, will engage in elimination games with the Ontario Tankard at stake, representative of the Provincial Curling Championship. So the successful Belleville rink will not have to await the elimination series.

In the games yesterday the local curlers defeated Oshawa in the morning by nine and Cobourg in the evening by nineteen shots after Cobourg had defeated Oshawa.

The Belleville rinks consisted of W. E. Clarke, T. J. Harley, C. J. Symons, R. J. Wray, (skip); B. L. Hyman, J. T. Chalkley, W. J. Davidson, W. Belair (skip).

LOCAL CURLERS HOLD BONSPIEL

While part of the local Curling Club was away at Oshawa last evening winning honors and making up matches for itself, the remaining members were making merry at home, and a real bonspiel was the result, the house of postponed the trophies for members of the winning rink. After a keen contest, Dr. Day's rink, consisting of Dr. Clarke, Harold Bateman, A. H. McConnell, Bill Macintosh and the Skip, carried off the day honors with a total of 16 points.

George McArthur's rink was runner up garnering 12 points and third in line was that the team of Bert Bickle, with 10 points. It was a real evening's enjoyment, and the winners will earned the fouls of their fellow-curlers like box of potatoes. Incidentally the prizes were the donation of the popular president of the Club, Ed. Gartley.

SCHOOL PANIC AVERTED

Windsor, January 19.—Seven hundred and fifty children marched to safety this morning when fire broke out in the McGregor public school, Ford City.

Incipient panic, which threatened momentarily to sweep the stampeded when smoke began to fill the main corridor of the building, was promptly quelled by the calmness of the teaching staff. The pupils, on sighting flames, assumed reassurance from wrong, and was assured that the the demeanour of those in charge of question would be discussed "high-them. The fire originated in some up". Perhaps the women did children's clothing which by means be the like, reforms might ensue. came ignited in the new addition of which at present lies beyond a temporary partition separating it from the occupied portion of the school building.

The fraternity houses of Monmouth College, Monmouth, Ill., were robbed of personal effects valued at $1,500.

MISS SAUNDERS MADE MEMBER OF N. J. SOCIETY

Toronto, Jan. 17.—Because of her special knowledge and experience with birds, Marshall Saunders has just been made an honorary member of the Bird Society of Newark, N.J., an organization of scientists. Miss Saunders lectured before them recently and she was told that owing to her combination of humane interest and scientific observation she had given the society a unique slant on bird life as intimately observed.

While in New York she spoke to the Women's Canadian Club on the "English-speaking Union", a society of twelve-thousand members which aims to create good will. In her speech she used an illustration of a point she was making from her own books: "When Cardinals would attack my canaries (which rest all the year round) I do not cut their throats, I clip their wings." One New York paper characterized this as a bon-mot, helpful to lovers of international peace.

Miss Saunders has a new book ready which will be brought out shortly. She has given it the name of family for the title which is "Esther-do Warren." It the story of a Victorian girl, done in a sort of "Pollyanna" way, but with one may be sure, a decidedly "Saunderish" handling and humor.

One of the novelist's delightful characteristics is the taking of time to do little things on the spur of the moment. At a New York hotel she sighed over the fact that if she tried to eat most of the huge portion of meat given her, she would not be able to daily with a very delectable dessert. Something was wrong with a system that in the first place made you waste food and on the other hand pay for what you didn't eat. Many women on trains evidently felt the same. One was confined to a fish course, for instance if the price was seventy-five cents and one had a dollar and a quarter set aside for a meal. So she resolved that a dollar and a quarter

"Kirkland Lake, Jan. 19.—A drilling and prospecting company has been formed here for the purpose of acquiring undeveloped promising mining claims on which they will do diamond drilling. If this work gives satisfactory results the properties will then be turned over to mining companies or other investors. It is expected that the expense of doing this work will be met largely by profits from other drills doing contract work.

South Porcupine, Jan. 19.—A bond issue of $500,000, or an issue of preferred stock of that amount, appears to suggest itself in the case of Cow West Dome Lake Mines.

The mine is obviously in a more promising condition than at any previous time. However, the capacity of the mill is limited, and the underground work is only far enough advanced to permit production at a rate which renders it impossible to realize profits.

Given capital with which to enlarge the scope of underground development, and for construction of an addition to the mill which would double the present capacity, and the enterprise would offer good prospects of being able to establish itself on a profitable basis.

Rouyn, Jan. 19.—Diamond drilling on Area Mines may not be concluded and to avoid possibilities of this method missing the ore which the electrical survey indicated, it has been decided to also put down a test pit. This will penetrate the clay and boulder overburden, and will also be extended to some depth in the rock below.

It is clearly understood in the mining field that possibly three or four diamond drill holes will have to be put down before any reasonable idea may be gathered of possible ore bodies. It would be possible for the drill to pass between lenses of ore. Also, it is possible a deposit may occur with a sharp dip, and that diamond drilling at any one point might closely parallel the deposit without giving any indication of its existence. Drilling from various angles might be required to locate and determine the position of any possible deposit. The information from a shaft or test-pit will be put down in the centre of the zone in which heavy mineralization is indicated, is looked upon as excellent procedure at this time.

TO-DAY'S THOUGHT

So I like life and I like righteousness; if I cannot keep the two together, I will let life go and choose righteousness. —Mencius.

THE CATALINA SWIM

To George Young, a Canadian youth seventeen years of age, goes the credit of having won what is called the Marathon swimming race, a distance of twenty-one miles, straight-line measure across the San Pedro channel, so-wing the world's championship title and the $25,000 prize offered by Mr. William Wrigley, jr., for this athletic feat. It will go down to history as one of the pluckiest and most remarkable achievements known in the sporting record. The contest stretched one hundred and fifty-four adepts of the swimming art, many of whom are women. Of this number, the Toronto youth was the only individual to make a landing at Vincente light house on the main coast. He had "cleaved" through the sea waves for fifteen hours and forty-five minutes, the acclamations of a large crowd befittingly recognizing the indomitable courage, physical brawn and sagacious skill whereby the victory was accomplished. Quite rightly, it is called a triumph of muscular and mental endurance. It reflects a dominion of mind over body, a dominion which in the instance would seem for a time to have dame flesh and nerve impregnable and the sinews strong as steel. Not the money award, but the glory won by Young's purpose—his chief aim was to benefit a sick mother—surely will be the boy's greatest prize.

REAL MOTOR TAXES

Motor drivers of Ontario who now are buying their 1927 number plates at a minimum of $6, with the average price not a great deal above that figure, will be interested in the license fees of automobiles in Great Britain. For the year ended November 30 last 643,000 cars taxed on horse power, paid an average of $14.16; approximately $70) 498,000 motorcycles paid an average of $2 14s, commercial vehicles to the number of 287,000 paid $21 6d each (say $104) and 60,000 motor buses were assessed, on the average, $35 18s 6d ($185.)

During the year the total gross receipts from motor taxation in Britain were $19,032,682, nearly a hundred million dollars. There is little likelihood that the enormous tax on the motor industry will be modified in the near future. The general strike and the prolonged miners' strike, which accentuated the problems of the British Treasury, have left little hope of a tax reduction in any direction this year.

FEED THE BRUTE

Elderly cynic who invented the classic advice for young wives, "Feed the brute," were not quite so clever as they thought, if they had advised their protegees to feed the "brute" moderately, or to see that the "brute" does his daily dozen, or to take the "brute" for a good walk daily, they would have been nearer the line on which modern medical science would like to see wives treat their husbands "Wives ought to pride themselves just as much on their therapeutic as on their culinary knowledge if they want happy homes," said a wise physician. "It is quite natural that a young wife should like to see her husband appreciate her cooking by asking for a second helping. Before the encouragers him to rehash his plate, however she should take into consideration his physical activities during the day, and the nature of his work. Many men do not require any encouragement in the idea that the demands of their profession are so heavy, the tax on their mental energy so severe, that they must make up lost ones by eating heartily. Probably what he requires is hard exercise to use up the food with which he is too plentifully supplied. Young wives, whose knowledge is still to be formed, would be well advised to take full advantage of the increased publicity now being given to health matters the innovation that every one might make would go far to nullify the effects of a too generous diet. Add a big jug of hot water to the breakfast tray, and take a glass or two before the morning tea."

CHAPLIN FILMS

Those are dark days for one, Charles Spencer Chaplin, peer of moving picture comedians. If he can find a laugh in the recent developments of his marital problem, he is an incurable wag indeed. Mrs. Chaplin not only is retaining custody of the two offsprings of the alliance but she has succeeded in legally tying up the showing of the films of other stars who have been involved in divorce actions? There was no hue or cry when Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford divorced their original matrimonial partners and then remarried. The late Hope Hamp, LaMarr had had six husbands, but it was not suggested her films be banned Valentino divorced his first wife and was divorced by his second just a few weeks before his death. Taking unto one's self a matrimonial partner in Holly wood is something akin to buying a car one gets the impression. If one isn't satisfied with the bargain, one trades wife or husband in on a new model and repeats the process at a later date. To Mr. Chaplin, films and permit others in which divorced persons appear to be shown will not only be inconsistent, but there is the danger that it will defeat its own ends by making the comedian a martyr in the eyes of the public.

OTHER MEN'S THOUGHTS

"Best outlook in Canada since Confederation," declared the Commissioner of Natural resources of the Canadian Nationals at the Thorold Board of Trade last night. It is a gospel which is worth preaching. We should forget the Whiter of Death.—St. Catharines Standard.

Something will have to be done to protect respectable citizens who drive good cars carefully, from the rick they have to run of being crashed into by some irresponsible ass, unable to pay for any damage he does, but without means enough to be careful of himself or anyone else.—Owen Sound Sun-Times.

The most precious resources of Canada is not its marvellous material wealth, but the stout-heartedness of its sons and daughters. Even in the most favored land on earth—and we believe Canada to be—the man who spends his time in idleness cannot succeed. Canadians have Canada. It is up to themselves to have everything else that heart can desire.

HAVE YOU HEARD THESE?

"I want you to understand," said Young Spender, "that I got my money by hard work."

"Why, I thought it was left to you by your rich uncle!"

"So it was; but I had to work to get it away from the lawyers."

"Lady," said the beggar, "could you gimme a quarter to get where me family is?"

"Certainly, my poor man; here's a quarter. Where is you family?"

"At de movies."

"I told my wife that if she bobbed her hair I would leave her."

"But she bobbed it; and you're still living with her."

"You bet I am. I'll show her she can't bluff me."

WORLD AVIATION HAS TRIPLED IN SIZE SINCE WAR

London, Jan. 19.—(By Canadian Press) —A picture of the development of world aviation from its beginnings in 1910 to an ultimate network of airship and aeroplane services over the entire earth is drawn in the memorandum on imperial air communications (placed as a confidential document before the Imperial Conference) which has been published by the Air Ministry.

The memorandum states that the total length of the regular air routes of the world is now three times greater than it was in 1920. Europe has 18,300 miles of air lines, America 8,625 miles, Africa 7,641 miles, Australia 2,267 miles, and Asia 1,223 miles. There has been a great improvement in safety and regularity. One the British airways the number of mile flown per fatal accident has leapt from 165,000 in 1919-20 to 1,131,000 in 1926.

CEREMONIES MARKING FINAL PROFESSION MOST IMPRESSIVE

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 19 (By Canadian Press).—Many ceremonies in city life are daily enacted, a common place in church activities, which to one of another faith, are new and very impressive. Such is the description given in the local press of the reception of seven postulants and the final profession of vows by nine sisters of the congregation of St. Joseph. The postulants were preceded by a little flower girl and following her came white-clad children with baskets, in which were folded the black habits. On each basket were sprays of smilax and the rosary which the sisters wear on their girdles. Each young religious wore a soft white wedding dress with a long court train from her shoulders, and a tulle veil which fell in misty folds around her face. A train bearer with a few white blossoms on the ribbons followed each postulant The nine black-clad sisters who were to make their perpetual vows followed the postulants and each nun carried a tall lighted candle, which was tied with white ribbon. The postulants after being received by the Mother Superior, slowly proceeded from the chapel while the choir sang softly a reception hymn. The young women returned to the hall of the convent, and after removing their wedding garments donned the habit of the congregation Those who were making their final vows had been in the convent for five years. As they went one by one to the altar railing kneeling will lighted candle in their hand, they made a "perpetual vow of poverty chastity and obedience." As the priest passed each kneeling nun, the crucifix was given to her and she made her final profession.

CO-OPERATIVE MARKET DISCUSSED BY MEMBER ALBERTA FARM WOMEN

Chicago, Ill., Jan. 19 (By Canada Press).—Mrs. Mary O. Puncke, former director of the United Farm Women of Alberta who some several years ago came here to organize radio service for farm women, received and discussed the first home and community training school of the American Farm Bureau Federation, on the subject of co-operative marketing.

Co-operative marketing begins in the home, with the education of children who shall be co-operative "from the ground up," was Mrs. Puncke's message.

"There is an opportunity which yo women must grasp," she added. "Th ideal of the co-operative movement i better homes. We do not want to di possess other people of their prospe ity, but we want to earn ours. Th farmers of the United States are ready for the co-operative movemer but the women of the country are n yet realizing their responsibility. It is on the realries that these problems are being worked out, an women will do it."

Some of Belleville's best talent will take part in the Robbie Burns concert Friday night. Miss Jessie Roberts Belleville's best known Scotch dialect elocutionist and the celebrated mandolin quartette will assist.

W. H. Dandie, proprietor of the Hotel was charged with refusing meal to a traveller. The case was proceeded with.

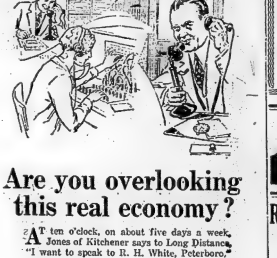

CHILDREN UNDER 15 CANNOT ATTEND THEATRES ALONE

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 19 (By Canadian Press).—There has been much searching of heart among mothers in the city over the tragedy of the tiny children smothered and crushed to death in a moving picture theatre in Montreal. The danger of such children being unaccompanied by adults is a very real one.

The Ontario regulation as to this reads:

"A child under the age of 15 years unaccompanied by an adult shall not be permitted to attend any exhibition by cinematograph, moving-picture machine, or other similar apparatus, for admission to which a fee is charged, except on Saturday of each week and on public and legal holidays, between the hours of 9 a.m. and 6 p.m., during which hours a matron, to be remunerated by the exhibitor, shall be engaged in such theatre, whose duty it shall be supervise the conduct of such children and adults toward them while in such theatre the appointment of such matron to be sanctioned in such manner as the Treasurer of Ontario may direct; and the Treasurer of Ontario may at any theatre, in his discretion dispense with the attendance of a matron."

Pneumonia caused by gas administered scientifically, resulted in the death of 250 rats when they rushed into the open from three business houses in Pottsville, Pa.

Are you overlooking this real economy?

AT ten o'clock, on about five days a week, Jones of Kitchener says to Long Distance, "I want to speak to R. H. White, Peterboro," White looks forward to Jones' calls, and is always at his desk ready for them.

"Why do you always ask for Mr. White?" a telephone salesman asked Mr. Jones. "Because he is the man I want — no one else will do." "But Mr. White is always at his desk. If you said to the operator, 'Please get me anyone at 2624 Peterboro,' you would get Mr. White, and the Station-to-Station rate would be about twenty per cent cheaper."

Jones now uses Station-to-Station exclusively. He finds it answers every requirement and saves money.

Newsy Neighborhood Notes

TWO ACTIONS

Oshawa, Jan. 18.—Mr. J. A. McGibbon notified the council that an action would be started on behalf of his client, Mrs. P. E. Purcell, who fell on the ice near the Library and was injured, unless the city were disposed to discuss a settlement. A letter was also read from a Toronto firm of solicitors with respect to Mrs. Seiler who was hurt on Masson street to the same effect.

MAYOR GETS JUDGMENT

Port Hope, Jan. 19.—Mayor T. B. Chalk was given judgment in Division Court here this morning by County Judge J. E. McGlade for $149.79 and costs, the full amount of a claim against W. T. and Thomas Lingard on a promissory note.

W. T. Lingard, who was represented by W. F. McMahon, produced receipts in court which he claimed were receipts for sums paid on the note. Mr. Chalk claimed that the receipts were for money paid on a wagon and repair account and produced his books to show this. Upon this evidence the Judge based his judgment.

ALSO IN KITCHENER

Kitchener, Jan. 19.—The slot machines operated in many Twin City cigar stores are illegal as they are gambling devices within the code. This is the substance of a judgment handed down by Judge Hoarn in County Court here in the case of the Crown vs. Arnold Bros. The latter, as a result, were fined $5 and costs. The case will be appealed.

LIVED IN OSHAWA

Oshawa, Jan. 19.—Henry O'Byrne, trainer and friend of George Young, Toronto boy who won the Canadian Island channel swim, lived in Oshawa at one time. The Reformer was informed on good authority today that O'Byrne was employed at the Canada Malleable and Steel Range Company when he lived here several years ago. Despatches from Los Angeles to Toronto today, tell of Young giving much credit to his trainer for his contribution to the win, "brains and money" being mentioned.

SMALLPOX REPORTS

MRS. W.H. NUGENT HOSTESS TO O.E.S.

Retiring Worthy Matron of Minerva Chapter Entertains Members

Mrs. Nugent, retiring Worthy Matron of Minerva Chapter 138, O.E.S., was hostess on Monday afternoon of a delightful card party given at her home, 234 Church street, in honor of the officers of the Chapter, on the eve of her retirement. The card tables were delightfully arranged, each finished in a color scheme of one of the star points of the Chapter and at each the officer whose color scheme was used, presided. The first table at which Mrs. Fisher (Ada) presided was finished in blue; Miss Grace Tucker's (Ruth) table in yellow; Mrs. Florence Cook's, substituting for Mrs. Yarrow, (Esther) in white; Mrs. Thorne (Martha) in green, and Mrs. Ethel McIntsh (Electa) in red. The decorations, flowers and china carried out the pretty color schemes and were most novel and charming. The winners at bridge were Mrs. Barkus and Mr. Thorne and at five hundred, Mrs. Florence Cook and Mrs. Carrie McGuire. The assistants at the tea at which the color schemes of the star points were again carried out and the emblems of the Chapter skilfully wrought in cakes and sandwiches, were Mrs. Herchimer Aylesworth and Mrs. C. S. Rollins of Coe Hill, and during the afternoon Mrs. Earl McQueen and Mrs. Singer contributed very charming and enjoyable musical numbers. Mr. and Mrs. Adams were honored guests at the entertainment which was given on the anniversary of the wedding of the host and hostess and of their son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Nugent of Toronto. It was regretted that illness of their little daughter Jean precluded the latter's attendance at the affair.

EARTH SHOCK IN JAPAN

Tokio, Jan. 19.—A sharp earthquake was felt here early today. It was more severe at Sendai, north of here and other points in the northern port of Honsho Island, on which Tokio is located. Clocks were stopped and some old walls fell, but there were no casualties and no material damage. The Imperial Observatory reported the shock was centred at sea.

Peterboro, Jan. 19.—Alderman W. J. Hancock was re-elected chairman of the Board of Health at its inaugural meeting yesterday morning.

The report of Miss Price, matron of Queen Mary Hospital, was read and showed that there is no decrease in the number of small pox cases in the hospital. At present there are 17 cases in the city, either in the isolation Hospital or quarantined in their homes. The Board of Health has done its best to have people vaccinated, and at present the cases which are reported are mostly amongst adults. Over 73 per cent of the children in the city public schools are vaccinated, which is considered rather low by the Board.

That very dress you've wanted is marked lower in price now. It must be for ALL Dresses at Ritchie's are reduced—from 20 to 50 per cent.

ACIDS MAKE KIDNEYS HURT

The American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble because we eat too much rich food. Our blood is filled with acids which the kidneys strive to filter out; they weaken from overwork, become sluggish, the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general ache in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your backparts or the urine is clouded, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache, or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or if you have rheumatism when the weather is bad begin drinking lots of good soft water and get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in the urine so they no longer are a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; can not injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

Y., and established the World's Dispensary where his famous home remedies have ever since been made.

Each succeeding year the sale of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has been greatly increased. SENIOR HOCKEY LEAGUE TO OPEN TOMORROW NIGHT

C.N.R. Express Meet Bell Telephone and Intel. Clash With Butchers

GOOD GAMES PROMISED

List of 12 Players Must Be Handed In By Each Manager

The Senior City League will open the scheduled games with a double-header to-morrow (Thursday) night. Eight teams have lined up with the organization and from present prospects some fast games will be in store for the fans.

Owing to the fact that the open dates at the sparks are so scarce no fee's teeth of the schedule was completed only up to the end of January when it is expected that the City Leaguers will be favored with games each week.

The same rules as last year will prevail. Players who are playing O.H.A. hockey will just be allowed to take part in any of the games.

Managers will take notice that a list of 12 players must be handed to the referee previous to going on the ice for the first game and only the fifteen named can play during the season. This is to prevent teams signing new players throughout the season.

Ken Gale and Clarence (Pick) Arnott have been appointed to act as referees. The League needs one or two more capable officials to handle the games, and any who wish to do so should see Steve Lomas. The manager of each team is requested to have his players on deck at the appointed hour.

A small admission fee of 15c will be charged at the gate this will be divided accordingly with the rink management. However the fees for the ice must be paid previous to each game.

The first game tomorrow night will see the pucksters from the Intelligencer and the Butchers clash. The former defeated the corners in an exhibition game but both teams have signed some new players and the fans will be treated to some good hockey. The Intelligencer fans are led by Jack Arnott who starred in Junior company in time goals by and included in the Bowl will be McNeil, Cuby, Symons Doyle, Cook, Brown, J. Smith, Dan O'Donohoe and several others.

The Butchers claim to have something up their sleeve and Manager Claude Mitchell promises some surprises when the team drops over the boards. The game will get under way promptly at 8 p.m.

The light-up affair promises to be the real tilt of the evening with the C.N.R. Express and the Bell Telephone coming together. The Express boys claim to have signed Bill Finkle and several other stars who have shone on the ice in Belleville in bygone years. Addison Lloyd who has been allowing no grass to grow under his feet and is sure to trot out a fast aggregation.

Silas Doolittle of the "Hello" boys is reported to have some speedy players under his wing and the Express will stack up against a lengthy problem. The Bell have several new boys added to the pay roll who will step out. The last game will start sharp at 9 o'clock. On Monday night the Bankers will meet the Tigers while the Y's Men's Club will line up against the Alemite.

The Bankers are led by Jack Rooney and some other high-class boys.

Charlie Bennet and Jimmy Hedger have corralled all the good hockey players around College Hill and will shift them into action. Tigers were City Champions last winter and are out to repeat again this season.

The Y's men are regarded as a dangerous sextette with "Argy" Armstrong, "Vern" Weir and "Stan" Nurse heading the parade. All of these have had experience in O.H.A. company and should make a bid for the honours.

"Art" Young up at the Alemite has a number of fast kids on whom he will depend to bring home the bacon. All are boys who will keep the Alemite in the fight from the drop of the hat.

It is hoped that the fans will support the City League and all promising some first-class sport.

It is up to the team managers to have their list of players ready and try and get the games get away on time. These protracted waits are entirely unnecessary and to make the League a success it must be run on a systematic basis.

The schedule of games thus far is as follows:—

Thursday, Jan. 20—8-9 P.M.—Intelligencer vs. Butchers.
9-10 P.M.—Bell (Tel. vs. C.N.R.
Monday, Jan. 24—8-9 P.M.—Tigers vs. Bankers.

Two games were played in the Ladies' League and one in the Junior at the Recreation Alleys last night, two of the girls' teams each winning four points, the Cisco taking four points from the Pontes and the Optics taking two points from Ritchie's. A new team in the Ladies' League. In the former game Miss Elliott and Miss Hedger were the highest bowlers, while in the latter game Miss Halsey and Miss Connell were the highest bowlers.

In the Junior League game the Star Motors took a fall out of the Cherry Pickers by taking three points out of four, the Cherry Pickers having a night off as they only rolled 2351 for their total score. Bob Moher for the Motors and Kenneth for the Cherry Pickers were the highest bowlers.

The Intell were scheduled to play with the Bankers in another Junior game but the Bankers failed to put in an appearance, no doubt the Banks and Grants knew they were to play. This game will be played at a later date.

CAROL BACK IN NEUILLY

Hardly Likely Now to Meet Wife Princess Helen

Paris, January 19.—Prince Carol of Rumania returned to his Neuilly home today after a three weeks' trip to Southern France.

The French "secret" police who have been absent from their accustomed haunts near the sumptuous villa, have again become very much in evidence, taking up the guard which they relaxed during the absence of the former Crown Prince.

Capt. Albert H. Polph, aged 35, Civil War hero, died recently at Escanaba, Mich.

SportOgramS By The "Observer"

Fans are reminded not to overlook the choice programme of basket-ball and volley-ball arranged by the officials at the "Y" tonight. Phil Brooker and Co. will invade the City with his protegees in hopes of carting home a couple of victories. The Limestoners are sending up by motor with three separate teams and from 7.3 until 11 there will be a continuous round of sport.

The Intermediates accompanied by a pair of supporters hopped off for Kingsville today where they will need a worthy foe in "Jim" Sutherland's Frontenac crew. The Excelsiors have always been tough fixtures and they must win tonight in order to keep pace with Cornwall and the Maroons. The interest in this group is at present with prospects shaping up for the closest fight in years.

For those who like hockey and have not yet witnessed one of these Intercollegiate games the opportunity is provided tonight when Queen's, to, last year's champions will be here to do battle with the Albert College laddies. Both Trent Institute lost out by a narrow margin to the High School and are out to redeem them selves at the expense of the Queen's eastern. Coach Handy Hill was disappointed in their showing against the Collins and Co. and maintains that his is the best team. The Deseronto team have lost Perry one of their stars from last year but nevertheless they are reputed to have a classy outfit.

The latest to invade Belleville is a girl's hockey team and the "fair ones" stepped out for their first practice on Monday night and gave the rink rabbits something to dwell upon with their snappy work. L. Goyer who is starring at cover on the ice for the Intermediates says he hopes to round out a fast six. Irene Hickey who is trying for a place was the first casualty when she fell and inflicted a sharp cut near her right eye, when she came in contact with the sharp end of a stick.

The local girls hope to arrange games with nearby town teams.

The High School tried girls hockey but gave it up after a couple of seasons and some years ago the B.D. was represented by a noted squad of lady hockeyists but this year the city girls team is the only one to enter the field.

• • •

Every form of winter sport is in full swing with the badminton, hockey, basket-ball, volley-ball and curling clubs in full swing. Belleville is indeed lucky to have every sport so well patronized. There is something for the old and young alike.

• • •

At the present time there is four hockey leagues flourishing in Belleville, the Junior and Intermediate O.H.A. teams namely Senior City, Intercscholastic, Church League, and Inter-City C.N.R. groups. Everyone who wishes to play hockey may gain a place on some one team or another. For those who desire a lighter form of sport snowshoeing and skating are in vogue.

• • •

Both the Recreation parlors and the "Y" Alleys are in full swing every night and when one stops to consider this form of sport which has a big following in fact one of the biggest.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Trenton, Ont.,
January 18th, 1927.

The Belleville Intelligencer,
Belleville, Ontario.

In my estimation George Young, who was the only one to finish the Santa Catalina swim, accomplished the greatest athletic event the world has ever known or ever will for the next hundred years. It is reported that Mr. Ogbyrn is to get forty per-cent of the boys $25,000.00. If this is the case, it does not look fair to me.

The boy was so anxious to go in that race that he would risk anything. From this end it looks to me by the time that managers and trainers get a piece of his money, he will have nearly little left. I know something about the swimming game and it is still a mystery to me how the boy ever endured such cold water for over 15 hours. He proved himself a wonder of this age.

Now Canada show that you are a real live country. If I am informed rightly it cost Canada between one hundred and three hundred thousand dollars annually for advertising. This boy somehow has advertised our fair Dominion more than anything I know of so don't forget him. Make him a substantial donation. There is not a tax payer, in the whole Dominion, that would not gladly contribute for it, and if they are willing surely the Government should.

This Ontario House should remember this wonderful kid too, by a nice donation.

Toronto, you are mighty lucky to have the honor of claiming this boy. He advertised your beautiful city and brought it before the eyes of the whole world. Do not forget him, I feel sure you won't.

Wires of congratulations are all right in their way, but they don't weigh much. You could not buy a lean sandwich with a million of them.

Good luck to you George Young.

Pat Jennings,
Trenton.

MAROONS PLAY FIRST GAME OUT OF TOWN TONIGHT

Strong Contingent Accompanied Local Squad to Limestone City

The Belleville Maroons accompanied by a large delegation of rooters invaded Kingston this afternoon where the locals will attempt to down Jim Sutherland's crew. Eddie Thomas' gang are at full strength and the Frontenacs may expect a battle royal for the drop of the hat. Experts who have seen both Frontenacs and Cornwall in action, claim that the former are in every sense just as strong as the Factory Town Six.

The Frontenacs just managed to nose R.M.C. out by a 4-3 score on Monday night and the Cadets are not feared as a very strong six. The hope gives the Maroons the edge, but nevertheless it has always been a tough proposition to step into the home of the Frontenacs and grab a victory.

Belleville have always played smart hockey in the Jack Harty rink and tonight should be no exception.

Joe Smith, one of Kingston's mainstays was bereaved in the loss of his mother last week and may not be seen in action.

It is bound to be a nip and tuck struggle between "Cilly" Goyer and "Chummy" Thomas as both these players are well up in the scoring columns but must remember that a pass to a fellow-player at the right time is the logical thing to do instead of trying to take it in alone.

Belleville will be sitting nice at the top of the loop with four straight if they manage to dispose of the Frontenacs.

The team left by train at 4.38 while a good many of the supporters proposed to wait and take the bus. Both the Canada and the Dawson services are making special trips.

"Mike" Rodden, dean of sportwriters and a most capable official is stated to handle the bell.

The possible line-ups:

Kingston		Belleville
Brooks	Goal	Bowen
Panet	Defence	Green
Holway		F. Goyer
Lawlor	Centre	L. Goyer
Ballringer	Wings	Whalen
Mathewson		Hagerman
Watts	Subs	Prechette
Boyd		Hibbard

LOUIS COUSINEAU MAKES A RECORD

Ottawa, Jan. 19.—What is said to be a record in fire pin bowling was made by ex-Mayor Louis Cousineau of Hull at the Hull bowling alleys, recently, when he bowled 14 consecutive strings with an average of 213. He compiled a total of 841 for three strings, and his high single was 327. This is regarded as a record in local bowling circles, as Mr. Cousineau has only been bowling a year, changing from ten pins to five pins this season.

Have you seen the Fine Shirts in Ritchie's Men's Store, at $2.49? There are also some attractive bargains in Scarfs, Linen Handkerchiefs and other Furnishings.

ALBERT COLLEGE MEET DESERONTO IN INTER-SCHOOL GAME TONIGHT

Albert College and Deseronto will provide entertainment for the hockey fans at the rink tonight in an Intercollegiate feature game. The Deseronto team were champions last year, and are out to repeat. The Collegians had a tough issue in the High School on Monday evening but Coach Hill says his boys are capable of playing better hockey than they dished up on that evening.

Chent, Bond and Company's desire Campbellford in an overtime fixture here a week ago and the fans who witnessed that game will in all probability be back again tonight.

Deseronto are coming up with a determination to win and a fast game will no doubt result. The puck will be faced at 8.15.

OTTAWA WITHOUT WORD

Ottawa, January 19.—No confirmation is available here of the announcement that Rt. Rev. Monsignor Andre Cassulo had been named Apostolic Delegate for Canada to succeed Monsignor Pietro di Maria, who was transferred to Switzerland as Papal Nuncio at Berne last September. The secretary, Monsignor Beaurioit has been in charge of the delegation here since Mgr. di Maria left.

The Scorers

Following Monday night's game Ralph Tilton slipped into first place in the scoring column for the "Big Six". "Tally" is closely followed by Cyril Goyer of the Maroons who has driven the rubber home seven times. Goyer should regain first place at the expense of the Frontenacs tonight. Hagerman and Whalen of Belleville are well up among the honored with four goals each.

The goals in the games to date are as follows:

BASKET BALL AND VOLLEY BALL AT Y.M.C.A. THIS EVE.

The local basket ball squad will be at home to Kingston Intermediates tonight on the "Y" court in what shapes up as an interesting encounter.

Phil Brooker is bringing his Intermediate experts here besides a Volley ball and a girls basket ball team. The program will start promptly at 7.30 and will continue until 10.30.

The Championship in the local girls Church League will also be played off. The Belleville Intermediate basketball team have suffered the loss of Percy Cole, Leo Barlow and "Doc" Faulkner but again capable men have been secured to fill their shoes.

"Army" Armstrong, "Vern" Weir, "Phil" Miles, "Matt" Morison and several other prominent court stars will be trotted out.

The girls game will be especially interesting in view of the fact that boys rules will be used.

School for bus operators has been opened at Arkon, Ohio.

A MATTER OF DAYS, NOT MONTHS

White tannels, tanels, golf, the joy of a headlong plunge into tepid ocean waters, the lazy luxury of basking on sunlit silver sands and all the delights of the open road are days away—not months. Canadian Pacific Coast and California are revealing its summer pleasures. Flowers are blooming, birds are singing, the cry of "Fore" wafts o'er the breeze.

Go to the coast and shed your overcoats and chilblains. Nature is always gentle to this, her favorite daughter, and those who woo her share in the gentleness. Lush green grass, roses, orange blossoms, palms; just think of it!

Canadian National train service puts Vancouver, Victoria and all Pacific Coast points within easy reach. Full particulars may be obtained from any Canadian National Agent.

PIANO CLUB AT LOCAL STORE IS GREAT SUCCESS

Special Prices and Terms Bring Fine Instrument Within Reach of All

An announcement that has created considerable interest in the city was that made last Friday by Gerhard Heintzman, limited Music Store, when the Piano Club of this firm was begun. Under the Club plan, a limited number of the well known Ennis (Colonial Model) pianos are being offered at a special price and at very special terms.

While the regular price of this piano is $641, the Club price has been reduced to $539, permitting a saving of $100 to each purchaser under the Club plan. Furthermore, the terms offered are such as to permit of almost anyone having a beautiful instrument in the home, for $5.00 cash and $2.00 weekly buys this piano. Further more the price—$539—is the complete price of the piano, with no extras tacked on.

The Club plan is a most reliable instrument (Ennis Colonial Model) is made by Canadian workmen in one of the best factories in the world. Special interest has the Club piano been to date, among families with children at the learning age, for it is a recognized fact that a child's education is not really complete without an appreciation and knowledge of music.

A few memberships remain before the Club closes. Drop in to Gerhard Heintzman's, 369 Front Street, west, and try this beautiful piano, and learn the full details of this remarkable offer.

MUTUAL LIFE HAS BEST YEAR

Net Earnings and New Business Largest in Company's History

A new high record in net earnings is shown by the Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada for 1926 in the fifty-seventh annual report of the company, which is made public today. In addition to this achievement, the year was also rendered especially noteworthy by the writing of the largest volume of new business in the history of the company, totalling slightly over $20,000,000, and by the reduction in the rate of expense to income to the lowest point in the company's history, namely, 15.11 per cent. The rate of interest earned on invested funds was 6.48 per cent.

The net earnings of the company in 1926 amounted to $4,141,375.70 an increase over the preceding year of $244,392.26. This amount is the largest important item in the entire statement, inasmuch as in it all the transactions of the year are reflected. The surplus or net earnings constitute the final result of the year's business, and the public statement constitute the company will benefit exclusively.

During the year under review the management succeed in bettering all its previous records in regard to economical administration, and the Mutual Life of Canada has long held a reputation in this respect. In 1926 the ratio of expense to income decreased from 15.23 per cent to 15.11 per cent. This showing is all the more remarkable when it is considered in conjunction with the fact that no less than $56,039,548 of new assurances was issued during 1926 an increase of $4,454,771 over the preceding year, and constituting the largest volume of new business written in the company's history. The writing of such a volume of business necessarily meant a large outlay, and the reduction of the expense ratio, in the light of this showing is all the more gratifying.

The net increase in business in force of $31,340,402 was also the largest in the company's history, leaving the total of policies in force at $184,069,725, after allowing for terminations amounting to $24,384,256.

Altogether, the policyholders of the Mutual Life of Canada have reason to look back upon 1926 as a crowning year.

SPLENDID TALK

ested for scientific reasons. The usefulness of the birds cannot be over estimated and when they do spread the human race it is but logical that the human race should befriend them.

A Problem

In the preservation of the birds a serious problem faced the nature lovers in their migratory habits. Many years are on the verge of extinction until happily the governments of the United States and Canada passed an act protecting them in both countries.

The National Parks Branch maintains a sanctuary for bird protection, and the local organizations may do much in the preservation of bird life. The speaker told of the deplorable extermination of the passenger pigeon on which 70 years ago travelled in a flock of two billion.

What we have destroyed, unhappily we cannot bring back and the extinction of which overtook the pigeon threatens any species of bird which is not protected.

Splendid Film

Mr. Lewis showed some remarkably fine slides of the Canadian birds, and referred to the remarkable records of bird flight made through medium of aluminum bands which are put on the birds of the bird sanctuarys by the officials. Some proved the birds to have flown from Maine to the heart of Africa, others from the coast of Canada to the wilds of South American, others to have made transatlantic flights.

Mr. Lewis showed some very fine illustrations of bird houses dwelling upon the fact that it is to the people of today to become thoroughly conversant with birds at their habits that the interest created my possess an ever strengthened desire to preserve them.

At the conclusion of the address Dr. F. E. Malott on behalf of the audience thanked Mr. Lewis for his instructive address assuring him that his remarkable power as narrative to the number and potential members of the Jack Miner League to take a further interest in the Birds of Canada.

Mr.-Walter Turner, newly appointed president of the Jack Miner League which organization accepted Mr. Lewis' offer to speak in the city, occupied the chair.

BELLE THEATRE

George Melford, director. Scenes Owen and Arnold Gray. Featured players, and the entire cast and producing staff of Metropolitan's new version of the gold rush classic "The Flame of the Yukon," which will be shown at the Belle Theatre tomorrow, spent several hard days at Mammoth Lakes in the California Sierras, filming scenes of the picture.

According to Melford, true Alaskan conditions ideal for the gold stamped atmosphere of the Monte Carlo-Yukon story were encountered, and although filming was made more or less difficult by deep snow and intense cold, some exceptionally fine outdoor scenes were obtained.

Scena Owen displayed frosted fingers as evidence that the director's realism was unsurpassed. With deep tones and Yukon aloofness for picture atmosphere, and horses, truck sleds and snowshoes as means of transportation for the players over the six feet layers of snow and deeper drifts, thrilling scenes of the rush to Ophir Valley, were filmed in the actual version of "The Flame of the Yukon," were filmed.

With Miss Owen in the supporting cast, Melford's location were besides the new leading man, Arnold Gray. Miss Ben Bett, the villain of the piece, and Mc Donald, Winifred Greenwood and Vadim Uraneff.

REGENT THEATRE

Dick Talmadge at his best—that's "The Better Man", his latest release for FBO, which is now showing at the Regent Theatre Thursday for a 3 day run. In this amusing tale Talmadge is an Eskimo lord who discovers a rich gold mine, a valet, an amusing love affair and financier, minute furnish a wealth of riotous comedy situations and speed in the thrilling finish" for which he is so famous. The final sequence in which he is industriously pursued by three hundred men anxious to secure his claim, affords him a much better and more connected story than his earlier efforts, and affords opportunities for some real action.

CAPITOL THEATRE

Patrons at the Capitol Theatre last night were treated to an interesting bill all the way through both on the screen and stage and a performance that is well up to Capitol standard in every respect.

Dolores Costello in "The Little Irish Girl", one of Warner Brothers' newest productions, is a film with wonderful scenes, action and thrills all woven together plus a little romance, and a good deal of real comedy that keeps the audience in good humor throughout.

On the stage, Parette in a one man revue is the source of versatility, in his variety of stunts he approaches the well known "27" in number, singing, dancing, talking, juggling and last a few of them—and all done well —done in a manner that well merited the excellent reception Parette received at the hands of the good-sized audience last night. Not the least interesting feature of his performance was his playing on a one-stringed musical instrument all his own, and the result was remarkable and surprising. Altogether, it was an interesting and as good a performance as has been seen on the stage of the Capitol for some time.

Miss Annie Marsh are an excellent exhibition of the Charleston in all its variations. Miss Marsh will, no remembered as the winner of the Silver Cup on December 15th last in the Capitol, and which was emblematic of

BEYOND ALL DREAMS

A large room, furnished in damask of dark amber crimson, the cabinets and carven chairbacks of oak, the Bodley capeclaus—a dimly lighted room, contrasting strongly with the brilliant chamber they had just left.

In the center a large table, on which stood a shaded lamp. This table was strewed with books and papers; a man seated at the table sorting papers. Gravely he looked up when the friend came close. He was a very dark man, with cool-black beard and piercing eyes.

"Three of you!", he said, speaking French.

"Three of us," replied Renfrew, speaking for the rest.

"Ah! English, by your accent. What do you want to know?"

"I have the same curiosity as most young fellows of my age," returned Renfrew, laughing lightly. "Shall I make my fortune, marry, starve, drown, or go to prison?"

"She whom you love loves another," said Paolo, in deep tones; "but—glancing at the keen, bright face of Donald—you will make your fortune. Also take my advice, keep early hours, take walking exercise, look after your health."

"Is that all?"

"That is all."

Donald put down the money which Blake had given him on the table. He did not stop to hear what Paolo said to his friends. The clumsy words of the charlatan were working in his brain, making his blood boil. "She whom you love loves another."

"Folly! Donald! Whom has she sent? Stuff! Himself? "I am an ideal! Still, I will find it out!" or he vowed to himself. "Yes—yes, before tomorrow I will tell you how I love you, and you shall answer me as you will, only, fairest Ariel, you shall hear, know, understand what I suffer! I will kneel at your feet, and pour out such fool words as shall startle you out of your calm! I have vowed it!"

* * * * * * * * *

Easier to plan than to carry out. How was this rash artist to gain five minutes alone with his pupil?

During the whole of the drawing lesson there sat Miss Bateman, more watchful than ever since the episode of last night; and Ariel, sweet and calm, patiently drawing, excepting his tremulous correctness with a mingled dignity and gentleness very torturing to the lover, unconscious—yes, unconscious that such a volcano of passion was ready to burst at her feet as was the calm, smiling girl-painting of Madame Ardell in her youth which hung close to the fireplace.

All at once came a ring to the bell, and then Morie ushered in a grave, white-haired man, who began talking volubly to Miss Bateman.

"Madame, I bring you news! Madame, we must be alone."

"And Miss Bateman forgot Ariel, and led the man into another room.

Donald sank on his knees.

"Ariel, Princess Ariel, I love you—I love you!" he burst out. "I love you so that if I do not tell you I shall go mad! My whole heart and soul burn for you night and day! I ask only that you will pity me a little sometimes in your thoughts!"

It was the strangest outburst. Donald was pale as death.

Then came the answer of Ariel, clear and distinct.

CHAPTER IX.

ARIEL SPEAKS.

"Mr. Renfrew, I must not listen to this."

The voice of Ariel was pitilessly quiet, her distracted lover thought.

She looked at him, indeed, with a gentle, yet lofty kind of pity, which had the effect of maddening him. He said afterward that in those wild moments he felt like one intoxicated; his own adoration of Ariel, and the girls utter incapacity to understand or sympathize with the feelings, nearly drove him mad. Had she shown scorn, disdain, or anger, he could have forgiven her; but this cold, calm surprise was simply terrible.

"You do not know what it is to love, mademoiselle—what it is to dwell on one thought, ere one face, hear one voice, waking or sleeping, and always the dreadful knowledge that your love is unreturned, that she, for whose sake you would gladly die the most awful death that the ingenuity of man could devise, only regards you as a worm to be crushed beneath her feet!"

"Not so," she said quietly. "There is not a human being on the face of the earth whom I so regard. I am much. No; I think much of the sorrows and sins of the whole world, and I think to be very rich, and so have the means of doing good to numbers of the unfortunate must be the greatest of earthly happiness. I am sorry for your fault, monsieur and I pray that you may repent of it, and find consolation before very long. I forgive you," she added, with a sweet smile, "and if you ask, Heaven will forgive you also."

She had meant to be kind and pitying but it was as if she had thrust a two edged sword into his quivering heart.

This beautiful Pole had not a particle of that romantic fervor which often springs like early flowers in rich heart of English loams. No; she put down the pencil, folded her white hands like a saint in prayer, and told the lost-head ed artist that she prized, and forgave him.

"I am a dolt!" said Renfrew—"a poor madman; but, oh! if you could understand, Princess Ariel—Madeline, have pity in-stills me. I tell you that, as truly as my heart beats and my brain lives, I shall die you, and think of you away. If I thought there was a chance remained when I should no longer love you. I would drown myself—I do! I know what it is to love I am another being—I am inspired! Before I loved you I was a mere machine, obeying the rules and laws; now, although my life is a torture, it is an exalted life. I could be a queen or false thing while I love you. I—"

She stopped this torrent of homely with some nonsense with a wave of her white hand.

"Mr. Renfrew, you are wrong," she said, with dignity; "you are doing what is mean now—within a fortnight of the absence of my chaperone to your such a tale into my ears. Unless my promise was tired—unless I am both void and kind of right—who can tell what folly I might have been guilty of? I might have listened to you—felt flattered at your declaration, and even I might have thought of you afterward, and wished you were unable"

She spoke in the most perfect good faith; but her utter incapacity to realize in the faintest degree the feelings of poor Donald was apparent in every word.

"As it is," said Ariel, "of course I must cease to take lessons from you."

He started aghast.

"Cease!" he faltered.

She looked on his white face, and pitied him sincerely; but it was the pity she would have felt for the fly she had been detected in a fraud upon a bank, and had been doomed to imprisonment.

New Evening Gowns Lead Double Lives

BUTTERICK 1236

At the recent opening of a smart supper club in New York several of the most successful gowns were of the fifty-fifty or two-tonship type. The skirt was always a solid color—usually black satin or velvet—while the blouse was sometimes in a darker shade of the same material, sometimes in a contrasting metallic brocade, and often in plain white. The lines of the frock sketched above are strikingly simple, allowing the beauty of material to show to best advantage. The formal spirit of the evening gown is enhanced by the satin-stylish square-cut neck and straight shoulder-strap.

Tired of the same old hat? Why endure it when you can buy a smart new felt (velvet or satin, too) for an insignificant price at Ritchie's Sale?

WHAT'S NEW

(From a Woman's Standpoint)

Two chiffon flowers in contrasting colors are being worn by smart women at Palm Beach.

Deep catch collars are noted on some of the loveliest evening wraps at the Southern resorts.

White fox scarfs are becoming highly important at Palm Beach, worn with both dresses and coats.

Melon-shaped pearls that give the impression of having been flattened in, as well as banana shades—pinky yellow tints.

The popular blue family gains further distinction through slate blue —agrey-blue tone which is prosperous in Paris at the moment.

New York reports the vogue for blue shading is reflected in the report of a leading silk house, which numbers midnight blue, queen blue and light navy among the five best sellers at the moment, and in contrast to the wide range of colors in demand in woollens, only nine per cent of the above silk group is other than black, blue, tan or green.

It is rumored, that she, for whose sake you would gladly die the most awful death that the ingenuity of man could devise, only regards you as a worm to be crushed beneath her feet!"

"Not so," she said quietly. "There is not a human being on the face of the earth whom I so regard. I am much. The Irony of Love

By Charles Garvice

"If you think—" she began, her voice rising angrily, her head thrust forward. "But I'm after Hate, that I'm like the other girls—"

"My dear, I never said you were," he broke in, almost gently. "To tell you the truth, I was thinking more of Hate than of you. That's natural—I'm his father, you see. He's a rough colt. So I said it was as if she had thrust a two edged sword into his quivering heart.

FOR Acid Stomach PHILLIPS' Milk of Magnesia

Instead of soda hereafter take a little "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" in water any time for indigestion or sour, acid, gassy stomach, and relief will come instantly.

Better Than Soda

For fifty years genuine "Phillips Milk of Magnesia" has been prescribed by physicians because it overcomes three times as much acid in the stomach as a saturated solution of bicarbonate of soda, leaving the stomach sweet and free from all gases. Besides, it neutralizes acid fermentations in the bowels and gently urges this souring waste from the system without purging. It is far more pleasant to take than soda.

Stops a Cough Quick as that—

Dr CHASE'S SYRUP OF LINSEED AND TURPENTINE

The lad threw back his head with a splendid gesture and laughed. "No, they'll do the worrying," he said. "They'll come on in the school here of course; and one or two of us will be here to receive them."

"That's all right, Hafe," said his father "Pincher's a fool, especially when he's flush and takes too much whisky on board. How's the chin jemping on?"

The lad shrugged his shoulders. "Not even pay dirt today," he said. . . .

Gentleman Jim leaned against the counter, and regarded his son through half-closed eyes.

"Scarcely good enough, is it, Hafe?" he said congenitely. "Sometimes I wonder whether the whole game, take it all round, is good enough—for you."

"If it's good enough for you, it's good enough for me, dad," said Hafe, testing himself on an upturned barrel and stretching out his legs.

"You and I are in a different category," began Gentleman Jim; then he paused and simplified his language. "I mean that there's a vast difference between a young man who is just getting on in life, and an old one, who has come to the end of the rope."

The lad looked up with a smile. "You're not old, dad," he said, with a confidence which was meant to obscure his affection. "You haven't come to the bottom of your claim yet."

"Pretty nearly, Hafe," said the father, with a shake of the head and a sing of the shoulders; "no near as to learn-that there's nothing worth having, not even pay dirt. Hafe"—he paused, and looked at his son thoughtfully—"I've been thinking about you lately. As I said, you don't make a game for a young man. What do you say to chucking it and going out into the world, to try your luck at some other kind?"

"Oh, if you're tired of it, dad—" responded the young man promptly.

"I'm not as in this term, Hafe," said Gentleman Jim. "I'm here, and I must stick here: I'm too old a dog to change my kennel. I've had my chance—and a pretty mess I made of it—it's only right you should have yours. There's not much of a prospect in loafing about a mining camp—no. I'll give you your due; you don't loaf, you're a good un to work. But, look here—man to man, wouldn't you like to see something of the world, to go in for a decent kind of life to be something more than a mere miner?"

"Oh, I don't know," replied the lad with a short laugh. "Life's jolly enough here, there's plenty of fun; but I reckon it isn't all beer and skittles in the world outside. But, of course, if you've got a move on you, I'll go with you wherever it is. On the other hand," he added, with characteristic drivativeness, "if you mean staying, I'll stop on with you here. I don't suppose you're in any hurry to get rid of me, dad."

"That's it," assented his father, with a nod. "You Hafe, the day we put will be a bad one for me, but a father's got to do his duty. And you'd be content to carry on the game, to step behind the bar here when I've retired out?"

"Well, I don't know about the saloon bar," Hafe replied reluctantly. "You see, he went on quickly, as if fearful of hurting his father's feelings, "I'm not built that way. Besides, I couldn't do it. I haven't the head on me. I couldn't run the saloon and the boys as you do. Dad sometimes, very often, in fact, I'm set thinking what a splendid soldier you'd have made; you could have kept a regiment in order."

A flash rose to Gentleman Jim's face, and he turned away with a laugh.

LEO B. RIGGS CLEARS MYSTERY OF THE AIR

For some weeks past, radio enthusiasts in the city have been listening in on organ recitals broadcast from station W J A C Chicago, announced as played by Leo B. Riggs. Subsequently Mr. Riggs, has been besieged by inquiries at his home here regarding the concerts and many have expressed surprise that he was not in Chicago at the time the concert was broadcast.

Mr. Riggs treated the matter somewhat lightly or less as a joke and assured the inquirers that some mistake had been made—that they had not heard correctly by air, he had not been in Chicago for months. Last evening, however, personal experience convinced the musician that his name was actually in the air. He was called last evening to the home of Mr. Fred Kinsella who assured him that his name was being broadcast from Chicago and to complete him, told him to hold the receiver and to the musicians' surprise a station actually announced the name of organ selection to be played by Leo B. Riggs."

Engineering intently he recognized selections which he had played in New York many years ago for Write-Mizner Philharmonic Organ Company of New York. This concern is apparently, Mr. Riggs said, broadcasting his one time selections from their Chicago station.

ACCIDENTAL WITNESS

Saw Chipps Fall on Stairs After Being Wounded By Bullet

Austin, Texas, Jan. 20.—The commission of Dexter E. Clipps on his climb to death in the church office of Dr. J. Frank Norris in Fortworth last July today took up a story of how he had dimmed Chipps of the cause of which he was shot to death. Dr. Norris is on trial for the slaying of Chipps. D. E. Bedwell, Chipp's companion, proved to be another of those accidental witnesses of the tragedy which cost the life of Chipps, when the latter went in Norris' office to protest against the pastor's attacks on Mayor H. C. Meacham.

He happened to be going to the office of the searchlight, in the First Baptist Church office building for a habit, when he ran across Chipps, who was on his way to the same place. He knew Chipp's face well as he had met him and accosted him on the street and inquired the way to Norris' office, the witness tells of Chipps, when the latter was in Norris' office to protest against the pastor's attacks on Mayor H. MAY SUBMIT OIL AND LAND QUERY TO ARBITRATION

Washington, D. C., Jan. 20.—While no definite move has been made either by the United States or Mexico looking to submission of the oil and land law dispute, Secretary of State Kellogg's announcement that he has considered the possibility of applying the principle to the question has aroused considerable speculation in Washington and Mexico City.

It is concerned chiefly with the many preliminary obstacles that would have to be surmounted first before any step was taken to submit the controversy to an arbitrator or some impartial tribunal.

CONTROVERSY STILL RAGES OVER USURPTION OF FUNCTION OF MAYOR

London, Jan. 20 (C. P. Cable).—There is much amusement throughout the country at the controversy in the ancient King's Lynn which started when Queen Mary and Prince George recently visited town and were shown around by Major S. A. Cozon, social celebrity and former mayor. The present mayor and council holding that Cozon usurped their privileges adopted a resolution dispensing with the major's presence at the town hall. Mrs. Cozon, a member of the council, has just rejected her eloquent appeal to councillors to withdraw the motion on her husband.

Many commentators declare that the council of King's Lynn in censuring Major Cozon eventually censured her majesty, since when paying strictly private and informal visit she was entitled to accept what ever escort she chose. Cozon states that he accompanied Queen and Prince after finding out that the Mayor was not available. However, one thing is certain, and that is Queen Mary will not call at King's Lynn again very soon.

FOREIGN SECRETARY DETERMINES TO ESTABLISH BRITISH PRECEDENT

Downing Street Vexed at Attitude of British Press

FOREIGN POLICY

Merely Taking Precautionary Measures, They Say

London, January 20.—Foreign Secretary Austen Chamberlain held a conference at the Foreign Office today with former Premier Lloyd George, Liberal leader, on the Chinese problem. The former premier, Ramsay MacDonald, Labor leader, held a similar conference with the Foreign Secretary yesterday. It was stated in official circles that these meetings were in a complete accord with the established precedent, that calls for a complete knowledge by the Opposition leaders of developments in situations affecting British foreign policy. Downing street is vexed over the emphasis that the London press has been placing on British military preparations to meet emergencies in the far East. It was reiterated that the British policy is to negotiate with the Chinese on the most liberal basis and that the dispatch of warships and marines to China was purely precautionary and to assist in quieting fear and panicky feeling of the foreign population in Shanghai.

UNUSUAL SIGHT

A flock of cedar wings, migratory birds seldom seen north in the winter, was observed yesterday in the Yeoman's property on Mulmur street by Mr. Wallace Havelock Robb. The forty-birds were busily stripping the berries from a mountain ash tree, proving, according to Mr. Robb, that if enough berry-bearing bushes could be planted and grown in the North, many of the migratory birds would brave the severity of the winter and stay with us all year round. Mr. Robb also saw a pair of beautiful finches in front of his home perched on a tree near his study window.

BAND SATURDAY NIGHT

MARKET SPOTLIGHT — MONDAY — M&M — STOCKS — MINING STOCKS

In Messrs. Horace Young and Douglas Wright, the Howay Gold Mines have acquired the services of two of the outstanding men up North. They are amply supplied with funds and, with men of this calibre in charge of operations, the shareholders are assured of a real run for their money.

Confirmation, from reliable sources, has been received that Teck Hughes has opened up some excellent ore on he 15th level, at a depth of 1720 feet. The ore zone has a width of 25 feet, 12 feet of which carries high values including seven feet of rock assaying approximately $150.00 to the ton.

The earnings of Mining Corporations for 1926 will be considerably lower than in 1925. Sufficient profit will, however, be shown to more than meet the dividend requirements and permit a substantial sum being carried to surplus account.

BARON'S HEIR SENTENCED

London, January 20.—London's latest disappearance case was closed today when the Hon. Lawrence Edward Broomfield Palk, 30-year-old second heir of Baron Haldon was sentenced to four months' imprisonment on a charge of obtaining a small sum of money under false pretences.

The vanishing of the Baron's heir early this month created a minor sensation.

Palk was found a week ago by the police and arrested on the fraud charge.

TO-DAY'S THOUGHT

Go to your work and be strong,
Battling not in your ways,
Basking the end half-won for an instant dole of praise.
Stand to your work and be wise—
certain of sword and pen,
Who are neither children nor gods,
but men, in a world of men.

ONTARIO TOURISTS

It is conservatively estimated that the sum of $194,000,000 was spent in Canada by United States' tourists last year, a gain of over five million as compared with the previous year. Practically every industry was benefited directly or indirectly by that large expenditure. Mr. J. M. Wardle, chief engineer of the Canadian parks board, gives it as his opinion that the tourist traffic is responsible for no less than 11 per cent. of the total business done by the basic industries of the Dominion. Up to August of last year, the engineer reported, as many people had visited the national parks as had visited them throughout the whole of 1925. From the beginning of January to the end of October the number of United States cars entering Canada at customs ports, for touring purposes under the twenty-four hour period, was 1,262,105, bringing a gross revenue to the Dominion of $27,262,180; for the thirty-day period, 630,742 cars had entered, with a revenue of $10,522,200, and for sixteenth period 1,403 cars, with a revenue of $7,925,400.

Of the 1,898,250 cars entering Canada from the United States last year, 1,185,000 remained in Ontario during their stay in the Dominion, or passed through the province on their way to other parts of the country. Many municipalities are going energetically after this profitable business. It is realized that only by a proper use of publicity methods can visitors be attracted. The response which followed the publicity campaign of the Windsor-Niagara Highway Tourist association, resulting in thousands of inquiries and subsequent visits, is a proof of the value of such methods. But not only should the tourists be induced to come; they should be accorded such treatment on arrival as will prompt them to return. The object of the association is to ensure them such treatment. By seeing that regulations are properly enforced, by providing adequate camping facilities, by recommending reliable hotels and boarding houses, by agitating for uniform motor car speed laws, putting on courtesy campaigns, the association is contributing in an effective way to the success of Ontario's tourist business.

FOOD FOR BABES

Parents cannot be too careful in the selection of stories, songs and legends for their children. The child mind is susceptible and easily influenced. Some educational experts have discovered that the danger lurks in even the Mother Goose rhymes, which for years have been the delight of so many children. Should children be trusted to learn even innocent-looking rhymes because they give pleasure?

Some modern psychologists take a serious view of the matter. Take that rhyme about Taffy, for instance. Taffy was a thief. Is it right that children should be allowed to hear about thieves? Is there not the danger that the child might be led by Taffy to become a thief himself? Moreover, Taffy was a Welshman, and is there not the danger that a child who learns that Taffy was a Welshman and Taffy was a thief may acquire a prejudice against all Welshmen in the belief that they are all of the Taffy breed and therefore all thieves? Are children who play pirate in danger of becoming pirates? Are children who play Indian likely to take special delight in actually scalping their playmates?

Possibly the danger is more imaginary than real. Is there any evidence that the modern bandit or hold-up man owes his start in his career to the rhymes and stories he learned in childhood? Perhaps the real danger is that childhood will be rendered a dull and gloomy thing if the experts are allowed to have their way in banishing the children's treasures.

WAR ON WEEDS

The provincial government, it is said, is determined to wage a more strenuous battle against the weed menace. The news is of much interest and importance to many people other than agriculturists. To the latter, of course, the destruction of weeds is a matter of vital moment; but it is of scarcely less concern to thousands of persons, both on the farm and in the cities, who are victims of hay fever. Hon. John S. Martin, minister of agriculture, will become even more popular than he already is, if he is able to advise legislation of an effective character. There is already on the statute books a law which seems to be adequate for its purpose; but in practice it does not, unfortunately, achieve its object. The law, in fact, appears to be almost a dead letter in some localities, judging by the condition of the fields and highways. Under the legislation in contemplation, all municipalities will be compelled to cut weeds and farmers likewise will have to get busy in removing a menace which is so detrimental to their interests.

It is high time this question was settled in a satisfactory manner. Every year the same complaints arise, the same amount of physical discomfort occurs, and heavy losses are incurred by the farmers. All this could be prevented by well-directed effort. Weeds are one of the most serious menaces, yet they are treated as of little account. They should be regarded as a dangerous and costly pest, which must on no account be permitted to gain the upper hand. Hon. Mr. Martin is far too good a farmer not to appreciate the gravity of the situation, and far too able a politician not to put through effective legislation. He may be trusted to put teeth into the law. It would seem, however, that a good deal of public education is necessary to convince people of the need for more energetic action.

HAVE YOU HEARD THESE?

Idleness travels so slowly that poverty soon overtakes it.

"Hi, what do you mean by slying stones at my dog?" shouted the infuriated man.

"Well," said the youth, "he bit me, that's why."

"How many times?" asked the owner.

"Once, and that's enough, isn't it?"

"Yes; but you aided me him twice, you young scamp."

"Of course," said the youth, "once bit twice shy."

An art critic, speaking of the virtues of this painting and the faults of, that one, finally came to a picture in the gallery and said to his guiding, if slight by bored companion:

"Now, you see in this picture the artist has not learned his trade—its technique and understanding. Here, you see, he has resorted to a trick to catch the public eye and has attempted to paint a fly. Now, I would not object to a fly, had he been able to draw better and make it look like a fly.

"This fly looks like a lump of mud and has not the character of a fly."

At this point the fly, having tired of the critic's rambling, took wing and flew away.

Medical men agreed a lubricant is better than a laxative

Doctors Advise Nujol

MORE than half the doctors questioned in a recent coast to coast investigation stated a lubricant is better than a laxative for constipation.

One prominent doctor stated "the continued use of laxatives produces an obstinate intestinal inflammation which only aggravates the constipation. Laxative drugs increase the condition which they are supposed to cure. The worst cases of constipation are those which have long made use of laxative drugs."

the bowels to frantically expel the contents of the intestines and thus rid the system of the drugs that pills and potions contain.

Nujol acts entirely differently. It contains no drugs, no medicine. Its action is mechanical. It merely softens the dried waste matter in the intestines and lubricates the passage so that the muscles of the bowels can expel the waste matter regularly, naturally and thoroughly.

Nature-given Remedy

Nujol appeals to the medical man because it is a simple, scientific and safe remedy for constipation, no matter how severe the case may be. It is gentle in its action and pleasant to take. Children love it.

Get a bottle of Nujol from your druggist today. Doctors advise it for constipation, whether chronic or temporary. Avoid substitutes.

Unlike Laxatives

Laxatives and cathartics act by irritating the intestinal tract. They cause

FIND TRUE BILL

Oshawa, Jan. 20.—The Grand Jury today brought in a true bill against Ernest Albert Dixon of Oshawa, who is charged with manslaughter in connection with the death of Robert Bull of Highland Creek, following an accident in which deceased was knocked from a load of hay by a car driven by Dixon. The case was before the Grand Jury all day yesterday, and the report was made this morning.

BOOZE RETURNED

St. Catharines, Jan. 20.—Because search warrants found in three liquor cases bore only a rubber stamp impression instead of handwritten signature, the cases have all been dismissed here, and Louis Sylvester, of Merritton, will have a motor car, 419 bottles and three bags of liquor, labelled whiskey and gin, returned to him.

DELAYED BY ACCIDENT

Peterboro, Jan. 20.—Peterboro's delegation to the Cockshutt banquet in Toronto Friday night was held up Canadian Pacific Railway Station at 4.35 yesterday morning after being five hours and 15 minutes on the road.

The train, which was due to arrive at 1.50, stalled near Myrtle and remained there for a considerable time until the engine belonging to a united train that was following was commandeered to bring the wanderers home.

The cause of the delay was said to be a cracked cylinder head in the engine.

SENTENCED FOR THEFT

Oshawa, Jan. 20.—Robert Cormack, who was sentenced in Oshawa police court recently, when he pleaded guilty to theft of an automobile, and who was taken to Toronto, where he was charged with theft of another car in that city, has been sentenced. Cormack was committed to the Reformatory for two years less one day and also received an indeterminate sentence of one year, to run concurrently with the sentence imposed at Oshawa. At Oshawa, Cormack received a definite sentence of one year at the Reformatory, and an indeterminate sentence of two years less one day. Thomas Bradley and the juvenile who made up the trio, were given suspended sentences at Toronto court, same as they received here.

The three boys went on a Christmas escapade on Bradley's eighteenth birthday, stole a car at Toronto, wrecked it near Whitby, and stole another car they found parked in Oshawa.

Reuben Bland, of Robertsonville, Va., is known as "the champion father of the U.S.". He is the father of 34 children.

PILES GO QUICK

WITHOUT SALVES OR CUTTING

Thousands who have piles don't know that quick and permanent relief can be accomplished with internal medicine. Cutting or any usage of treatment with ointments and suppositories will not remove the cause.

Bad circulation causes piles. There is stagnation of blood circulation in the lower bowel and a weakening of the parts. D. J. S. Leonhardt found the remedy and called his prescription HEM-ROID. Dr. Leonhardt tried it in many, many cases with a marvelous record of success, such a wonderful record that HEM-ROID is now sold by druggists everywhere under a rigid money-back guarantee.

Don't waste any more time with outside applications. Get a package of HEM-ROID from J. S. McKown today. It has given quick and lasting relief, to thousands and should do the same for you.

Try This to Banish Rheumatic Pains

People who have been tormented for years—yes, even so crippled that they were unable to help themselves—have been brought back to robust health through the mighty power of Rheuma.

Rheuma acts with speed. It should bring in just a few days the relief you have sought for. It attacks the poisons that cause agony and pain in the joints and muscles and quickly the torturing nervous complexity disappears as it eats you nothing.

While Rheuma is harmless and inexpensive, it is one discovery that has forced rheumatism to yield and disappear.

Get a bottle of Rheuma from J. S. McKown, or any druggist today. It must give you the joyful relief you expect or your money will be returned.

CASE ADJOURNED

Port Hope, Jan. 20.—Stanley Friar Braton street, was to have been charged in police court here this afternoon under the Inland Revenue Act, but owing to the inability of P. Hall, K.C., Cobourg, Federal counsel, Magistrate Campbell granted an adjournment of one week. The charges against Friar follows a visit to the store by License Inspector O. A. Goodrich and Provincial Constable Averell of Cobourg.

INSTALLATION AT

was proceeded with. She hoped that all who had witnessed the installation would appreciate the unfeeling spiritual meaning. On behalf of the Chapter every heartily thanked the installing officers for the manner in which they had performed the offices assigned to them in the ceremony.

Brother W. O. Adams, past Worthy Patron voiced the appreciation of the Chapter and Sister Barkus seconded the vote heartily on behalf of the organization of which she was now first officer.

In accepting the vote of thanks Mrs. Ralston thanked the officers for their kind words and assured them of the pleasure it had been to officiate at the ceremony.

Mr. W. H. Nugent paid a glowing tribute to Sister Ralston and presented her, on behalf of Minerva Chapter, with a purse of gold for the patrol.

In thanking the Chapter Mrs. Ralston spoke of the membership of the Eastern Star which is now one million and a half strong, including members in every country of the world. Though, she said, we are in no way connected with the Masonic Fraternity, we are proud to boast that we are all either wives, mothers, daughters or sisters of the members of the A.F. and A. M.

SOME PRESENTATIONS

Brother Rainbird, Past Patron, presented Sister Bell with a beautiful bouquet of flowers and paid a glowing tribute to her ability in the office she filled. MAROONS SLOW IN STARTING AND FRONTENACS WALK OFF WITH 8-5 VICTORY AT JOCK HARTY ARENA

Belleville Team Played Miserable Hockey in Opening Stages and Kingston Ran In Five Goals

By B. R. C.

The Kingston Frontenacs surprised themselves and the whole world by defeating the Belleville Maroons in a hockey game at the Jock Harty arena last evening by the score of 8-5.

The first fifteen minutes spelled the downfall of the locals when they played their worst hockey of the season. In that stage there wasn't a man on the whole team who could find his stride and as a result the Frontenacs bagged five goals which proved sufficient to annex the battle. In that stanza the Belleville team could do nothing right while on the other hand the Limestoners couldn't do a thing wrong and the game was almost a walkaway.

Eddie Thomas' boys seemed panicked and Kingston took advantage of their opponents' jitters. They constantly outgeneraled the forward line to elude the defence and even their shooting was dead-on and they rushed all the top scorers of the game beautifully. The Limestoners also had the edge in the second period but the final spurt was a new story and the Maroons took on a new lease of life and elated the home team into the arena. Had they started their attack earlier in the game the result would have undoubtedly been different. Three of Kingston's goals were of the softest variety with two or three Belleville players looking on and not making an effort to prevent a score.

The larger ice surface seemed to have the Belleville players bewildered in the opening stages, they overstated the puck and otherwise looked like a bunch of rookies. They didn't back-check with any reasonable amount of success and the forward line were left in the rear time after time as the Kingston buyers engineered their innumerable rushes.

Following last night's game the ground standing assumes a new complex and the Maroons are faced with the weighty problem of stepping into Cornwall and defeating the Factory Town aggregation which is a big task in itself. However there is an outside chance that Kingston or some other team may defeat Tilton and company at home but, this is highly improbable. The locals, needed last night's game badly but that has passed into history now and Belleville must get down to some tasks if they hope to enter the finals.

The Jock Harty arena was comfortably filled and if anyone had taken a census before the game the opinion as to the possible outcome would probably have been equally divided. The rink is a credit to the City of Kingston, equipped with every up-to-date convenience both from the standpoint of the player and the spectators. The melodious pipe organ provided music between the periods and an illuminated score board at one end of the rink informed the cash customers of the progress of the game. Another feature was the display of large white cards bearing the number of minutes remaining to play in each period.

A perfect sheet of ice was provided THREE FRIDAY NIGHT and Alfie Moore and his band of icemakers are to be congratulated on their efforts.

Kingston will be here on Friday night and the annual clash between the Frontenacs and the Maroons is a head-liner. "Chick" Mundell's squad will be without the services of Bellringer who was carried from the ice after he had collided with Goyer in the last minute of the second period. It was no fault of Frank's that the Kingston right winger received teh injury that resulted in his retirement. He overbalanced himself in taking a shot on the "sly" and "Soup" happened to be in his path. It was reported that Bellringer received a broken shoulder, but no doubt that report was exaggerated. He may not be ready to be available for service for some time.

Mike' Rodden made his debut in Kingston as a paid official and he had the play' will in hand at all stages. The fans did not take kindly to some of his decisions, declaring that he hardened certain and the advice from the side-lines is like pouring water on a duck's back and the former Dr. Mo. was equal to everything cleverly. Rodden will be in Belleville on Friday night to handle the return game. He is satisfactory to the management of the Belleville team.

The tactics of Paret were not relished by the Belleville team and his play was especially bad in the final period. His body checks were not exactly according to the rule book and he used it to click several times to the menace of dumping the Maroons.

The Kingston defence player was golden back the same done that he handled out.

JOE SMITH STARRED

One of the outstanding in the Frontenacs machine is Joe Smith, veteran left wing man. Joe was playing hockey when some of these boys were running around in knee pants but he has lost none of his effectiveness, and like good wine improves with age. He played his own wing to perfection and whenever possible he skated over to aid Bellringer on the opposite flank. He is an skate at fast or any man on either team and is always in a scoring position He scored Kingston's first goal and kept up a perpetual jumping throughout the piece. He was always on the spot to pick up a loose puck to carry it into Belleville territory.

Another big improvement was shown in the play of "Bouncer" Holway. The former Belleville boy is playing the best hockey of his entire career. He was skating fast and is breaking away from his old-time fault of carrying the puck into the corner. Holway was going great guns the first period and turned in a beautiful goal when he scored on one of "Soup's' jolts which alowed him up to a great extent.

"Chemmy" Lawlor at centre ice increased his goal-scoring average by netting two goals. Shifty on his skates and a tricky player Lawlor fits in well as the pivot berth.

Brooks in goal saved the home team's bacon a number of times when he made miraculous saves. Brooks gone to his knees continually and covers a big space He had dame back on his side when the Belleville forwards after breaking through shot wide of the net or hit the post.

The blame for losing the game cannot be laid at the feet of any individual player. The Maroons simply stood and played the Alphonse-Gaston act all the first period. They just looked as though they were waiting for the other fellow to do the work. Before they managed to get going the Frontenacs locked like a plugged nicel and there was a decided change of complexion in the Harty arena as the losers banged in three goals in quick succession.

WHALEN WORKED HARD

"Chick" Mundell was hooping it up like an Indian in the Kingston box urging his players to come back to earth.

None of the shots that beat Bowen can be attributed to laxity on his part. All of these were driven from inside the blue line and the Frontenacs had the happy faculty of sifting the puck into the unguarded corner of the net. Bowen saved them from all angles as the winners swooped in on him time after they had broken through the defence. Some of the shots that beat him looked easy but when the defence don't clear the puck he can't be blamed. "Daw" Whalen threw all he had into the final period and skated miles. He was continually fooling his opposing wing man and carried the grayson up to the goal-mouth half a dozen times. He followed his man into the corners and around behind the net and kept him well botled up.

"Bun" Hagerman was the opposite him was going great when time was called, Hagerman had a hard man to keep down in Joe Smith but he made a fair by good job of it.

Lawrence Goyer helped himself to two goals and was robbed of at least two others "Gilly" was working his fake shot nicely but the Holway—Paret defence was not soon with his man. "Gilly" was handed a tough break when the rubber hit the post after he had walked in and taken a pass. On two or three occasions he did not pass at the right time and as a result it was intercepted and changed into a fine danger zone.

The Green-Goyer defence have been sent to better advantage but they were confronted with a two and three man attack repeatedly which was hard to break up. "Soup" bade some pretty sallies up the ice and the Kingston forwards were being tossed in every direction after coming in contact with the big boy. Green was also a tower of strength and a thorn in the sides of the Frontenac players.

The two subs Hibbard and Frechette worked hard. The fast pace forced Ed Thomas to relieve frequently and both players while on the ice gave a good account of themselves.

Boyd, a new man on the Kingston team is a fast skater and fitted in well. Moreover he was the fly from flue drop of the last and was rewarded with one goal.

On the face off Brooks was tested by Whalen. A Goyer to Whalen combination play was broken up by Holway. The Frontenacs first goal was a gift when "Soup" overskated it to have Joe Smith come in and drive it home. A few seconds had elapsed when Lawlor drew a hand and scored the second goal. Lawlor got number three. "Bouncer" Holway netted one of the most perfect goals of the whole evening. Bellringer notched his second goal while the Belleville team were out to ten men, saved a goose-egg by dinting the hemp for the Maroons' initia tally. Near the open ing of the second period Bellringer exchided with Frank Goyer and was carried off. Paret got number six after taking it from one end to the other. Lawlor made it 7-1 on a solo effort.

"Gilly" took a pass from Hagerman to score after the third period had commenced. Hagerman followed with another score and while Lawlor was serving time "Gilly" fooled Brooks for number four. Muchmore scored Kingston's eighth and final goal and "Daw" batted in the Maroons fifth.

Notes on the Game

Kingston will be here Friday evening for the return game and last night's win placed them in a much better position but they must grab a victory here. The Maroons are out to show the Frontenacs that they are a superior team and playing on their own ice will make a heap of difference. The Frontenacs have been playing on their artificial surface since early in December and last evening's loss may be attributed partly to that source. The rink is longer by fifteen feet and considerably wider and this was another handicap in the Frontenac favor.

Bellringer will not be able to take part in Friday night's game owing to his severe injury and it was reported that that Lloyd Brown would be back in the fray. Brown was at one time second to none in the matter of defence playing and his presence would strengthen the Frontenacs. There may by some changes in the Belleville line-up as one or two positions were decidedly weak and need bolstering ably.

"Mike" Rodden will be here to referee and a clean game will result if the veteran arbiter has anything to say about it.

Those who chose the Dus as a means of getting to the Limestone City were disappointed when they did not arrive in Kingston until nine o'clock and consequently missed the periods. Those who were witness the best part of the game from a Belleville standpoint. The slippery condition of the ice was responsible for the tardiness.

Bellringer [illegible] ice with a crash when he hit "Soup" Goyer in the second period. After the game Bellringer exhibited a welt across his chest which he said was the mark of Goyer's stick, but the truth was, Goyer's stick was on the ice at the time.

COLLEGE BEATEN BY DESERONTO

Last Year's Champions Show Great Form to Win Game

Deseronto, last year's champions of the Intermediate hockey group are due to repeat if they continue their present performance. They stepped into the ice last evening and walked out with the scalps of the strong Albert College team dangling from their belts. The Deseronto students are easily the best of the school teams that have been seen in action in this city during the present season. Led by Buster Whitten, their little centre ice visitors were well-balanced from goal to rubs but Jim Whitten's boy was the king-pin of the forwards and was instrumental in all of his team's goals.

He is like a flash, on skates and gave a fine exhibition.

The rimsher held the visitors even in the first and third periods but the visitors concerned their opponents by three goals in the middle session. Considerable rough stuff crept into last evening's game which was probably due to the heavy ice which was encountered toward the closing stanzas. Albert played their best hockey of the evening in the last period when they held the Deseronto boys to an even score.

Charlie Mason and Bond looked the best of the Collegians while Whitten stood head and shoulders over his teammates on the opposing team.

Albert College will play B. H. S. their return game on Monday afternoon and they go to Deseronto on Friday, January 28th for the return fixture there.

RECREATION - BOWLING

Last night was C.N.R. Shops League night at the Recreation Alleys, the Shops playing their second weekly fixture and proved to be even more interesting than the first week. Some good bowling and some upsets were the features last night, one being Shop Team No. 5 led by W. Gerow, taking four points from the Shops No. 8. Gerow and Robinson being the highest bowlers.

Shops No. 6 rolled the second score for this league when they replied the Maples for a total of 2512 and considering that over half of three bowlers are new, it is a very good score and will take some beating. Shops No. 7 were their opponents and although Shops No. 6 rolled a big score, Shops No. 7 counted one point in the second game when they won one by 15 pins. Collyer was the big noise of the night when he rolled 350 for the highest single and 784 for his three strings. For the losers T Ford was high.

Shops No. 1 kept astride of Shops No. 8 for the leadership by taking three points from Shops No. 4, the losers coming through in the last game for their only point. Whalin and Austin were the highest bowlers.

Shops No. 2 and Shops No. 3 were the only two teams to break even each team winning two points, the former taking the first and third game while the latter won the second, also the total. High bowlers were Murray and Harvey.

The usual Wednesday night Senior League game was played, the C. N. Shops and the Belleville Motors being on the card, the Shops taking three points and the Motors one, the Motors coming to life in the third game for their best score and their only point. The Shops have now only lost three points and won nine. The highest bowlers were Handie and Dr. O'Callaghan.

SAGE TEA TURNS GRAY HAIR DARK

That beautiful, even shade of dark, glossy hair can only be had by brewing a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever it fades, turns gray or streaked, just an application or two of Sage and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold. Don't bother to prepare the mixture; you can get this famous old recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients for only 75 cents all ready for use.

It is called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound. This can always be depended upon to bring back the natural color and lustre of your hair.

Everybody uses "Wyeth's" Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. You simply dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair has disappeared, and after another application it becomes beautifully dark and appears glossy, as a lustrous.

CHRIST CHURCH JUNIORS DEFEAT BRIDGE STREET

On Tuesday evening at Queen St. the speedy Christ Church junior team took the Bridge St. team into camp with the score 8-1. The score does not indicate the play as the Bridge St., sharpshooters were outlasted several times when scores were expected. Worthy of special mention was the superb work of A. Stewart in goal for the Bridge St. team. His diminutive size did not seem to be a handicap and he handled a rain of shots like a veteran.

ONLY SALVATION OF EUROPE LIES IN FEDERATION

Huberman Convinced Creation of Pan European Federation Needed

Berlin, Jan. 20.—Two concert tours through the United States have convinced Bronislaw Huberman, Polish violinist, that the only salvation for Europe lies in the creation of a Pan-European federation.

"You may wonder how a musician and artist can have the nerve to dabble in world politics," he said. "Well, look at the mess which the professional diplomats and politicians have made. When I see this record of failure, I am less diffident about an artist's ability to help save civilization."

Huberman visited the United States for the first time in 1920. Following his second trip, after a concert season in Europe during which he had occasion to observe and compare, Huberman declared:

"I am convinced that the secret of America's well-being lies in the fact that its component states are not separated by artificial barriers, but constitute one united whole. Since then I have been preaching Pan-Europe for our continent."

After saturating a pile of corncobs with gasoline, Mrs. Andrew Mason, 48, of Slayton Mine, stood on the top with a lighted match and was burned to death.

WOMEN NIBBLE TOO MUCH

London, Jan. 20—Women about the house are always nibbling at something and therefore eat too much, says Dr. James Fenton, medical officer of health for Kensington.

Addressing an assemblage composed largely of women at the Incorporated Institute of Hygiene the doctor calculated that a domestic servant in Kensington has six or seven meals a day, "and often eats far more than her master."

"The woman who indulges in exercising and over-drinking risks a muddy, shiny, or spotty complexion," said Dr. Fenton.

Girl Couldn't Sleep On Left Side

"I had gas on the stomach so bad that I couldn't lie on my left side, and could not walk two blocks without resting. I have taken only half a bottle of Adlerika and am much better already."—Little Lamar.

Because Adlerika acts upon BOTH upper and lower bowel, it gives the system a REAL cleansing, and clears out old poisons which usually cause sour gassy stomach, nervousness, sleeplessness headache. Just ONE spoonful stops GAS and relieves that full, bloated feeling so that you can eat better and sleep better. Even if bowels move daily, Adlerika brings out much additional poison which you never guessed was in your system and which may have been causing trouble. No matter what you have tried for stomach and bowels Adlerika will surprise you. J. S. McKeown, Druggist.

BELLE THEATRE

Virginia Brown Faire and Reed Howes, who delineate the leading roles in Fox Films version of "Wings of the Storm," are ideally cast in the great thriller based on the story of a dog's life, to be screened at the Belle Theatre tomorrow and Saturday.

In preparing for the production, J. G. Blystone, noted Fox Films director, gave his undivided attention to the selection of players sufficiently talented to vividly portray the human element so necessary to the development of the dog's epic story.

The story centers about Thunder, a police dog who, when a puppy, was snatching, the runt of the litter. As the tale unfolds it depicts Thunder's mental and physical growth, until, in the full flower of parenthood, he stands a majestic leader of his kind, loyal to those who befriended him and faithful to his trust.

In the story, Mlle. Faire is the owner of the dog and Reed Howes impersonates the forest ranger who befriends him. Facial ability, Thunder is the means of encouraging their romance, concurrently with his own love affair with White Fawn." They make a striking pair, these human favorites of the out-door films, and it is said they give excellent accounts of themselves in their respective roles in "Wings of the Storm."

REGENT THEATRE

Speed, thrills action and comedy are all supplied in large quantities in "The Better Man," Richard Talmadge's latest release for FBO, which is the feature picture at the Regent Theatre. Bounding Dick is rapidly becoming one of the most popular actors on the screen, due largely to his winning personality and his natural feats of daring, and this picture not only contains plenty of opportunities to demonstrate his remarkable agility, but also presents splendid acting possibilities, of which he takes full advantage. The story itself has an essentially delightful and humorous plot, full of unexpected twists and complications, and the screaming climax is one of the brightest bits of entertainment seen here in a long time. Clifford Howard and Buck Jenkins wrote the story, which was scenarized by Arthur Statter, and Scott Dunlap has the credit of the direction.

BEYOND ALL DREAMS

"It must be done in mind that Ariel Princess Nicholas, was only seventeen that her nature was supremely lofty and dutiful-loving. To stray by the eighth of an inch from the path of propriety was a sin in her eyes, so she had been taught by her father, the Prince primer and by Miss Bateman, the well-born Irish lady who taught her English. Her affections were not yet awake; she was not precocious in those matters—all the more certainly and surely, whenever she did did love she would love with the whole strength of her being; her nature was by no means a feeble one.

"I must take no more leaves," she said, "but I will not mention one word of this. I leave it to you—do you understand? You must tell Miss Bateman you have no time—other engagements. You must give me up—do you understand?"

He quite understood this, unhappy Donald. He was dismissed. She spoke with a calm, gentle decision that was almost exasperating. Renfrew wished that he could hate her, and despise her; look upon her as a selfish and sensible ambitious girl, desirous of making a splendid match. He could do nothing of the kind. He was perfectly certain that this lovely Pole had not a mercenary thought in her lofty mind, even as she had no idea of love's sway in her sensitive heart. He could not despise her; he could not regard her as other than a being above him, infinitely above him, not only socially but spiritually and he felt overwhelmed with shame at his own mad presumption. He passed his hand over his eyes, struggled with his wild heart a moment, and then his better self his nobler soul, spoke in him.

"I have been mad and presumptuous, Princess Nicholas," said Donald Renfrew. "I have been daring and insolent in my frenzy, but pardon me as you pardon the ravings of one who is out of his wits with the pain of some cruel wound; a brave soldier, wounded, might howl hideously on the field after the battle. I will not rave again, will not speak again. I will obey you; make my excuse to Miss Bateman, and take my leave; only one thing I will add"—he removed his hand from his eyes, and looked sadly at the Princess Nicholas—"I will not pray to forget you, for you, the memory of you will be my guide to better things. I will try to lead a life holy, and pure, and honest. You will be my inspiration in my art, as in my life. If ever you think of me, let it not even be with pity; for I shall be a better man for having known you—who knows, perhaps a better painter. Farewell, princess."

She bowed her fair head sweetly.

"You will tell Miss Bateman?" Make my excuses. You are calm—I am agitated!"

Again she bowed her head, and the young painter made her a lowly reverence. Another moment, and she was left alone.

* * * * * * * *

Renfrew stood again in his studio; it was a wintry day; the stove was not alight; a comfortless look prevaded the whole room. Sketches, portfolios, and various other things littered the table. Donald folded his arms, and looked about him.

"I am in debt, and I have no money," said he, "I cannot any longer dine in the Salon of Madame Ardell, seeing that she has asked me to pay for my dinners, and I have no dress suit, and all this before I have been idle. I have painted nothing; I have earned nothing. I have fallen in love with one who is as much out of my reach as if she were an angel in heaven. Well, I have proved her she should be my inspiration. I will no longer idle. I will work, and meanwhile that little old man in the Rue Adrienne is soon to pay me; he spoken port, but he still owes a hundred francs; he is poor, and I must have pity on him; still, I want coals, and new boots, and—"

The Irony of Love

By Charles Garvice

"It isn't often you pay compliments, Rafe," he said, with affected lightness. "Much obliged to you for this one. Well, I've done my palaver. If you mean to stay, you must. You and I have got very well; you've been a good son to me.

Rafe's face clouded. Sentiment, to a lad of his age, is embarrassing.

"We're all right, dad," he said surly "Don't you worry. I shall strike a man per cent. one of these days and I will take a holiday, and go on the bend together."

"London?" said Gentleman Jim hesitatingly.

"Yes, if you like; but I was thinking of Frisco."

"Oh, Frisco? Yes," said his father, his brow clearing. "All right, Rafe." But, unseen by Rafe, he shook his head and looked curiously grave.

"I must go and get a wash," said the lad, rising and stretching himself. "Here comes, perhaps a better painter. Farewell, princess."

She bowed her fair head sweetly.

"You will tell Miss Bateman?" Make my excuses. You are calm—I am agitated!"

Again she bowed her head, and the young painter made her a lowly reverence. Another moment, and she was left alone.

Gentleman Jim stood looking moodily at the flap which had fallen behind his stalwart son; then he turned, and, taking up a small vial from behind the row of bottles on the shelf beside him, poured out carefully half a dozen drops, added a little water, and, after drinking the mixture, put the vial back in its hiding place. Shortly afterward, the man began to drop in, one and all getting faultlessly and confidently the tall Gentleman Jim, who executed every order with a word or two of pleasant chaff, which indicated plainly the position he held among them.

The crowd grew thicker. The bartender fit the patrons, picturesque, picturesque groups of mixers. There was a terrific rubber, for nearly all were talking loudly, and one or two were singing. Every now and then there were bursts of laughter, for they were enjoying the reaction after a day of strenuous labor, and were like boys just freed from school.

In a corner, on an upturned barrel, sat Parchment Joe, the lawyer, smoking his blackened cutty, and looking thoughtfully at the crowd in front of him. The Boy was prominently lifted to admit new comers, who hurried, with a kind of goodness-to-be-in-the-latest manner to the bar, exchanged a greeting with the proprietor, and ordered their drinks; but presently there entered a man, a small, pale-faced, furtive-eyed man, who slunk, don toga and umbrella all complete.. It's in as if he desired to avoid notice. As the truth, if I were spoke it.

he asked for his drink, Gentleman Jim looked at him steadily.

"You're back, Pincher. Had a good time?"

The man muttered something with an uneasy, apologetic twist of his mouth which was intended for a smile, and carried his glass to the corner where sat the disreputable old lawyer.

Five minutes afterward, Rafe entered and was greeted with a roar of welcome.

CHAPTER II.

"What ho, young nib!" cried a man named Bill. "Have three fingers with me?"

Rafe nodded in an offhand way, and went up to his father; he had to lean close over him, because of the row, as he asked:

"They're not here yet, then?"

"All right up to now," was the placid response.

"Here, sit here, Rafe," shouted Bill, dragging the lad down beside him on the plank which, stretched across a couple of empty casks, served as a seat. "Here's Yorkshire Teddy got the funniest story."

"It beont a story," said a burly Yorkshireman, with a face like a round moon. "I saw him with these eyes o' mine. Sing yoär right it way, too; reet in London boys with gold eyeglasses and an umbrella. He was getting out of the coach and asking for Jumping Jane Camp. Lor, I couldn't if you tried. Did you tell him the way to the camp, Teddy?"

"You never did!" roared Bill. "You!

NORTH HASTINGS CELEBRATES OPENING OF HOSPITAL

BANCROFT OPENS NEW RED CROSS HOSPITAL BLDG.

Starts Career Practically Free of Debt—$9,000 Paid In

$1000 MORE NEEDED

Nurses in Charge Presented With Flowers—Dr. Embury Present

About two hundred and fifty persons from throughout the county attended the opening of Bancroft's new Red Cross Hospital yesterday and were more than delighted by the splendidly equipped building. From four o'clock in the afternoon until eight in the evening, the hospital was visited by a stream of interested persons who minutely inspected the dominion floor with its three splendid wards, bathroom, kitchen and operating room and the upstairs which has been reserved as the nurses' residence and nursery having three bedrooms, bathroom, living room and quarters for little ones.

One of the rooms was completely furnished by Mr. MacKenzie Robertson of Belleville while the operating room which boasts a highly up-to-date equipment was furnished by the Dr. Beaman Memorial Fund. Mrs. Ross and Miss Watson who are in charge of the building are both graduates of the Toronto General Hospital and both have had wide experience in Red Cross outposts having come to Bancroft direct from similar work in Huron Payne Red Cross Hospital.

Little Debt.

Through the generosity of the countryside directed largely by the tireless efforts of Dr. Embury, M. P., the hospital opens practically without debt, nine thousand dollars of the ten required having already been paid up. But nine thousand dollars are now required to complete this building which will be a God-send to the countryside where the nearest hospital in need of medical treatment had to face a tiresome and precarious train journey or many times under unfavorable circumstances in homes unequipped and devoid of necessary devices.

Speakers

Dr. Routley, Medical Director of the Red Cross of Ontario and Dr. Parker of Trenton were the chief speakers at the opening ceremonies which were held in the Community Hall at Bancroft in the evening and on the platform were Charles Rollins, ex-Warden, Reeve Lorne Reid of Bancroft, P. CLAIMS REVOLT IS NOW CRUSHED ALL OVER MEXICO

Minister of Interior Says Roman Catholic Clergy Made Mistake

Mexico City, Jan. 18—Adalberto Tejada, Minister of the Interior, is quoted by the newspaper Excelsior as declaring that the "Catholic rebellion has passed its peak." The Catholic revolt, he said, made a fundamental mistake in attempting to organize such a movement. The uprisings now being put down by the Federal troops were the maximum efforts of which the clergy were capable, he added. The political and social defeat of the clergy was long ago attained logically the armed rebellion was due to failure. However if the arms had not controlled the situation and the revolution instead of being stamped out had existed in vigor, the world would have witnessed at this revolutionary forces rush to the support of the Government

AGNES SEES NO CHANCE FOR ONT. SCHOOL PUPILS

Says An Educational System is Infected With Dry Rot

ALBERTA FINE

Children There Have Chance to Really Learn Something

Edmonton, Alta., Jan. 21.—Describing prevailing educational system of Canada as "complete failure, obsolete and infected with dry rot", Miss Agnes MacPhail, Progressive member of parliament for Grey Southeast, appealed to United Farmers of Alberta here last night to lead way in a nation wide campaign and in assuming public sentiment to compel introduction of educational structure.

"Future of Canada, reconstruction of our country rests to a large degree with agriculture and progress shown already by the U. F. A. fully justified the hope and confidence that this province will lead us on to a higher plane of civilization," Miss MacPhail asserted.

"You have an educational department in this province that really wants to serve the farmer. I would suggest that the U. F. A. urge the government of Alberta to appoint a commission to conduct a thorough survey of educational systems in other provinces of Canada, where genuine efforts have been made to provide for the needs of agriculture At the conclusion of such a study and when a comprehensive report is presented an endeavor to put into practice recommendations should be made. Start by establishing an experimental school and embody in the curricula the most revolutionary ideas you can think of as far as education is concerned. Do not permit those attending this experimental school to have admission to present text books. If necessary burn them up. Then let us try and inspire children to improving their environment. Try many methods but event ually adopt one that proves most workable and apply it to the province at large."

Stressing importance of public school Miss MacPhail asked "is it not strange that in an agriculture country such as Canada all out in stitutions should be directed to urban type of mind? In Ontario it is too often true that those who stand by the system of special privileges are in control in our university boards. They see to it that gospel of conformity is preached and regard any suggestion of change as radicalism or an act of rebellion. I don't see much hope for an immediate improvement in conditions in Ontario. There is one redeeming feature, however, people are not satisfied, although they do not know what they actually want to put in place of the present educational system."

CANADIANS PLACED ON A LOWER PLANE THAN OTHER DOMINIONS

London, Jan. 21. (C. P. Cable).—"Only too thing is worse than hunting for title, and that is being morbidly averse to them," the Saturday Review declare today, evidently referring to the remarks of Premier G. Howard Ferguson in Toronto early night, urging that the Canadian ban on titles be removed, which remarks were cabled to English newspapers. "If stones to us," the Review continues, "remotely adolescent that certain prominent Canadians should now be agitating for the removal of the self denying ordinance whereby great public services to the Dominion go unrewarded.

Other parts of the Empire are glad to see their distinguished citizens honored by the King. We can only suppose that Canadian prejudices against the acceptance of such intangible rewards for their origin across the frontier, in the Democratic affection of an equality now here to be more sought than in the United States. "One effect, as the Toronto speaker pointed out, is that leading Canadians are now accusingly placed on a lower level than men with similar records of public labor in other Dominions."

Only Shot to Save Himself From Death He Claims

THRICE INDICTED

Charges of Arson and Perjury Over Burning of Church

Austen, Tex. Jan. 21.—Dr. J. Frank Norris, fundamentalist pastor of Fort Worth, on the witness stand today told his story of how he killed Dexter H. Chipps in his church office last July 17.

Weeping and halting over each word he related how Chipps had come to his office, had demanded that he cease his attacks on Chipp's friends, had threatened to kill him and of how he shot Chipps when he said the latter came at him with bl hand on his hip pocket.

Before giving this part of the story he had heavily himself bitterly lashed and warmly defended by Attorneys in arguments over the submission of certain evidence. He sat silently in the witness box for more than an hour listening to these arguments in which much of his past was raked over.

Austin, Texas, Jan. 21.—Dr. J. Frank Norris sat in the witness stand for five minutes in his murder trial here late yesterday to relate that he had been indicted three times in 1912 and 1913 for arson and perjury.

The celebrated fundamentalist's appearance on the stand came suddenly near the end of the court day after he had listened to witnesses tell of threats by D. E. Chipps to kill him.

The minister was placed on the stand by his counsel to testify as to the previous indictments in an attempt to forestall questions by the State as to these charges of fourteen years ago, which grew out of the burn of Norris' church.

The jury was excused while Norris was on the stand, and the lawyers argued over admissibility of evidence as to the arson and perjury indictments.

NO ATTEMPT WAS MADE TO RESCUE DYING CHILDREN

Chief Witness Tells Harrowing Tale of Fatal Few Minutes

DOORS HELD SHUT

Employee of Theatre Forced Kiddies Back to Death

Montreal, Que., Jan. 21.—A preliminary inquiry into the manslaughter charges laid against Amen Lawand, proprietor Michael Aric, manager and Camil Beaey, ticket taker of the Laurier Palace Theatre, scene of the fire and panic which resulted in the death of 78 children on January 9, last, was started today before Judge Decarie.

Mussing Brown, chief witness, told of some one holding the doors closed at the foot of the fatal stairway and telling the children to go back upstairs after the alarm had been given. This man, according to the witness must have seen the children falling on the pillars on top of each other, but made no effort to get them out of the tangle or help them in any way.

The witness said he came downstairs from the balcony twice. The first time he was only able to get out after breaking the glass in the door and fighting with the man who was trying to hold the children back at the foot of the stairs. The second time he went down to search for his girl companion and only succeeded in saving himself by entering over the bodies of the little victims, which by that time were piled up to within a foot and a half of the ceiling. Others in the balcony did the same. When he had crawled through to safety, Brown stated, he saw an employee of the theater standing in the lobby, but this employee was making no effort to rescue the victims.

BARRICADED MAN SLAIN IN FIGHT WITH THE POLICE

Mission Hills, San Diego's exclusive residential district was treated to a taste of western frontier life recently, when city, county and state police officers engaged in the residence of R. C. Shoemaker, erstwhile candy manufacturer, where a negro had barricaded himself after shooting a negress employed as a maid in the Shoemaker home. The siege ended only when the negro, whom, man is believed to be Billy Smith, fell riddled with bullets as he tried to shoot his way to liberty. One police officer was shot, and the house was badly wrecked before Smith was slain.

Two Narrowly Escape

Mrs. Shoemaker and her young son narrowly escaped death at the hands of the negro. The maid, Eula Caldwell, was serving Mrs. Shoemaker's breakfast when the negro entered the room. Mrs. Shoewey was covered with the weapon, and told that she would be killed if she called the police. Then, it is said, Smith opened fire, Mrs. Shoewey and her son, who had come upstairs after the negro, barely escaped. The maid was shot through the lung and in one leg, according to a report of Detective Capt. Paul J. Hayes, with Detective Sergts. M. H. Bertie and Herbert Hill, were the first officers to reach the house. Hayes, at the foot of the stairs, saw Smith watching him from the upper hall.

"Drop a sick woman up here," said Smith.

"All right," Hayes replied, "we'll get her."

Instantly Smith whipped out a gun and sent a bullet crashing into the wall at the captain's side, Hayes retreated, and the house was surrounded.

TO BRING MAIL TO MONTREAL BY FAST SEAPLANES

Montreal, Que., Jan. 21 (By Canadian Press)—To mark the inauguration of the Postmaster-General has announced he hopes to establish in eastern Canada before long Montreal-Halifax-Montreal seaplane mail service, suggesting that he make arrangements this summer for taking off special mail from liners in the Strait of Belle Isle and shipping it to Montreal by seaplanes.

The voyage from England to the Strait of Belle Isle occupies four days and with air ships picking up the European mail there it could be delivered in New York half a day sooner than it now is by the fastest greyhound running between Southampton and New York that is if proper connection were made with the trains running from Montreal to New York. On the mail service to Chicago a saving of nearly two days might be made. If Halifax were made Base out of Montreal to America cities the saving in time would be greater.

PRAIRIES NOW HAVE PLENTY OF BUSH AND TREES

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 19—(By Canadian Press)—Where treeless prairie is becoming only a name. The greater appearance of the prairie in many sections is gradually changing. There are now farm houses, ect. amid well-planned shelter-belts, surrounded by gardens containing bush and fruit trees.

This is an outcome of the activity of a wood-lot scheme. The trees are playing settlers with little trees and seedlings. Last year the Department sent out 3,500,000 little trees for distribution among 5,000 farm homes in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. For the distribution for 1927 will be the biggest yet. Nearly eight million seedlings and cuttings are ready for packing. To meet the 6,000 applications which have been approved. Since the work began 23 years ago more than 37,500,000 trees have been sent out.

The resulting plantations are not part of a wood-lot scheme. The trees are usually set in strips or shelter-beds around the farm buildings, but a new idea gained of the extent of the work when it is learned that the 1926 plantations covered a little over 2,00 acres and that the total plantings since the inauguration of the scheme exceed in extent 32,000 acres. The plantations, farm but a patch in the immensity of the Canadian West but they have given an artistic touch to 80,000 farm homes and to many a rural school ground in the prairie provinces.

The aim of the Department, it is intimated, has been to give farmers a start so that once a plantation is established the seeds and cuttings from it can be used to begin other shelter-belts. It has been demonstrated that by breaking the force of high winds and by conserving moisture, shelter-belts increase the production of the farm. But they return a dividend a hundred-fold greater in the increased comfort and enjoyment afforded by them to the farmer and the household.

GOVERNOR HAS ONLY KANSAS STATE FLAG

Topeka, Kan., Jan. 21.—Kansas citizens apparently have no desire to assert their state's rights by displaying a state flag.

Although an official Kansas banner was selected by the legislature two years ago, only one such emblem is known to exist. It is the banner in the office of Governor Ben S. Paulen. It was presented to the government by a women's patriotic society.

Despite the lack of public interest in the flag, the design of the emblem was the subject of a hot debate in the legislature. Several farmer members of the house of representatives wanted a stock of wheat instead of a sunflower in the center of the blue banner. They insisted that Kansas should cease using an obnoxious weed as the commonwealth's floral symbol. But the sunflower won.

LAWS DEALING WITH FAIR SEX NEED REVISION

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 21 (By Canadian Press)—In connection with an action involving wife support, which need revising, a writer in the local press refers to the comment upon a judgment rendered by an alimony court in 1920, made by Chief Justice Meredith.

"I reluctantly agree with the disposition of this appeal. I agree with the judge that we are bound by decided cases to hold that the respondent has not made a case entitling her to alimony. That the law should be as he states it to be, is in, my opinion, to be deplored and it is not in my judgment in accordance with modern ideas as to the relations between husbands and wife. To withhold alimony unless the conduct of the husband is such as to lead to the conclusion that it has impaired, or that it will impair, the physical health or the mentality of the wife, is to say that a husband may subject his wife daily and even hourly, to even treatment as bad as his wife's veritable hell upon earth and she is without remedy if she is not bad enough to suffer it all without impairment of her physical health or her mentality."

The man may subject his wife to any and every sort of indignity—humiliation and indignity—but she has no redress unless she can establish a case in which danger to life and limb are proved. The law that governs this was established in 1790. To gain a brief, but effective knowledge of the laws of 1914, Province of Ontario, and today a book is available written for women, by a woman—"A Handy Guide to the Laws of Ontario" compiled by Mrs. W. H. Long, convenor of the committee on laws, for the Federated Women's Institutes. Mrs. Long's book may be secured from the Institutes' branch at the Parliament Buildings Toronto.

ERECTION WORK ON NAVAL BASE MOVES SLOWLY

Much Discussed Singapore Port Bears Little Resemblance to Great Base

London, Jan. 21 (By Canadian Press) —Despatches from Singapore tell of the deliberate pressure made with the construction of the naval base at Singapore, which figured largely in the discussions of Imperial Defense at the Imperial Conference and mentioned by the British Antipodean premiers in their speeches in Canada.

Although it has been in the hands of the Admiralty for about three years for that, the site of the Singapore naval base look to-day no more like a naval base than a middle reach of the Thames and probably it is far last busy, says an article in a London paper.

Seletar is 15 miles from Singapore, on the north-east side of the island, and is reached only by road. It is one to twelve miles from the eastern end of the strait which separates Singapore island from the mainland of Johore, and is approached by sea only from the east, silkclouds small native craft may go through the belt to the west of the causeway carrying the Singapore — Kuala Lumpur — Penang railway.

The strait is about three-quarters of a mile wide and the land at either side is covered by virgin jungle and some other plantations. Many acres of rubber are to be cut down for the base.

NO WARSHIPS YET

A swamp has been drained and roads clearing done for the base. Attractive and comfortable bungalows have been built on a hill for the administrative offices and quarters; a rough pile jetty has been built, and there are several workshops. The only ship in the harbor is a dredger and a tender attendant hopper; the British Navy is not represented yet. The dredging for the large floating dock's entrance has begun. It will take at least 18 months to excavate the berth, which will be over 70 feet deep and 1,000 feet long from head to bed on completion, some 400 yards long and 300 yards wide. The dredge is of endless chain bucket type, and each of the 82 buckets has a capacity of 2 1-2 tons.

It would take six months to tow the dock out from England, Hong Kong which has suffered much by trade depression and China troubles, is assisting to build the dock. Hong Kong is five days from Singapore. Two graving docks are to be built at the latter. A few miles further inland, and within view of the main line railway, is the oil store for the base, and already nearly 40 large tanks have been built. An air station will be on the sea side of the naval base—the site has yet to be clear ed of rubber and jungle—and behind this, on a hill, is a naval wireless station, in commission and working.

The port of Singapore is of great and growing importance to Britain's Eastern trade—its annual tonnage entered and cleared nearly equals that of Liverpool—and it is a pivotal point in the Empire air routes to Australia and New Zealand. Soon it will have a four-fold importance—as commercial centre by sea and air and a naval centre by sea and air, in addition to the export trade of rubber, tin and tropical produce from the Malay peninsula.

THE POLICE BLOTTER

Oscar Babcock, who was charged with failing to send his boy to school appeared this morning before Magistrate Wilbur upon the complaint of W. F. Ashley, truancy officer. The case was remanded till Monday the 31st of February. A local citizen was charged with stealing coke from the Schuster Co. yards. The case was enlarged until the 24th.

BIRTHDAY REMEMBERED

Although in far-off China Miss Bessie Ketcheson's birthday meant as much to the Young Ladies' Mission Circle of Bridge Street United Church as if she had been among them. A social gathering was held in the Community Hall of the Church last night at which forty-five young ladies were present who each brought a gift for the missionary who represents Bridge Street Church in China. Owing to the unsettled conditions in that land the gifts cannot be sent immediately but will be kept until a more favorable time arrives.

Miss Bessie Ketcheson, daughter of Mr. H. F. Ketcheson, 221 Albert Street, in whose honor a shower was given last evening at Bridge Street Church is at present in Siam Tu performing her duties as missionary to the Chinese in the vicinity of the fighting. Her family who have not had word from her since November 25 are naturally more or less nervous for her safety particularly in the fact her last letter stated that "it is hard to be a British subject in China just now." Miss Ketcheson went out to the foreign mission field in China three and a half years ago and her letters posted at Siam Tu take from 6 to 8 weeks to arrive at their destination in Belleville.

ELECTRIC WASHERS POPULAR

That an ever increasing number of Belleville homes are installing electric washers and thus keeping abreast of the times is evident from the large shipments recently seen received at the store of J. S. Finn. In co-operation with factory representatives, this firm is conducting a special selling event, installing the famous Beatty Whirlpool Electric Washers with the new Cyrator principle, and it is a machine which has proven one of the most popular in Belleville homes; a total of over two hundred of these machines have been placed locally, a remarkable tribute to their utility and efficiency.

WOMEN DINE MEN

One hundred and twenty-five young people attended the banquet given last evening in the Parish Hall by the Women's Bible Class of Christ Church to the Men's Bible Class and staff of the two Sunday Schools and a most enjoyable time was spent by all present.

The banquet was given by the ladies, it having been arranged some months ago that the class enrolling the most new scholars would be the guests of the one enrolling the most and at the time of the termination of the contest the ladies' class numbered 77, while the men's stood at 53, net 77, while the men's stood at 53, one hundred and sixty-six in all.

Following a splendid repeat of cold roast, baked beans, pie and coffee, a bright musical programme was given, and several interesting contests were entered into by the young people. A playlet was presented by Misses Mouck, Helen Symons, Kate Sears, Gertrude Ketcheson, Ina Christie, Ruth Twining, Lillian Terry and K. Trump.

HOLLOWAY ORCHESTRA

Rev. and Mrs. L. S. Wight entertained the members of Holloway orchestra at a very delightful social evening last night at their home. After games and music supplied by members of the organization of which Mr. J. Nolan is leader and Mr. Garo Dobbs conductor, dainty refreshments were served by Mrs. Wight and Mrs. George Lent. Several of the selections played last evening will be used in the musical programme of the evening service in Holloway Street Church on Sunday night when the orchestra will take over the music for the service.

BAND SATURDAY NIGHT

HE KNEW GEORGE

"I know George Young when he was a little fellow not thinking of even taking a dip in running water, let alone making the Catalina swim," Mr. J. J. Sweeney, who is conducting the sale at Bynard Store, told the Press today. Asked to describe him or tell something outstanding about him, Mr. Sweeney said: "Why he was just the same as any other little shaver as bright as the brightest and always most chivalrous to his mother." Mr. Sweeney had travelled about in most of the towns of the Dominion and United States and has a wide circle of acquaintances, but he said he had never six or seven years ago thought that George Young would be a world wide celebrity—however, he's proud now that he knew the boy when a tiny lad.

WOULD FLY TO NEW ZEALAND IN SEVEN DAYS

London, Jan. 19 (By Canadian Press).—Captain F. T. Courtney, famous test pilot is trying the most ambitious long distance flight yet proposed—an aerial voyage from this country to New Zealand by flying boat in about seven days.

He intends to fly day and night over stages of about 1,500 miles each, stopping only for refueling at the end of each stage to re-fuel. The machine to be used for the flight would be probably, a large twin-engine British flying boat, built to carry a heavy load, with a cruising speed of between 90 and 100 miles an hour. The trip will be about 14,000 miles.

Captain Courtney won the Aerial Derby in 1920, and the King's Air Cup in 1923. He is best known in the flying world as a cool and resourceful test pilot.

MINING GOSSIP

Lake Shore Mines milling capacity has been increased to 750 tons daily. Less than three months ago executives stated there would be no increase for a considerable time and that they would be satisfied if it was found possible to put through an average of 600 tons a day. Experimentation was then under way in an endeavor to find a more efficient method of extraction.

Further expansion was to be left in obeyance until development below the 1,000-foot level had been carried out. As one of the chief executives put it at the time, "We don't know what is there but room for similar improvement is occurred on the adjoining properties east and west."

In putting a station at the 1,200 foot level the number one vein was cut this week. The full width of the vein has not been exposed, but five feet of material is similar in appearance to that showing at the 1,000-foot level. The shaft is now down to a depth of 1,250 feet on its way to 1,600 feet. Stations are being cut at 200-foot intervals.

The winze from the 1,000-foot level on the number two vein, 600 feet west of the cross-cut from the shaft, is now down 50 feet, and has shown better than the average grade of ore in the mine. It is not on the number two property, but apparently on an offshoot of this ore body.

A raise from the 400 to 200-foot level has been started in the north part of the property. This working could easily be enlarged to make a new shaft if found advisable, for future enlargement of operations.

There is very little cause for pessimism in the Dome's approximate earnings statement for the twelve months ended December last, when total earnings of $1,742,760 are shown or slightly better than $1.75 a share which is seventeen, and a half per cent. on the stock at its pre sent level. Costs have been reduced by H. P. De Pencier by almost 22½ cent per ton despite heavy development work, the figure of $4.24 per ton covering all costs. The mill handled 555,700 tons, breaking its previous record and ore grade averaged $7.89. Miscellaneous earnings are up $75,000 of which $30,000 is presumably the amount paid by Jack Hammell for the half million odd shares of Howey stock which he bought back from the Dome at a few cents on the dollar and returned to the Howel treasury. Reduction in operating costs is also due in part to relinquishment of the Howey option, development of which it is understood had been charged to the Dome mill.

MIDWESTERNERS MOST ARDENT OF PICTURE FANS

Culver City, Cal., Jan. 20—The movie fans of the Middle West write more letters to their favorite film actors than those of any other section of the world, a tabulation of studio mail shows.

Norma Shearer, John Gilbert, Florence Vidor, Barbara LaMarr, Lon Chaney and a number of other screen favorites permitted an inquisitive reporter to peruse these letters, and this is what he found:

Thirty per cent of the mail comes from the Midwest; 15 per cent, each from Southern States and foreign countries, 12 per cent. from the Atlantic coast, 7 per cent. from the Pacific coast, 8 per cent. from Canadian border points and 10 per cent. from other states not classified.

YOUNG SPEAKERS AT "RED" CONGRESS

London, Jan. 20—(By Canadian Press)—Speakers of seven to twelve years of age around enthusiastic cheers at the fourth national congress of the young Communist League, which attracted to Shoreditch almost 120 young British Communists most of the delegates were young miners, many fairly well known. Those who had attended previous rather sad delegates took the keenest interest in the proceedings, shifting through long sessions with cigarettes in front of them and watches at hand. Some of them smoked at least a manufacture of cigarettes.

The congress was flattering over the elderly brothers. The youngest, about eight years old, spoke a delegate from the young comrades league of Stuart field.

Cliff Robertson, 12 brought fraternal greetings from his seaside comrades in a small town of South Wales. On their behalf he protested against the "drudge" which he and his colleague suffered from the fact that their school master demanded of them that they should pull their communist badges out of their coats.

TO-DAY'S THOUGHT

Evil is very blind, or badly regulated, when it encroaches on the rights of others.

QUESNEL.

BRIBERY?

The Nova Scotian constituency of Antigonish-Guysboro, which had elected the late James Douglas in the general elections, was "redeemed" for the Liberal party by William Duff, who in the general elections had been defeated. How the redemption of Antigonish was brought about is not difficult to understand if we are to believe an editorial statement by the Ottawa Journal, made before the by-election was held. According to that statement Mr. Duff openly and unreservedly offered the Antigonish electors a splendid bribe to elect him. The Journal quotes him as having said from a public platform, "Here is a list of works for this riding, involving some millions of dollars. If I am elected that money will be spent in Antigonish. If I am defeated, and you return a Conservative, not a cent of it will be spent."

Either the expenditure of those millions in Antigonish is or is not needed in the public welfare. The expenditure was dependent upon the election of Mr. Duff, according to that gentleman's statement. If it is needed and Mr. Duff had not been elected, then the government would have punished Antigonish by withholding public work which ought to be done. If the work is not needed but will be done because Mr. Duff has been elected, then the government will waste the people's money for a partisan purpose. In any event Mr. Duff was guilty of an act of shameless bribery if he said what he is reported to have said.

TWO RAILWAYS

It is officially announced that work on the extension of the Timiskaming & Northern Ontario railway, from its present terminus 66 miles north of Cochrane to James bay, will be started this year.

Every mile of this railway has been built and will be built out of Ontario funds. It is purely a provincial enterprise, owing nothing to the federal government, not even in the way of a subsidy. And it is paying for itself.

The so-called Hudson Bay railway is also in reality a provincial line. It starts at Winnipeg and is being operated to Hudson Bay; every mile of it within the province of Manitoba. It will never be more than a provincial line. As the feeder for a line of transatlantic steamers navigating the icestream regions of Hudson Bay and Straits, the railway will prove to be an expensive joke. It is doubtful if many Manitoba people expect that the much-touted northern route will amount to anything. No, matter the railway may prove useful anywhere in providing access to mineral and timber lands in Manitoba and also as a colonization road.

That is to say, it will serve Manitoba's purposes and interests in the same way that Ontario railway have served the purposes and interests of this province. But the difference between the two cases, is that, whereas the people of Ontario have paid for their railway the people of Manitoba are getting theirs without spending a cent for it (that is as citizens of Manitoba), the whole expense of its construction being borne by the Canadian people as a whole. Ontario will contribute far more than Manitoba to the cost and maintenance of it.

This is one case where a western province has got from Ottawa what it should be impossible for Ontario to get. And there are many other such cases.

TIMES HAVE CHANGED

A correspondent of a Montreal paper recalls that twenty-five years ago it was the custom there to organize Christmas shooting matches and to give prizes to the teams shooting the largest number of birds. Now bird-lovers content themselves with taking a Christmas census of birds remaining through the winter and with providing food for them. "It's a fine day, let us go out and kill something" is no longer applied to birds in this country. The general desire now is to protect the birds. It is now generally understood that man is engaged in a serious war with his insect enemies and that the birds are his allies.

OTHER MEN'S THOUGHTS

Kitchener has raised his circus fee from $150 to $300 per day, and if it is a very large circus, then the fee will be $500 a day. The next step should be to make certain that the city treasurer gets the money, and that the fee is not sidetracked or remitted because the circus comes to the city under some local auspices. There has been a good deal of this done in Ontario, and the experience is that in too many cases the city gets nothing, the local organization on whose name the organization trades, received little more than nothing, while the circus knowing its cost of operations exact by, takes nearly all of the receipts and departs. Cities need all the revenue they can get, and are under just as much obligation to extract it from traveling shows as they are to take it from their own ratepayers.—Stratford Beacon-Herald.

When the women secured the vote in Ontario, there was reason to expect that the prohibition law would be permanent. But recently the women undoubtedly voted just about the same as did their consorts. There were many exceptions, of course, but the result would not have been possible if the vote of the women had been solid for prohibition.—St. Catharines Standard.

HAVE YOU HEARD THESE?

Mother: But, Bobby, surely you did something else but eat at the school treat.

Bobby: Yes, mummie. After tea we sang a hymn called "We Can Sing, Full Though We Be."

Mother learned later that the hymn selected had been "Weak and Sinful Though We Be."

An Englishman was once persuaded to see a game of baseball, and during the play, when he happened to look away for a moment, a foul tip caught him on the ear and knocked him senseless. On coming to himself, he asked faintly: "What was it?"

"A foul—only a foul," he was told.

"A Fowl? I thought it was a mule!"

30 YEARS AGO
From The Intelligencer Files

Chief Justice Mikel presided at the Mock Trial of Bowser vs. Bowser yesterday. Mr. A. R. Walker as Clerk of the Court and Mr. Main as Crier. Phil Harrison acted as constable.

Mr. W. J. Diamond has received the medal promised by him to the pupils of the High and Public Schools. It will be hung in a frame and under it will be inscribed from year to year the names of pupils under 12 years passing the entrances.

UNREASONABLE TREATMENT

What strange liberties our story writers take with their characters' eyes! Here are a few examples:

"Her eyes roamed carelessly around the room."

"With her eyes she rivetted him to the spot."

"He tore his eyes from her face and they fell on the letter at her feet."

"He drank her in with drowning eyes."

"Their eyes met for a long breathless moment and swam together."

"Marjory would often take her eyes from the desk and cast them far out to sea."

"He tore his eyes away from hers causing intense pain to both." (We should think it would).

FEW HIGH PAID WOMEN IN G.B. GOV'T SERVICE

London, Jan. 21.—Queen Mary is the highest paid woman in the British Empire, assuming of course that King George splits the annual grant of about $550,000 to their Majesties on something like a fifty-fifty basis.

If the King predeceases his wife, she will as Queen Dowager, get $350,000 a year. There are many calls on the purse, and what with one expense and another few Britons would say the Windsors are overpaid.

John Bull is not so generous, however, with the general run of women in government service.

Lady Astor was the first woman to draw the $2,000 a year salary as a member of the House of Commons, which compares with $10,000 received annually by the newly elected Congress women in Washington. Commoners also receive small traveling allowances.

Lady Astor, however, may aspire to better things. The great offices of State in Britain now are open to women and she can even become Prime Minister and get the sum of $25,000 a year, with the use of No. 10 Downing Street and Chequers thrown in.

Miss Margaret Bondfield, former shop girl, and the first woman to hold ministerial rank in Britain, was paid $7,000 for the brief tenure of Ramsay Macdonald's Labor Government. She was Secretary of the Ministry of Labor.

The Duchess of Atholl has a more permanent post under the regime of Stanley Baldwin, and gets $5,000 a year as Parliamentary secretary to the Board of Education.

The next best government post held by a woman is occupied by Mrs. E. F. Pinsent, asylum commissioner, who receives $5,000, with provision for increase to $7,500 in five years. A woman inspector under her gets $2,500.

Women hold good positions under the Board of Education, Miss A. E. Wark, chief woman inspector, receiving from $4,250 to $5,000 while five women medical officers get $2,500 to $4,500. In the pensions office 67 inspectors get from $1,000 to $2,500.

Unlike the American State department, the British diplomatic service cannot boast of women members. The highest women officials at the Foreign Office are Miss M. V. Moore and Miss D. M. Bigley, who each receive $1,750 a year while five other women workers get $1,500.

In the British Post Office department the highest paid woman is Miss J. Buchanan, who receives $4,000.

Thousands of women clerks are paid from $350 a year, and the highest grade is paid from about $3,25 to $12.50 a week. Hlisher grade women clerks get $1,150 to $1,250 a year. The low salaries are supplemented by a bonus system.

GUARD PRINCES OF JAPAN FROM INSANE

Tokyo, January 21.—Body-guards always accompany members of Japan's imperial family when they journey on the public highways. High government officials also have their police protectors at all times.

The reason is not that the Princes and government functionaries are beset with murderous enemies, but that streets of Tokyo and other large Japanese cities contain many imbeciles and half-wits who are liable to create scenes or attempt an assassination.

Japan has her asylums for the insane, but only the most dangerous and deranged persons, who have no relatives to care for them, are taken into these institutions. The Japanese custom is that families must look after their own feeble-minded and this custom is religiously followed, with the result that they roam the streets at will.

CO-EDS MAKE BETTER DRIVERS

Washington, D.C., Jan. 21.—As an automobile driver, the co-ed is a better insurance risk than her male college mate. This is gained from replies to a questionnaire sent out by the American Automobile Association to 125 leading insurance companies.

The co-ed is neither so reckless nor so careless, the answers disclose, as her stronger-armed campus brother. She also fares better in emergencies. The college boy is considered such a bad risk, the replies indicated that companies do not seek to insure him.

LOVE OF "NAGS" AND WANDERING GOT HIM A JOB

Washington, Jan. 21.—That a native of Boone county, Kentucky, should be a horse lover and also have a desire to travel, is natural. That his twin desires should make him the glass of fashion and mould of form among the radio lightning-jerkers of Uncle Sam's army, and give him claim to title as the "first-over-and-last-back" buddy of the A.E.F. is not so obvious.

Yet it was love of horses and the desire "for to behold this world so wide" that brought Master Sergeant Robert E. Williamson, Signal Corps, U.S., Army, to his present job. He is section chief of the Washington terra center of the army radio net that straddles the country, has feelers on the frosty northern rim of Alaska and outposts in the sun-drenched equatorial Southern Philippines, Panama and Porto Rico, and does some 100 messages a day in government business.

A friend told this Kentucky youth that the signal corps used quite a passel of horses and mules and, back in 1914, he set out to investigate. Presently Buck Private Williamson was in a signal outfit on Bedloe's Island.

Assignment to a field radio detachment sent him to the Texas border where there were horses aplenty, but when it road to two-striper promotion lay through learning what all the squeaky noises being pushed into and pulled out of the air were about.

By 1917 Corporal Williamson had found out. He went to France with the First Division, stuck with it until after the armistice, and then went to Paris to help shuffle radio and telegraph traffic at the American embassy. He was among the last men of the A.E.F. to come home in 1923.

By that time the Signal School at Fort Monmouth, N.J., was trying to standardize army radio technique. A survey picked Master Sergeant Williamson as an almost perfect code sender. His style was dusty thumbprinted on phonograph records which are now the main guide and instruction for army radio key pounders.

However far he may have wandered from the horse-wrangler dreams of his youth, he is officially rated as about the topmost top-hand of the army at a radio key.

GLORIA SWANSON HAS INVENTED A NEW COIFFURE

New York, Jan. 21.—Gloria Swanson has devised a new coiffure.

The hair is worn long. Yet by being pulled taut from the forehead and against the head, "off" the ears, the effect is similar to that of a "boyish bob". Hence the name, "unbobbed bob" resulted.

Miss Swanson evolved it as a matter of expediency. As a young girl in her latest picture her hair is worn long to express womanliness. In the same film she plays the part of an ultra-sophisticated prima donna.

Gloria did not want to bob her hair after letting it grow for five months. The "unbobbed bob" reasted.

The hair is pulled straight back from the forehead, leaving both ears fully visible. A knot rather than a bull is made of the hair. Miss Swanson says, and this is fastened at the nape of the neck. The hair is parted low on the left side. A marcel wave tends to give a soft effect.

NEVER BEEN TO DANCE AND MOVIES UNKNOWN

Adjutant Maude Lee of the Salvation Army's women home, recently opened in Denver, never has owned or worn an evening dress, never has attended a dance and knows nothing of motion pictures except by hearsay. Born in Denmark, slightly more than 30 years ago, she grew up in the Salvation Army as both of her parents were officers in the order. The adjutant has not made a sacrifice, she said, for she never wanted to lead a life other than that offered in her work.

SHERRIFS NOT TO MAKE PROFIT FEEDING INMATES

Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 21.—The Ohio supreme court has lopped the profit from one of the fattest fee jobs in state politics. Sheriffs are not entitled, it holds, to make a profit from feeding prisoners.

Legislators tried unsuccessfully for years to keep sheriffs from collecting more than they spent for feeding prisoners. The supreme court decision came on an appeal from Sheriff Fred Kohler of Cleveland, who resisted a Cuyahoga county court decision directing a county jail enemy. Prisoners had charged they were underfed.

The sheriff's job, because of the decision, no longer will be sought as the ordinary political plum. State law allowed sheriffs 45 cents a day for feeding each prisoner. The actual daily cost in some jails was found to be 12 to 15 cents a day. The sheriff pocketed the difference and in a county of 400,000 the office is held to be worth $30,000 to $35,000 a year. The salary, in counties of such size, is $4,500.

ROBT. JEFFERIES PASSES AWAY AT W. HUNTINGDON

The quiet and peaceful community of West Huntingdon was shocked on Sunday last when it was noised around that one of its most respected citizens, Robert Jefferies passed away. Mr. Jefferies had not been well for several days but no one, not even the members of his family, felt the least alarm as they felt the sickness was of a temporary nature and would soon pass away. This sickness, however, took a more serious turn in the early hours of Saturday morning, when Dr. Potts of Stirling was summoned to the bedside and administered treatment which seemed to have a beneficial effect. This, however, didn't last long for at midday on Sunday other symptoms developed and members of the family were summoned home.

It was feared that Clarence, the son, and Bessie, the daughter, of Belleville, could not arrive in time to see the last of their father, but fortunately, however, they came with Mr. Jefferies' widowed sister, Mrs. Johnston, also of Belleville, to witness the peaceful passing away of the deceased at 3.30 p.m.

The funeral took place on Tuesday and service was held in the West Huntingdon United Church when the pastor, Rev. W. H. Truscott, spoke from the words, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord" and in the course of the address made many glowing remarks dwelling upon the value of Robert Jefferies' life and service in the community and church for many years. Mr. Jefferies was a faithful steward of the church and beloved by all who knew him.

The remains were taken to the family at Belleville where interment will take place in the Spring.

Mr. Jefferies leaves to mourn his loss, his widow, Clarence and Bessie of Belleville and John at home, one sister, Mrs. Johnston and two brothers, Henry of Sidney and David of Melrose, (the latter was too sick to attend the funeral). The sympathy of the whole countryside goes out to them all.—Contributed.

RUSSIAN CHILD NOW NAMED AFTER PARTY

Moscow, Jan. 21.—An entirely new and revolutionary series of personal names have been adopted by the Bolshevics in the christening of their new-born children.

Instead of the old conventional names of Sergius, Peter, Ivan, Olga, Alexandra, Catherine and Elizabeth, children of Communists nowadays are named after some great revolutionary leader, party, industry or political movement, or even after some town, river or song in Soviet Russia.

For example, many infants of Bolshevik parents are "baptized" Communists, Proletars, Industria, or Stalina, after Joseph Stalin, the big political boss of Soviet Russia.

Others are given names based upon Russian nouns and adjectives possessing a special significance in the present revolutionary movement. "Liberatita" (Liberty), for instance, is a name commonly given to baby girls, and in similar fashion, baby boys are often named "Liberi" (Free).

Investigation of $35,00 rural fires in Iowa showed that 85 per cent. of loss could have been prevented by reasonable precautions.

CITY LEAGUE GETS OFF TO A FLYING START

Intelligencer and Butchers Play Tie Game—"Y's" Men Win

The City League got away to a flying start last evening with two fast games being staged. The Butchers and the Intelligencer boys after playing six-minute halves were tied 2-2 and no overtime period was played. The Y's Men's Club trounced the Bell Telephone squad 6-0 in the 9 o'clock fixture. The last named thought the score was bigger was the best game of the two and the service club boys should be strong contenders for the championship. Three or four of the players have had experience in O. H. A. company and they look to have the class, although there is four other teams who have not yet been seen in action and the Tigers late year's winners claim to have signed up a flat six.

The fans are overlooking some fine sport by missing these games. They deserve much better patronage than was given last evening.

Intelligencer 2; Butchers 2.

The game between these two evenly matched teams was a hard-fought struggle. Both squads were augmented by several young players who carried the brunt of the work.

Claude Mitchell's six were beaten in an exhibition game a week ago by the scrappy team but the latter were with out the services of a couple of their regular players, but they hope to have them back in the line up in the next game.

The meat vendors were the first to score when Naphin drove one past Cook for a very easy count, which the latter should have easily saved, five minutes after play had commenced. Curry evened the count with a shot from centre ice on a lone effort. The Butchers were the next to tally and again Naphin turned the trick on a shot that hopped over the goal tender's stick as the fooled Lafferty for the count in the final period with a long drifting shot which Lafferty failed to see, with only about 2 minutes to go.

Sammy Tobe and Bernie Brown on the forward line were really the best of the visitors while Naphin, Truskett and Wilson looked the best of the Butchers.

Tobe and Brown worked very nice together and had their opponents tied in knots.

Jack Smith veteran of many campaigns, was one of the hardest workers on the ice and was conspicuous with his back-checking.

Y's Men 6; Bell-Telephone 0.

The Y's Men's Club disposed of the Bell Telephone in the night-cap affair by 6-0. It was a speedy game but the boys from Campbell St. were very refer to Bull Doolittle's boys. The Bell have some poor material and with a few more practices will cause a brap of trouble to the other teams, one man in particular Connoly, shows up exceptionally well although a little short on accuracy it-peg ... ght ... g ... ddin ... ence edition was a big help to his team. Defence work of the losers was not up to scratch and his presence will strengthen the squad when he returns.

The Y's Men played smart hockey for the winners and banged two goals. Weir rams down the wing to drive the puck past Bustard.

Had it not been for the stellar work of the latter in the Telephone net the score would have undoubtedly mounted much higher. In the first period his net was bombarded with shots from all angles.

Frank Symons gathered in a brace of counters for the winners and played a strong game on the defence.

Bustard Grob and Harry Drew both of whom have had Intermediate experience were very much in the fight and also played plenty of speed.

"Army" Armstrong at centre ice was going a bit off his old-time form. "Army" has been tough luck in finding the net and failed to register a score but will no doubt develop into one of the leagues stars.

"Stan" Nurse who has been playing hockey since he was knee-high to a grass hopper and has donned the pads and guarded the nets. "Stan" is the same cool and minder of old.

"Bob" Brown handled the team from the bench and "Bob" says his team will go into the finals.

Referee (Prof.) Arick Arnott the league has found a capable official "Pick" calls them as he sees them and not a dissenting word was heard on his decisions.

The Canadian National Express were scheduled to play the Alemite on Monday evening but the boys at the latter place have only been recently vaccinated and are counting sore arms.

At any rate there will be two games on Monday night with the Bankers hooking up with the Tigers in one of them. The other game will be arranged to suit the teams. Five double headers will be played within the next two weeks with three of them next week.

At the present time it shapes up as a nice group and some fine sport is anticipated.

The annual trek takes place today when the Kingston hockey fans make their annual invasion of the city for the ancient battle between the Frontenacs and Marcons. Ever since the palmy days of Jack Marks and Flinn Sutherland the rivalry between the Frontenacs and Belleville has been of the keenest variety. The honors have been divided between the two cities as each year passed and the visit of the Frontenacs has always been the occasion for a packed house and tonight should be no exception. The Marcons were caught off color in the opening stages of Wednesday night's game and every Belleville fan who was lucky enough to be present knows perfectly well that the Marcons can play better but key than the brand which they dished up in the first two periods and tonight they are out to redeem themselves. The locals playing in their own ice-box have every confidence that they can win from the Frontenacs by as large a margin as they were defeated in Kingston.

Lawrence Goyer's latest moniker according to the Kingston paper is "Gillicuster". Where the name has been encountered but never theless "Gillicuster or whatever his name is" as they say nowadays to day's sports and kept up his scoring average and its a safe bet that he'll get at least that number tonight. His knocks is due for a heavy session according to the attitude of the players and he won't thing he's at any pink tea affair.

* * *

The Frontenacs were going to throw "Stan" Jeffreyson out on his ear if he entered Wednesday night's game but to top the statement Stan was in the game and the Frontenacs knew it before the final gong sounded. According to the Kingston version Jeffreyson played in Montreal with the C.N.R. team on January 5th. That little thing he did do but at the same time W. A. Hewitt gave him permission before he ever made the trip As yet nothing has been heard of the protest.

RECREATION BOWLING

Deacons broke into the win column in the series of the Wanderers at the Recreation Alleys last night when these two teams met in their league fixture. Deacons had to win a game and last night they fell hard on the Wanderers who were atop of the Ladies' League and won all four points, but that the Wanderers were far below their average scores. Mrs. Domenico and Miss Goyer were the highest bowlers.

In another Ladies' League game the Dearers piled up a nice total score of 2423 to count three pelins from the Hit & Miss, the latter team rolling 874 in their second game to count one points. High bowlers were Mrs. Asselstine and Miss L. Melchair.

Two Junior League games were on the card, the Moose and the Coca Cola each winning three points from the Bourbons and Springers. In the former game the Moose lost the first point by 124 pins, but in the second and third they increased their scores and won both games, also the total by only 6 pins. High bowlers were F. Darwell for the Bourbons and Doran were tie for the highest score for the Moose.

In the other Junior game Springers also won the first game but weakened in the second and third to lose out the next three points.

Ladies' League

Deacon's—2215; Wanderers 1939.
Beavers—2423; Hit & Miss—2039.

WILLIE HESTON JUST AS GREAT AS "RED" GRANGE

Willie Heston, great Michigan football player and a Walter Camp All-Time All-American halfback, would have more than held his own with football players of today, thinks Fielding H. Yost, Michigan's athletic director. He made comparisons of Heston and Red Grange Heston played four years, scoring 8 touchdowns in 44 games. Then the playing field was ten yards longer than now and a touchdown counted only five points.

* * *

Heston's total points were 440. Grange played three years during which the total score of Illinois was 438 and Red's personal total 185. In that time Illinois played 24 games. Yardage gained on which modern records are based was not kept in the old days. During Heston's four years the Michigan team team scored 2226 to its opponents' 60. His team did not lose a game but play ed one tie. Illinois won 19 games during Grange's campus career, lost four and tied one.

RUNNERS KICK BALL TO KEEP MIND OFF RACES

San Angelo, Tex., Jan. 21.—The Texarkanans Indians who live on the western slope of the Sierra Madre mountains in the Mexican state of Chihuahua, noted as long distance runners, kick a wooden ball ahead of them to keep their minds occupied while engaged in contests which are to carry them many miles.

Officials of the Kansas City, Mexico & Orient railroad employ them as couriers and load of the practice.

The Indian runners insert their bare feet under the ball and kick it into the air high as a football player boots a drop kick. The ball, four and five inches in diameter at the start of the contest, up worn to one quarter that size at the finish.

Two members of the tribe, Thomas Nafiro and Dominic, recently ran a 62 1-2 mile race from Tuchora to Mexico City in 8 hours and 37 minutes. Here, of from 175 to 190 miles are not uncommon, it is said, with not more than three or four rests.

KINGSTON MUST WIN TONIGHT TO STAY IN RUNNING

Frontenacs Coming Up With Strong Team For Crucial Game

All roads lead to the arena tonight where the battle of the season takes place with the Frontenacs of Kingston and the Marcons of Belleville the contending parties. Eddie Thomas' boys are determined to put the skids under the Frontenacs tonight and judging from the seat sale there will be a large crowd of fans on hand to watch them do it. The Frontenacs win on Wednesday night gave them the needed confidence but they must win tonight's game in order to remain in the running for group honors. Cornwall are of course sitting pretty having beaten Kingston at the Jock Harty's-O early in the season.

The visitors will be without the services of Bellinger their good right wing er but the Frontenacs may hand the Marcons a surprise package in the form of Lloyd Brown, former speedy defence man of the Limestoners.

"Chick" Mundell who is handling the Kingstonians figures on playing Lyle tonight and it is sure to be a battle royal.

Hibbard will be replaced by Jack Rooney who will play his first O. H. A. game here. Rooney is fast and his and should fit in well. He showed up fairly well in practice and is being count on upon tonight.

"Mike" Rodden who has given good service as a referee will be back again tonight. The line-ups:

Belleville
Bowen	Goal	Brooks
Bateman	Defence	Holway
Goyer		Paiet
L. Goyer	Centre	Lawlor
Bateman	Wings	Mackenzie
Whalen		Jos. Smith
Forchette	Subs	Boyd
Rooney

Referee—C. Young.

"WATCH 'EM TONIGHT"

(Kingston Whig Standard.)

On the play last night it is hard to understand just how Belleville lost the game.

There seems to the loes fans no comparison between Belleville and Cornwall, for the former failed to show much form in their game here, and had it not been for some careless work on the part of Kingston, Belleville would not have had no more than two goals. Their defence of "Soup" Goyer and Bill Green, was a good one, but Goyer as a forward with Bowen the goalie was certainly no mystery. He made some fine stops, but there were times when the goals scored by Kingston that made him look like a sieve. "Gilly" Goyer at centre showed some fine shooting ability, and good back-checking "Daw" Whalen was perhaps the hard est worker on the team, while in the forward line Harry Hammond, the tourist player, was good. Frechette and Rich bard were of little use to the team.

HEIRESS IS ENGAGED

London, Jan. 20.—Miss Mary Ashley, daughter of Colonel Wilfred Ashley, minister of transport, and one of the richest girls in England, is engaged to marry Captain Cunningham Reid, M.P., who distinguished himself by his conduct during the great war and taught the Prince of Wales to fly.

Miss Ashley is a sister of Lady Louis Mountbatten and therefore is related by marriage to the royal family. She is a granddaughter of Sir Ernest Cassel, who left a great fortune to his two granddaughters.

THE SLOPES OF MOUNT ROYAL

The slopes of Mount Royal are now covered now but they will be fixed for the visitor. Snowshoe and skiing parties find there a scene of inspiration and pleasure. Skiing driving over their winding roads with the magnificent forests of the city at their feet, is a winter joy supreme. The world-famed Park Toboggan slide is a thrill you'll long remember. Yet these are but a few of the magnets that attract people to the metropolis.

Her splendid theatres, hotels, art galleries, cabarets, museums, the gayety of her social life now at its mid-winter height, her many historic landmarks and above all, the importance and scope of her businesses and industries draw visitors by the thousand.

FINNY FRIENDS CHOOSE DINNER FASTIDIOUSLY

Chicago, Ills., Jan. 21.—When a seahorse wants a salt water bag for lunch, a carnivorous fish insists his dinner be alive and swimming, and when a vegetarian fish demands aquatic weeds, something just as good will not do.

That knowledge is causing Walter C. Chute, assistant director of the $2,000,000 Shedd Aquarium to be built in Grant Park, to devote much thought to the feeding of what is intended to be the largest aquarium population in the world.

In addition to being supplied with foods to which they are accustomed, fishes also demand deliveries to vary the diet, said Mr. Chute today, and those most highly esteemed include snails, angle worms, lobsters, oysters clams, crabs, frogs and house flies.

For the fishes which will not touch anything but live food, Mr. Chute plans to obtain many thousands of minnows, shiners, dace and top minnows.

As many fish, especially the smaller ones, eat dry foods, large quantities of dried shrimp will be brought from the Pacific Coast, where it is gathered and dried by Chinese fishermen for shipment to China for human consumption.

Two fish feed rooms in the Shedd Aquarium will be supplied with refrigerators and other modern facilities.

BELLE THEATRE

It was Hawthorne who said that in all the immense crucible of nature there is not another living being that has shown the same supplement of force or plasticity of sulphi ne that wife can coo does discovers in a dog.

In the feature photodrama now at the Belle Theatre, "Wings of the Storm," there is depicted a remarkable story of a dog's triumph over nature. It is, in short, a picturization of the thought expressed by the noted Belgian author and playwright.

In the role of the dog who is a wreaking at birth, the runt of the litter of thoroughbred police dog puppies and whose development is directly dependent upon his environment and treatment, Thunder, a beautiful police dog, stars in character, yielding impressive performance. It is a Fox Films production, directed by J. G. Blystone, in whom unstinted praise is due for the fine spiritual quality and sensitive beauty of the cinema.

Exterior for the film were made in the picturesque ranch centering about Mount Rainier in Washington. Virginia Brown Faire, Rex Howe and William Russell appear in the human drama that is the background for Thunder's activities. Don't miss it.

CAPITOL THEATRE

Judging by the expressions of appreciation received by the management of the Capitol Theatre regarding the vaudeville act of Faust and Le Marr, appearing for the last bait of this week, the act is one of real merit and away above the average. A spectacular equilibrial act, featuring balancing of various kinds with wonderful stunts done in a way that make you hold your breath, these two performers well merit the excellent reception they received last evening from the large crowd. They are experts in their line and about the best ever seen in Belleville.

The feature film entitled "Ninety and Nine", starring Colleen Moore, and Warner Baxter and a clever cast, is another film interesting from start to finish, climaxing with a thrilling forest fire, and in every way well up to the Capitol standard.

The fifth episode of "The Silent Flyer", starring Silverstreak, famous dog actor, continues the stirring story of the Northland, and rounds out a good bill at the Capitol for the week-end.

MRS. COCKSHUTT MADE PRESENT OF JEWELLED PIN

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 20.—By Canadian Press-In behalf of Ontario's women at the Christmas season, a presentation was made to Mrs. Cockshutt of a pin, in which jewels were set to embellish the Arms of the Province. Though many people thought that most month's Coliseum banquet to honor Ontario's Lieutenant-Governor would also include the wife who has been so able a partner in his public duties, it now appears that in the year of 1927, Ontario's men citizens are to honor the Lieutenant-Governor, and Toronto women will hold a separate function for Mrs. Cockshutt.

"With all our boasting we women don't seem to have got so far from our grandmothers' days when they sat in the gallery and watched the man's public dinners!" declare, one Toronto woman.

While another observes:

"When they had much money to collect in war-time the men used to call in the women to their meetings but now they seem inclined to go back to their former days. Some of us united in a recent campaign luncheon. The men met together as if it were a mans lunch con and the women were all put at one table by themselves."

WOMEN BIGGER SMUGGLERS THAN THE OTHER SEX

New York, N.Y., Jan. 21.—The adventure of attempting to smuggle undeclared articles into the Port of New York during 1926 held for greater attraction to women than to men, in the customs report just completed here shows.

Out of $500,000 collected in fines, seizures and forfeitures during the year at least 75 per cent. was paid by women, Philip Illing, Collector of the Port, reports.

The big majority of these women, the report says, were wealthy, and socially prominent. Putting aside purely commercial smuggling, which makes up approximately 25 per cent. of the total only, these women constituted from 60 to 85 per cent of the offenders.

They attempt to bring in for resale, expensive silks, furs, lace, perfume, Mr. Illing, and sometimes gems and trinkets of all description. In case they are caught they usually plead ignorance of the law, which he believes is true in some instances.

But in the majority of cases it is the pure adventure, plus the considerable saving if successful, that is responsible for the act," in Mr. Illing's opinion. In the case of fur coats the women usual ly boldly wear them, eliminating them entirely from their declarations. In other cases they usually make the plea that they thought wearing apparel was exempted.

When caught, Mr. Illing says, the offender usually pays at least twice as much for her article as its original cost. The Government not only seizes the article, but if the owner wants it back she must pay the current American prices, plus a 100 per cent fine. If she doesn't want the article she must pay the fine anyway, and the Government keeps the article, to sell at public auction.

When accompanied by their husbands women are more inclined to tell the truth, experience has proven to the customs men.

BEYOND ALL DREAMS

At that interesting moment of his soliloquy, just as he was facing the realities of life, and making up his mind to meet them with courage, there came a ring at the lower bell on Madame Ardell's floor, and almost immediately afterward the garcon of the hotel came running up-stairs, tapped at his door, and on being admitted, handed Donald a letter. He seized it and opened it with feverish impatience. Something seemed to tell him that it contained news which would interest him.

He read it twice and a smile broke out on the pale, handsome face.

"This is pleasant, very," said Donald to himself, "I shall not be lonely now for a few weeks." Then with a rueful glance at his worn coat-sleeve: "But I need fashionable attire for all this!"

The letter was from Sir Roderick Rem frew, his uncle. The baronet had left his wife and family staying at a visit at a large wealthy Yorkshire mansion, and he had "run over to Paris," as he informed his nephew, "for a few days only."

Sir Roderick was staying at a fashionable hotel. He, like most Scotchmen, was not apt to shirk his poorer relatives as do so many of us worthy English folk. Besides, Donald was rising, and Sir Roderick felt sure that a day would come when he would be proud to acknowledge the kid. Thus, before he had been two days in Paris he wrote to his nephew, whose address he had obtained from his mother, inviting him to come to the Hotel Tête d'Affaire to dine with him at seven that evening.

"And I have no proper coat," said Donald. "I know what I must do. My watch must go out on a visit for a fortnight, until I have pulled a pot-boiler and earned two or three hundred francs. He only a question of time, thank goodness now."

It will be seen that the spirits of Donald had risen since he had come to that painful but helpful explanation with itself. It was not that his love was one whitlow for that peerless dream-maiden, but it was that he had obtained the mastery over his wayward Ariel over his coquette. She gave her lover no false hope; she quenched his wild hopes, on the contrary, in a manner firm and strong, which admitted of no rejoinder, and thus Donald accepted his fate.

Now that it was settled, no longer shall a timid and hapless pavalon smile him to the earth; on the contrary, that same love shall be his guide to higher things.

"I must pledge my watch," said Rem frew. "Perhaps I shall get enough to be able to pay Madame Ardell for the dinners and to buy a second-hand coat, and to leave me a few francs in hand."

Those who recall how he astonished at a gentleman—for Renfrew had gentle blood in his veins, and was by birth a gentleman—being contented to purchase a second-hand coat, and to go out to dine in it. It must be remembered however, that we are depicting the Bohemian life of an artist in Paris, and that fraternity does not own the laws which govern Langley fashionable society. There young men live, as a rule for their art, and to that all things are sacrificed.

Renfrew buttoned on his overcoat, and pulled out with his old-fashioned gold watch, a gift of his grandfather, a "repeater."

The small-sabbled at the street corners; the heavens seemed charged with snow. On went Donald, eating little what anybody thought of him. He plunged down into a labyrinth of narrow streets, and arrived before the door of a shop, a second-hand-clothes, as they call them in France. He entered, and presented his watch to a little wizen-faced old man behind the counter.

What was his surprise to see trailing angles in the counter beside with a watch in his hand, which Donald at once recognized as the one which had been shown from the window to the young lady with whom he had set down as a maiden sister of the Princess Nicholine. He could not be sure of the fact, for he leaned over the counter; but there was something in his slender form and careless attitude which struck and riveted the attention of Donald.

"I tell you the watch is worth only hundred francs," said the youth in distinct French; but with an insolent assumption of superiority.

"And I tell you, monsieur," replied the little old man, "that it is not worth more than two hundred at the outside.

"Then I say you are a cheat," said the dulcet voice again. "I shall take it elsewhere."

He raised his head, and happened to look straight at Donald.

Good heavens! the Princess Ardl, or her ghost, in the attire of an elegant youth. A splendid fur coat irreproachable boots, cane, gloves, a fair face with exquisite features and gray-blue eyes. Was it—who was it, in the name of all that was wonderful?

Donald was resolved to unravel the mystery that very instant, if possible. He raised his hat to the mysterious young person.

"I hope that you have recovered the fright and excitement of that evening when I lost had the pleasure of speaking to you?"

Donald spoke in English, so that the clerk should not understand.

"I have the pleasure of speaking to monsieur for the first time," was the insolent assertion of the blue-eyed, beautiful youth.

But Donald was not to be tricked or outwitted.

"You are mistaken, sir," he said; "or rather you are facetious, and desire to puzzle me. I perfectly well recognize you and since I have the honor of being on speaking terms with the Princess Nicholine, and her governess, it would be as well for you to confide a little in me. My curiosity is thoroughly aroused, and I am determined not to be bored winked.

Donald spoke a little desperately. It was only natural that, while searching under the wing of his unrequited love, he should feel irritable; and this youth, whose beautiful face was the facsimile of Ariel's, only that the expression was wholly different, was a mystery that irritated Renfrew to an immense extent.

"I cannot help you, monsieur; I am totally at a loss to comprehend your meaning. My name is Andrew Leopardi. I am of Italian origin. my mother was English. I live with my uncle in the Rue Taitbout. Good day, sir."

Now, No. 8 was the number of the house where Paolo, the sexy, the fortune seiter the quark, the modern Cagliostro received the inquisitive public. Instantly Donald perceived that the youth was speaking falsely in calling the magician his uncle.

"I dare say you may be in the employ of Paolo," he said decisively, "but that you are his nephew I do not believe. I believe you to be Prince Nicholine, the twin brother of the Princess Nicholine.

"You do?"

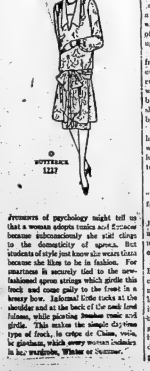

The youth put his white hand to his fair brow, and thought for moment, then with a laugh:

"Supposing you are right," said he "what do you propose to do? To acquaint Miss Bateman with my whereabouts?"

"Not if you desire your absolute kept secret. At the same time, I might offer you some advice. You are very young, Prince Nicholine."

"I am seventeen years, and seven months old. Does not that period of colouring on this earthly globe entitle me to be considered a man? You shake your head. Well, admit I am a boy. I have the will of a ten men of thirty-five; nothing shall make me live under petticoat government during this winter in Paris, the gayest city in the world."

Exponents of psychology might tell us that a woman adopts tunics and dresses because subconsciously she vital clings to the domesticity of aprons. But students of style just know she wears them because she likes to be in fashion. The smartness is securely tied to the new-fashioned apron strings which girdle this frock and come gaily to the front in a bessy bow. Informal little tucks at the shoulder and at the back of the neck lend fulness, while piquing braiding tunic and girdle. This makes the simple daytime type of frock, in crepe de Chine, voile, or gingham, which every woman considers is her wardrobe. Winter or summer,

The Irony of Love

By Charles Garvice

"No," replied the Princess Nicholine, slowly. "I meant paid to answer questions like a policeman. "Sides, how do know what he wants?" Might be been cruelly for some of us."

"No, no; if he had, he'd have had a tail to him, and a pitchfork instead of an umbrella," remarked Parchment Joe dryly.

There was a roar of laughter at the characteristic sally; and a man laughed at another guess:

"Prays it's a new agent."

"An accent, dogged by this that! No! likely," retorted Bill. "Prays he's a missionary."

The Yorkshireman shook his head. "No he hadn't got, the cut of a sky pilot; more like a lawyer."

"Oh, one's enough for Jumping Jane and Bill, jerking his head at the quiet figure in the corner; but, before the lawyer could report, the canvas door was thrust aside, and four men entered.

It was evident that they were strangers, for they paused on the threshold and looked round interrogatively. A silence fell upon those who were near, a silence which spread, as every eye was turned upon the newcomers. One of them, with a touch of his hat, strode up to the bar.

"I'll take a drink for me and my friends—mister," he said, the "mister" evidently forced from him by that particular air of refinement and dignity which had won for Mr. Brown his soubriquet, "and while you're serving 'em, I should like to ask if you've got a man by the name of Pincher here?"

Pincher promptly slid out of sight behind the barrel on which Parchment Joe was sitting. Gentleman Jim took a leisurely survey of the crowd, and in a tense silence replied quietly:

"I don't see him."

"That's a pity, drawled the newcomer, "cause we want him badly. We're from Blinker's."

"Glad to see you," said Gentleman Jim, with a nod. "Give these gentlemen a drink—I won't take your money; you're strangers and you're welcome."

"We don't want no clink," said the Blinker's man. "We're out to find this chap Pitcher, and, if he isn't here, we must be on the move after him. Look here, mister, you seem pretty straight; it's like this: Pincher rooms over to Soho and plays the giddy goat. We've got two of our compliments pretty badly barbed—for it appears he uses a knife, does this chap Pincher,; Now, we ain't given to knives at Blinker's, but there's a hunk of rope a-waitin' for him."

There was a murmur at this. Pincher was a bad lot and quarrelsome, and this, not the first time he had used a knife; but he had been punished on three previous occasions by the Judge and pop of Jumping Jane, and the Jumping Jane men were willing that he should be brought to book for the fifth—report at Blinker's—by the same tribunal. This attempt to wreak out the law and administer punishment by the Blinker's boys savored of intrusion, not to say impudence.

"If Pincher's been up to any larks in your range, we'll hold him up for it," said Bill coldly.

"Much obliged," returned the Blinker's man sarcastically. "But we've got a score of our own, and we're quite ekal to squarin' accounts with him."

It is possible that the Blinker visitants would have departed, and that Pincher would have escaped for a time, but, unfortunately, at that moment Parchment Joe accidentally let his head on Pincher's figure, and the wretched man could not suppress a squeal. The Blinker's man turned swiftly and would have made for the fugitive who had sprung to his feet, and was attempting flight, but Bill swung up and interposed his huge body.

"Easy on, stranger," he said. "You ain't alleged to come into this camp and snatch one of our men as if he was a chicken you'd set your fancy on."

The defiance was scarcely uttered when the row began, for the visitors were surrounded by a crowd easily roused to anger, and bent fiercely ceasing what they deemed an intrusion and a liberty. Rafe had sprung forward, but stood still, for he was the first to see his father's upraised hand. In a moment or two the others also saw it, and there was a gradual silence.

"What my friend there says is true," said Gentleman Jim, addressing the chief of the visitors and nodding toward Bill. "This man is wanted for Pincher. You can cease and see fair play if you like; anyhow, we've no objection here to hanging a man and trying him afterward. Bring along your witnesses and he shall have fair trial."

"I'm engaged for the defence," said Parchment Joe, with a wry mouth, for he did not like Pincher.

"Very well," said the Blinker's man, "we'll take it at that. We'll go and report. So long!"

Now all would have been well, the convoys from Blinker's would have departed peacefully, but, unfortunately, Pincher, who was not the rather, emitted a hysterical laugh. It was doubtless one of relief, but the Blinker's man misunderstood it; he stepped out a pace forward, and Pincher's career of misdoing would have reached its conclusion, if Rafe, who was standing near, had not struck up the arm that held the weapon. The bullet went through the roof as if

INAUGURAL MEETING

Standing Committees Struck —Mr. John Elliott Re-elected Chairman

At the inauguration meeting of the Board of Education held last evening in the Council Chambers of the City Hall, Mr. John Elliott was unanimously re-elected as chairman of the Board.

On conveying his gratitude for his re-election Mr. Elliott said that he really shouldn't accept this important post for the third time but in view of his unanimous re-election and the busy year ahead of the Board, he accepted. Mr. Elliott spoke in glowing terms of the new collegiate, saying it would be a credit to Belleville, and the County of Hastings.

"I know we will have a splendid time together and we will try to have one of the outstanding educationists in the Province come to address the Board and the schools," said the speaker. Mr. Elliott welcomed the new members to the Board.

The first matter to come before the Board was the forming of Committees. A special Committee was formed to strike the standing committees.

The committees are—

SOLE WHITE MAN LEFT IN WHOLE PROV. OF CHINA

Rev. E. W. Morgan, Formerly of Belleville, Writes Brother Here

In recent letters to his brother, Mr. H. A. Morgan, Rev. E. W. Morgan, B.A.D.D., the only remaining white man in Changchow, Sze-chwan, China describes the terrible conditions to which the white people are subjected. He told of how,recently in the University of which he is supervisor, the students voted on a boycott of the "foreign devils" as the white people were known and when the majority voted against this proposed boycott the minority fought against the decision. The natives are constantly fighting among themselves and the city in which Rev. Mr. Morgan resides changed hands four times in seven months. Some months ago when coming up river the boat on which Mr. Morgan was travelling was stopped and all Christians ordered ashore. Mr. Morgan who was travelling with his wife and little daughter remained aboard however, and when the leading party came on the ship he stood in the door of his wife's room, elected ed his arm across the threshold and calmly informed the thieves that in his country gentlemen never entered the apartments of women and children and appealed to their better natures he persuaded them to leave him his money. The minister's calm knowledge of the Chinese nature proved his salvation and the thieves returned ashore without molesting Mrs. Morgan, taking only a portion of the money. On returning to shore the natives after a conference even returned Mr. Morgan's watch and chain to him.

Rev. Mr. Morgan went out to China in 1906 and returned to Canada in '23 leaving again for the mission fields in October '24. He is a graduate of Toronto University and attended Albert College in Belleville in the course of his theological studies. He sent out to China in the interests of the Methodist Church.

At one time during a native uprising Mr. Morgan was forced to put bamboo over the windows of his home to prevent the bullets which were whizzing through the air entering the home.

NEW RATES MAY APPLY TO THIS YEAR'S TAX BILL

Ont. Gov't Experts Figure Out Tax Exemptions On Income

SOME INEQUALITIES

Suggested That New Law Be Dated Back to Jan. 1, 1927

Toronto, January 22.—Hon. J. D. Monteith, Provincial Treasurer, and the financial experts of his department spent most of yesterday in considering what the proposed income tax exemption "as outlined that they will be enjoyed only by those with incomes of $2,000 and apply to assessments for this calendar year and to taxes payable upon such assessment.

A statement issued by Dr. Monteith points out that the new law divides incomes into two classes—income from personal earnings and income from investments. Of the former the exemptions of $1000 for householders and $1,200 for non-householders apply no matter how large the income. That is taxable income is only the excess over the exemptions. In the second class, income from investments, exemption is allowed if income is not in excess of $2,000 for householders and $1,200 for non-householders, but as soon as the total exceeds that there is no exemption what whatever. If it applied generally to taxes paid in 1927, the result would be that tax payers in cities like Toronto, Hamilton and Ottawa, which assess in one year and tax the next, would receive the benefit of the exemption on 1925 incomes, whereas other municipalities would have the benefit on 1926 incomes only.

For instance: Taxes on 1925 incomes in York Township were paid last year while the taxes on the 1925 incomes in Toronto will only be paid this year. As a consequence, Toronto income tax payers will this year pay on the old rates if the law clerk's suggestion is adopted.

EGGS ARE DOWN TO 45c A DOZEN

Honey Plentiful at 10 Cts. Pound — Potatoes Slowly Drop

Honey this year has not been of as clear a quality as in former years due, a farmer told The Intelligencer, to the fact that it was not ripened at the usual time of gathering it is of a dark hue when taken in it was found that the bees had injected some amber nectar. However the product is most palatable and sold this morning on the market at 10 cents a pound. Butter is still high, selling at 45 cents a pound or 85 cents a two pound roll, while eggs took a further drop selling at 45 cents a dozen, many at 43, a drop of nearly five cents from last week. The hens are laying well just now, a fact disturbing to the thrifty housewife who posted herself on 45 cents a dozen and now has to use them while others are using fresh eggs at the same price. Cream sold at 45 cents a pint and celery at 10 cents a head.

Potatoes are dropping slowly selling today at $1.25 for 90 lbs. Onions are also quite plentiful, while apples took a turn on the up grade selling at 50 cents a peck though many were sold at $1.25 a bushel. Small vegetables such as carrots and beets sold at 25 cents a peck and fine cabbages built on the block at four bulbs at 5, 10 and 15 cents each.

Y'S MEN' CLUB LEARN OF WORK DONE BY C.A.S.

Inspector Ruston Give Interesting Survey of Improvements

The Y's Men's Club at their weekly luncheon last evening listened to an interesting address from Inspector T. D. Ruston on the work and ideals of the Children's Aid Society.

"Children's Aid work in ancient times was unknown," he said "and the Romans thought more of their cattle than of the children. Many of the latter were cast on the streets and deserted. Even in Queen Victoria's time conditions were still most debauching with the result that the work of the Children's Aid Societies arrested.

Gradually the system was improved in the Old Country and children were given a home and an opportunity to make a career for themselves. Various new acts were passed among them being the Children's Protection Act which provided that neglected children must be taken care of.

Inspector Ruston declared that hereafter he was going to deal with mostly a child's character than the environment. He spoke in glowing terms of the need and Adoption Act are two other measures which come under Mr. Ruston's supervision. He gave a brief survey of each. He told of the attitude of the Department in regarding to the seeking of Religion.

Inspector Ruston told the Club of many amusing experiences encountered in carrying out his duties in the County of Hastings. Chairman Albert Amy among presided.

A vote of thanks was moved to Mr. Ruston for his talk.

BIG THREAT TO FLOUR EXPORTS IN RATE CHANGE

B. C. Application to Reduce Domestic Rates Would Be Injurious

Ottawa, January 22.—Canadian flour exports to the Orient which now exceed one million barrels annually would be seriously threatened if export freight rates to Vancouver are disturbed, the Railway Board was told this morning by C. Lafleche, of the Canadian Millers' Association. Mr. Lafeche presented a statement showing how the trade has steadily increased from 315,000 barrels in 1922 until the present time, while United States exports from Seattle, Portland and Tacoma have shown a corresponding decrease. China and Japan have learned to appreciate flour made from Canadian wheat, which contained more gluten than American flour. The witness strongly opposed the move suggested by British Columbia to reduce domestic rates to the same level as export rates in Canadian railway freight tariffs.

"If the export rate is made applicable to domestic trade," said he, "Portland and Tacoma millers will benefit more than anyone in this county. The danger to Canadians in this world be very local. So far as consumers in British Columbia are concerned, he said, bread is cheaper in Vancouver than in Winnipeg. He explained the apparent anomaly of British Columbia to ruin the export flour trade with the Orient for the sake of giving the people of Vancouver a bread one-eighth of a mill cheaper per loaf than they are now paying.

BRITISH TROOPS ORDERED TO BE READY FOR SERVICE IN FAR EAST

Cabinet Holds Emergency Meeting to Discuss Late News

WASHINGTON UNEASY

Rioting Occurs in Shanghai But is Quickly Suppressed

Although no new outbreaks are reported in despatches from China British newspapers regard the instructions of the United States Government to John A. MacMurray, minister to China, to return to his post, as an indication that there must be ground for anxiety in Washington.

A cabinet meeting held in London yesterday is also regarded as an indication of the receipt of important late news. A despatch received in London from Hankow is interpreted by the evening news as meaning that business is to be resumed, as the British concessions, now controlled by Chinese nationalists following riots there early this month. On the other hand, an unconfirmed report Friday said 1,000 British and American born were evacuating Hankow and joining their wives and families in Shanghai.

The British government and President Coolidge state that military steps now being taken are for the protection of nationals of their respective countries. There has been no modification of the conciliatory attitude adopted toward the legitimate aspirations of Chinese nationalism.

BRITISH TROOPS READY

Two battalions of British troops have been ordered to prepare themselves for service in China.

Chu Chaohsin, China's representative in the League of Nations council, predicts the abolition of all "unequal treaties" sooner or later.

Friendlier feelings and increased commerce to powers who voluntarily relinquish their extraordinary treaty privileges are predicted by the Chinese representatives.

SITUATION TENSE

Peking, Jan. 22.—There is no confirmation here of report that Hankow is being captured by Nationalist men. Rumor was widely circulated here yesterday. All indications are, however, that Hankow situation is growing more tense daily.

SENDING MUNITIONS

Manila, Jan. 22.—The United States steamer Seriver sailed today for Chinwangtao north of Tientsin, with stores of ammunition for the fifteenth infantry. United States army contingent maintains headquarters at Chinwangtao.

LONDON UNEASY

London, Jan. 22.—Notwithstanding the hopeful tone of the foreign office regarding situation in China some of the morning papers believe the outlook is more serious than in recent days. The, is some foundation for rumor current that the United States government is anxious over the Chinese affairs and the announcement that the United States steamer at Peking, John MacMurray, who had started for Washington was instructed to return to his post. The appropriation of the troops seems to be that if Washington is gravely concerned there must be grounds for saying which is not known to the general public here.

SHANGHAI RIOTS

Shanghai, Jan. 22.—Rioting broke out in Hankow, principal refuge of foreigners in China, during parade of constabulary and motormost of the Municipal Tramway Company tonight, but was put down by the police of the international settlement with only a few more summary warnings and a few bruises among the officers participating. The parade was staged by the Tramway workers to celebrate their victory in two day strike. They won several concessions from the company.

Mrs. James H. Dunnett, formerly a resident of Belleville and wife of the late ex-Mayor Dunnett, died in Toronto on Wednesday.

AGAIN DISCUSS TITLE QUESTION

W. F. Nickle, Father of Ban, Has Not Changed Mind

Ottawa, Jan. 21.—Considerable discussion was aroused in the House today following the suggestion made by Hon. Sir Rodmond Ferguson, Privy Minister of Canada, in the absence of Premier King, to Col. Harry Cockshutt, retiring Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, that the Minister of Customs should remove "the bee placed on the coattering of His Majesty's letter by distinguished retiring viceregality, political title" that just received by Col. Cockshutt. Mr. Ferguson made it clear that he did not advocate that the "no titles" ban be removed, but that the "no titles" ban be removed from the people.

OPINION NOT CHANGED

W. F. Nickle, K.C., of Kingston, who while member for Kingston in the House of Commons in 1918, was the father of the "no titles" resolution which was endorsed by the House and sent on to His Majesty, said a newspaper report that he had given reasons for changing his opinion in this matter, though he fully recognized the honorary service given by Col. Cockshutt as Lieutenant-Governor of the province.

"Canada is not inferior to other Dominions, though not receiving titles for the public men," declared Mr. Nickle. "If one is his own reward and the good will of the public is better than anything else."

Mr. Nickle gave it as his opinion that there ought not to be attached to any democratic country "an out-grown and outmoded system."

PROBE RESUMED

Witnesses Fail to Appear, Travelling For Their Health

Vancouver, B.C., Jan. 22.— When the customs inquiry commission, presided over by Justices Brown, Wright and Roy, resumed sessions here yesterday after its long recess, Chairman Brown professed an Order-in-council passed last Friday at the suggestion of Premier King, extending the scope of the inquiry.

Campaign funds was the subject which Hon. N. W. Rowell immediately dived into. Two important witnesses in this connection were Mr. Henry J. Reifel, of the Joseph J. Kennedy Liquor Exporting Company, whose evidence has been eagerly sought, and who at the previous sessions here was excused on a physician's certificate, is now travelling abroad for his health. George Morgan, one of the managers of the Consolidated Liquor Exporting Company, was also not forthcoming and Robert Benson, another manager of the company, declared that Morgan's whereabouts was unknown.

When Mr. Rowell pointed out that contributions by breweries to campaigns was an indictable offence, Robert Fidler, a director of the Consolidated, said: "I'm afraid you will have to start to build jails because every one will be in them and no one out."

The commission spent some time over the use by the Consolidated Exporters of labels printed to imitate United States Labels.

FUR IN ALASKA

More than 100 Alaskan islands are under lease for fur raising. Blue foxes are there made a specialty. There is still be at least 20,000 such pelts sent to market. When the average price of from $75 to $125 is taken into consideration, the value of the fox hides reaches a big sum. Every effort is being made in Alaska to increase the output of the fur islands. The trade demands more and more pelts of a nature adaptable to the collars of both fur and cloth coats. Besides the pelts from the islands, Alaska expects to ship out the catch of trappers, amounting to many thousands of skins.

IN DISGRACE

Members of New York's Elite Stricken From Social Register

New York—The name of Elsa MacKay, who married Irving Berlin, famous song writer, has been stricken from that record of New York's social elite—the social register.

The register, which to-day made its 41st annual appearance, wholly ignored the name of the composer and his wife. With the removal of the famous Miss MacKay's name, formerly one of the strongest and most acceptable in New York's list, the Berlins have felt the punishment imposed upon other members of the "400" who have stepped sensationally into public notice. The Stillmans and Leonard Kip Rhinelander.

Leonard K. Rhinelander, name was removed last year, following his suit for annulment of his marriage to Alice Beatrice Jones, daughter of a colonial taxi-driver.

And the names of James J Stillman and his wife, once leaders in New York's highest social strata, were banished from the pages of sheet after their sensational divorce suit.

None of these names appeared in the current issue, although the social maximum penance is one year.

ARCH. BEAMISH BUSY

An interesting letter from the Rev Archdeacon Beamish was received yesterday by a close friend of his in Belleville, saying what a fine time the Archdeacon is having in England, and describing what he is doing there. "In November" I spoke twenty-five times in sermons or addresses. So you see I have not been idle." the letter reads. Perhaps one of the high spots of the sojourn was the description of the 39th of November Granger banquet held in Belfast. "I had a wonderful time in Belfast at the 39th of November Granger banquet," writes the Archdeacon. "Sir James Craig and Marquis of Dufferin and other notables were very cordial." The Archdeacon Beamish told how he had responded to the toast to the visitors. The worthy latter was an interesting, interesting and descriptive account of his stay in England. The Sunday following Christmas was the first free day Mr. Beamish had enjoyed and this he spent in listening over the radio to beautiful Christmas hymns and the Canterbury Cathedral service.

Twenty-five Cubs of the first Belleville Pack of which Mr. Wallace Haverock Robb is Cub Master, had a splendid time last evening the kind which appeals to the heart of every boy. They assembled in the Community Hall at Bridge Street Church early in the evening and with Mr. Robb capably filling the office of chef-cook-and-all, they sat down to the crackling, sputtering grate fire six loaves of bread, two gallons of pork and beans, six quarts of milk and two pounds of butter. Some idea of the appetites may be had by the fact that the chef commenced the rationing by cutting man-sized slices of bread, but after he had helped-but five, the first, like Oliver Twist, came back for more. So he compromised by tearing the loaves into chunks which delighted the little fellows. Then came a tour of the city, winding up with a spirited snow fight.

MINING GOSSIP

Probability of a new shaft on the Lake Shore Mines north of the lake, opens up interesting possibilities for this and other properties north of the producing section of the ramp. In this regard Teck-Hughes which has been engaged in development south of the lake is in line for important disclosures when the northern area of the property is developed. While practically no attention has been paid to them, two veins have been found on surface on the property in the north that contain commercial ore over mining widths. The company has, however, like Lake Shore, been so busy in the exploration of the main ore bodies that scant attention has been paid to these outlying areas.

It is not beyond the bounds of possibility that further important ore bodies will be opened up in the unexplored reotions of theses and other properties on the north of the property during break of the camp. In fact some of the best ore yet, disclosed on the Sylvanite Mines property is north of the vein extension into this property from the Wright-Hargreaves Mines, and the most northerly workings of the latter company.

Little was known of these ore occurrences until diamond drilling disclosed them at the 1,000-foot level of Wright-Hargreaves. Whether they have any connection with the known veins on the Teck-Hughes to the north is a matter of conjecture. The fact of their development, however, presents the possibility of similar occurrences being found on the properties west.

An official of the Ontario Lake Mines, Limited, today stated that he had received the following report from Thayer Lindsley, the manager in charge of the property in Bourlamaque Lindsley reporting about 120 acres of the northern part of the S. Gamble claim were ran during the latter part of December.

An electrical survey by the Sudbury Exploration Prospecting Corp. was started on January 8th and completed by the 13th on the above area.

Although no analysis of this work has yet been made by Mr. Lauzebere of the S. A. Proc. Corp., the indications are that no important mineral deposits have been detected by this survey. There still remains about 48 acres which have not been surveyed and it is planned to cover this ground at some future date.

A contract has been entered into with the Sudbury Diamond Drilling Co. to drill one hole extending possibly to a depth of 2,500 feet, for the purpose of testing the foundations occurring at depth in the northwest corner of the E. Gamble claim, and adjacent to the Noranda Mines. It is before the end of January.

Expected that drilling will commence

STOLE NEFERTITI'S HEAD

Cairo, January 22.—According to a native newspaper the Egyptian Government has refused to grant permission to the well-known German Egyptologist, Dr. Burchardt, to resume excavations at Tel-el-Amarna, on the ground that he smuggled from the country before the war, the head of the Egyptian Queen Nefertiti, one of the most precious relics of Egypt, which he discovered at Tel-el-Amarna and which is now exhibited in the Berlin museum, where its appearance caused a sensation at the time. It will be remembered the head was not exposed in the museum until after the signing of the Versailles treaty, thus ensuring its retention in Germany. The Egyptian Government now states that Burchardt will not be allowed to excavate until the head is returned to Egypt.

EMPTY BOAT FOUND

Boston, January 22.—An empty lifeboat bearing the name of the collier John Tracey, ten days' overdue from Norfolk for Boston, was picked up today by a Boston fishing schooner seventy miles southeast of Highland Light, Cape Cod. Shipping men here expressed belief that the Tracey had been beset with ice on board.

The lifeboat was picked up by the fishing schooner, Breaker, which communicated the news by radio to the Boston Fishing Company here. The John Tracey, which carried a crew of 27 men, was last seen off Block Rip Lightship on January 11, fighting through the worst blizzard of the present winter.

BUSINESS MEN GIVE ADDRESS TO STUDENTS

Friday afternoon the students of Ontario Business College were addressed by Mr. F. E. O'Flynn on some essentials of business success. The subject was presented in a very able and interesting way by Mr. O'Flynn, who particularly emphasized the importance of good, health, good character, correct habits, hard work, wholesome recreation and association with upright companions. At the conclusion of his fine address Mr. O'Flynn was given a hearty vote of thanks, which was moved by Mr. Gerald Hurley and seconded by Miss Evelyn Cook.

Principal L. L. Moore has arranged for a series of addresses to be given at O. B. C. during the winter by prominent business and professional men.

SYRUS.

THE BEST IN LIFE

A kindly English divine has published an article designed to give comfort to those who are troubled by the feeling that they have not attained the best in life.

The sermonette should have a wide appeal, as there are few of us who are not telling ourselves that while waiting for the best in life we are always having to put up with the second best. Ardent youth, the heir of all the ages, starts out confidently to grasp the best. The glow years blunt enthusiasm. Whatever we mistake fails somewhat short of his hopes and wishes. The elusive best perpetually flies before him, as the Holy Grail fled before the hot quest of King Arthur's knights. Eventually the painful thought comes that the best may never be attained.

It is here that the kindly philosopher comes to his help. There are, he says, three paths open to the disappointed one. He may resent his luck, kick vainly against the pricks, and sink into a sullen rebel or a bitter cynic. He may accept his lot with an abandonment of resignation which degenerates into apathy. Or, since what he deems to be the second best is likely to be his limit, he may set himself cheerfully to explore its boundaries and recognize.

Such exploration may lead to unexpected discoveries. In the limitation due to self or circumstances? In becoming the less of the best it is rarely always of material things that we think. We have in mind wealth, place, power, or influence over the lives and fortunes of others. In the nature of things the best of these is not for many men.

Compensation, however, is always at our elbow. But it lies in a different world of value. The best that lies in ourselves is always open to us, always has been, and always will be. In that world the very deficiencies of our second best environment may have a positive value of their own. If, says the philosopher, this life is indeed "a valley of soul-making," in which all that is most worth while is attained only by struggle and effort, the materially second best may contribute generously to the final great result. Power and seclusion, he reminds us, are more likely to come of a wooden pallet than of a bed of roses. The strain and stress of a hard lot may grind out a finer product than high place and great material possessions.

Before, therefore, we indulge in self pity at our own lot in life it would be well for us to make quite sure that we are not passing judgment on the mere scaffolding of life, blind to the possible strength and beauty of the structure which is rising under cover of it.

A TRAGIC FIGURE

The death of Empress Charlotte, the "mad empress," at the advanced age of 86, closes one of the most romantic and tragic careers of modern history. It is sixty years since her husband, the Emperor Maximilian of Mexico, was executed after three very disturbed years of sovereignty, and ever since that time the unhappy woman has been confined in her Belgian castle, keeping up a royal mockery there, her mind shattered by the awful experience through which she had passed. Empress Charlotte was the daughter of Leopold I. of Belgium and the Princess Louise of Orleans, daughter of Louis Philippe, king of the French. She married at the age of seventeen the ill-fated Max milian, archduke of Hapsburg and brother of Emperor Franz Joseph. For a time the young couple lived happily in their castle of Miramar, near Trieste; but their ambition and love of adventure drove them on to their fate. When Mexico was taken by French troops, the Emperor Napoleon III. offered the throne to Maximilian, and in 1864 the young couple arrived in Mexico City. For a time they were popular, but, financial difficulties fostered and certain government measures aroused the resentment of the populace, and Maximilian decided to abdicate. The empress, however, consoled him to hold on while she went to Europe to solicit the help of France and Italy. Napoleon received her with a cold refusal of assistance and her appeal to the Pope met with no better success. It was then that her mind gave way, and maddened by disappointment she wandered through the streets of Rome pouring out her incoherent complaints.

Emperor Maximilian was shot in the year of Canadian Federation. It is a long time ago, but throughout the intervening years the empress has been keeping up her solitary court at Lacken near Brussels, a truly pathetic figure.

CHANGING PRAIRIES

The treeless prairie is becoming only a name. The greater appearance of the prairie in many sections is gradually changing. There are cosy farms, almost well-planned shelter-belts, surrounded by gardens containing bush and fruit trees.

This is an outcome of the activity of the Department, of the fatuous in supplying settlers with little trees and seedlings. Last year the Department sent out 3,500,000 little trees for distribution among the 6,500 farm houses in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. And the distribution for 1927 will be the biggest yet. Nearly eight million seedlings and cuttings are ready for packing to meet the 6,200 applications which have been approved. Since the work began 33 years ago more than 87,500,000 trees have been sent out.

The resulting plantations are not part of the wood-lot scheme. The trees are usually set in strips or shelter-beds around the farm buildings, but a new idea is gained of the extent of the work when it is learned that the 1926 plantations covered a little over 2,000 acres and that the total plantings since the inauguration of the scheme exceed in extent 32,000 acres. The plantations form but a patch in the prairie area, and Dominion West but they have given an artistic touch to 80,000 farm homes and to many a rural school ground in the prairie provinces.

The aim of the Department, it is intimated, has been to give farmers a start so that once a plantation is established the seeds and cuttings from it can be used to begin other shelter-belts. It has been demonstrated that by breaking the force of high winds and by conserving moisture, shelter-beds increase the production of the farm. But they return a dividend a hundred-fold greater in the increased comfort and enjoyment afforded by them to the farmer and the household.

Magistrate: "You are accused of stealing spoons from the restaurant. What have you to say?"

Accused: "I took them in error."

Magistrate: "In error? What do you mean?"

Accused: "I thought they were silver."

"Miss Ponder," said the boss, "you are a very handsome young woman."

"Oh!" said the typist, blushing.

"You dress neatly and you have a well-modulated voice. Your deportment is also above reproach."

All the places named on this map, except Ichang, are mission stations in China of the United Church of Canada. They are in the province of Szechwan and most of them are 2,000 miles from the coast. The missionaries' line of communication is down the Yangtze valley and if trouble develops at Hankow or Shanghai, far down stream, as is not unlikely, their position would become one of considerable danger. Gunboats cannot get upstream to Chengtu but might reach points between Ichang and Chungking. One party of about 30 missionaries left for the coast a few days ago. Other parties of about 30 are expected to leave shortly, some of them going overland by chair from Chengtu to Wushieh where foreign warships may be able to give protection. But so far the United church has no news of a general evacuation by the missionaries, who, with their families, number two hundred.

ANTIQUITY OF GLASS.

Where and when was glass first made? was told in a lecture recently delivered in London, England, to the Society of Glass Technology, by Professor Sir Flinders Petrie. In giving an account of the origin and distribution of early glass, he said that no glass was made in Egypt before 1500 B.C., and so that date all glass found in Egypt was imported.

In Mesopotamia, however, glass was being made as far back as 2500 B.C. The connection between Egypt and Syria which followed the conquests of the Egyptian monarchs of the eighteenth dynasty led to the introduction into Egypt of a large number of Syrian workers in various branches of the arts, and within 50 years of that date glass became one of the commonest objects in Egypt.

London: Jan. 22.—Are open valiant than women?

Walter Stoneman, compiler of the National Portrait Gallery's photographic record, declares that they are. "Of course, man is a vain creature," he said. "Fully 85 men out of 100 will refuse to accept a photograph that has not been touched up. A man well known in the art world told me he liked photographs which 'left the character in the face,' but when he was photographed himself he would only look at a touched-up proof.

"Of course, women are much the same in regard to touched-up photographs but we rather expect them to be. Women, too, are partly to blame for men's greater vanity." Mr. Stoneman thinks that, on the whole, naval men are the least vain of all the sitters he ever met, but there are exceptions to this rule.

"I had a naval officer—he is now dead—who brought his valet to the studio with him," he said, "and a sort of grand dress parade followed.

"In a sharp voice of command the officer rapped out a series of questions:

"'Is my tie straight?'

"'Is my hair tidy?'

"'Is there any coat all properly?'

"'Are my medals correct?'

"Then, when he was quite satisfied that everything was all right, he turned to me and roved:

"'Carry on! All correct?'"

Another proof of man's vanity, Mr. Stoneman emphasized, is that very few men can be got to realize that they look older with the passing of time.

"If a man has not had his photograph taken for 20 years or so," he said, "he positively refuses to believe that a new photograph represents him at all. He expects it to look like the last one he had taken.

"I have had men insist on it or the negatives being exposed, and then not be satisfied. It would be difficult to find a woman so exacting as that."

Mrs. Stanton Fox was elected Social Vice-President and convenor of the Social Com., in Mrs. Cole's place and plans for the banquet to be held Jan. 27th were discussed.

Following the little Miss Dorothy Peck sang very sweetly "Away in a Manger". We were all pleased with Mrs. Rice Ostrodom's paper, "Some good habits to cultivate." This was followed by a discussion, led by Mrs. W. H. Dempsey on "Home Economics." All joined most readily in this most inexhaustable subject and the meeting closed with No. 20 Coss Song Book.

At the close Mrs. Peck assisted by her daughters and Mrs. H. Dempsey served a most delicious lunch

ALBERT COLLEGE MEET B. H. S. MON.

High School Out to Redeem Themselves For Last Defeat

The Belleville High School team will take the ice Monday night at the arena for the return game against the Albert College. In last game the College were defeated in an overtime game but it wasn't any fault of theirs as the High School seemed to get the breaks. They will be out in full force with Haig and Armstrong who have been out with injuries. But Colling and Co., from the little "red school" house will take it upon themselves to make it two and stay in the running against Dunnville. Only way who spring a "Charley horse" last week is expected out and the trickler will be at full force. This should be real as the High School are out for revenge for the rugby season and also want to make it two straight in the inter-school games.

BELLE THEATRE

One of the most fantastic as well as one of the most beautiful cabaret scenes ever filmed plays an important part in Fox Films version of "The City," the screen edition of the famous play by Clyde Fitch, coming to this Belle Theatre shortly.

This scene, which marks a pivotal point in the action of the play, was planned to fit, to the finest detail, action of the picture itself. Mary Morgan's screen dancers, all of them selected not only for their ability to dance, but for their beauty as well, take part in the tableau.

The first flash shows six of the seven deadly sins, gorgeously attired, waiting outside a curtain. They start to run inside, but are scrunged aside by Wrath.

The climax comes when Cupid shoots his silver bow into the box, where the girl is sitting. This results in the elopement leading up to the climax in the story.

Nancy Nash, one of Fox Films latest finds, and Walter McGrail, who has lately distinguished himself with his work in Fox Films' "Marriage Licenses?" have the principal roles in the production.

CAPITOL THEATRE

If you want to see a real equilibrist act, then don't miss Ted and LaMarr at the Capitol, appearing for the last time today. Never have we seen anything along this line that surpassed the performance of this clever pair of entertainers who are real artists in the art of "Balancing."

These ladies step one another, surmounted by four bottles, each of which supports one leg of a chair. This is the scene setting above which Dault and LaMarr high in the air—entertain the audience during a breath-taking climax, when to top it all off, the performers hoist another chair to the summit and while LaMarr sits calmly upon this one—which by the way rests upon the other one's two front legs, Dault gives a bit of thrilling it is, and well merited the great reception the performance received last night at the hands of the large audience.

Away above the average is this act of Dault and LaMarr, with just sufficient light comedy running through it to brighten it up and properly round it out. Don't miss it if you enjoy a laugh and a thrill—and who doesn't.

DEPORTED TO ENGLAND

Kingston, Jan. 22.—Two prisoners named Jepson and Jacobs, who completed their terms at the Kingston penitentiary were taken to Montreal on Friday afternoon by Deportation Officer Peter Devlin. The men will be placed on a steamer for England, their former home. Jacobs is an English Jew. Both men were doing short terms at the prison.

SOUGHT BY POLICE

Port Hope, Jan. 22 — George Ryan, Dufferin street, is being sought by Port Hope Police on charges laid against him by his wife Mrs. George Ryan, but has not been arrested up to late hour this afternoon. Ryan is charged with wilfully attempting to administer chloroform to Mrs. Ryan.

The charge arises out of an alleged assault by Ryan upon his wife early Wednesday evening. Later in the night it is stated by neighbors, Ryan took a rope and throwing it over the branch of a tree near his home threatened to hang himself. He was prevented from doing so by neighbors, and returned to his home which was locked and in darkness when police visited the place at eleven o'clock. Thursday morning he had disappeared and although it is believed that he was in Port Hope last night police have so far been unsuccessful in locating him.

GUESTS OF ROTARY

Oshawa, Jan. 22.—Three score boys from around town had a most wonderfully good dinner and heard a share of new funny stories from a best master at the art of telling them in the person of Mr. Ed. Kelley, executive of a Toledo Rapid Transit concern, secretary of the Toledo Rotary Club for the past sixteen years, a former international official in Rotary, and a frequent visitor to Canada, at the splendid Father and Son dinner of the Rotary last evening at Alexandra.

Mr. Kelsey spoke at five Oshawa schools yesterday, giving much the same sort of inspirational talk as he did last evening and telling a host of anecdotes and amusing stories to the boys. Mr. Kelsey claims to know something about boys because he commanded a camp of 3,000 boy scouts for several months.

PICTON DROP OUT

Oshawa, Jan. 22.—Picton intermediates have dropped from the hockey race in group two, it has been announced, and it is rumored that the Bowmanville intermediates will follow suit. Whether or not the trouncing administered the Picktonians by Lett's crew, and anything to do with the drastic decision, remains to be proved, but it is believed it acted as a check on the spectators town's ambitions. That leaves three teams in this five-team group, Petesboro, Port Hope and Oshawa, are still in the race.

CAR DESTROYED

Peterboro, Jan. 22.—A touring car owned by Mrs. Emma King, was completely burned and a sedan owned by Dr. Fallowfield was damaged in a fire which broke out last night in the recess at the rear of the Purnlingborne garage.

When the firemen arrived the flames were spreading fast into the surrounding sheds, where other cars are stored. Fire in these sheds might have been serious, as many buildings surround them, and one is built against the south wall of Brock Street Rink.

It is not exactly known how the fire started, but from appearances it must have started in the touring car which was blocked up with all the fire.

It is thought that some person has been loitering around these sheds, and perhaps sitting in the car, in which he left a live cigarette butt. The sheds were badly scorched with the heat, but there was very little damage done to them.

FURS STOLEN

Fort Hope, Jan. 22.—Night Constable William Harvey received a warning by telephone from Cobourg at about twelve o'clock this morning to be on the look out for a Chevrolet automobile containing a party of men who had stolen several valuable furs from the Union garage there.

Shortly after midnight, a man entered the Union garage on Ontario street, Cobourg and awakening the proprietor, Eric Houghtaling, to sell him a quantity of gasoline as his car had stalled a few distances on the road. While Mr. Houghtalling was filling the order, a second man entered the garage and stole four weasel, four mink and one fox pelt. The skins are stated to be quite valuable.

Night Constable Harvey found no trace of the automobile although watch was kept for some time. This morning Cobourg police, acting with Chief Murphy visited a local residence in search of the furs but were unsuccessful.

Negroes are increasing in the South, according to a report of Dr. Hughes, of Philadelphia.

My European Excursions

THERE'S AN OLD HOTEL IN AVIGNON

There's an old hotel in Avignon, France, where I stayed yesterday, which once had crests on its gables of Amat de Graveson of 1580 and Marguerite de Crillon of 1652. Its guests during those centuries have been its most notable. Napoleon the Great stayed there under the simple name of Bonaparte, indeed he was there twice, coming when he returned to the army in Italy. Here he gave a dinner to the officers of his staff and on his Russian campaign he is said to have often wished he was back in this hotel. When King Edward VII. of England was a boy he stayed there, also Cardinal Wiseman, Chateaubriand, Massenet, Gambetta, and last, but far from least, this is where John Stuart Mill brought his much loved wife and where she died. I took the same carriage drive from the hotel, along the river to the little cemetery where they are both entombed. It seemed strange to stand within its hallowed precincts, hallowed for most by its religious symbolism of crosses and hope of life after death, but also hallowed for a few all over the world, because it holds the ashes of two such pioneers of freedom of thought for all mankind.

WHERE DWELL THE SIDHE

At New Grange, near Drogheda, County Meath, Ireland, I have just seen what Dr. R. A. Macalister calls "the most impressive relic of stalk quity in western Europe." From the outside it appears as a hill overgrown with trees and bushes. The mound was originally surrounded by a circle of thirty-five stones, only twelve of which now remain. Within the mound is a chamber twenty feet in height and twenty-one feet across, reached by a narrow passage about two feet in length, all the walls being constructed with slabs of stone. In ancient Irish history three hill Many of the stones whirl into the burial places of the Kings or the dwelling places of the Sidhe, (pronounces Shee) or the Irish fairy folk. Actually it was to all accounts a sacred underground chamber where Druidical ceremonies were held as part of pagan Celtic worship and the whole experience of seeing passages are ornamented with spirals and designs, which are Egyptian in origin, such as the solar-ship and these help experience of seeing where the fairies dwelt is such as to make you want to tell every one about it. Make a note of it for your next trip to Ireland.

Joseph Patchak, of Hazelton, Pa., claimed he distilled alcohol for the radiator of his car. He was fined $100 and costs.

WHAT'S NEW

(From a Woman's Standpoint)

Yellow and violet lead all shades at Palm Beach just now.

Very new are oblong scarfs of single color scheme, such as, silver or gold, the designs in both bases being wrought in metal threads.

A new Venetian set of jewelry, consisting of earrings, brooch, ring and bracelet, is composed of medallions made of lapis or onyx and with a centre setting of moonstones.

The jumper two-piece sport suit which is in effect a two-piece but in reality all one garment—and the one-piece part of an ensemble, the sort of frock that was introduced as the coat dress a few years ago, are all being worn now, says New York Times.

Among the silk postings are shown various heavy crepe satins with a lustre finish as have known for some time and a new coating of filaments that seem to be crepe Outremas but is distinctive in that it has a velvet finish.

A New York editor observes: "If West Point cadets don't believe in sex equality after being given the right to smoke because their girl guests want to do it, our future officers and gentlemen are ungrateful wretches!"

The shadow clock on the sheerest of chiffon hose is establishing a definite place for the sheer sport stocking and many of these are made of the same thread as the stockings but outlined in such a way that no ridge appears to mar the smooth fit about the ankle.

Movie Sidelights

(By The Associated Press)

Every hostess knows how her living room looks after a party. Obtaining this effect for motion pictures is hard on the property men. In production of "Paradise For Two" they had to smoke dozens of cigarettes to get as many butts into the scene. The finished party as the guests would have smoked.

Betty Bronson is filling in the customary waits between scenes by playing records. For the present she finds it easier to respond to her instructor's flexibility with gesture and pantomime than in the new language.

A prop in the wings of vaudeville theatres has been adopted for motion picture use. It is the box of rosin upon which dancers wipe their shoes to prevent a slip. Before waiting on a setting that has waxed parquet floors, the players pass the soles of their shoes over the resin, thus avoiding slapstick falls in the midst of drama.

More than three-quarters of the States have been visited by film players in search of outdoor backgrounds. Following are just a few in which photoplays have been made in the past three years: Arizona, Idaho, Texas, Mississippi, Wyoming, Montana, Washington, Oregon, Nevada, New Mexico, Florida, New Jersey, all of the New England states, Pennsylvania, Georgia, West Virginia and Colorado, South Carolina, Kentucky and Tennessee.

The ability of the motion picture actor is retrogressing in the opinion of Francis X. Bushman.

"Yesterday," says Bushman, "the player was called upon to portray many different roles. In one picture he was a cowboy, then a minister and again a soldier. Today he portrays one particular type. Also pictures in the old days called for more action than is demanded of the current actor."

A man who was fined for leaving an inch of snow on his sidewalk (just around the edges) took a walk past the City Engineer's house and found Charlie's walk worse than his own, oh much worse!

"Write me down" he said, "as one who loves his fellowmen;
If I know a man whose lid like to knock I send seven men around to clear off his walk."

"Dance with the Apollos, the Adonises and Sheiks. Drive out with them, and cabaret with them. Little Mabel in the laundry
Watched the mangle turning round
Got her hair caught in the rollers,
On the other side was found.
Flattened out just like a pancake
With the iron we came to grips.
So we got a pair of scissors
And we cut her into strips.
Then we madly took her homewards
In the bottom of the car—
But her mother said she called it
Stretching it a bit too far!

SATTIRICAL

Two Scotsmen met on a country road after a long absence. "Hoo ye dae," said Sandy, in a very loquitable manner. Jock thanked him and replied likewise. "My," he said, after a long while, "those smokin mats has cost you a deal!" "Not sae muckle," replied Sandy evasively. "A matter o' five shillings the twa, maybe." For a while the two smoked away, talking on various things. Then came a pause. "Sindy," said Jock at last, in tones of one who has made a great discovery, "ah'm thinking your cigar is the four-and-nine-penny one."

BEYOND ALL DREAMS

"How have you managed in regard to your passport? It is not so easy to help 'n Paris as in London."

"Ah! I tell you, you will be as wise as I am myself. At the same time, you helped me the other night, and if you have said nothing to Ariel or to Blondeau—"

"Who is Bandeau?"

"Miss Dolorean. When I was a boy of ten she told me the story of the Irish superstition of the Banshee who appears at sudden fits of a wailing in a death-house. Now that is just my idea of Miss Bateman."

"She is a fine, florid woman of middle age."

"Ah, well, I hate her!" said the Polish prince feelingly. "I see another of my opinions in her; and I wish she would go to Jericho, or to Halifax. Now, if you will walk a little way down this crooked street with me, I will relate my little history to you, and I hope you will keep faith with me; otherwise I shall know how to avenge myself."

Prince Nicholine was so beautiful to look upon that people turned to stare at the fair, boyish face in the street; but the expression on it when he said that he should know how to avenge himself, almost frightened Donald, a florid light man into the gaslelion eyes, and the lips were white and compressed when all at once they relaxed into a sweet smile.

"After all, said he, "I do not see that you will do yourself good by betraying me to Sir Bourke Cockran. You simply go to give you a present. I am only surprised that she has allowed the princess Mary sister, to get you. An excellent thing it will be for that poor young lady when she gets a husband and her freedom. Tell me frankly what you have in furnishing me out, and then I will tell you what I can afford to give to buy your silence."

This fair-faced lad was the twin brother of the dream-maiden, and yet there was a family likeness, and the fell, strong desire, suppressed in a moment to knock him down. His cold insolence his heartless selfishness, spoke in every word he uttered.

"I should fling your money in the dirt if you offered me any, monsieur!" said Donald.

Prince Nicholine rais'd his eyebrows in surprise, and shrugged his shoulders. "Tant mieux!" said he; "for I have no money to fling into the dirt. Come, now, tell me what you want."

"I only ask to know that you are in safety and honor, for I take an interest in the princess, your sister to whom I have still a lien in drawing and—and—Prince Nicholine broke into a satirical laugh.

Her Worst Worry Ended for a Dime!

A Body Sweetness that Even Perspiration Can't Spoil

All the trick laxatives in the world can't tempt people who understand the properties of cascara.

A hundred different drugs will purge the bowels, but a little natural cascara pushes the clean clean, thoroughly. Cleanses even the pores of your skin. Renders perspiration as inoffensive as so much dew!

Your grandparents took "salts", and slowly washed away the mucous membrane with the water! Mineral oils are better, but they leave the nourishment your blood must then carry off through the pores. But when you exercise the system, you get rid of all the poisons by normal muscular action of the bowels.

Don't get in the habit of taking medicine for constipation—or even for autointoxication. If you have the habit, stop it. A candy cascaret is a delightful form in which to take cascara. Children love them and the taste tempts most grown-ups to take "more". And in warmest weather! Try a cascaret when a coughs to know you are in that mood!

"WHAT A JOY it was to find such an aid to utter cleanliness! My system is so purified, perspiration doesn't stain my garments and I just forget self now, after I've taken one or two"

CASCARETS

Clean, wholesome condition that does away with any need of deodorants, even in warmest weather! Try a cascaret when a coughs to know you are in that mood!

Poems Old And New

TOGETHER

You and I by the lamp with there
Few books that out the world. Our Love
Touch almost in this little space.
But I am glad, I see your face.
The silences are long, but each
Hears the other without speech.
And in this simple scene there is
The essence if all subtleties.
The fencing foam all fret and smart.
The one sure sabbath of the heart.

The world—we cannot conquer it.
Nor change the minds of fools; one thing
Here, here alone do we create
With figure cup upon his head, 'and
Near that's nice and four.
But though he's all, oh very! we'll make
Him out of nothing.
To frighten anybody, that really
would be wrong.

THE SNOW MAN
By Alta Thorn

Let's make a snow man, a regular big snow man.
Out in the yard, with arms outstretched, and looking down the street.
A very giant guarding the house and those who live there.
His head held high as if to see the folks that he might meet.

Let's build a snow man, the finest,
plumpest snow man.
With figure cup upon his head, 'and pear that's nice and four.
But though he's all, oh very! we'll make
him out of nothing.
To frighten anybody, that really
would be wrong.

R. L. S's Whimsical Gift

How he Gave his Birthday to a Christmas Day Child

By SHIRLEY BURNS

Robert Louis Stevenson was chatting with friends on the veranda of his plantation home, Vailima, one Samoan evening, when the conversation turned to Christmas, and Judge Ide, then American Land Commissioner to the islands, mentioned the plight of his little daughter Annie, who was living at his home in Vermont, U.S.A., and who had been cheated out of her birthday parties, for say nothing of the presents, because it was her fate to be born on the twenty-fifth day of the month of December.

Stevenson was much amused and interested, and instinctively—his eyes children—his active mind sought a remedy for their unseemly act of Fate.

"I have an idea!" said he enthusiastically. "I'll give her my birthday! What do you think of that?"

The judge smiled somewhat dubiously, was so whimsical, and then he knew delighted his little daughter would be.

So they chatted laughingly over the pleases and possibilities of Stevenson's generous plan; and thus it came about that little Annie Ide, the "Judge's" daughter, came into possession of a birthday which she has ever since celebrated as her own.

STEVENSON'S DOCUMENT

Not long after this conversation Judge Ide returned to the United States for a short time, and while at home this letter came from Mr. Stevenson—dated, June 30, 1891:

"Herewith please find the DOCUMENT which I trust will prove satisfactory in law. It seems to be very attractive in its eclecticism; Scots, English and Roman law phrases are all indifferently introduced, and quotations from the works of Haynes Bayly can hardly fail to attract the indulgence of the Bench.

THE DEED OF GIFT

"I, Robert Louis Stevenson, Advocate of the Scots Bar, and Tusitala "The Master of Ballantrae' and 'Moral Emblems', stark civil engineer, sole owner and author of the Police and Plantation known as Vailima in the Island of Upolu, Samoa, a British Subject, being in sound mind, and pretty well, I thank you, in body:

"In consideration that Miss Annie H. Ide, daughter of H. C. Ide, Judge of the Court of St. Johnsbury, in the County of Caledonia, in the State of Vermont, United States of America, was born, and of all upon Christmas Day, and is therefore out of all justice denied the consolation and profit of a proper birthday:

"And considering that I, the said Robert Louis Stevenson, have attained an age when, oh, we are sensible it, and that I have now no further use for a birthday of any description:

"And in consideration that I have sent H. C. Ide, father of the said Annie H. Ide, and found him about as white a lord compleisoner as I have seen:

HIGHTS AND PRIVILEGES

"Have transferred, and do, hereby transfer, to the said Annie H. Ide, all and whole my rights and privileges in the thirteenth day of November, forever-more my birthday, hereby and hereforth the birthday of the said Annie H. Ide, to have, hold, exercise and enjoy the same in the customary manner, by the sporting of fine raiment, eating of rich meat, and receipt of gifts, compliments and coppers to me, according to the manner of our ancestors:

"And I direct the said Annie H. Ide on add to the said name of Annie H. Ide the name Louisa—at least in private, and I charge her to use my said birthday with moderation and humanity, et hominibus bona fide feasible the said birthday not being so young as it once was, and having carried me in a very sad

Infectory manner since I can remember.

"And, in case the said Annie H. Ide shall neglect or contravene either of the above conditions, I hereby revoke the donation and grant over my rights in the said birthday to the President of the United States of America for the time being.

"In witness whereof I have hereto set my hand and seal this nineteenth day of June in the year of grace eighteen hundred and ninety-one.

(Seal)

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

"Witness, LLOYD OSBOURNE,
"Witness, HAROLD WATTS."

So when invitations were sent out for November 13 there was a flutter of excitement in St. Johnsbury, and on the eventful day the children arrived with more than the usual interest in a party of the kind. Each one brought a present, and the youthful hostess at last knew the wholehearted sensation of opening a birthday package.

TANGIBLE EMBLEM

Stevenson did not forget that there was a distinction, if not a difference, between the present of a birthday and a birthday present, and that little girl—got to mention big ones—like gifts that arrive in ribbon and tissue paper, and so had sent a beautiful model of a full-rigged, a little water-colour painting of a typical Samoan scene. In it are shown two natives on the beach, sighting in the coming mail steamer—quite an event in those days.

Shortly afterward Annie wrote to Stevenson telling him all about it, enclosing him a picture of the church which she attended, and also a photograph of herself and her sister.

Stevenson's letter in reply, dated November 20, 1891, was:

"MY DEAR LOUISA,

"Your picture of the church, the photograph of yourself and your sister, and your very witty and pleasing letter came all in a bundle, and made me feel I had my money's worth. I am delighted to notice; doubtless the step was risky, but I do not the least regard that which enables me to gain a view of your revered and delighted name-father,

"ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON."

THE LAST FAREWELL

Two years later, in September, 1893, Annie was taken by her father to Samoa and H. L. S. met his small name-daughter for the first time; and a few weeks later they two celebrated the birthday together. There was a great gathering of the clans of Vailima at the party. The native chiefs brought presents of beads, tins and trade wares, and every guest with every edible luxury the islands afforded.

On November 13, 1894, the festal rites were repeated at Vailima. It was the last occasion of the kind that the great Scottish author and Annie Ide's namesake was allowed to see.

JUST IN PASSING

THE HILLS OF HASTINGS

The Rocky Mountains rear their heads
To meet the distant sky,
The fairy Hills of Hastings
Look up admiringly.

The Mountains in their high domains
In lonely grandeur bide,
But Hastings' Hills have company
From morn till eventide

The sight by those who claim it know
That Fairies only dance in Hills!
Do not then disbelieve!
And eventful 66 the little Hill
Exclusive of us who can't go West
May find the Fairies dancing still.

STEVENSONIA

In another column on this Page you are publishing an interesting story of H. L. Stevenson. It tells of how this famous writer called his Birthday as a present and who was born on Christmas Day and thus felt either "cheated." It is not a new story but I am hoping it may be new to some of my readers.

"AS IS"

Recently I viewed a home painting. It occupied the whole side of a wall. It painted me completely at first, but view ing it from all angles and several "distances," finally I saw something which was unusual to say the least. There was no title and no painter's name, which latter was just as well methinks.

I do not like the picture. I want it to KNOW what a poem or painting is all about. Now I certainly am not claiming to be an art critic but—

"I don't want no dabs of paint as you can't tell what they are,
Whether they're shadows, follow's faces, or bottles, or blobs, or tar,
But I want gear as looks like gear, an a spar that's like a spar."

The Irony of Love By Charles Garvice

The gesture that accompanied the remark was unmistakable. Instantly, and if by magic, the ring was made; the two men took all their coats—Rafe had worn to say I would before I forget how; and I am very glad I have, for I find myself, however much I may look it; and I am as beautiful as the day, or at least I could hoped that perhaps I might be getting to be. And so I might. So that is the little grip of the pencil, and even these important points. I am very glad also that you are older than your sister by a little more than a year. I am glad. So that the number of points and virtues which you have inherited from your grandfather is already surprising.

"I wish that you would tell your other—not that I like to encourage my rivalry—that I have had a wonderful time lately, and that we are having a cold day on Mulmoss until the Comedy are over, and they laugh like fools at me, and that if we don't get rid of our friends this time I shall begin to wonder if everything but my name's daughter.

"You are quite wrong as to the effect of Ada's visit. She stayed one day, the moment the deed we registered for it was in the public press with every solemnity, the thirteenth. Of course I remember your and only birthday, and you ceased to have been born on Christmas Day. Ask your father; I am sure he will tell you this is sound law.

"You are thus become a month and twelve days younger than you were, but will go on growing older for the future in the regular and human manner from one November 12th to the next.

"The effect on me is more doubtful; I may, as you suggest, live for ever; I might, on the other hand, come to pieces like one-horse shay, and, as a matter of nature; doubtless the step was risky, but I do not the least regard that which enables me to gain a view of your revered and delighted name-father,

"ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON."

WISDOM FROM PORTUGAL

Portugal is a land of proverbs. Whatever the subject under discussion we are told some quaint proverb is sure to creep into the conversation. This is more particularly so among the peasantry.

If a difference of opinion at the seethod of a proceeding, they will close the argument with a proverb, "Every workman has his mama," or perhaps this one, "Every mail has his own way of Killing a flea."

Of a favorite food that happens to be harmful to them, they will say, "I forgive the harm that it does for the pleasure that it gives"

Some of their proverbs have wisdom too, as this one: "Do not say to a fountain, 'I will never drink of your water'; you may be at thirst worn you need pass that way."

A SERMON PLAN

The Christian Register reproduces a sermon plan of which the author is said to be a negro Methodist minister, which is to stated, should certainly secure attention and remembrance. It is based on the parable of the Prodigal Son thus:—

I. MADNESS:
A. Carelled—he carilled with his father.
B. Travelled—travelled to a far country.
C. Ravelled—ravelled out his character.

2. SADNESS:
A. Hogs—he fed the hogs.
B. Togs—he wore out his togs.
C. Dogs—he went to the dogs.

3. GLADNESS:
A. Sealed—he was sealed by his father's ring.
B. Wealed—he got the fatted calf.
C. Healed—by his father's love.

WHO SAID THESE

DRESS

1. Neat, not gaudy.
2. Fine feathers make fine birds.
3. A slip is copper rigged by far, Than a gentlewoman made ready.
4. Be plain in dress, and sober in your diet;
In short, my dears, Kiss me! and be quiet.
5. Women were made to give our eyes delight!
A female shows is an odious sight.
6. A gaudy dress and gentle air,
May slightly touch the heart,
But it's innocence and modesty
That polishes the dart.
7. We sacrifice to dress, till household joys
And comforts cease. Dress drains our cellar dry
And keeps our larder lean; puts out our fires,
And patrimonial hidger, frost and woe
Where peace and hospitality might reign.
8. Dresses for breakfasts, and dinners, and balls;
Dresses to sit in, and stand in, and walk in;
Dresses to dance in and flirt in and talk in,
Dresses for a Winter, Spring, Summer and Fall.
9. Thy gown? Why, ay—Come tailor, let us see?
O mercy, God! What mean'ng stuff is here?
What's this? a sleeve? 'Tis like a deuseknow!
What, an old doors, cav'd like an apple-tart?
Here's snip and nip and cut and slish and slash,
Like to a censor in a barber's shop
Why, what i' devil's name, tailor, call'st thou this!

A bit of Danderine rubbed lightly into the scalp is the one sure way to dissolve every particle of dandruff. But a few drops more make a dressing that is simply marvellous. A shower that rivals brilliantine, and no greased!

MIGRATION OF BIRDS IS YET NATURE'S SECRET

Majority Are Wealthy And Socially Prominent Report Says

Washington, D. C., Jan. 21.— The annual migrations of birds remain unsolved by a century, who have been studying these wanderings for 30 years.

The deep reasons for the movements and the cause of the varying lengths of the journeys have never been definitely ascertained, Dr. Alexander Wetmore, president of the American Ornithologists' Union, said recently. He has just completed an extensive study of bird migrations from many vantage points in the western hemisphere.

Large birds, such as cranes, ducks, loons and hawks, fly by day. Dr. Wetmore said, while smaller birds like Warblers and sparrows, fly by night. The smaller birds have to obtain their food during the day, while feeding for a day's journey is no hardship for the larger ones. The birds fly at an average altitude of 2,000 feet, although some attain an altitude of 20,000 feet. Small birds, he said, fly at from 20 to 27 miles an hour, the large from 42 to 60 miles.

VISCOUNT CECIL BELIEVES AMERICA OFFERS MORE CAREERS TO POOR BOY

Geneva, Jan. 21.—Ambitious young men must choose between greatness for themselves or for their deeds—they can be something or do something, but not both, believes Viscount Cecil of Chelwood, prominent English statesman.

America offers greater opportunities than England to the poor young man, he adds.

"We have solved the problem not Liberty as well as you," Lord Robert Cecil, as he is better known in Geneva, told the Associated Press correspondent, "but you have solved the problem of equality better than we have."

MORE EQUALITY IN U. S.

The Viscount, engaged with himself in the intricacies of reconciling and interpreting the League of Nations covenant, is the son of a distinguished father, Lord Salisbury, and his family has been eminent in English parliamentary life since the days of Queen Elizabeth.

"If you are well-to-do in England and can afford to wait, practically all careers are open to you," he said. "If you are poor, it is a different story, of course. I don't think we have solved in England the question of 'open careers' or opportunities for young men as well as you have in the United States. Unlike you, we are a crowded country.

"Apart from special circumstances, I am convinced that in the end a man generally does what he desires to do and I believe that is more true in the United States, than in England. If with sufficient strength he desires to do a specific thing, he will finally accomplish it.

CAN EITHER "BE OR DO"

"Broadly speaking, there are two objects of desire: To be something; to do something. If you want to be something, for example, a rich man, or president of the United States, or judge of the supreme court, well, that's one form of life. But if you want to do something, then you must be willing to spend as far as you can, against caring what you are. You must not bother about what will happen to you. If you would struggle to be things, then you must abandon hope of doing things."

Determination, tenacity and resource are salient traits of Englishmen, Lord Cecil said, "but the great factor in the success of the British Empire has been the desire of Englishmen to make things work—to see that the actual job in which they are engaged succeeds.

"I have no doubt that our great love of games and a kind of diffuse love of sports in general have greatly fostered this quality," he added.

LIKES DETECTIVE TALES

The Viscount when he is not initiating world armament plans and assisting in projects to outlaw war, frequently reads detective stories.

"I like detective stories," he said. "They are easy to read and they rest the mind. And I like humorists, such as P. G. Wodehouse and O. Henry and Jacobs. Among my favorite books are Boswell's "Life of Johnson" and Jane Austen's novels. At present, I am following Ludwig's work on the Kaiser."

Lord Cecil's leisure time is divided between reading and playing golf, and occasionally he goes to the theater.

BOYS' NARROW ESCAPE

Some Man With a Rifle Gave Them a Warm Quarter of an Hour

Newmarket—Rex shows that there are plenty of exciting moments for little boys in the town:

Last Wednesday morning two small boys skated up the creek to Mason's crossing and while they were resting under the road bridge they were very much frightened by what they thought was a cartridge striking the wall about ten feet from them. On looking to see where the sound came from they saw some person on the track with a gun. When they started to return home two more shots were fired and they were greatly excited. Such action calls for an investigation by the police. The children of the town should not be exposed to such danger.

WILL NOT DEFEND HIS TENNIS TITLE

New York, N. Y., Jan. 21.—The United States winner of all five Olympic tennis titles in 1924 at Paris, is not likely to defend any of them in the international games at Amsterdam in 1928 because of the dates selected for the next Olympic competition.

Under the schedule recently decided upon, the Olympic tennis championships next year will take place August 5 to 12. This would interfere with the national championships and Davis Cup schedule, always well under way by the middle of August, and prevent the making of top ranking stars abroad.

Vincent Richards, now a professional, and Helen Wills won the men's and women's singles titles at Paris in 1926.

TWO OUTSTANDING TOURS

It has been truly said that "Travel is a liberal education", and this statement was never so true as it is today. The whole world, so to speak, has been made easy of access by transportation systems, by rail, ocean, automobile and aeroplane. While the advantages of travel are thus available to the many instead of the few, the refinements of modern rail road transportation and the exacting requirements of the modern traveller are regards his creature comfort have combined to make the detailed arrangements of an extensive tour-let trip rather complex. Every traveller making a vacation trip wishes to derive the utmost benefit in pleasure and education and to spend as little time as possible arranging its many details, the itinerary and train connections, securing sleeping car, steamer and hotel reservations, etc. He desires also to make the best possible use of the time available by the inclusion of the most important and worth-while attractions and above all, to know how much it will cost.

All this is done for you in the "Personally Conducted All-Expense Tours", which have become so popular with the Canadian public, the best known and most popular being the splendid tours operated via the Canadian National Railways, under the direction of Mr. Martin Kerr, B.A. (4 Beaulah Ave., Hamilton, Ont.) and Mr. A. E. Bryson (44 Silverthorn Ave., Toronto, Ont.) of the Kerr-Bryson Tours. Two more such tours are announced for July, 1927, one from Toronto through the Canadian West to the Pacific Coast including Wainwright Park, Jasper National Park, the Triangle Tour, Vancouver and Victoria, B.C., returning through the United States via Yellowstone Park, Salt Lake City, Denver, Colorado Springs, Pike's Peak and Chicago. The other tours will be assembled from points in Saint John, N.B., Prince Edward Island, the Bras d'Or Lakes, Halifax, N.S., Land of Evangeline, Annapolis Valley, Boston, Mass., and finally Ottawa, the capital of the Dominion. Descriptive booklets of both these tours will be available very shortly and in the meantime further information may be secured from any Canadian National Railways agent or from the organizers.

If you have not previously been interested in these tours, it is well worth your while to enquire about them; they will solve your vacation problem;

E. T. Sutherland, Former Hockey Head, Urges New Regulations

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 20.—(By Canadian Press)—Urging a universal set of rules for professional and amateur hockey in Canada, James T. Sutherland, Kingston, Ont., former president of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association and the Ontario Hockey Association, says the lamentation would undoubtedly meet with the greater approval from hockey followers throughout the country.

"The question arises as to just why hockey in Canada is, such a complex creation of rules to govern its natural winter sport," he writes in the Toronto Star. "Not so many years ago there was only the Quebec and Ontario rules to consider, and as the only difference consisted in the offside regarding the starting and non-skating of a player on-side, the difference was so slight that it amounted to very little. Quebec rules that a player must always be on his own side of the play and could not be skated on-side when as the Ontario rule permitted this."

Mr. Sutherland continues that after their college days at McGill had closed, Lester and Frank Patrick, pioneered in the western coast and established hockey in Victoria, Vancouver, Seattle, etc.,and they set out to manufacture rules "that in their opinion would be more pleasing to the masses, to whom they catered, than the staid uniform rules of the east afforded. Thus it happened that when the teams from the east and west met, no contest for the Stanley Cup emblematic of the Canadian professional championship, part of the games were played under eastern rules and part under western rules. Consequently, there gradually crept into eastern professional hockey the cumbersome rules that have done so much towards causing the present chaotic condition that exists and which is so mystifying to many spectators, particularly those who attend both professional and amateur games."

He points out that despite all the changes that have occurred in the playing rules of the professional game, the amateur authorities have tinkered as very little with the rules that they use, today just as interesting to the fans who follow amateur hockey as they were in their fathers, who either followed or played the game twenty-five or thirty years ago.

Some of the western rules Mr. Sutherland says, such as permitting the pucks to run the rink walls on an across over, similar position—seem to have been a good proposition and have been adopted by the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association authorities.

"For any such other practical rule or rules that came out of the west the Patricks are entitled to all the credit," he says. "The trouble appears to have been that there has been an undue amount of tinkering with the rules and it is high time that the professional and amateur authorities get together and decide upon a universal set of rules applicable alike to professional and amateur, which innovation would undoubtedly be met with the greatest approval from hockey followers throughout the country.

"The recent arrangement between the pro and amateur authorities whereby all rink surfaces in Canada and the United States will be marked off alike, is a good step in the right direction and should be followed by a conference on the playing rules that should bring similarly happy results."

Here and There

The fourth Eastern International Dog Derby to be held from Quebec city February 21, 22 and 23, promises to be the most keenly contested ever held. It is expected that over 70 teams will be entered for the race.

Christmas tree shipments from Canada to the United States ran to 450,000 over Canadian Pacific lines last year, and present expectation is that this number will be equalled at least this year. Revenue to farmers of the province from this source ran to $100,000 last year.

Four carloads of silver foxes, valued at $750,000, have left Prince Edward Island in one shipment for the Western States: Wyoming, Utah, Colorado, Oregon and Washington. Viewed as a livestock shipment, it is said to be a record one. A number of prize winners were among the pack.

Dog teams will be used this winter by the Hudson's Bay Mariand organization to prosecute oil development work in Rainbow field in North-eastern Alberta. This is the area where the quest for oil started following a favorable report by Dr. G. S. Hume, head of the Dominion Geological Survey.

Christmas travel over the Canadian Pacific routes to the Old Country has been heavier this year than ever before experienced. Special trains have been run from Winnipeg directly to the ship's side at Saint John, N.B. The westerners credit this heavy movement to England and Christmas to the excellent conditions that prevail throughout the west.

The hundred settler families from the British Isles brought out by the Canadian Pacific Land Settlers to form the Clan Donald Colony are doing splendidly, according to a field supervisor's report just submitted. When they landed at their destination they found farms, houses, barns and equipment ready so that no time was lost in preliminaries.

Turkish tobacco, grown in Alberta, is better than that grown in Turkey or Greece, according to Mr. Baker here, who grew 1,000 pounds as an experiment this season. He plotted out three-quarters of an acre to ten varieties of tobacco seed. The crop was harvested ripe before the coming of frost, and of the ten varieties Turkish, White Barley and Orinoco thrived best.

Nearly 1,050 overseas vessels entered the Harbor of Montreal and over 350 coastal vessels docked there in the season just closed. This makes a very favorable showing compared with the 1,258 overseas and 215 coastal vessels of the previous season. During the period of open navigation over 113,850,000 bushels of grain were shipped from the port and flour shipments totalled 2,000,000 barrels.

Canada scored again at the Chicago Exposition when the blue ribbon grand championship in the Clydesdale stallion division went to Forest Favorite, owned by Haggerty and Black of Belle Plaine, Saskatchewan. Last year the University of Saskatchewan took the coveted honor with Green Meadow Footsteps. This year, it is said, the veteran Canadian stallion was an easy winner over all others.

"There is better hunting today in the Canadian Rockies than was the case when white men first began systematic exploration of them nearly fifty years ago," said Tom E. Wilson, of Banff, one of the outstanding pioneer mountain guides, when interviewed at Canadian Pacific headquarters recently. Mr. Wilson was the first white man to discover Lake Louise and Yoho Valley. A plague or staffie has been erected in the Yoho Valley in honor of him, by the Trail Riders of the Canadian Rockies.

BALLET REMAINS RUSS SPECTACLE

Moscow, Jan. 20.—Russia, the land of the ballet, maintains its dancing spectacles unimpaired in beauty and originality, even though the seats are beyond the reach of the average citizens.

Performances embrace all the old as well as modern ballets are produced nightly at the National Theatre here and in Leningrad. Critics assert that for technique, rhythm, beauty of costumes and execution the Russian ballet is unequalled.

In Serious Profession

In Russia ballet dancing is regarded as a serious profession, on an equal plane with dramatic acting or operatic singing. A course of eight years is required before a girl or a youth is qualified to take even a minor part in the ensemble.

A large ballet school is maintained by the state, where children from the age of 8 to 16 years are put through a thorough course of gymnastics, calisthenics, dancing, pantomimics, music, acting and esthetics. Each set of muscles of the legs and arms is trained separately, and particular stress is laid on the control and movement of the spine.

Many Contain Five Hundred

Ballet spectacles in which a hundred or six hundred dancers partici pate are not uncommon in Moscow. The costumes, as brilliant from the old Tsarist regime, are of beauty, variety and taste. The settings and scenery, too, are of a high artistic and mechanical order. There is one ballet in which castles, parks, waterfalls, lakes and mountains are shown with impressive effect. In such harmony and co-ordination do the vast numbers of dancers perform that the audience has the impression of a single great entity on the stage working with precision.

Although the ballet makes a great appeal to the untutored masses, being spectacularly the eye and not for the intellect, few Russians can afford to patronize it. The price for seats in gallery of the National Theatre at Moscow ranges from 75 cents to $1.50, while a first-class seat costs $4. To offset the expense, trade unions issue tickets to their members at half-price.

DISAPPROVES OF THE HABIT OF MURDERING

Moscow, Jan. 21.—Three Communist students, two of whom are brothers, were sentenced to death today for assaulting the cashier of the Moscow Trade School and murdering his wife. The court imposed the extreme penalty "as an example to other youths". The case stirred public interest considerably because the 16 year old fiancee of the youngest defendant committed suicide in despair over his erring ways.

PRINCESS SELLS IN MARKET

London, Eng. Jan. 20.—At a pitch in the Caledonian Market, a Russian Princess, niece of one of Napoleon's generals who took part in the retreat from Moscow, sells antiques, prunes and curios.

She is Princess Marie Leon, a tall, aristocratic woman, whose mother was a Polish princess. She is not a refugee but has earned her living in the open market for several years.

"I was pitchforked into working for my bread," she says. "I was studying art but the death of my parents left me without a penny. At first I tried photography, but it was hardly lucrative. I have had a stand in the market for two years."

Princess Marie said she does all her own work, packs up her "stock" at the end of the day and wheels it away from the Market in a wheelbarrow.

JAPAN ACTS TO PROHIBIT POISON LIQUOR SELLING

Tokyo, Jan. 20.—A campaign against moonshiners and bootleggers in Japan, whose product sometimes has fatal effects, has been started by the metropolitan police bureau of Tokyo. The report of the municipal health section discloses that 62 persons died from drinking poisonous alcohol in the Japanese capital last year.

While there is no prohibition in Japan, there is a duty of 100 per cent on all imported whiskeys and other spirituous liquors. The duty, with the retail profits added, brings drinking costs here within the neighborhood of the price of illegal wet goods in America. Consequently, the Japanese moonshiner and bootlegger.

The authorities state that almost every popular foreign brand of Scotch, rye and gin is imitated in Japan. Many of the bogus brands are deadly poisons owing to the ignorance of the native imitators, as to the difference between grain and wood alcohol. Few foreigners have become victims of the deadly concoctions because they patronize the high test class bars and retail liquor dealers. Much of the illicit liquor finds its way to the cheap bars and tea houses and the Japanese are the sufferers.

BOBBED HEADS IS BIG MISTAKE

London, Jan. 20.—Bobbed heads are all a mistake, in the opinion of Sir William Orpen, president of the International Society of Sculptors, Painters and Gravers, and one of Britain's most distinguish artists.

"My conclusion is, that women should never have cut their hair," said Sir William, his theory being that women's heads are too badly shaped, and their faces too large.

"Bobbing was bad enough," the artist declared, "but shingling is worse—and as for the Eton crop, I feel quite uncomfortable when I have to sit next to it."

Sir William believes short hair is merely a passing fad. "It can't last," he asserted, "because it isn't beautiful and exciting enough."

From an artistic viewpoint short hair is not at all inspiring. The artist said: "The modern shingled woman—at any rate in the indigestible mass—will never inspire a type in art comparable to the Ancient Greek type, for instance."

"Of course there is, the rare woman who has a beautifully shaped head and does look wonderful bobbed," Sir William admitted.

MAROONS WIN CLOSE VICTORY FROM FRONTENACS IN THRILLING GAME--NOW TIED WITH CORNWALL

"Gilly" Goyer Scores 4 of 5 Goals, Heads Group in That Department

SCORE 5-4

Kingston Make Brilliant Effort in Last Ten Minutes To Knot It Up

By S. R. C.

The Belleville Maroons managed to squeeze out a win over the Kingston Frontenacs last evening but it was only by the narrowest of margins and at the final bell the locals were on the long end of a 5-4 score with the Kingston team pressing hard with five men up on the line trying to even it up.

It was believed that the Maroons would win by a large score playing in their own ice coop, but the visitors with a weakened line-up forced them to the extreme limit to squeeze out a victory. They held Eddie Thomas boys scoreless in the final chukker while they bagged two themselves and made a great bid to pull the fat out of the fire, and main tained their reputation of fast finishers Belleville had a decided edge in the first two periods but took a decided slump in the last spasm. They certainly won't win any championships on the form displayed last night and they are now faced with two hard games next week in Brockville on Monday evening and in Cornwall on Friday. As a result of last evening's victory the Maroons are tied with Cornwall for first places, each team having won four and lost one game. They can jump into the leading position by grabbing two wins next week.

The ice was in fair condition considering the mild weather of the past two days but the going was heavy and the surface was covered with a heavy layer of sugary snow at the end of each recess

Heavy ice generally tends to promote rough hockey but such was not the case last night when "Mike" Rodden was only forced to impose four penalties. However, toward the last few minutes the boys were beginning to lay a little heavy on the hickory and had the time been extended the penalty box would probably have been populated.

The Belleville team have one bad policy that is the fault of carrying the puck down the wing and into the corners instead of boring straight in on the net.

Providing they win Monday night's game in Brockville they will have plenty of time to get in shape for the Cornwall game and three nights practice should correct most of the rough spots.

There were passes galore that were orcastated and most of them were directly in front of the cage. This was particularly noticeable on the part of the Belleville players but the blame for this can be laid to the soft ice. At least three speed game would have been in order had the wings been in line.

Belleville were robbed of two tallies in the first period, one when "Dave" Whalen slammed the rubber home but the Kingston goal judge refused to allow it and the second when Bill Green scored on a combination play but Rodden called the play back, claiming it was off-side. well maybe it was, but it sure looked O.K.

Whalen's goal was of the legitimate sort, the puck lying three inches back of the blue line but Brooks grabbed it and tossed it aside. A bowl was raised by the Belleville spectators in the west end of the rink. From all appearances Green's goal was the result of a perfect on side play.

"Chick" Mundell who has been making the Frontenacs was not satisfied with Brooks' showing in the first two periods and donned the pads himself in the third period and "Chick's" presence had a steadying influence on the whole team when they played their best hockey of the evening. Brooks looked decidedly bad on some of the shots that beat him although he did make some masterful saves on some difficult shots. Mundell had fourteen drives directed at him during his term in the net and turned every one of them aside. At least four were brilliant stops after the Maroons had broken through the front line of defence. The home team had fifty-three shots on the goal in the three periods while Brown was called upon forty-three times, four of them registering.

Play in the first period was tame in comparison to the last two stanzas, Belleville having a decided edge but when "Mike" Rodden called them back for the second canto the boys put a little more life into the play The third spasm was the best of the trio and the fans were given plenty of action.

1. GOYER SCORES FOUR

"Gilly" Goyer increased his goal-scoring average by counting four out of the five goals for them pretty hard-luck efforts which caught Brooks napping. "Gilly" played a fine game at centre ice and outplayed Lawlor by a wide margin. He was continually snaring a loose puck to skate away and leave the Kingston players standing aghast in the van.

Goyer is by long odds the best centre player in the loop although some tricky boys have been here this winter. He is still topping the list in the matter of scoring.

"Dave" Whalen and "Stan" Hagerman skated themselves dizzy on the wings and kept time checks pretty well foiled in the main. Both boys are adept in the art of playing the boards and outgunned the Frontenac flank men time after time by dint of speed. With any breaks in all each should have been credited with at least a goal apiece.

In direct contrast to the game in Kingston, was the manner in which the Maroons battled it. At the Harp arena they seemed to be stuck in their tracks and made no effort to retrieve the rubber after it was lost, but last night they skated themselves ragged chasing the Frontenac players down the ice after a rush was broken up. This relieves the fatigue of a heap of work when the forwards follow the enemy back.

Bowen gave a much better exhibition than in Kingston although he was hard pressed plenty of hard shots down there. At one time pucks were literally raining on him but he stopped them all with his stick, hands, and pads. Bowen is surely one of the big assets of the team and by holding up his end of the load nobly. He is not always afforded the protection that he deserves on rebound shots.

One of the shots he took on the pads and it glanced off into the net and another crossed off his skate but taking everything into consideration he turned in a beautiful game.

The Green-Goyer defence were a big improvement over their display on Wednesday night. The Frontenacs found this pair a little hard to fathom and using discretion as the better part of valor drove them from the blue line rather than try to carry it in. "Soup" bounced them off like a rubber ball and the visitors were a little wary of meeting the "big train". "Bill" Green really gave his best exhibition of the current season and made some dangerous rushes on the Kingston goal. "Bill" breaks fast and is going like an express when he bears in on the defence.

Jack Rooney will likely finish the season on his showing last night. Rooney carries considerable weight with him and can skate real fast. He was always at home when a puss was handed him.

"Bunny" Frechette hung up one goal and played an otherwise perfect game Frechette loses no time in cutting loose when he is released from the box. He possesses one of the wickedest shots on the team.

OLD JOE AGAIN

"Joe" Smith who was one of the bright lights in the Kingston game played another smart game last night. Smith is an artist in the modes of side-checking and seemed his way in and around the Belleville players in a manner which cut fear into the hearts of the spectators. Smith is truly a wonderful player, he has not slipped an inch in all his years of hockey. A hard worker and a clever player Joe is, he is admired and complimented. He carries a good share of the burden on the Frontenac attack.

"Chummy" Lawlor is another boy who gave a remarkably fine exhibition. Law lor teams up well with Smith and tends more than his look fool foolish.

Notes on the Game

Bellringer who was injured in Wednesday night's game was present but this time in the role of rink keeper. His shoulder was encased in bandages. He would have been of great assistance had he been on the ice.

Mushmore was also absent and his place was also hard to fill although Boyd made a good job of it. This boy looks like a comer.

The reserved section was completely sold out and the downright action was enjoyed two deep. It was one of the best crowds of the season.

The smoke nuisance is one of the big problems to contend with. The air was thick with a blue haze from the cigarettes smoked. Surely the fans can abstain from smoking for an hour or two. Tickets will be given to the fans at the end of each period if they wish to smoke outside of the rink for the odd puff It is not fair to the players and the spectators might look for their welfare in the matter. Let's cut it out.

A regular traffic jam reared after the game and many of the motorists who were minus chains experienced difficulty in negotiating the slippery Church St. hill.

The Argyle Light Infantry band would liven up proceedings to a great extent between periods. Why not enlist the musicians for the next home game? The band used to have the old familiar melody "Hail, hail" at least once during the season.

In a close and exciting game the spectators are anxious as to the time left to play. In Kingston white cards are exhibited by the timers after the first ten minutes in each period denoting the time left to play, while in Brockville they have an electric lighted sign board which tells the time and scores registered by both teams.

"Bunnee" Holway was in fine form and deserves a lion's share of the credit for his work in preventing several scores Holway started a campaign of body-checking against the home team but a couple of jolts from "Soup" Goyer and Hagerman and he was not quite so anxious to hand them out. He was given the laugh by the spectators when he tried to bump Hagerman but was sent sprawling on the ice by the chunky black-haired right winger.

Boyd is made to look foolish on some of those that got by him. but he looked like a "pro" on a number of others Mundell was an improvement over Brooks and the ex-Queen's boy can't be taught a great deal about that end of the game.

Panet looked like a novice in his efforts to carry the puck and resembled a truck horse on skates. This position is one of the weak links in the Kingston team. Panet acted as though he were afraid to come in, and seldom crossed the blue line. The Belleville forwards were circling around his end at will and Joe Smith scored a soft one that Bowen should have saved. Hagerman lost another chance when Green gave him a pass at the goal mouth, "Gilly" accepted his way through the Frontenac team to rifle the rubber up into the corner, "Dave" Whalen was given the nod for a minor infraction and Lawlor followed him a few moments later.

L. Goyer's back-hand shot from a scrimmage made Brooks look bad for No 4. Hagerman was not in position to took another pass into the cage. Joe Smith once again was the marksman when he drove the puck past the goalie on a pass from the corner. "Gilly" flipped another past Brooks for his fourth goal.

The Frontenacs had it over the home team in the final session, and Mundell ordered the whole five up on the firing line.

"Stan" Hagerman crashed into the boards after carrying the puck down but after a short recess, he reappeared. King Bowen made it 3-3 on Boyd's pretty goal. This goal gave them new courage and with a victory in sight they plugged hard. "Chummy" Lawlor got the fourth within four minutes of time. The losers were still pressing for the equalizer when the gong sounded.

LUMBER FIRM TO ESTABLISH MILL HERE IN SPRING

Houston Co., Limited, To Establish Mill Here in Spring

Manager J. O. Herity of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce, during the course of the Annual Meeting of the Chamber of Commerce on Friday evening last dwelt at considerable length on the several new industries which Belleville was fortunate to have obtained during the year, which were in some part, at the near future. Among these, Mr. Herity mentioned the Houston Lumber Company of Tweed, paying tribute to the integrity of its management, and referring to the firm as one which was well and favorably known in the city, and one which could be depended upon to advance the interests of the city.

This recommendation from our Industrial Commissioner and Chamber of Commerce Manager is sufficient indication for Belleville people to realize the value to the city as to the acquisition of the Houston Company. This company, feeling the need of locating in a greater centre of population where building is a major activity," as Mr. Herity's report states was decided to establish its head office in Belleville, as well as mills and factories. To this end purchase has been made of the former Steel Company of Canada property in the South part of the city. Machinery will be moved in and set up during the present winter, and in the spring a large force of workmen will be on hand to operate the planing mills and other portions of the plant. The Tweed branch will still be maintained, but, as Belleville the Company hopes for a greatly extended business."

ONE IDEAL WAY TO AVOID COLDS AND OTHER ILLS

Goloshes In Proper Repair Provide Dry Feet and Health

Well, here's the January thaw! you've been waiting for, come with a vengeance just when we were beginning to think there wasn't going to be any. And since January thaws mean water and lots of it, and water means wet feet—forerunners of colds, grippe, pneumonia, bronchitis and other equally disagreeable and undesirable ills, then the logical conclusion to deduce is that one most necessarily keep his or her feet warm to be healthy and happy and avoid doctors' bills and perhaps funeral directors' services.

So here's a suggestion: You likely have goloshes but by this time they're probably becoming rather worn and have possibly developed a hole or two, and if they have there's going to let in the water with the above mentioned results and ruined shoes and socks as well.

Bert Adams can repair those goloshes for you, and make them good as new. It isn't expensive either, and consider all the trouble and expense it may save you. If they require re-soling you may have that done too. So take a look at them, then bring them to Bert at the Footbridge Garage for repairs.

DUCO RE-FINISHING YOUR CAR MAY SAVE YOU MANY DOLLARS

A STORY THAT WILL INTEREST YOU

"Hello Jerry."

"Hello, Mac."

"Pretty cold, Jerry."

"Yes, pretty cold alright, Mac—heard it went down to 16 below last night—felt like 40 to me, walking down this morning."

"Walking, eh. What did you with the old bus Jerry?"

"Oh, I put her up for the winter—she was running alright, but I thought I had better put her away before she froze up and limit be about 16 places. The old boat is beginning to look pretty disreputable anyway, so I guess I had better turn her in, in the Spring on a new one."

"Thats what I thought too, Jerry, a while ago, but now—now—by a long shot. I saw one of those Duco Refinishing jobs that Stephenson has been doing in the Greenleaf Building on Station Street—went around and had a talk with him, and believe me, I gave him my car a hurry to "dash" it. He is doing the job now. I picked the colors to suit myself, a snappy dustone effect, and he assured me that he would make a real job of it; the Spring rush isn't upon him yet, you know, and so I'll have it in a few days—all ready to take the road in the Spring."

"Sounds like a good idea, Mac, never thought of it before. My car is a little short too, and the upholstering and mechanism are good. Is it an expensive job to have done?"

"Not at all; they do a real job, and its easy on your pocket-book. True, its a little more expensive than an ordinary paint job, but you get just about what you pay for, and this finish will last indefinitely."

"Guess its a wonderful finish, Mac, otherwise the largest car manufacturers wouldn't have adopted it as standard finish on their models. I understand it's immune to the effects of heat, cold, rain, snow ice, etc.,—practically everything—and that it actually improves with use. Think I'll call Stephenson on the phone and leave a talk with him; what's his number do you know?"

"His phone number is 1567, Jerry, you won't regret dealing with him either, he'll give you real service, and the kind of treatment you like."

"Thanks for the tips, Mac." It'll save me quite money."

"Welcome, old man, so long."

"So long, Mac, see you again."

MODERN BAKERY FILLS PUBLIC NEED AND MERITS PATRONAGE

Any business that fills a genuine public need—and fills it properly—is bound to succeed. That these words are true cannot be denied—one might say they amount to a truism. It holds true in any line and is the secret of business success.

For example, consider what we eat; we must eat, and nowadays, with modern bakeries fast replacing home-cooking, the modern bakery is replacing to a great extent, and so is an essential.

Tarlington's Bakery, producing highest grade doughnuts, cakes and pastry, in scrupulously clean surroundings, and from purest materials, is fulfilling the other requirement—that of properly satisfying a public need.

A modern bakery this, in every sense, and a growing one, for the reason that it offers highest quality in cakes combined with low price.

BUSINESS COLLEGE HAS RECORD OF 69 YEARS' SUCCESS

Interesting indeed it was a few days ago for the visitor, attending the annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce; a revelation to the "man about town" to have reviewed for him at the meeting the progress the city had made in the twelve months just past. In business, in industry, in community work, were reviewed in activities throughout 1926, and the assets of the city, as it were, taken stock of. The public spirited men connected with this organization have been working effectual by but quietly; they have been advertising Belleville, its desirability as an industrial and business centre and generally, as a good place in which to live.

Among the most desirable assets any community can have is a recognized educational institution; it is basic to the formation of a business centre, for if the leading men of a community have not had the advantages offered by a business school of training, how can that community entertain the hope of becoming a leading business centre.

And Belleville is fortunate in having in the city just such an institution as that—is the Ontario Business College. Established about fifty-nine years ago in Belleville and throughout the Provinces of Canada, but extending to Mexico, South America, the West Indies and other distant points.

Significant too, are the letters, received almost daily by the capable president of the school, Mr. I. L. Moore, each and every one of which is evidence of the strongest kind testifying to the thoroughness of the training successful men in all walks of business life received at O.B.C., and an appreciation of it—for the thorough training in any line is an essential; and perhaps only when a student has long since completed his scholastic course, and entered the world of business, can he fully appreciate what his foundation work in school has really meant to him.

Stories of success like these then, not only reflect credit on our O. B. C. but their authors are men and women who are bringing credit to the city through their accomplishment.

More than a business is this institution, for perhaps more than any business has done or could do, it has advertised Belleville far and wide, as a city possessing an educational school of unsurpassed training facilities. It has done much to make Belleville known as a real educational centre, and as such is a rare asset to our city.

And so twenty-three years success under the Presidency of Mr. I. L. Moore finds O.B.C. today in a flourishing and ever growing state, with a reputation of one hundred and fifty students, including young men and women from Quebec, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, the West Indies, etc., receiving the same thorough business training which has helped bring success to so many others in after life. Congratulations, Principal Moore, and may the years to come be as successful as the years that have gone before.

CHEVROLET CARS PRODUCED REACH 3 MILLION MARK

Plant Now Has Facilities to Turn Out Million Cars Yearly

Marking The latest spectacular achievement in its history as the world's largest builder of three-speed transmission cars, the Chevrolet Motor Company today announces the production of its 3,000,000th car.

Detailed in its Janies gray Deco and feathundry surfaced in Pistachio green, the milestone car flashed off the production line with scarcely more formality than attended the de- but of number 2,000,001, which follow- ed nine seconds later.

Immediately after the final inspec- tion, the 3,000,000th car purred away to give room to the long line of modern coaches coming behind it. They were moving up with clock-like precl- sion to the final inspection post.

A Sanitized with balloon tires, full erowaw fenders, bullet-type head lamps, streamline beaded Fisher body and other improvements incorporated this year, the coach displayed a dis- tinct advance over its most illustrious predecessor, the 2,000,000th Chevrolet.

The 3,000,000th model was built after 14 years of production and the 2,000,000th only 18 months later, an indication of the rapid growth of the company, which now has production facilities prepared to build $1,000,000 units a year.

THE WINTER JOYS OF OLD QUEBEC

Old King Winter seems to put on a cloak of benign joviality in the hospi- table ante-chere of Ancient Quebec. His brusque, blustery ways seem the very essence of goodfellowship and you thrill to his touch while jingling sleigh bells play their sweet accompaniment.

On the Citadel, the Terrace, and the fields and roads around the city, you may enjoy winter sports as never before. The very air seems like wine and adds zest to every sport. Skiing, tobogganing, skating, sleigh drives, glorious, health-giving frolics in the snow are part and parcel of the carnival of winter en- joyment.

For real, old-time winter fun, there is no place like Quebec and Canadian Na- tional train service will take you there in comfort.

AS MUCH SNOW NOW AS TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO

Chicago, Ills., Jan. 21.—There is as much snow nowadays as there was twenty-five years ago, despite popu- lar opinion to the contrary, Prof. Henry G. Cox, government weather forecaster here says.

The difference is that today thous- ands of automobiles beat down the snow, and the dirt accumulated in the atmosphere above a busy world mixes with flakes as they fall and makes them melt faster.

The seasons are not changing, Prof. Cox maintained in an address pre- pared for the radio, and he gave as evidence that the climate is here to stay.

Farmers are pretty good weather forecasters but they can learn more of the morrow from loud speakers than from sunset skies, he continued. Through broadcasting of the govern- ment's forecast, the farmer can be prepared for the victimizations of the weather and plan his day's work in advance.

The Assets of the Company increased by $ceven and Three-Quarter Million Dollars, and at the end of December reached the large sum of $67,553,709. Of the amount, Sixty-Two $16 Million Dollars is invested in Government Government Guaranteed and Municipal Bonds. First Mortgages on Improved Real Estate comprises nearly Thirteen Million Dollars.

Surplus earnings in 1926 were very satisfactory and have made possible a further increase in the seal of dividends payable to policyholders.

ON SALE AT OSTROMS DRUG STORE

TO DEPRIVE THE STICK-UP MEN OF THEIR GUNS

Chicago, Ills., Jan. 21.—Taking the gun from the gunman by statute is the plan public chiefs and prosecut- ing attorneys of the Middle West will discuss here January 28-29.

A conference to recommend legis- lation which will prevent criminals from obtaining guns, "without being under restriction in preventing the possession of small arms by those who should properly have them" has been issued by Newton Atlee, chairman of the small arms regu- lation committee of the National Crime Commission.

Use of machine-guns in gang war- fare also will receive attention. Mr. Allen and the committee now has before it a suggestion that machine guns should be manufactured for sale to the law enforcement agencies only.

It is not planned to draft a sample bill for legislatures to copy, but rather to set forth the general prin- ciples upon which the desired legis- lation should be founded.

Representatives of the War Depart- ment, of banks and of small firearms companies will attend the confer- ence, besides to the law enforce- ment officers.

KICKLESS CHARLESTON

London, Jan. 22.—London has two charlestons now, the "kicking" and the "flat". Many dancing teachers hold that the "kicking" version is to have fostered a type which they deem more graceful and fitting for a ballroom.

Mitchel Steffe, of Lavele, Fa., was given a jail sentence for killing a beaver.

THE LONDON LIFE SETS NEW RECORD

Wrote Nearly $75,000,000 Insurance in Canada in Year

A record for solid and substantial growth that is unprecedented in Can- ada among the larger companies has been set by The London Life Insur- ance Company in that it has been doubling its size every four years on the average. In 1914 it had $20,500,- 000 of insurance in force and this has grown until at the end of 1926 it was over $251,000,000.

The new insurance written in 1926 established the high water mark of $73,758,000. This huge volume was all written in Canada and is a remark- able showing in view of the fact that the Company depends entirely upon its own field force for its business. A very large proportion is represented by policies for substantial amounts on the lives of business and professional men. This accounts, in part, for the average policy more than doubling in size in the past ten years.

The progress in all other depart- ments of the business is equally as splendid. On invested assets, which are all of an unspeculative nature, being chiefly Real Estate First Mort- gages and Government and Municipal Bonds, the interest yield of 6.71% was obtained. This enables the Company to increase in 1927 its remarkably high dividend scale to policy holders, which over the past decade has not been excelled.

The surplus earnings, due to careful administration, sound investments, and a favorable mortality experience are the largest in the history of the Company. The Company's Free Sur- plus on December 31, 1926 was $4,291,000 in excess of the require- ments of the Dominion Insurance Act after making full provision for pay- ments to policy holders on the new increased scale.

One of the features of the year was the introduction of a new series of policies called The Duplex which blend non-participating with partici- pating insurance and give to the policy holder the advantage of both great systems of life insurance. At the annual meeting an announcement was made of the introduction of another new series of policies called The Earning Power Series, which will provide life insurance protection dur- ing the productive period of life at an initial premium approximately one-half the usual rate for Ordinary Life policies. They were issued on the annual dividend basis and con- tain a Conversion Privilege which make them flexible so that the policy holder can fit his policy to possible changed conditions. This announce- ment is in line with The London Life's program of offering "guaran- teed low cost" insurance, which in no small sense is responsible for its out- standingly splendid records.

"The White Empresses of the Pacific"

A striking note of interest-comes in a one of the first announcements for 1927 from the office of the Chair- man of the Canadian Pacific Steam- ships, Mr. E. W. Beatty, "The White Empresses of the Pacific" will again be the connecting transporta- tion link between Canada and the Orient. The company's palatial fleet of monster steamships on the Pacific ocean will assume its former glory of being garbed in white.

The Empress of Asia will arrive in Vancouver on Jan. 24, and will be the first to arrive in Canadian waters again as a ship in white paint. Accord- ing to the official order, the white paint will be topped off by a suitable shade of Pacific blue beyond the silver line streak of the vessels. This was used when the three-funnel fleet was formerly painted white, and the effect acclaimed the ships among the most attractive in world commerce.

On Feb. 12 the blue-ribbon ship of the Pacific, the 21,500 ton Empress of Canada, will arrive in Vancouver clad in white. Holding the Pacific speed record of fifteen days, twenty- one hours from Honghong to Van- couver and from Yokohama to the Canadian port in eight days, ten hours and fifty-three minutes, the blue line from stem to stern will be a fitting tribute to the flagship's power and to Canada's entertaining trade relations with the Far East.

Arriving in Vancouver on March 6, the Empress of Russia, the 16,900 ton sister-ship to the Empress of Asia, will be the third to arrive after annual overhaul in Hongkong and will complete the fleet to be known as "The White Empresses of the Pacific."

As Royal Mail ships these Cana- dian Pacific Empresses have been supreme in the trade between America and Asia, being the largest and fastest on the Pacific route. Their service is augmented by being the important link between Europe and the Orient by one transportation effect vocalized the ships among the most attractive in world commerce.

Hon. Vincent Massey Says He Has High Ideals For Post

NOT WEAKEN EMPIRE

Expects to Promote Trade and Solve International Problems

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 24.—The Canadian Empire "ability to be established by Hon. Vincent Massey in Washington, as for Canada is "necessity and not a luxury" was a point emphasized by Mr. Massey today in an address before the Canadian Club. The newly appointed Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary for Canada to United States outlined the conditions and precedents that brought about his establishment of this office and his own status and aspirations in relation to the work of the important office.

He pointed out that "treaties" had been hitherto an unfamiliar word in diplomacies of Canada, but the functions of such an office were essentially the same as those of an embassy. "It is nevertheless a striking innovation" he declared.

"For the first time Canada is about to enter into full diplomatic relations with another nation."

Mr. Massey discussed the statement that the entry of Dominions into diplomacy will jangle the diplomatic unity of the Empire and therefore may threaten Imperial Unity itself. He declared that the new machinery being set up would not weaken this tie but would have contrary effect. He short he said the functions of the new office would be "promotion of trade, settlement of international questions and other matters of public importance. There also will be duties connected with business individuals.

The scenario is based on the adventures of the two boys on their way from Canada in order that Young might compete in the marathon race. Young is reported to have a contract for a similar film under consideration."

CAROL WILL BE ROUMANIA'S KING

Ferdinand Will Abdicate That He Has Won His Fight

Paris, Jan. 24.—King Ferdinand of Roumania, it is stated is reported reaching Roumanian circles here, has won his fight for the political and dynastic domination of his own kingdom.

It is now practically certain, it is stated, that his beloved son, Prince Carol will succeed him on the throne in a few weeks, Ferdinand abdicating in order to proceed to France to wage a battle for his life against the disease which has been undermining his health for years. Meanwhile it is regarded as assured that Carol and his wife, Princess Helen, from whom he has been estranged for more than a year, will be reconciled somewhere in Italy.

All this means, it is said, the removal of former Premier J.C. Bratiano as the invisible dictator of Roumania and the elimination of Queen Mavie as a power in the royal and political councils of the country.

The reports reaching Roumanian circles in Paris say these results were attained at conferences held in Bucharest Saturday and Sunday between Premier Averscu and Bratiano.

THEATRE HOURS ARE PROFITABLE

N.Y. Burglar Netted $28,350 In 3 Visits to Wealthy Homes

New York, Jan. 24—A burglar with a determination and taste in jewelry and fur wraps, who visited Riverside Drive apartments while their owners were at the theatre, was credited today by police with recent robberies in which over $23,000 was stolen.

The "long distance cat-burglar" first turned up at the apartment of Abraham Kaufman at 801 Riverside Drive on the night of January 7, it became known today.

Mr. Kaufman was out. When he returned he was out $7,000 in jewellery and one fur coat valued at $5,000. The jewellery consisted of a $6,000 woman's platinum diamond ring, a $1,000 platinum pin set with thirty-nine small diamonds, five and seventeen emeralds, and a $500 platinum antique wrist watch with seven by-five ruby and diamond drops.

While detectives were looking for the burglar he paid a call on the apartment of Alexander Diamond, of 160 Riverside Drive, on January 14. Mrs. Diamond was somewhat more liberally studded with diamonds, valued at $2,000 a $900 Hudson seal coat and an $850 ermine cape.

The man was last heard from at 837 Riverside Drive, three doors from the first apartment he plundered. Here he took jewellery and clothing valued at $8,000. The total to date is $23,350.

Police said that the latest opportunity planned his work with care, usually making certain that the family had gone to the theatre and that the maid was safely out of the way. He was not seen in any of the three cases so far recorded and he left behind him no very valuable clues.

She judged the age of the children by their size.

W. J. HUME DINED BY HIS FRIENDS SATURDAY NIGHT

Group of Belleville Men Gave Farewell Party at Hotel Quinte

HARRY HATCH HERE

Guest of Honor Presented With Remembrances and Good Wishes

Belleville honored two outstanding young men Saturday night—young men who have fought their way to the top of the ladder in Canada's industrial and financial life. The occasion was a farewell dinner to Mr. W. J. Hume (known as Billy to most of Belleville), given by a group of his friends to mark his acceptance of the General Managership and Vice-Presidency of the Hiram Walker Distillery Company, which the city and district was Mr. Harry Hatch, President of the Walker Distillery, another Belleville boy of whom the city and county is proud, Mr. Hatch stopped over on his way from Montreal to assist in the tributes to his partner and boyhood friend.

The keynote of the evening was struck by Major Fenton who stressed the fact that these two men had achieved success of the highest order without leaving their own country, "Canada could not spare such fine types of citizens, he said, and while Belleville showed their passing, it was consoling to know that they are still Canadians. "We are good losers, though," Mr. Fenton said, "and rejoice with Windsor we their gain, instead of bewailing our own loss."

Presentations

At the dinner Mr. Hume was presented with a gold mounted cane and a silver cigarette case, simply inscribed to "W. J. Hume from his Belleville Friends." A bouquet of lovely roses was sent up to Mrs. Hume.

George H. McArthur, made the presentation speech as an old friend and fellow worker. He said many nice things about the great work which the crowd enthusiastically applauded.

Mr. Hume was visibly affected by the warmth of his greeting when he rose to reply. Three times he started to speak and was forced to sit down while his friends cheered and sang "For He's A Jolly Good Fellow" with all sorts of variations. No outsider could possibly get such a reception from a Belleville crowd—it is reserved for our own.

Coming Back Often

There was no doubt that Mr. Hume was pleased and touched by it

MAN LOSES LIFE IN STRANGE WAY

Thrown From Cutter Into River When Horse Runs Away

Smith's Falls, Jan. 24.—A drowning fatality marked by strange circumstances occurred here Saturday when James Dalgleish, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Dalgleish of this town, lost his life in Rideau River.

Mr. Dalgleish was driving in a cutter on a bridge over the rapids when the horse took fright. It is believed he was thrown out, striking the bridge rail and falling into the swift, icy waters of the river.

When the driverless horse and cutter turned into a yard a short distance from the investigation was started. Dalgleish's body was found in less than two feet of water at noon.

Mrs. Dalgleish is at present in the Public Hospital, where she gave birth to a baby boy one week ago.

JANUARY SESSION COUNTY COUNCIL OPENS TUESDAY

Warden To Be Selected For Ensuing Year—Other Business

The inaugural session of Hastings County Council opens tomorrow afternoon in Shire Hall and will continue throughout the week winding up with a big joint banquet in conjunction with the Chamber of Commerce on Friday night. The chief business of the session will be the selection of a Warden for the coming year. It is known that there is a keen fight for the coveted position. It is believed that Col. Roscoe Vandervater who was a recent candidate in West Hastings for the Dominion Government and who defeated W. A. Reid for the Deerskip in Dominion Parliament by over 1,000 majority rune has it that Henry Harryett who has been a member of the County Council for some years is hopeful of occupying the throne. Both are well known and have been active in Municipal affairs for many years.

R. H. Brett, the newly-elected Reeve of Limerick, is a prominent practitioner. He resides at St. Ola. Mr. Brett is a native of Belgium but came to Canada many years ago. Among those who will be missed from the shenanigans are W. A. Reid, W. E. Wiggins, C. B. McGuire and John L. Newton. This quartette will be missed since they are all wise and worthy representatives of the municipalities from whence they come. John L. Newton would have undoubtedly been given the position of Warden had he returned. Mr. Newton had served faithfully for the past twenty years. The various chairmen will be appointed at the January sessions. Another bone of contention to be settled at this year's session will be the re-equalization of assessment in the various municipalities.

Manifesto Says Differences Can Be Settled Without Armed Conflict

In a manifesto issued today the Nationalist Government of China believes their determination to free China from "the yoke of foreign imperialism" without an armed conflict.

Despatches today reported further anti-foreign and anti-Christian disturbances and indicated that the situation in Kiukiang is rapidly growing more serious. The situation in Yangtze river ports is reported as critical. "No better and no worse," is the summing up of the British foreign office. British official circles expect Nationalist troops will enter Shanghai in about three weeks.

PRESERVE INTEGRITY

Hankow, Jan. 24.—The Nationalist government, in the manifesto issued today, proclaimed its ability to enforce its will in Nationalist China and invited the powers to join it in negotiations looking with economic and territorial integrity as their basis.

Following are extracts from the declaration: The leading assumption of all British and other foreign declarations of policy in regard to China is that she is unable to look after her own interests and that pursuant to the spirit of the Washington conference, "the powers must enter into self-denying ordinance regarding China in order to safeguard her integrity and independence, promote her political development, rehabilitation and her finance.

The ignorance of Nationalist China. Today this new China is strong and conscious of its power, its ability through organization to restore to the world on Chinese against any power.

"The question then is not when Britain and other powers may wish to grant China to meet her legitimate aspirations in Chinese nation, but when Nationalist China may justly grant Great Britain and other powers. "This, great imperative fact must be grasped.

"Today effective protection of foreign life and property does not stand and can no longer stand on foreign Bayonets ad foreign cannons, because the arms of the Chinese Nationalist—the economic weapon—is more puissant than any engine of warfare that Britain, or any other foreign power in particular must understand that force in the present revolutionary situation in China only prejudices foreign life and property to a government that drives it's authority, from those in whose hands it is placed by power that is paralyzing life of the economic life of foreign Nations in China. It will, however, find the National Government that the liberation of China from the yoke of Foreign Imperialism need not involve unduly armed conflict between Chinese National and foreign powers. For this reason the National Government desires to have all questions outstanding between Nationalist China and foreign powers settled by negotiation."

MOB BREAKS IN CUSTOMS BLDG.

London, Jan. 24.—Renewed mob violence, endangering the life of Sir Frances Aglel, Inspector General of Maritime Customs in China, broke out in London Friday. Despatches received today say Chinese crowds attacked the Customs Building, where Sir Frances was conferring with Princess Minister Sacog of the Customs Government. Crowds invaded the corridors and attacked Soong's bodyguard, but were finally ispersed by Customs troops. Responding of business in Hankow today by British bankers and merchants shows that the general position in the city is improving.

COURT ENLARGES DOMESTIC CASE

Magistrate Mikel Allows Accused Chance to Redeem Himself

A local citizen was arraigned this morning before Magistrate Mikel and charged with non-support.

It was revealed that the accused who is father of three children had been keeping company with another woman his wife having lately learned of his actions and entered a complain. The husband has been out of work since the 15th of November and up until that time had held a responsible position but alcohol gained the upper hand and he was bereft of his life earnings. Later the family were forced to sell the piano in order to buy provisions and coal.

His better half unwound a tale of having seen her husband and his lady friend about the C.N.R. yards and pleaded with him to come home but her persuasions were in vain. Upon her arrival home the uninvited guest was there along with the head of the family where she remained all night, taking the train the next morning for an eastern town.

Following this episode the accused was taken into tail.

The husband admitted the wife's charges but it was stated that his family had always been provided for.

Magistrate Mikel enlarged the case for one month to allow the man a good chance to secure a job and make amends for his wrong doing.

It was ruled by the case pointed out to the accused the folly of his ways and advised him to follow the straight and narrow. He gave him to understand that future infractions would mean a severe penalty.

FIRE THREATENS BIG LOSS

Sackville, N. B., January 24.—Fire threatened to wipe out entire down town block today and firemen are fighting stubborn blaze. Damage may reach $75,000.

RULED TO BE INSANE

Rome, Jan. 24.—Hon. Violet Gibson, who attempted to assassinate Mussolini last year, has been removed from jail to Psychiatric clinic following an official inquiry.

Within a few minutes the building was cleared without mishap, though clouds of smoke were pouring into the front lobby and seeping into the balcony. Ushers directed the playgoers to the exits.

Firemen subdued the blaze, which had broken out in the basement, before damages estimated at $4,000 had been done.

fect is the outcome of the United States Senate investigation, caused by the instance of Senator Robinson, prompted by that the diplomatic controversies with Mexico relating to the latter's alleged retro-active and confiscatory provisions of the petroleum and allied land ownership statutes—which are the cause of the whole trouble—should be submitted to the arbitration of some impartial tribunal empowered to apply the principles of international law. The proposed proceeding is said to have been cordially suggested by President Coolidge. It is certainly one which offers the United States a convenient and desirable method of escape from the Mexican imbroglio. Its immediate significance is that, with both parties in a state of mind to negotiate for a peaceful adjustment of outstanding difficulties, a situation that seemed to threaten conflict has greatly improved. Mexico, which is reported to consider that it would be an assertion upon her sovereignty even to discuss her right to pass petroleum and allied land laws, has adopted a more conciliatory attitude. The difficulty now will be in agreeing upon the questions that shall be submitted to arbitration, but if Mexico is sincere this difficulty carefully handled, should be overcome, and once the principle of arbitration is applied in Mexico it will be only logical that it shall follow in Nicaragua.

FRESH MILK

Long debate has taken place over the milk question in New York. Policies entered into the embroglio with an attack on Canadian dairy imports. To attender the controversy had local features, but in the course of the dispute milk obtained useful attention as a good food product. Its value particularly for children, is not exceeded by any food. Milk is also one of the most available objection by health authorities, to attain purity and cleanliness. Fresh and pure milk is the most nutritive of all health foods. The American Health Association, reporting through its committee on nutritional problems, treated the nourishing quality of this most important food; stale adulterated and unclean milk is a menace. Frequent testing should be made to keep it up to a standard, and grafters and bootleggers should be punished. As the great food value of milk becomes clearer, it is increasingly important that it should be wholesome and undiluted.

The health specialists mentioned said that fresh studies made with laboratory animals verify and emphasize its health giving quality. Carefully controlled experiments demonstrated that pure, whole milk added to an already adequate diet resulted in better general health and greater resistance to disease. The second generation showed an improvement even more pronounced. From these experiments it appears that higher milk consumption in the present generation will make for better health in the next. A full quart of clean, fresh milk every day is recommended for the growing child, and a liberal portion should also be used by adults.

TODAY'S THOUGHT

Do not say "don't know," but when you please.—SYRUS.

IT'S DIFFERENT

The Canadian duty on American eggs entering this country is three cents a dozen. That is what, in the old days, Mr. Mackenzie King used to call, "taxing the food of the masses." It is one of the things Liberals held to destroy, that with reciprocity, then with "free food," and finally with their 1919 platform. One of the things they thundered against in 1925 and 1926.

The other week American eggs began coming into Canada. Mr. King were he anybody but Mr. King, should have rejoiced. That stanch believer in buying in the cheapest market, Mr. Motherwell, should have risked getting shot by throwing his hat in the air (like they did). Instead, Mr. King and Mr. Motherwell put their intellects together and heightened the duty on American eggs to exactly ten cents a dozen, gave an increase of protection in one case of 300 per cent. Just think of it! What a difference," exclaimed Diefenbaker, "between cowardly and possession!" What a difference, indeed! How Robert Peel, that benevolent disciple of Adam Smith, consoling only Hon. Charles Stewart, who once rang the "dreadful" word "protection," to heighten the tariff by 300 per cent. on one article alone. Mr. King probably did right. It can be said of him, "better betray one's principles than betray one's country. But the trouble with the Liberal politicians is that they will go on being—well, not "every tree to Paul." They will continue talking about "free food" as a "blessed" and about "dear" trade—and then betray their talk. They are the chief of politician Bigow had in mind with his tune:

"A merciful Providence fashioned us holler,
In order that we might our principles swaller."

HOME OWNERS

According to a bulletin issued by the Dominion Bureau of statistics, sixty-two per cent. of Canadian families own their own homes. The total number of families is given at 2,031,344 and the owners number 1,260,230. When people buy their homes, it is a reliable indication that they intend to settle down permanently in the country. Though there are numbers of farmers in Canada, owning the ground on which they live, it would be found that in the cities and towns also a very large proportion of the people prefer to buy rather than rent. There are exceptions and it is said that in the city of Quebec, notably Montreal, with its cosmopolitan population, the percentage of home-owners is less than elsewhere. Prince Edward Island comes first in this respect, with the high figure of 80.82, per cent. of home-owners, while Quebec is lowest, with 51.71 per cent. Ontario has a good average, and Belleville stands well up in the list. There have been trying times for some of these, but the prospects are favorable, and it is evident that, as a rule, the family which owns its own home is in a much more comfortable position than that which is dependent on changing circumstances and the whims of the landlord. Home-ownership makes for alert citizenship. A community of home-owners is necessarily live and progressive; for where there is a direct stake in the community, interest in municipal affairs is bound to be keener.

TRANS-CANADA ROAD WILL BE THE LONGEST IN THE WORLD

Each of the nine provinces of Canada controls its own highways, including the expenditure on their development and maintenance of roads; but a few years ago the Federal Government set aside $20,000,000 to assist the provinces in new main highway construction, with results which have been far satisfactory. So writes Dr. P. E. Doolittle, president of the Canadian Automobile Association, and active promoter of a Canadian trans-continental motor highway, now within sight of realization.

In the Maritime Provinces the main highways are built up with a gravel surface, which maintains splendid roadways on which to travel. Quebec, besides having many miles of these gravel surfaced, smooth highways, has 2,185 miles of hard surfaced roads. In Ontario about $150,000,000 has been expended on new highway construction in the last six years. It is expected that 4,000 miles of hard surface roads and 16,000 miles of gravel road will be completed this year. The Prairie Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Eastern Alberta have made great advances in graveling and widening roadways over the prairies, but in many sections they have not been surfaced, in certain sections, where the clay soil (known as Gumbo) swells with the addition of moisture, these roads are often impassable in the spring, and during the summer season they recover in a few hours from the effect of a heavy rain storm. When dry and hard, these Gumbo roads are as smooth as a billiard table, and owing to the dry climate of the country very high motor speeds are perfectly safe. Western Alberta and the whole of British Columbia have soil conditions very favorable for highways, and the roads that have been constructed offer excellent touring conditions.

The Trans-Canada Highway, which ultimately will stretch in an unbroken line from Halifax, on the Atlantic seaboard, to Vancouver, on the Pacific Ocean entirely in Canada and stretching for a narrow ribbon for over 4,900 miles, promises to be, not only the longest highway in the world, but also one of the most attractive from the scenic and climatic points of view. This road is now developed and open for traffic from Halifax as far as East St. Marks, at the foot of Lake Superior, and it continues, with some broken links, from Lake Superior to near Winnipeg, in Eastern Manitoba. Active work is going on, and the gaps in this section will soon be filled in. The British Columbia section through the mountains will be open to traffic by June 1.

In the Maritime Provinces there is rugged and majestic scenery, with

There are three other employees in the Henderson office, thoroughly posted on the details of the business, who could give Robinson the information he wants. One of them could always be reached by a Station-to-Station call, costing about twenty per cent less than a Person-to-Person call.

It is worth considering, before you make a Long Distance call, if Station-to-Station service will not give you what you want.

YOUNG N. S. GIRL WAS MURDERED

Boston, Jan. January 24.—Mabel Matheson, of Weymouth, N. S., whose body was found in a swamp in the West Roxbury district Saturday, was murdered, authorities are now convinced as a result autopsy.

The autopsy by Medical Examiner Timothy J. Leary disclosed that a blow over the right eye, fracturing the skull had caused her death. The doctor's post-mortem also revealed two other wounds on the back of the head, indicating that the girl had been beaten with a weapon or other instrument.

The facts revealed by the autopsy led the police to discard the theory that the girl was killed by an automobile and that her body had been carried to the swamp by a panic-stricken driver.

Captain Owen Smith, of the West Roxbury police said there was no doubt in his mind, that the girl was murdered. A broken chain was found on the girl's wrist, but the watch which the chain had secured was discovered miles distance from the body, confounding the theory of robbery. Her handbag and vanity case were also near the body.

Miss Florence Marcella, of Dedham, an acquaintance of the victim, told the police that the Matheson girl had advertised the loan of a dress from her to wear to a dance Friday night, but that she did not know whether she had gone to the dance. The police also interviewed other girls who were acquainted with Miss Matheson without obtaining any tangible clue to aid in the solution of the mystery.

Miss Matheson, who was 19 years old, came to West Roxbury from the little hamlet of Weymouth, in Inverness county, N.S., a year ago last November, to live with her wife and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Alpha MacIlhenie. They identified her body, which was found only a short distance from their home.

CARD OF THANKS

FARMERS OPPOSE BROADENING OUT PLAN IN ALBERTA

U.F.A. to Control Membership—Premier Opposes Assisted Immigration

Edmonton, Alta., Jan. 24.—An immigration scheme, consistent with Alberta's ability to absorb settlers in the more consolidated areas, development of the natural resources, elimination of freight rate discriminations and creation of markets were the outstanding factors in solution of the province, Premier J. E. Brownlee told the United Farmers of Alberta here last week.

He assailed those immigration schemes which operated on the principle of assisted passage, and warned against the danger of opening the Canadian gates to competitive labor from Europe. The immigration policy of the Dominion could best be formulated at a conference between the six Provincial and Dominion governments.

Alberta Coal

Referring to the isolation of Alberta from the coal markets of the country the premier suggested that the time is opportune for Alberta to get hands with people in other parts of Canada who agreed that some action of policy relating to the marketing of Canadian coal should be adopted.

"Alberta cannot supply the entire Dominion with its coal requirement for the next thousand years, yet the market is virtually limited to parts of the prairie provinces owing to existing transportation rates," he said in U.F.A. address. "Rates by the province for a national rate on coa..

No General Membership

A move to allow open the United Farmers of Alberta to all classes of society was defeated, following a heated discussion which revealed a distinct division of opinion.

The discussion was provoked by the introduction of a resolution providing for amendment to the constitution relating to rejection of "undesirable applicants" for membership. The resolution, which eventually was applicant must be accorded a two-applicant must be accorded a two-thirds vote before being accepted into the organization.

Broadening Urged

Deploring the existence of class distinction and other barriers to amalgamation in the movement, L. H. Nicholson, Dina, Alta., appealed for a policy of "broadening out." "Bring the business men in," he declared. "The organized farmers," he added "should guard against bigotry and isolation and against antagonizing those who are willing to co-operate with the farmers in working out their common problems of life.

Keep It to Farmers

"Under class distinctions of modern times we must fight our opposition with the same weapons they employ." C. C. Reid of Andrew, said in opposition. "We must keep our ranks pure. In the open where they cannot reach the vitals of our organization We must safeguard our own interests. I will make the U.F.A. absolutely air tight against those who would destroy us."

A resolution was adopted recommending that the U.F.A. members at Ottawa preserve their identity as a distinct U.F.A. unit in the next House of Commons, and do not amalgamate or join any other group which is not organized on the same basis for political action as the U.F.A.

TEN ATHLETES WERE KILLED AS TRAIN HITS BUS

Five Others Injured — On Their Way to Basketball Game

Round Rock, Texas, January 24.—The cream of Baylor University's athletic talent was wiped out here Saturday afternoon when a bus in the International-Great Northern Railroad train crashed into a motor bus and took the lives of ten and injured five more of whom is not expected to live.

Coach Ralph R. Wolf and his basketball players, had completed an all day series of their games from Waco to Austin in the university's bus. The driver apparently did not see the train until it was practically upon them as crossing the tracks. The big machine was turned, but too late, the locomotive crashing into it amidships and dragging and tossing bodies of his dead down the tracks. Six of the students were killed outright, two died et Taylor, and two in an ambulance on the way to Georgetown, eleven miles away.

Star Athletes Victims

Walker, Dilly wand Hannah were members of the first-string basketball five, J. Clyde (Abe) Kelley was the outstanding athlete of the Baptist School. Last fall he was named all-Southwestern fullback largely because of his punting ability, and he was captain-elect of the 1927 eleven. He was also a star catcher in baseball and played guard on the basketball team. Captain Louis Dale, basketball center, and Keifer Strickland, forward and then scoring star of the team, were injured.

Wesley Bradshaw, whow as injured, is well-known in Eastern prep school football. In 1925 he played with Jim Thorpe's Rock Island (Ill.) eleven. In 1922 he was all-Southwestern quarterback on the championship Baylor eleven.

Wolf, who was uninjured, is rated Baylor's greatest basketball star of all time. He specialized in the dashes

Winchester and Hailey were mem bers of the varsity basketball squad team. Murray was manager, while Castellow was listed as club manager.

Fred Acree, 4eem member, was the most seriously injured. His back was reported broken. Berry was the other member of the team on the injured list. Gooch is student assistant in the athletic department.

IN MEMORIAM

BROOKER — In sad memoriam for Viola Lillian Brooker, who died Jan. 24th, 1922.

Oh, we cherish in memory's bright story
Happy visions no time can effect,
Of the loved one in glad days of yore.
They who cherred us with beauty and grace.

One by one they have faded away.
For no longer on earth could they stay;
But we know in some bright summer day,
We shall meet at the beautiful gate.
Sadly missed by father, mother, brother and sister.

The Red Lake Gold District is again becoming the centre of recent for prospectors following the happy outcome of Howey and Balsam Lancing. The number that have started for this camp has quite exceeded expectations.

One of the best looking strikes in Cobalt for some time were made at the Victory Silver Mines. During the last week values as high as 5000 ounces to the ton have been found. This is the second high grade strike in a few months. The stock is now selling around six cents. Their weakness is in their treasury, but the property is proving up real well.

Oshko Lake Mines has purchased four additional claims in the centre of Pelletier Lake, Rouyn. On one of these claims the first gold find was made in Rouyn, in June 1922.

W. J. HUME

friends' greeting. Quietly he expressed his thanks and hoped that the ties of friendship which had grown and strengthened through the years would never be broken. He and Mrs. Hume, he said, could never forget their home city and expected to visit here shortly every other week-end (loud cheers). He invited the Belleville ex-pro star Winsdor to come and see him' and bring along their golf clubs.

Almost equally warm was the reception of Mr. Harry Hatch who still claims to be a Belleville man, as he played hockey and hockey around here in his young days. Mr. Hatch said that when they wanted a real man for a real job there was no one else to consider but his old friend "Billy" Hume, who had taught him a lot and helped him in past years. He knew what Billy Hume could do and could not be satisfied with a lesser man.

The Program

The formal part of the dinner was short—if any of it could be called short—but more than one speaker told of holding young "Billy" in his arms when he was a baby. Men were there who had known Mr. Hume up in Canada and the Manufacturers, but what they really spoke about was the great they had achieved to-gether.

After the King' had been toasted, Mayor Stanley Wilmot spoke on Canada for a few minutes and on Billy Hume for a few more. Col. Hassell Curran responded in the same strain and to the same effect, and the party laughed, cheered and applauded.

Mr. John Elliott, billed to talk on the Manufactures of Canada, forgot about Belleville cheese and talked instead about old friends, Mr. and Mrs. Hume, and in answering the toast, Freeman Ketcheson told of minding "Billy" when he was too young to walk. And "Billy" sat and smiled, happy in the affection and pride of his friends.

Major R. D. Ponton was expected to honour "Our Visitors" but he said he could not see Gordon Hume and neighbours. He suggested that as Mr. Hume promised to come back often, he retained on the retiring list as a citizen of Belleville, and "Billy" friend in replying, most heartily endorsed that idea. Those might come an election when we would need him here more than Windsor would," said Billy.

Just Good Fun

The balance of the evening was taken up in friendship humour. The Bon Ton Orchestra jazzed up the evening with lively music and more than one speaker—not so young or so slight as they used to be—succumbed to the lure and did, or attempted to do, what they called the Charleston.

THOSE PRESENT

Included in the party were—C. H. Townsend, H. G. Wilkie, A. J. Sanderson, F. H. McLeanchan, Walter Patterson W. E. Schuster O. A. Porritt, R. Tennant, Alex. Harper, E. A. Green, H. Laroche, S. B. MINING GOSSIP

A campaign of action in regard to any abuses which may tend to discredit their the mining market of mining investments in Canada, on the part of the Attorney-General, is indicated by the steps taken this week by Hon. Mr. Price.

Following the sharp advance in area almost to the two-dollar mark and its subsequent break to fifty cents, the Attorney-General has sent a questionnaire to the Standard Stock Exchange in order to find out just what by behind the erratic action of the stock. A large number of questions were submitted to the exchange for immediate answer.

Mining Corporation of Canada has started off the current year with the shipment of two of the richest carloads of silver ever that have ever left the Cobalt camp. This ore was taken from one of the rich shoots developed at the South Lorrain property. It comprised approximately sixty-two tons and the ore ran between five and eight thousand ounces to the ton and is estimated to contain upwards of 400,000 ounces of silver. At the current market price of around 55 cents the shipment would have a value of around $221,650. This is more than sufficient to pay for the dividends of the company. Unfortunately for shareholders, the Mining Corporation has never attempted to give an estimate of the ore reserves of the South Lorrain properties.

Three ears thaso among Northern Ontario mining men who believe the recent discoveries of rich ore in the reserves of the Mining Corporation at South Lorrain and Cobalt would show the company to be not only the largest producer of silver to the North, but at the same time show it with greater ore reserves by a long way than any other mine.

Montreal Greets Their Excellencies

A strikingly impressive spectacle was presented at the C.P.R. Windsor Street Station, Montreal on the occasion of the first official visit to that city of their Excellencies Viscount Willingdon, Governor-General of Canada, and Lady Willingdon. A guard of honour of a hundred men of the Royal Highlanders of Canada under the command of Major Erskine Buchanan was drawn up at attention to the accompaniment of the stirring music of the pipers and the resulting print shows from left to right: Major Erskine Buchanan, Brig.-General W. B. M. King, general officer commanding military district No. 4; and Their Excellencies, Lord and Lady Willingdon.

As Their Excellencies approached the men the Highlanders Band broke into the strains of the National Anthem as the Royal Salute was given to the representatives of the King and Queen and the Royal standard was dipped in greeting. The Governor-General and Lady Willingdon very kindly consented to pose for the assembled press photographers and the resulting print shows from left to right: Major Erskine Buchanan, Brig.-General W. B. M. King, general officer commanding military district No. 4; and Their Excellencies, Lord and Lady Willingdon.

WORRIES HAVE A WAY OF PILING HIGH

Elsie Willing to Admit That Petty Aggravations Are Hard to Bear, But She Points a Way Out

By ELSIE MARLOWE

Little Mrs. Collins is disc-urged.

No, there's no big trouble. Just a dragging succession of worries and hurts. The baby is teething. The laundry lost her on many sheets—the beautiful ones Cousin made. Young Jimmy broke the big front window in the house next door. And Mrs. Fredericks said that is she could think being up kids any better than Mrs. Collins did she'd go out of business. She's had a sick headache for two days. And it's the anniversary of the day little Billy died. And to cap it all, she and Big Jim had a quarrel this morning over the grocery bill! Shh!

So this morning little Mrs. Collins sat right down and had a good cry. The kitchen werent done, the floor wasn't swept, and the baby was howlin' his head off, but she didn't care. What's the use of trying, anyway? Everything was going wrong.

Poor discouraged little mother! Ready to give up. Afraid to think of a baseball game I saw last summer.

They were playing the Giants in the League series. You know how it is when the championship is hanging on a hair and it's nip and tuck whether the home team is going to win. Some excitement! I'll say I. Well, it was the eighth inning and it was still a tie—and Joe was at the bat! Nice fellow, Joe; great ball player but a temper like a TNT bomb. Excitement at the local little thing. Joe was mad then. The ump called a bum strike when, according to Joe, it was a ball. So Joe turned loose. He reared, he threw his hat. Joe then started in circles, he shook his fist underthe ump's nose.

He then he started to walk. I said he walked, but he sulked and he SULKED.

Now, Joe is a favorite, and the fans being human, naturally hated the ump. So for a long time they enjoyed Joe's fireworks. But a lot depended on that game and they wanted the game to go on. So they began to yell, "Play ball!" First one, then another, then a rocking chorus of "PLAY BASEBALL!!"

For a minute Joe glowered and ground his heels—glowered and mumbled and glared. Then the spirit within him climbed up his bat again. And Joe played Ball.

Isn't that life, Pal?

Sooner or later the dimp makes a decision against us or plans go wrong. Our hopes are shattered.

Death or sickness, falseness or failure, step in and spoil our aim. And we take it hard. We sit down and have a good cry. We fly into a temper and raise the roof. We rage and sulk and wilder and fret—according to our temperament. We swear we'll quit the game. What's the use of trying anyway when the breaks are all against us?

And then the Gang who've been repeating at the turn on us with great fury to "Play Ball!" Our families come with their troubles. "Play Ball! they cry.

How heartless we think they are when first we hear that cry! How little they appreciate our feelings! How guilt they overlook our grief and worry and disappointment and weariness. What a cruel world it is!

But is it really a cruel world?

Isnt it rather a blessing that life is so planned that circumstances push us back into the Game again whether we want to go or not?

So cheer up discouraged Mother. The decision has gone against you and the ump's certainly unfair. But the Gang's depending on you! The Big League series! You know how it is when the championship is hanging on a hair and it's nip and tuck whether the home team is going to win. Some excitement! I'll say I. The Newest Gowns Blouse and Drape

How a gown may be extremely smart without being extreme in any way is illustrated in the above model. The cut and finish are simplicity itself, and yet the gown has a certain studied elegance that lends many touches of more elaborate make. The long line of the surplice closing, continuing into the easy sway of the side drapery, is most becoming to the women of stately figure. The flat drapery at the hips further aids this slenderizing style and allows the waist to blouse slightly. The self-fabric of the edges trims the gown with a soft finish. Satin cuffs, crepe de Chine, or satin-back crepe are happy choices of material.

(From a Woman's Standpoint)

New York reports that collars are passe in new spring frocks and jewelry and that the smartest frocks have a square, V, or oval neckline but no collar at all.

Edna St. Vincent Millay has written the libretto for a three-act opera, "The King's Henchmen," music by Deems Taylor, which will be done at the Metropolitan Opera House next month.

New York declares that by every arriving steamer black and white and white is revealed as the dominant note in Paris springtime fashion.

Paris notes that skirts of sacking will be worn with pullover jerseys, and stripes of different widths and in all colors are worked on plain materials, white but only beige, but brown and many delicate mixtures are seen.

Burgundy colored stones achieve a new importance this season, it is indicated, by reason of the fact that red and its allied colors are forecast as a growing vogue for spring, but it is not the deep red of the old-fashioned garnets, although the dodging follow customary tendencies only slightly modernized.

New York notes that strong favor is to be shown the shades of yellow for the spring and summer, and style notes from Paris all speak of those tones, as well as stressing the yellowish face powder tints, while following closely these yellows are the orange colorings, so that it may be quite correct to say that all the yellower colorings exemplify a strong, style tendency for spring.

Blues' success for spring seems practically assured, according to the growing popularity accorded it everywhere, and it is even prominently remarked in fashions they are wearing now, although the vivid tones of the present color differ from the spring shades, generally discussed—namely, the navy and bayadanges ranges, says a New York observer.

Lace is employed prominently by the French milliners have started to use inset trimmings in lace effects that are made of fine cottons in twine, rope and the straw, as it has very much the appearance of straw and is employed usually in the natural coloring.

The short coat, somewhat Chinese in cut; the big-tough jacket in crepe or satin; the cloud-like scarf or more practical muffler, the boutonniere in countless forms, and the huge tulle neck bow are some of the late style, and accessories which every bride is including in her season's wardrobe, says New York.

Advice to Girls

By Annie Laurie

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a girl in my teens in love with a young man a few years my senior. He lives in another town and can't come to see me very often.

We expect to be married in a couple of years, as we are both young yet.

My mother won't allow me to even speak to other boy friends. She says one is enough. But I'm young and want to have a good time. I do love him, but I don't see him often and I'm lonesome.

LOVE-SICK PEG.

DEAR SICK-PEG: Since you can only see your lover at rare and infrequent intervals, it would be quite proper to go out with other young men. But it was quite wrong of you to make any promises of marriage, when that marriage cannot take place for two years. By promising to marry the boy you think you love, you have deliberately placed yourself in the predicament, in which you find yourself.

Why not withdraw your promise to the boy? Then you can be friends with him. Perhaps time will ripen that friendship into the marriage you both think you want. But, in the meantime, you will not have bound yourself to two years of loneliness and suffering.

Long engagements are at best inadvisable. An engagement such as yours is distinctly unfair to both of you.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a young girl of 17. Mother says that I am not old enough to know what real love is. I don't agree. I feel sure that I have found a real, true love.

I will be 18 in about four months. Do you think I would be too young to marry in about six months from this date?

DODA.

DODA: I am quite in accord with your mother. I really doubt that you are old enough to have found a love that will last. You certainly ought to wait before venturing into matrimony. Put your love to the test of time. I am sure that will do much to convince your mother if you still feel the same at the end of that period.

HEARTS' HAVEN

By Mildred Barbour

CHAPTER I.

THE GARDEN OF YOUTH

The train slowed down and slid into he little station of the university town. In the aisle chair-car, a group of laughing, chattering girls flitted into the aisle, like so many brilliant butterflies. There was a great deal of giggling, hurried use of powder-puffs, a frantic search for the right luggage.

A worried chaperon herded her charges toward the vestibule. "Here were admonitions: "Girls, do hurry! The train stops here only a moment." Youth's full voices cried: "Oh, Jack! Jack! Dick! I say-hin already!" "Say, dear, I'm almost-used to death! I'll never be able to face that model! Is my nose red?"

The train drew to a standstill and spilled its merrily laughing passengers into the platform amidst the noise of eager, waiting, insistent youth.

It was commencement week at Riverview University. College days were over forever for the graduating class of Riverview's pet fraternities, were the order of the moment. Dances, promenades, garden-parties, dinners, flirtations, engagements! Tomorrow was commencement day. The dignified dean would address an assemblage of shining-eyed youth and hand out "sheep-skins" in recognition of four years of college work! In the evening, the commencement dance!

And after that—the World!

Christine Farr walked, the girls who descended from the train that after tennon—one of the many "best girls" brought to witness the graduating class of degrees and the general commencement festivities.

She was duly chaperoned by her mother's cousin, Anna Morrison, good-humored old soul, but not nearly so sternly conventional as Mr. Farr fondly believed. At the moment, caught in a crush of graduates, their girls, and various undergraduates, she was busy straightening a crushed hat and adjusting her hat, while her pretty charge surveyed the crowd with an eager gaze.

"Look, Cousin Anne, there they are Harvey and Leo! But they'll never be able to recognize us through this jam. My goodness, I'm fairly frightened!"

Nevertheless, she waved to two young men who were plowing their way through the crowd toward them.

"If it isn't just like you, Chris, to have two men to take you to the commencement dance. Now, I'm glad you're satisfied with my creature who could dance!

Christine laughed with the gay confidence of the popular girl. Her gray eyes were flashing with mischief.

"But it isn't my fault really, Harvey. Asked me first, you know, and we hadn't all our lost to persuade Leo to get himself another girl, but we've always played together the dance at the end, and he said he'd rather finish out commencement the same way, if we didn't mind. And, of course, we didn't."

"You didn't," murmured the chaperon under her breath, just before they were engulfed in a triangular embrace.

It was Harvey Blanton who got them first, making a pathway way with his broad shoulders. His elder brother's room mate followed, but Lewis Hayes was not quite so quick, nor so tall, nor so graceful. His movements were always more deliberate.

"Chris! Pretties than ever! What a sight for sore eyes!" Harvey's blond and handsome face covered her hands, and tossed a greeting over his shoulder to the chaperon.

Lewis's eyes told Christine how glad he was to see her, but, of course, with her hands held by Harvey, she could only greet him with a smile. She could tell about it, while Lewis was greeting Mrs. Morrison in his grave, courteous way. They walked from the crowd, following Harvey and Christine to a waiting carriage.

The driver whipped up the horses of the ancient hack, and it lurched violently into the roadway that wound up to a hill above the station.

"My word," murmured the chaperon "I hope we don't have to ride far in this fun-limited to and not to die out!"

Nobody paid any attention to her remark, because the gaze of both young men was fixed on Christine. She was leaning eagerly forward in the rickety hack, the lovely, wild-rose color coming and going in her cheeks, her fresh young lips parted with delight, as she scanned the quiet, elm-bordered streets through which they passed, and noted the buildings, gay with age and covered with ivy.

"Why, it's adorable," she breathed. "So much more picturesque than I'd imagined from the photographs. When shall I see the campus and the library where you make all your dates with the co-eds and the chemical lab' that Lew nearly blew up with one of his experiments?" She laid a swift hand on Lewis's arm and demanded teasingly: "Have you discovered the 'Great Formula' yet, Lew —the one that is going to make you rich and famous?"

"My goodness, he talks as if he own ed the place—only four years!"

Harvey wagged a reproachful finger at her.

"Never mind. You wait and see. I'll bet I can own any place I'm in, when I've had a try at it. Believe me, I'm a fast worker. All I need is a chance—and I'll be on top of the world in no time."

Mrs. Morrison shook her head and sighed a little; her eyes were a trifle sad at the supreme confidence of Youth She had chaperoned other girls to commencement parties in years gone by, and she had heard that proud boast before.

"Where are they now, the hopes of yesteryear?" she murmured.

Christine interpreted her expression and laughed.

"Cousin Anne's skeptical. You'll have to show her."

Harvey's glance said, as plainly as a shout: "Cousin Anne's old!" But his attention entirely to Christine. Lewis noticed it, though he was listening politely to the chaperon.

"And what are you going to do, Lewis after you've handed your diploma to morrow? Set the world afire too I suppose?"

He met her glance of kindly amusement with a grave smile.

"I'm not so low you hated them I'd say you were making a pun. I'm a chemist, remember, and I've come dam near getting fired for that joke once or, several occasions. But as for the world, he shrugged, "I'm afraid it's safe, as far as I am concerned."

His glance returned to Christine. Her head was turned toward Harvey, and he could see only the curve of her smooth cheek and a sweep of bright hair under the brim of her hat. His eyes were wistful, but they brightened when she turned and flashed him a glance of exquisite sweetness.

A few minutes later, the carriage lurched into the winding drive that led across a green lawn to a fraternity house of red brick with wide verandas covered with Virginia creeper. A gay group—girls in light, pretty frocks, and youths in white flannels—sat on the verandas and came dashing down the steps to greet them.

Cousin Anne, forgotten temporarily, sighed. But not for herself.

"Youth! Youth! And one of these is going to have a broken heart — soon?"

"DANCE ON," SAYS JERSEY PASTOR

RADIO BRINGS JAZZ TO THE CHURCH

New York, Jan. 24—"On with the dance," cried out the Rev. Arthur F. Bender, pastor of the Second Reformed Church, Jersey City, when Dave Duncan the ocean tuned in the new hyperchained radio set on a popular priced dance orchestra in response to an assembly of young and old in the church parlors for a social. Take yet a precedent for dancing in Jersey City Reformed churches.

"I see nothing sinful or degrading in dancing by old and young, properly performed, in healthful and uplifting surroundings," said the pastor.

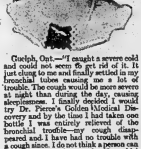

"It is done all over today, and if permitted in the Christian home, why not in church parlors under responsible supervision? I despise shams, cant, and hypocrisy. Why are the churches doing to attract young people and allow them to amuse themselves harmlessly, counteracting the evil influences of a jaded form of view and inquity frequented by cliques and cigarette smoking flappers?

"Cigarette smoking and the Christian, of course will be banned in the church."

TRADE OPENING FOR CANADIANS IN SO. AMERICA

Propaganda Needed to Inform Countries of Dominion's Products

St. John, N.B., January 24.—Canada has at the present time a wonderful opportunity of increasing its trade with the Central and South American countries, it was declared by Edward C. Austin, who arrived on the Canadian Pacific steamer Montroyal, Mr. Austin, who is a native of London, Eng., has spent many years in South America and is thoroughly conversant with conditions there.

Speaking of the Pan-American Conference, which is to be held in Havana in May, Mr. Austin said that in view of the strong anti-United States sentiment now obtaining in all Latin America, occasioned by the interference by the United States in the politics of Nicaragua and the landing of armed forces at the ports of that Republic very great and deliberate consideration should be given to the invitation which may ed be extended to Canada to become a member of the Pan-American Union in view of the fact that Canada is a British country, it would be most undesirable, declared Mr. Austin, that we should create the impression in Latin America that we are in any way associated with the policies and actions of the United States in Central and South American republics.

"There was a strong possibility, said Mr. Austin, in some of the Central and Southern American republics of a boycott being established against all British and imported goods if United States merchandise and it would be most unfortunate if for any reason action should be directed against Canadian products. Mr. Austin said that it was the feeling in South America that while Canada was closely affiliated with the United States and while the British were shown every consideration and received favorable Canadians were treated in a lukewarm manner owing to the mistaken idea that they were much the same as United States citizens. The great est need, thought Mr. Austin, in South America, was proper and full descriptive of Canada, its history, natural resources and industries. This would enlighten the people and thus, republics and convince them of our solidly British status, declared Mr. Austin. "

ROAD SURFACE BEING TESTED

Terra Cotta Blocks With Rubber Caps Are Laid in London

London, Jan. 24.—An experiment of much interest to highway authorities is being tried in New Bridge street, where rubber as a road surface is to be subject to a very severe test. Although rubber has been used before, it has never been used in quite the same way as in this experiment.

Heavy terra cotta blocks 10 1-2 inches by 8 in., are laid as a base to hold a corrugated rubber cap, five-eighths of an inch in thickness. The is put on by a process, which, it is claimed, will withstand the pounding and speeding of the heaviest traffic. The blocks with these rubber caps are laid on a 12 in. concrete bed, with a cushion of sand three-quarters of an inch thick. They are being set in by means of joints, composed of a special bitumen and rubber mixture. Known as Gutmun blokks, the experiment is being carried out at the cost of the Universal Rubber Paviors (Canchester, 1923), Limited, by arrangement with the City Corporation. The company will maintain the surface for a period of two years, and, if satisfactory to the Corporation, will then enter into a maintenance contract.

L. Gaisunna stated that this is the first practical public test of the invention. In Manchester, however, there was a private artificial test, in which a 13-ton steam lorry was sent over a stretch of the paving 1,000 times a day. The granite sides of the road were destroyed, but the blocks and the rubber held. The Guild of Experts think that the New Bridge street test will be the most drastic which could possibly be devised, for the traffic to and from Blackfriars Bridge is the heaviest in the city and probably in London. The rubber, it is claimed, absorbs vibration, and that is of great importance both to vehicles and to property. It is grooved to prevent skidding, and will, it is expected, be more silent than either wood or asphalt.

A representative of the Leeds Fireclay Company said that terra cotta was being extensively used in building in London. Its success or failure for road work would be watched with deep interest, That company had considered such possibilities for some time. "After all," he said, "it is but a return to old ideas, for the Romans used terra cotta extensively. Roman tile are, for the most part, terra cotta, while in the Roman pavements so often dug up in London that material predominates."

POOR MEN SELL GLANDS TO AGED RICH FOR RESTORATION OF YOUTH

London, Jan. 24.—Should a poor man be permitted to sell his glands to a rich man?

The popularity of the Voronoff operation of which it is claimed that it can transform old men into young has made this a burning question among the legal and medical fraternities of the Continent.

A few days ago Prof. Bastianelli, of Florence, who is a disciple of the Russian rejuvenation expert, and also an intimate friend of Mussolini, probably performed the first operation of its kind in the history of the world.

He had a poor young Italian farmer boy and a rich old Florentine antiquary lying side by side on operating tables in his clinic, and he cut one of the vital glands out of the boy and sewed it into the old man. The boy was well paid for his gland and the doctors say that he will be just as healthy with one gland as with two.

Use Glands of Murderer

Dr. Prat, the chief surgeon at Saint Roch Hospital at Nice, has also recently supplied two old men with human glands, but they were cut out of a healthy young man who was killed by an accident, the glands being removed within fifteen minutes.

In another case, at Belgrade, a pupil of Dr. Voronoff cut the glands out of a criminal condemned to death, by permission of the Government, and sewed them into an old politician—of the party in power.

There was a somewhat similar case in March, 1925, at Lille, France when Dr. Leford and Dr. Piquet, of the faculty of medicine at Lille, cut the thyroid gland out of a famous bandit, named Henri Oliver, a moment after he was guillotined, and placed it in the neck of an idiotic child, who has since been completely normal.

Dr. Voronoff has often believed that human glands would be more ideal for his purpose than monkey glands, if they were obtainable but if they were healthy, but they are too scarce.

He has therefore used the glands of chimpanzees and cynocephales, a large dog-face monkey from Abyssinia, and he has found them satisfactory that he is now building a monkey farm at Menione, on the Riviera, to breed them in large quantities.

A chimpanzee costs 20,000 francs and a cynocephale 5,000 francs, and he hopes to raise them at a much lower cost. One monkey is good for two operations.

Although Dr. Voronoff himself has never experimented with human glands, many of his disciples are anxious to make experiments along this line, and the legal aspect of this question is being discussed by French surgeons.

Bitterly Opposes Practice

At a recent surgical congress Dr. Soudin, who is a lawyer as well as doctor, bitterly criticized the practice of using human glands from the moral and ataviglic viewpoints, and pointed out that not only would a Frenchman be prosecuted for selling or giving his glands away, but that the surgeon who operated on him would be considered an accomplice. The Englishman, on his part is the complete master of his own body, and can sell any part of it he wishes.

"Suppose that the first man died from the operation, or that the surgeon communicated the first man's disease to the second man in giving him new glands?" asks Dr. Soudin.

A number of poor people down on their luck have offered to sell their glands to Dr. Voronoff at various times, but he has always refused.

Dr. Voronoff and his pupils claim to have rejuvenated 10,000 persons up to the present, and surgeons are coming from all over the world to study the operation.

MAROONS HOPE TO WIN 2 GAMES AWAY THIS WEEK

Play in Brockville Tonight and Cornwall Friday—Juniors Wed.

The Maroons face two fourth leaves this week and must win them both in order to remain in the fight for the honors of the "Big Six." Tonight the team will step into Brockville where they will attempt to lower the colors of Murray and Co. and that is no easy task.

Fresh after their win over the Frankford six Friday night, the locals are hoping to take a fall out of the Island Town aggregation.

The Maroons will be at full strength for tonight's tilt, they having all emerged from Friday's game in fairly good shape with the exception of Mareveman, but the latter, despite his tumble into the boards, will be at his regular place at right wing. Jack Rooney who played a nice game against the Frontenacs will be taken along. The Brockville team were nearly beaten 3-1 here on New Year's night and Manager Thomas is taking no chances of them springing a surprise in tonight's game.

The big test comes on Friday night when the Maroons will step off on the local ice to Cornwall and it is here that the Maroons must win.

Queen's play in Cornwall tonight and a lucky win on the part of the students would cause a heap of joy in the Belleville camp. However, this is regarded as barely impossible but such things have happened before. The Flying Frenchmen regard Belleville as their strongest rivals and a keen game is sure to result. The Maroon fighting with their backs to the wall are sure to exert every ounce of energy to slip over a win.

On Wednesday night the Juniors will be at home to Trenton in the final game of "B" section of this group. The visitors are five goals up on the round and Canada and Co. are faced with the difficult task of overhauling them. Failing in this they must hang up their sticks for the balance of the season. The forward line have been going good in all three games but the defence has fallen down miserably. Eddie Thomas will probably make a final experiment on Wednesday night.

TWO GAMES IN CITY I.C. TONIGHT

Bankers and Tigers Meet at 8 P.M. With Bell Telephone

Tonight's games in the City League will see the Bankers and Tigers clashing at 8 p.m. while the Bell Telephone and Canadian National Express will take to the ice at 9 o'clock. Both of these promise to be first class games.

The Bankers team is a new entry in local hockey circles but it is reported that they have signed some fast boys.

The Tigers were champions of this loop last winter and they have practically the same team as last season.

The Bell Telephone were beaten by the Y's Men's Club 6-0 the other evening but Basil Doolittle is confident that his team will put up a better argument tonight. The Express are rather an unknown quantity but Manager Addison Lloyd has promised to send a strong team into action.

"Pick" Arndt will referee both games.

FRANKFORD TRIM M'LAUGHLIN'S 6-1

Game Marred By Rough Play in Closing Stages —Return Fixture

The McLaughlin "Bulks" travelled to Frankford on Saturday night for a game of hockey, but the home stalwarts opened an early onslaught and after scoring four goals in the opening period, walked off with a 6-1 victory.

The game was played in the new Frankford covered rink and the structure is a credit to the progressiveness and initiative of the citizens of the village. Hockey has been a dead issue in the village for the past seven or eight years and judging from the crowd that turned out on Saturday night it is bound to be a success.

McLaughlin's were represented by rather a weak team but got up a gallant fight against superior odds after the first period when the score stood 4-0.

The Frankford players harbor an inclination to lay a little heavy on the hickory, and a couple of near fights resulted when the Belleville players resented the tactics of the home team. Some of them are coursing sore shins as a result of the treatment accorded them. The Frankford players are all big and heavy and possess very wicked shots. They were driving them up into the rafters behind the goals all evening.

"The two O'Malley boys were probably the pick of the home squad while Alex Weir and "Hait" Campbell who played defence were the best of the visitors.

The McLaughlin team will play a return game with the Frankford team at an early date.

The McLaughlin team—Goal, Sam Carter; defence, Alex Weir and Hait Campbell; centre, Lake; wings, Walt Day and Boulter; subs: Ted Green, Archie Winters, Rogers and Boyd.

Referee—G. Symons.

C. N. R. TEAM LOSE TO STRATFORD

Westerners Superior To Local Apprentices in Every Depart.

From from their victories over London and Toronto Stratford C.N.R. Apprentice Hockey team into town Saturday night and administered a 7-1 defeat to the local entry in the C.N.R. Apprentice Hockey League. This was the first game for the locals at home but they were pitted against a much better team.

The game was a fast exhibition of the winter pastime throughout and, ice, generally is in good condition.

Stratford's combination play was a treat to watch coming down on the Belleville citizens two and three abreast. They are a very clever team passing the puck to the unguarded wing man and any one of them can make an individual rush and acquit himself nobly.

Belleville started with Gibson and Hagerman on the defence but "Stan" was soon moved up to the forward line and Biggs fell back in his place. During the game Belleville's shots were mostly wide of the goal, and they will certainly have to improve in this department.

Lloyd in the Belleville net landed a nice game. He repeatedly saved by dropping flat when the rubber was seen clean through the slashes made in on him.

Gibson and Hiper on the defence are both nice skaters and stick handlers but do not use their body enough.

Doran, the red-thatched forward was probably the hardest worker on the ice. He was all over checking like a fiend. He inclines to over control too much to lay to heavy on with the stick.

Ano. Carmichael, Sconey and Hazelman formed the remaining forward, with Amo and Hagerman the pick of the locals. "Stan" was robbed several times of sure looking goals as was Amo.

Gingare in the opponent's nets is a very clever goalie. He had a fairly easy time though as none of Belleville's shots were wide of the net. He is real good in shots from close in and saved many from this source. Powell and Stan on the defence work well together and use their bodies to good advantage. Powell is also a clever stickhandler and shadow he registered two of the visitors' goals.

Smith, Knechtel and Hawes on the forward line are a pretty working combination, their combination, stick-handling and boring in tactics resulting in counters many times.

Hayes and Walton, the subs, were used often and do not weaken the team while on the ice.

Knechtel, Smith and Powell looked the best for the visitors.

The play by periods:

1st PERIOD

Both teams, opened with great speed only to be stopped by the defence of forced into the corners. Biggs raced down and on a individual effort sank the gyppum behind Gingare for the first counter of the game.

Smith tied the score soon after on another solo rush. Stratford went down three abreast and Powell made it 2-1. Stratford were continually pressing going down in nice combination form. Knechtel thrusted for the third counter in fast and banged in the rebound Gibson went through just before the bell but missed the net.

Belleville showed up much better in this period. The locals went down three abreast but Hagerman missed the pass. Powell and Hagerman were set on cooler where they made amends. Biggs followed for slashing. Stratford came close again when they hit the post. Barrett had to stop the bell to get the game going as fom men were all down on the Belleville defence apparently looking for trippins savins an apparent sure goal.

The period ended with Stratford leading 3-1.

3rd PERIOD

Shortly after the period opened Smith dribbled one over the blue line. Belleville then allowed Stratford to take a shot from the face off near the Belleville net and he registered number 5.

Lloyd saved nicely on a Stratford attack. Hawes batted in one from a scramble in front of the locals net. Smith went through for the final counter of the game. Belleville attacked but Gingare saved nicely. At this time Belleville were playing five men up on the line. Seeny was sent away for slashing.

"BABE" RUTH ARRESTED CHARGE OF VIOLATION

San Diego, Jan. 24.—A warrant has been sworn out here charging George, Herman (Babe) Ruth, star New York outfielder, with having violated the California labor laws. Ruth is charged with having had children from the audience at a local theatre go on the stage and do little "stunts."

When Ruth appeared at a local theatre last week, a deputy from the labor commissioner's office objected to that part of Ruth's act, but the theatre management declared it was only a technical violation of the law, even if there was any violation and the act was continued throughout the week without change.

Ruth this week is at Long Beach, and a copy of the warrant was sent there.

QUEEN'S BEATEN BY UNIVERSITY MONTREAL

Montreal, Jan. 24—University of Montreal opened their intercollegiate hockey season Monday night at Mount Royal Arena with a shellacking 3 to 2 overtime victory over the hapless Queen's sextette, in a struggle crammed full of excitement, action and smart hockey. In fact certain of the cup thousand fans became so carried away with their feelings during moments over flowing goals that they sought to give vent to their dissatisfaction by hurling the well known aged hen-fruit at one of the goal umpires.

It was a hard-earned triumph for the U. of M. and a discouraging defeat for the Kingston players, but Queen's fighting spirit was not equal to the task of entirely counteracting the superior playing ability of the French-Canadian collegians.

FREE-FOR-ALL IN OTTAWA GAME

Maroons and Senators Engage in Fist Fights Saturday Eve.

Ottawa, January 24.—The "goose hangs high" in the capital today for "King" Frank Clancy, Ottawa's youth of twenty summers whose name has many times sounded throughout hockey's hall of fame. That name now resounds louder than ever for it was the "King" who rifled a shot into the cage of the world champion Montreal Maroons and brought a one-goal to nothing victory to Ottawa's Senators in a National Hockey League tussel here Saturday night, which for its rough and tumble tactics, probably set a record for all time. When the title-holders and the present league leaders clash play is bound to be strenuous, but the latest exhibition surpassed all others in that fistic command flared out twice, and as a result the record total for one game of six match penalties was doled out.

The men from each club were the defaulting ones, and they now rest suspended for one game.

Montreal, Jan. 24.—Canadiens swept through the Toronto St. Patricks with a whirlwind attack in the first of their National Hockey League sectional tussels at the Forum Saturday night, scored four goals in the opening thirteen minutes of play and called it a night. St. Pats. toased and buffeted by the fury of the storm which swept over them at the start of the journey, steadied down in the last two periods and battled the hurricane, but the Irish could not make no headway and were forced to concede defeat, 4-0.

The victors skated from the ice after the battle with second place soley theirs, for the time, being at least, and immediately prepared for their four-day rest in Montreal, leaving yesterday for Rigaud, where they will be the guests of Louis Letourneau, part owner of the Canadien club, at his country residence. Saving started the second half of their long winter's campaign in second position, hockey will be forgotten for the next few days, as the players give themselves up to other winter sports, the team returning to Montreal to meet the New York Rangers Thursday.

Edmund Thibault of Cherry, Kingston vicinity will soon celebrate his 80th birthday.

SLOUGHING THROUGH

By YLNN C. DOYLE, Philly Bulletin

It's a snappy winter morning, and a goodly crowd they make As they jam the Judge's office in Chicago by the lake, And the meeting come to order," said the Judge in accents grave; "Mr. Bisbery, tell your story; I'll make the boys behave.

A hush fell on the courtroom as the Swede began his tale Of bribes and gifts and "stoolpiins," of ball games up for sale; "I used to be a shortstop," was the way the Swede began, "But I peeped beneath my pillow, and they handed me the can."

"Mr. Risberg," said His Honor, "We've heard that stuff before, "He kind enough to tell us what went on before the war." "Don't rush me," answered Risberg, "Don't make me go so fast, "You said you pay me for this job; I want to make it last.

"Now, let's see—just where was I when you rudely interrupted? "Oh, yes. I was a big league star before I got corrupted; "I used to be a short-top, as I mentioned once before, "But they fired me out of baseball; that's what made me sore.

"Mr. Risberg," screamed His Honor, as he jumped up from his seat, "Get that out and spill the scandal; it's almost time to eat." "Awright, awright, Your Honor, ran't a fellow take his time? "I think the deal they handed me was baseball's biggest crime."

"I was a shortstop and a good one, as some of you recall, "Just at the peak of my career, they shoved me to the wall." "Help, help" the old Judge shouted, and his gray hair turned bright red. "Will someone choke this hotehead Swede, before I lose my head.

Then up rose Eddie Collins, with Ehmke to the rear; Murphy swung an Irish fist against a Swedish ear. Then the well-known Cobb and Speaker picked Swede up by the handle Then someone heaved an inkwell Giphy, what a scandal!

"Lay off," His Honor pleaded; his cheeks with anger burned, "Well fet that darned fool loter. This meeting stands adjourned." They picked the Swede up with water and then the bunch Then straightened out the office and took the Judge to lunch

A SMART SPORT COAT

Madame her lots of fun planning the wardrobes of various clients. There are some women who come in occasionally to shop and there are others who simply give Madame free rein. I must say the latter get a lot of credit from their friends for dressing so perfection, and, if our "say" so, the rage is really Madame's.

However, the point I want to make is that any woman is able to consult such as she designer is Madame. Madame takes the personal tastes of the client into consideration and adds to that the benefits of her gifts and training.

But to get back to the subject in hand I'm simply mad about a new sports coat Madame has just done for a particular client.

The other day the client came in and announced:

"I consider coats the most important part of one's wardrobe—they can make or mar it so." Now, I happen to dislike every coat I own, so Madame, I shall bring my coats needs here every time if you'll just make me one that I adore." Madame was interested in this proposition, of course, and she hastened to say so when kind of coat the client wished. Considering I can wear in the South as well as here, and which will still be serviceable for early Spring sports needs later on," the young girl answered promptly.

Madame nodded understandingly, and then the girl continued:

"I can't bear new coats every single season, you see, and I have to plan carefully when I put a new coat of self money into one, for I have to wear it accordingly."

As I say, this was several days ago, and the coat Madame designed is perfect for the needs of the client, and as good looking as anyone could wish.

It is a brown and tan checked affair, with raglan sleeves and tab pockets. It's ideal for every purpose, the lightweight woolens and the soft crepe de Chine one wears for sports in the South, and it will be equally good for country wear during the Spring.

The material is that lovely soft woolen which Madame favors for her sports coats. A dark tan or brown felt hat is needed to complete the perfect sports outfit.

It's also the kind of coat that is smart with a silk kerchief of some neutral color worn about the neck.

Reports indicate that the many dairy companies in Nova Scotia have had a most successful year. One company reports that they manufactured well over 100,000 pounds more butter than in 1925. This increased production was valued at over $50,000.

Developments in bacon-hog raising in Nova Scotia and particularly in the Annapolis Valley as a by-product of the dairy industry, is already an assured success. In 1926, 21 swine clubs were functioning successfully in the Province. Of these eight operated in the Dominion Atlantic Railway territory.

The first fish net factory to operate in Canada is being started here by the Canadian Fish Net Co. Ltd., financed by Canadian capital and employing Canadian labor. Fishermen in the area used by Canadian fishermen have been imported from Europe and the United States, which in the areas entailed heavy losses owing to late deliveries.

Grain left Montreal for seventeen different countries in the 1926 season. Great Britain imported to the heaviest extent, followed in order by Holland, Germany, Belgium, Italy, France, Norway, Greece, Ireland, Portugal and South Africa. Great Britain took 39,291,768 bushels or 81 per cent. of the total exports through the Port, being also the heaviest purchaser of oats. Norway and Holland were the two largest buyers of rye.

The grain harvest of 1926 has left more money in the country than the greater harvest and somewhat higher prices of 1925, according to N. M. Paterson, president of the Paterson Steamship Company, and owner of a hundred country elevators in the West, with one other city elevator now being built at a contract cost of $800,000 at Fort William. Mr. Paterson, who was interviewed at the Windsor Hotel in Montreal recently, having arrived from Winnipeg, is returning with his father and mother, wife, six children and two nurses, by Canadian Pacific route, land and steamship, to England with a view to staying at Bournemouth for the next three months.

Steamship companies brought approximately 165,000 passengers to the Dominion in 1926, an increase of nearly 48,000 over the previous years. Third class passengers, the majority of whom were immigrants or new settlers, accounted for over 132,000. An outstanding feature of travel has been the development of tourist third class accommodation. Approximately 7,100 passengers of this kind were carried eastbound across the Atlantic from Canada and 5,500 transported westbound during 1926, making a grand total of this kind of travel of 15,750 for the year.

Factory construction in London during 1926, amounted to $85,190.

BELLE THEATRE

May Allison, probably one of the smartest dressed stars of the screen, wears some lovely clothes in Pan Pitou version of "The City," now showing at the Belle Theatre, in which she plays the part of a clever society girl.

For afternoon, she has selected a frock of green silk, bloused in silver, made in a smartly tailored two-piece fashion. The skirt finds fullness in the inverted box pleats at the sides. The blouse is finished with a narrow roll collar of velvet and tiny silver filigree buttons trim the tightly fitting sleeves. A tam-shaped turban of green velvet embroidered in silver and a silver purse completes the outfit.

For street, she wears an ensemble of soft brown. The chic three-quarter frock is made in straight plain lines and trimmed with gold metal braid. The beige Peter Rena coat is trimmed with soft bands of velvet matching the dress. In another scene she wears a simple black chiffon dress, relieved with a narrow band of white ermine, finished with a lovely diamond brooch.

For evening, she appears in a simple gown of black taffeta made with a bodice waist cut to fall low over the arms with a band of brilliants over each shoulder. The underskirt hem line adds grace and chic to the gown.

Her tea frock is simply made one-piece frock of soft blue georgette stamped with large figures. The wide V-shaped bertha collar is the original and unique touch for his costume.

REGENT THEATRE

A thrilling chase through rain and mud, reminiscent of Ralph Lewis' walk to Nome, Alaska, is made by Art Acord in "Lazy Lightning," the Blue Streak Western which opens at the Regent Theatre today.

In both cases the purpose was similar. In Ralto's long drive he sped at his fastest Acord to Texas to get anti-toxin to save the inhabitants of the town. In "Lazy Lightning," Buddy, the Texas Acord to Texas to get anti-toxin to save the life of a child stricken with the dread disease.

In one of the most amazingly wonderful rides ever staged before the camera Buddy bears Acord at tremendous speed over mounds, mud holes, on and on through the driving blinding rain until at last he arrives at the doctor's home. Buddy's motor cycle running and Acords skillful riding are such as to draw the greatest admiration for both man and beast. This awe-provoking race with death. And then the race back — thrilling, forceful, masterful, and the marvel just in time to save the child's life.

This picture has one of the most distinguished casts ever gracing a Western. In the supporting cast are Fay Wray, Wampas Star of 1926, Vin Moore, comedy director, Rex de Rosell, Italian Count, Bobby Gordon, famous for his work in "His People" and "The Cohens and Kellys," Arthur Morrison and George K. French.

FEDERAL GRITS HAVE WAR OVER MR. N. W. ROWELL

Appointment of Toronto Lawyer Causes Friction In the Party

Ottawa, Jan. 24.—It is reported that a first class row has broken out in the ranks of the Liberal party as the result of the appointment of Hon. Newton Wesley Rowell, K.C., as government counsel for the customs investigation commission which is now probing the charges made in the house of commons by Hon. H. H. Stevens, which charges formed one of the big issues at the federal election of last year. The ire of the discontents is aimed particularly at Hon. J. C. Elliott, minister of public works, who, they claim, is responsible for the appointment of Mr. Rowell.

Mr. Rowell has for many years been in the bad books of the ultra Laurier hench of the Liberal Party and particularly of those from the province of Quebec. The fact that the celebrated Toronto lawyer was one of the prominent members of the party who deserted Sir Wilfrid on the conscription issue and entered the coalition cabinet organized by Sir Robert Borden to carry out compulsory military service legislation has not been forgiven by the "die hards."

SPEECH IS ATTACKED

Mr. Rowell, during his membership in the Union government, was the subject of particularly vigorous attack by the opposition. A speech made by him in northern Ontario in which he was alleged to have refused the slightest enlistment for overseas by residents of Quebec and for which he is said to have claimed the Province-ding clergy was much to blame, brought upon him the most bitter castigations within the memory of the oldest members of the house.

This castigation came from the lips of Hon. Charles Murphy, a member of the Laurier cabinet, but now in the senate, and is referred to as one of the classics of the Canadian parliament. It was in this speech that Mr. Murphy who was and is, a master of invective, referred to "that delectable triumvirate, Newton Wesley Rowell, Joseph Wesley Flavelle and John Wesley Allison," given with the scorn on the "Wesley." Honorable "Charlie" sought to show that these men, either in position or in money, had all benefited from the war. Friends of those men claim that the attack was unjust, but it showed the feeling that existed against them.

HITS POCKET BOOKS

And now Mr. Rowell has been appointed to a highly lucrative position which might last for some time, and, to make matters worse he is aiding in bringing to light some conditions which will hit the pocket books of many. Liberals—and Conservatives, too, for that matter. The first big exposure was the wholesale exporting of liquor from British Columbia ports. It was shown that this liquor, billed for Mexican ports, really found its way to the United States. Steps taken by the government at the instigation of the investigating commission have not served to make Mr. Rowell popular with friends of those hit. And when it is probable that more scandal will be unearthed as other places it is plain to be seen that there is cause for uneasiness.

For some reason or other it is believed that Hon. Jack Elliott resented the appointment of Mr. Rowell as the post of counsel for the commission. This might be only surmise on the part of the Quebec members and those others whose reverence of Laurier's memory leads them to still hold animosity to Mr. Rowell, but it is known that Mr. Elliott and Mr. Rowell are friends of long standing, dating back to the time when Mr. Rowell was Liberal leader in the Ontario legislature and Mr. Elliott was one of his chief lieutenants, and because of this it is not surprising that the present minister of public works should be blamed.

The Irony of Love
By Charles Garvice

They carried him carefully, with astonishing tenderness, to the hut, and left the dying man—there could be no mistaking his condition—alone with Beaupré and Pa-chemut Joe. Gentleman Jim it wasn't so bad as this—but he kept it from you; he didn't want to worry you."

"Is he very bad?" asked Rafe hoarsely. "Dad, can't you speak to me?" His father nodded, and whispered: "presently!"

"A doctor! There's a doctor at Blinker's," said Rafe, with suppressed frenzy. "They've gone for him," responded Joe. "Don't I'm afraid— Keep quiet, Rafe; don't, don't distress him."

The dying man put his voice at last; he had to touch his lips and tried to grip it.

"I'm bad, Rafe," he murmured, with difficulty. "I've got my traveling ticket I knew it would be handed to me before long. Don't worry, lad; we all have to lay down the tools and knock off, sooner or later—"

His mind began to wander the way going back to the park, as the dying are wont to do, going back to one of the rare one of the follies which had wrecked that part for him. In this particular matter he had been as much the tempted as the tempter; but the Methods, which does our footsteps with the implacability of Fate and the mischievous of a shadow, makes no allowances for our temptations, our inherent weaknesses; and sooner or later it exacts the full penalty which all must pay for an committed and wrong done. The dying man, mind was wandering back to the days of his youth and his courtship, when woman's eyes brightened and their beaute beat fast at his coming. His head moved to and fro restlessly on the pillow, and he murmured, pleadingly, remorsefully, in a voice as low as to be inaudible by the two watchers.

"I know, I know—I wronged you, Polly. It's too late to set it straight. Try to forgive me. God knows I've been very cruel. Sorry, men might have called the sins of every, when you left me—but I never quite forgot. I tried to find you and the child; I'd have done the right thing by you and him if you had but you'd tired of me; you wouldn't have come back if I'd asked you. I'm not blaming you. Polly; you couldn't help your nature; it wasn't in you to stick to any man for long. No, I'm not blaming you; and I won't make any excuses for myself. It's the man's fault, you know; he should be stronger than the woman, should, yield, should save her from herself. Forgive me, Polly—His voice grew more incoherent and ceased. Presently consciousness returned to him, he appeared in a fashionable room and opened up at the window before a fine view.

"Why that's—

"Yes I am," said Jim his voice deeper than ever and successfully husky. "Are you to join, Jim?"

"A young man took his head. "No," he gasped.

"I'm going on fairly comfortably, did man. He—he's left you to stand by and—and Rafe's gone to the—"

Sonless Father Takes His Boys to Alaska

A bachelor who loves boys but who has no boys of his own! That is George E. Buchanan, a wealthy coal dealer of Detroit, a hard-boiled business man—who thinks that the best possible education a boy can have is the education of travel. He has sent 165 boys to Alaska from Detroit and Vancouver via the Canadian Pacific "Princess" Steamers to Skagway; and now he plans to not only send a group of boys to Alaska the coming year, but he has enlarged his program and his former slogan." "Go to Alaska with Buchanan" has a side-partner, "Go to Europe with Buchanan!" Buchanan is a Canadian electrician who has prospered wonderfully in Detroit. He will tell you he has made money there, but—his big idea is to give the townsy boy a chance. The boy says, "I'll do it," but Buchanan knows in his canny Scotch way that the only thing worth having is the thing you have to earn. So he says to the boys: Here's a trip to Alaska, here's a trip to Europe for you, but listen:

"No boy, or man, ever appreciated or got any benefit out of anything he did not work or sweat for. You earn one-third of your passage money, and I will tell you how to do it as how I can; you get your parents to put up another third and I will loan you the remaining third—and you can pay it back to me when you get ready, so that another boy can be sent to Alaska—or Europe." Every boy who has made good his passage money to Alaska, is eligible for the European trip—and the percentage of "make good" boys has been very high, according to Buchanan. Of all these Alaska boys, Buchanan says that two-thirds have voluntarily repaid him, although he has merely put them on honor to do it when they got ready—and he forecloses no legal obligations, because there are none. Any boy, anywhere in the United States or Canada, can qualify for George E. Buchanan's trip to Alaska, or to Europe, and can earn his third anywhere but, of course, he should get in touch with Mr. Buchanan, in Detroit, to learn how to earn his third. All of his boys have a wonderful time, no matter whether they go to Alaska, or to Europe, and when they finish with him they have had a business and travel education worth a whole lot.

CITY PUBLICITY COMMITTEE IS NOW ORGANIZED

Ald. Russell Wotten Made Chairman of New Civic Body

MOTHERS' ALLOWANCE

Approve Stand of Ottawa City—New Rink in Foster Ward

A Tourist and Publicity Committee consisting of all of the members of the Council was officially appointed by means of a by-law passed last evening by the Council. The Tourist Committee will have full charge of the Tourist Camp and will also deal in matters of advertising the city and placing its attractiveness before the tourist traffic.

A by-law was passed appointing Chas. Symons and J. B. Findlay as members of the Parks Management to fill the two vacancies caused by the annual retirement. Chas. Dolan has on his own request been retired.

A communication was received by the Council from the Carpenter's Union tendering on the matter of fair wages. The Union asked the Council to pay carpenters on city contracts a fair wage and that a clause be in the contract to this effect. The Council will consider the request as far as possible.

OPEN AIR RINK

The people of Foster Ward will in all probability have an open air rink in the near future. The chairman of Public Works and the City Engineer were a committee appointed at last evening's meeting of the city council to investigate the possibility of placing a free rink in Queen Park where water and light facilities are available. The work of erecting the rink is not to exceed $100.00 including caretaker's salary.

The Quinte District Seed Growers Association will hold a Seed Fair in Belleville in March of this year and the Council granted $75.00 to aid in defraying the expenses.

REFRESHMENT BOOTHS

No concession will be granted for the erection or operation of refreshment booth or stall on the property known as Quinte Tourist camp.

Two petitions, one requesting the building of a sanitary sewer on Victoria St., and another for the building of a cement walk on South John St., were referred to the City Engineer for a report.

PLAY ESSENTIAL TO BOY'S GROWTH

Dr. Bruce MacDonald, Head of St. Andrew's, Addresses Rotary

Rev. Dr. Bruce MacDonald, headmaster of St. Andrews College, told Rotarians something of the benefit of "Play" and what it means in the life of the growing boy. Dr. MacDonald emphasized it as an essential in the boys education and also stressed that play should be organized and controlled to bestow the maximum advantage.

In his talk, St. Andrew's principal outlined many things, which games did for the boys. It not only taught him to be a good sport, to conduct winner and good loser but it had a beneficial mental effect caused by continuous study. And of course the physical training made the boys more fit for life.

Last night several Rotarians journeyed to Napanee to attend the Charter night of that Club.

PEOPLE ON SHORE SEE SAILORS DROWN

Gijon, Spain, Jan. 25.—Fourteen members of the crew of the Spanish steamer Retuerto were drowned when the ship foundered off the Portuguese coast. People on the shore witnessed the tragedy but were unable to give assistance owing to the fury of the waves.

The engagement was announced on January 12, of Miss Mary Ashley—one of the richest girls in England, to Capt. Alan C. S. Reid of the Royal Air Force —and a member of parliament. Mary Ashley, who is a niece of Lady Louise Mountbatten, is granddaughter of Sir Ernest Cassel, King Edward's friend and banker. (The captain brought down ten enemy planes during the war, and taught the Prince of Wales and the Duke of York to fly. This photo shows Miss Ashley, who some day will inherit great wealth.

K. OF C. DANCE BRILLIANT SOCIAL EVENT, ENJOYED BY LARGE CROWD

Fine Music and Lovely Decorations Added to Evening's Pleasure

About 150 couple, guests at the Knights of Columbus annual dance held in the Moose auditorium last night tripped the light fantastic from early evening until early morning. The dance was undoubtedly the best that has been held in the 1927 season and the huge crowd testified as to its success by coming early and staying late.

The ballroom was beautifully decorated with blue and white streamers, while along the walls were novel designs and two or three huge "Welcome" signs.

At 9 o'clock the Bon Ton orchestra took its place on the raised and beautiful platform and the crowd commenced to sway in rythmetic unison as the strains proved irresistable.

NOVELTY DANCES

A clever feature of the evening was the spotlight dance, the spotlight changing colour every few minutes. A novelty was introduced in the "K" dance and in this pretty spheres were thrown to the crowd and those containing the spheres with the lucky "K" on them were rewarded by Alderman Russell Wotten and Mrs. Patterson. Prizes in the form of boxes of chocolates were presented to the winners.

Another big feature of the dance was the presentation of favours. Favours were lavishly distributed at different periods throughout the evening.

At midnight the crowded ballroom was quickly emptied as the assembled dancers proceeded to the Connell Chambers, also decorated with blue and white streamers, where a sumptous supper awaited them. Following the supper dancing was resumed until the early hours of the morning.

THE PATRONESSES

The patronesses for this most successful dance were—Mrs. L. M. Howe, Mrs. A. B. Colline, Mrs. T. Corbin, Mrs. F. Hurley, Mrs. C. T. Dolan, Mrs. W. X. Belnif, Mrs. L. P. Hughes, Mrs. James St. Charles, Mrs. F. Fitzpatrick, Mrs. J. J. Tunisch, Mrs. F. J. Butler, Mrs. J. P. Dolan, Mrs. F. C. Lee, Mrs. Chas. Whelan and Mrs. G. A. Lee.

BANK BANDIT AND MURDERER PAY PENALTY ON WINNIPEG SCAFFOLD

Winnipeg, Jan. 25.—Wilfred Bonnin, 24-year-old bank bandit, drug addict and, fatalistically known criminal, was hanged today for the slaying of Maurice Garvie, bank clerk who was shot to death during a hold up of the Logan Avenue branch of the Royal Bank on May 28, 1926.

The robbery and murder was one of the most sensation in the annals of local police. Bonnin drove to the bank in a taxi, demand that all employes 'stick 'em up' and when Garvie was slow in obeying the command the bandit shot and instant ly killed him. He then escaped with several thousand dollars. Within two hours how a located at a room ing house and when the police approached, Bonnin opened fire wounding two detectives and the proprietor of the house. Attempting to escape, he was seriously wounded.

Bonnin lived for some time at Port William and had a lengthy Ontario criminal record. He declared at the trial that he was crazed by drugs on the day of the murder.

STERRY IS HELD FOR BLASPHEMY

Magistrate Commits Toronto Publisher to Higher Court

Toronto, Jan. 25.—Ernest V. Sterry, charged with blasphemous libel, was committed for trial by Magistrate Brown in police court today. His bond of $1,000 was renewed until trial.

Publisher Brown declared he believed statements published in the pages of which Sterry was editor and publisher, "are blasphemous, in as much as it is a most indecent, offensive attack on Christianity and the Saviour, coupled in the most scurrilous and sacrilegious manner. I find it was defendant's intention to express and willify Almighty God in composing and publishing these scandalous, impious, blasphemous and profane libels of God."

The preliminary hearing was comparatively brief, consisting principally of argument by the crown in support of its charge that Sterry's writings with reference to the deity were 'scurrilous and profane' to the point of constituting blasphemous libel.

Sterrys counsel, after the crown attorney had concluded his lengthy and detailed case, said; "I do feel that there is a tremendous issue at stake, and it is my duty as counsel for accused to have this matter threshed out before a higher court. It is, I believe, the first case of its kind in Canada and the question is as to what our modern interpretation of the law is regarding blasphemous libel." He submitted that no reasonable man could look upon what had been written as being blasphemous.

BRIDGE STREET YOUNG PEOPLE ENJOY RIDE

Mrs. Moore, Mrs. L. H. Thomas, Mrs. Brason and Mrs. Havelock Robinson were chaperones of a delightful sleigh drive given by the young people of the pieces of the Young People's Epworth League of Bridge Street Church on Friday night. The party left the church at 7 o'clock and after a tour of the city, Point Anne and many outlying districts during which songs and choruses were heartily rendered by the two sleigh loads of young people, they returned to the Community Hall at Bridge St. where they were met by Rev. Dr. F. E. Malott and a band of workers had prepared a steaming hot supper arranged by Mrs. Moore which was enjoyed while the League members sat about the crackling grate fire. Games and songs were heartily entered into for an hour when the party broke up after an enjoyable nature talk by Mr. Wallace Haverlock. Rods who told of some of his experiences, whiles studying bird and animal life.

NORTH AND NATIONALIST FORCES EXPECTED TO CLASH DECISIVELY

Conflicting Reports of Successes For Rival Armies As Given

BRITAIN WATCHFUL

Shanghai Defences Being Strengthened in Case of Hostile Acts

(By Canadian Press)

With a plentiful supply of troops, Marshall Sung Chuan, commander of the Northern Chinese Army, is reported to be continuing his fight to halt the northward progress of the Nationalist Army of the South, whose ultimate cry is "China for the Chinese."

Reports of the Northern Army's success in Chekiang Province are conflicting. Defeat of Chang troops 85 miles southwest of Hang Chow is reported in one despatch, while another says Cantonese are being driven southwest along Tsetiang River. A definite engagement between the two armies is expected shortly by the correspondent of the London Daily Express.

Precautionary moves of military nature continue for the defense of Britishers in Shanghai in case the Nationalists should display force in carrying out their programme which includes abolition of foreign concessions in Chinese cities, unless of China under one government, cessation of extra, territorial rights of foreigners, including trial by their own courts, and abolition of "foreign imperialism." No further anti-foreign or anti-Christian agitation is reported today. Several missionaries, including those of the United church of Canada in Hsuchwa Province, continue to leave their inland posts and seek safety in port cities.

MAYOR WILMOT JUDGES SKATERS

Carnival at Simpson's Rink Drew Large Number of Contestants

Mayor Eardley Wilmot and Alderman Charles Hyde had one of the most difficult positions yet assigned them in acting in the capacity of judges at the 1927 Carnival at Simpson's rink last evening. After great deliberation, choosing and selecting amongst scores of Scottish graces, Mary Cora Nafior, Wild Indians, clowns, Bolsheviks, however, they selected as the winners amongst the ladies Mrs. Alivia Davies a beautiful "Rose Queen," and Miss Elizabeth Lipsenstz "Nickt". Miss Lillian Alexander as a parlor Clown won the ladies best comic; Miss Caitlen Clarke as Dolly Varden, girls best costume and Mrs. Faith Sullivan as an old fashioned man, second, while Miss Mary Forster, a brachiding witch won the ladies best comic.

The gentlemen's costumes were splendid and Mr. Gordon Davies as Pierrot, carried off first prize; Mr. Allen Hoden as a Spanish grandee, second; Mr. Fred Kelly who, won the gentlemens best comic was an original and most clever, dressed in rags and tatters and wearing a huge moto "Looking for work but hoping I won't find it". John Forster and Reggie Lichford carried off the prizes for boys best costume and each boy was cleverly made up while Harry Rogers in a comic costume carried off the prize in his class.

The three valuable lucky door prizes were won by Miss Beatrice Breen, Miss Mary McLean and Cy Young. An amusing episode occurred in the presentation of the children's door prizes when one little shaver who had set his heart in carrying off the bob sleigh which was awarded, found he had not held the lucky number. A mournful howl out in on the otherwise merry scene and it was only with great difficulty the little fellow was comforted to quietness.

GRIM WARNING OF CANCER ISSUED BY BRITAIN'S LEADING SURGEON

London, Jan. 26.—(cable)—If the law of averages holds good, a hundred people in this hall tonight will die of cancer," said Sir Berkley Moynahan, president Royal College of Surgeons and perhaps the greatest cancer expert in the world, addressing a meeting under the auspices of the British Medical Association. Despite the grim but kindly tone, his message was full of hope. "Only one disease, is worse than cancer, and that is the fear of it. Cancer can be cured and the patient delivered from it for ever. Cancer initially is always a local disease, not caused by any particular foods and neither hereditary infectious nor contagious."

DELAY IS CHIEF ENEMY OF MAN

Owen Herlty Gives Splendid Address on Mind Training

"The Mind—the Measure of a Man" as the subject of one of the most interesting addresses to which local Kiwanians have ever listened, a talk which, by the way, was highly luncheon by Kiwanian Owen Herlty.

In life's short journey,—as the speaker pointed out—man has been endowed with two precious possessions, time and a mind; a mind with whose shape, nor size are we weigh, which can be neither seen nor felt, yet a possession which is the ruling force of reasoning beings, for it is the seat of reason, of all thought, and of emotion. Through the brain does the mind find its outward expression to the thoughts and desires which emanate from that mind.

The key road to success, which all are seeking, bears two chief enemies for every man—vice and procrastination,—enemies which the mind and the will must co-operate in overcoming. Of the two, vice in its most dangerous form is the lesser of the evils, for it represents misguided mental energy, whereas procrastination very often indicates entire absence of that energy.

NO WAR WANTED

Reports say there is among the British people no enthusiasm for a new war against China. This is a good sign and may make it easier for statesmen to avoid a struggle that might last long and would surely cost millions of treasure. The conditions that prevail in the foreign "settlements" in China are not acceptable to the Chinese people. Foreign courts administer justice and foreign armed forces interfere in the preservation of order. Like conditions prevailed in Japan, but were abolished when that country established its readiness to maintain order, deal justly with strangers and assert its independence. China is not like Japan, however. It cannot be said to have a settled Government yet, and its people are at war in their own territory. The situation in the country does not justify foreign nations in lessening the protection they have extended in the past to their people in China; and so it may be necessary to employ force for a while yet. A change must come, however, the present conditions being good neither for China nor Europe. English people seem to see this.

LIQUOR STORES

There continues to be considerable discussion regarding the location of liquor stores in Ontario under the government control measure. It does not centre in localities where liquor was sold and served prior to the coming of the Ontario Temperance Act, but rather in those localities that had "voted dry" prior to that time.

According to a statement of Premier Ferguson the idea will be to place the stores in the districts where the people have shown a desire to have them, and so, to place them where such action would create an offence to the majority of the residents.

While such an opinion does not state any chapter and clause, it does embody the principle that will no doubt govern those to whom is given the responsibility for selecting the localities where government shops shall be placed.

The fact that there is a difference of opinion regarding whether the O.T.A. takes precedence over the Canada Temperance Act, while it may be interesting regarding the strict interpretation of provincial and federal enactments, can hardly override a common sense view of the situation.

It is likely that the government will respect the wishes of the people as recorded in their votes. No ministry would care to force shops in districts where people did not want them, and there is no reason to believe that the Federal Government has any such idea in mind.

The premier's statement that shops will not be placed where they would be an "offence" and that they will be placed where their presence is wanted is a fair enough indication of the line that will be followed.

WASTING MONEY

With the return of Mr. William Duff to Parliament the report is revived that a separate department of fisheries is to be created and that the new member for Antigonish is to be given the portfolio. Let all of us hope that the report is not true. A senseless and in defensible waste of money, a correct description of such a step would be. It may be true that Canada's fisheries are becoming more important, but we refuse to submit that their growth does not warrant anything more than perhaps the appointment of a separate deputy minister of fisheries under the present minister. As a matter of fact, the handling over of Quebec's fisheries to that province a few years ago relieved the federal department of a great deal of work.

This country has too many ministers already. That has been admitted by nearly everybody in a position to know, in recent years, including Mr. King. Mr. Kline, in fact, announced three years ago that he proposed to reduce the Cabinet, and he made a beginning by declining to appoint a successor to Mr. Murray as Solicitor-General and by abolishing the Department of the Secretary of State.

Since then, however, Mr. King has not lived up to his promise. He has filled the post of Solicitor-General and brought back the Secretaryship of State. If he proposes to create a brand new department, the fall from grace will be sad indeed.

With a population of ten million people Canada has eighteen Cabinet ministers. With a population of one hundred and ten million people, plus large possessions, the United States has eight Cabinet ministers. Our case, on the face of it, is absurd. If administration of our fisheries requires a separate deputy minister, then by all means let the post be created. But that we should have a new portfolio, with all of its pomp and circumstance and expense, just to reward the party service of Mr. Duff, or some other party man, would be really very ridiculous.

FIRE STARTED IN CLOTHES' CLOSET

Toronto, Ont., Jan 25—(By Canadian Press)—In this city four small children were burned to death last week, the parents having left them alone while on a visit to friends. The father did indeed return; but finding all sleeping he went away again. Fifteen minutes afterwards six children.

A more fortunate fate was that of four small children carried from a burning house a few days later by two gargamen who noticed smoke issuing from it.

Significant is the paragraph in the news item which follows: "The fire started in a clothes closet, where one of the children is reported to have dropped a lighted paper. The mother was out of the house at the time of the blaze, returning just as the children were carried out.

MAY BONUS COKE MANUFACTURERS

Ottawa, Jan. 25—Legislation is proposed this session for the payment of a bonus by the federal government to encourage the manufacture of coke from Canadian coal. While the measure has not yet been finally drafted, it is understood that the proposal is to pay a bonus of 7 cents per ton of coke produced in Canada from Canadian coal, that bonus being equivalent to 50 cents per ton on the coal used.

While the payment of the bonus is conditional upon the use of Canadian coal it is believed there will be no stipulation as to the percentage in the manufacture of the coke, as it is held by fuel experts that no satisfactory coke can be manufactured from Canadian coal only, that there must be a certain amount of American coal utilized. There is at least the encouragement for the use of Canadian coal, and it is understood that a number of interests are preparing to avail themselves of the provisions of the proposed legislation.

Legislation will be introduced by Hon. Charles, Stewart, minister of mines.

Winnipeg Barber Absorbs 86 Cups of Coffee in Six Hours

Winnipeg, January 25.—Harry Sacks, a 47-year-old Belgian, barber by trade and known as "Harry the Barber," today claims the world's coffee-drinking championship. He downed 86 cups, our three and one half gallons and two cups, on Sunday in six hours, exceeding the record of Gus Cousinoff, of Fergus Falls, Minn., by one cup, and only four cups under the unofficial mark held by Frank Trachimovich, of Kay, N.D., Trachimovich's record of 90 cup, is declared to be "unofficial" because he failed to keep a log.

Harry is sure of one thing—he is the champion jack drinker of Canada without liquid. After exceeding Cousinoff's record, he called it a day by "finishing off" with a pint bottle of beer, and issuing a challenge to "the world."

Rome, January 25.—Italy has been swept by furious storms. Heavy snow, accompanied by high winds, is falling in central and north ern parts of the country, particularly Venice and sacchi in Venice where telegraphic and telephonic communications have been interrupted.

A tempest of cyclonic proportions is hampering shipping of Sicily and in the Adriatic. The storm wrecked the steeple of a church at Lecce.

BIG FIRE IN MISSION CITY

Mission City, B.C., Jan. 25.—Fire which threatened the whole eastern section of Mission City was subdued after burning for two hours early today and destroying two general stores and a Chinese restaurant and laundry.

The loss was estimated to approximate $35,000.

WHO COUNTED THEM?

Bakersfield, Cal., Jan. 25.—Between 30,000,000 and 50,000,000 mice still remain in the Buena Vista Lowlands, despite the millions which have migrated into the Midway Sunset oil fields and west desert, in a six weeks' campaign of trench and poison warfare, according to estimates by horticultural and biological officials, who say the count shows as low as 400 to the acre and as high as 4,000.

City Council

Efforts are being made by the Ottawa Council to have the Provincial Legislature amend the Mother's Allowance Act and a petition is being circulated among the different city councils seeking support on the question. The petition provides that no allowance be paid toward the support of dependent children of a mother who was a resident in Canada elsewhere than Ontario at the time of death or disability of the father unless the Legislature of the Province from which she came has made provisions for the care of the children.

The Belleville Council will write the local member to support this amendment.

FLOOD PRECAUTIONS

City Engineer Chas. Campbell in a letter to the Council referred to the filling up of the Channel in the River mouth. Mr. Campbell believes that certain steps should be taken to prevent a flood such as occurred in former years. The City Engineer believes that the application of thermite will prove satisfactory in breaking ice jams down. The general principle of thermite is the application of intense heat developed by the combustion of iron oxide and metallic aluminum mixing a muffing of the which allows the water a channel through which to flow.

A letter was received from J. C. Mc-Carthy Proprietor of the Belle Theatre in regard to the placing of Bill Boards against telephone poles on Front St.

The matter was referred to the City Clerk to ascertain what prohibitions the city now has relative to there advertising signs.

Fire Loss

1915— 40 calls	$41,278.00
1921— 43 calls	18,554.50
1922— 84 calls	17,699.15
1923—111 calls	30,764.75
1924— 76 calls	26,952.25
1925— 72 calls	18,337.50
1926— 88 calls	54,946.25

You will notfrom comparison that our fire losses for the year 1926 are the highest of any year since 1920. The greatest loss was occasioned by the destructive fire at the plant of the National Castings which amounted to $21,500.00. This is one of the fires which occasionally appear, where no fire department would be able to successfully combat the conflagration as the building and its contents were practically a total loss before the Department were advised of the fire. The losses for the year outside of this amounted to $13,446.25 which is a decrease of $5,441.27 over the previous years.

I still find that a great many of the alarms received are for chimney fires caused by overheated stoves and neglect to keep the chimneys clean. If our citizens would take the precaution each fall and spring to remove the pipes and clean them, also cleaning the bottom of the chimney and as far up on the stack as it is possible to reach, they would find that the fire calls and losses would be greatly reduced.

It is with pleasure that I report that the motor driven hook and ladder truck is in operation and owing to the fact that it is provided with a large chemical tank and can arrive at the fires so much more quickly than the horse drawn truck we will be in a position to use chemicals more frequently than we have done in the past and this will lessen the water loss which was formerly occasioned by the use of so much water.

The following comparison of fire losses as compared with the value of property endangered for the years 1921 to 1926 inclusive might prove of interest to you.

Year	Value	Loss
1921	$18,700.00	$ 4,725.00
1922	251,353.00	17,699.15
1923	371,518.00	30,764.75
1924	176,503.00	26,952.25
1925	497,372.00	18,337.50
1926	346,100.00	54,946.25

I remain,

Yours respectfully,

W. J. BROWN,

Fire Chief.

SHOULD NOT BAR FOREIGN - TEXT BOOKS IN CANADA

Montreal, Que., Jan. 25—(By Canadian Press)—People who criticize the use of text books published in foreign countries in Canadian schools lack something of the spirit of internationalism. This is the opinion that Professor Carrie Derick, M.A., of the Protestant Committee of the Council of Education expressed before the Notre Dame de Grace Women's Club.

"We could not have text books except they are made in Canada; in what I am told continually," stated Professor Derick. "What are you going to do about that history. The World is progressed? I am asked by clubs. I have replied to persons who speak in this way that if they will prepare a history even better or quite as good as the American history, which is not anti-British. I would be very glad to see it it can't be adopted for use in Canada. Canada should be in intellectual circles, the spirit of internationalism."

MINING GOSSIP

Red Lake mining area is undergoing the second phase of development of a new mining camp. The picturesque staking rush of last winter took place amidst a blaze of publicity for the new camp. Lacking new sensational discoveries interest waned and pessimism followed the series of Dome giving up its option on the Hoyery property.

* * *

Meantime, development work has been carried on, and the steady grind that will eventually prove or disprove Red Lake's future as a gold camp has been under way on numerous properties. Eventually Red Lake will emerge a proven camp after the manner of Kirkland Lake, or drop by the wayside, forgotten, but the case is still before the court, and latest reports bring news of renewed activity in the area.

Stadacona mines has been officially listed on the Standard Stock Exchange, and will be called for trading on Friday.

Nipissing featured the mining exchange yesterday, when it went over ten dollars a share, following news of developments in Mountney Township. The close was at 10.05, compared with the close on Saturday at 9.15.

TANTRUMS AS GRIST FOR DIVORCE MILL

Take the Case of One High-Strung, Emotional Wife, Who Never Missed an Opportunity to Make a Scene.

BY ELSIE MARLOWE

Why is divorce?

Here's the why of one divorce.

Twenty years ago Hazel was a little girl of 6 who played pieces on the piano. She played them well, amazingly well. Hazel's mamma was sure she had prodigy in the making. She said so frequently right in front of Hazel. When Hazel spelled at bantrum, as little girls of six are apt to do, mamma said: "Poor darling, she isn't really naughty. She's just high strung. Talented children always are temperamental."

Naturally this was Glad Tidings to Hazel. She felt she had to live up to it. So she pulled another tantrum pronto. When she wasn't pulling tantrums she was staging other fireworks. Every little impulse Hazel had was allowed to bust loose all over the landscape. She laughed as easily as she cried, and yelled as easily as she laughed. Life was a three-ringed circus for Hazel and her family—something doing every minute and, though mamma showed signs of wear, she still protested: "She's just high strung. She really can't help it, the poor darling."

When Hazel was nineteen she met Bob. She fell in love with him violently. Violence was the best thing Hazel did. Bob himself wasn't a particularly violent specimen. He was one of those good natured, easy-going, hard-working young chaps who are said to be the "salt of the earth." But never paprika. He liked Hazel. He liked her so much that he married her. But he didn't make much of a fuss about it.

Hazel, however, made enough fuss for the two of them. And then some. She was still living up to that "high strung" reputation which she had earned for many years. She believed that a riotous emotional exhibition was an infallible sign of a Great Mind and a Great Soul. So she proceeded to create accordingly to her best conceptions of a passionately emotional wife.

She registered every minute and never allowed Bob to forget what a little wonder he had captured.

She smiled and sighed, fumed and fainted, prayed and pranced, blubbered and blustered, raged and regretted twenty-four hours out of every day. Every slightest experience which came to her was magnified into a Crisis. She never gave her feelings a rest, or Bob either.

One day she would be all joy, kissing everything in sight, cooing and cuddling capricious as a kitten with a catnip ball.

The next day she would be reserved, mysterious, occult, turning a Secret Sorrow, suffering in a silence as thick and unpleasantly obvious as a slice of limburger.

The next day—ZOWIE! All storm signals flying, and the stew burning. Bob had to duck for cover on extra days. His most casual remark drew floods of tears.

Then Repentance. Gasps and sobs of repentance. She was sorry she had acted so horribly, but he'd hurt her so, etc., etc., etc.

And all His Hazel fondly imagined was the sign of a passionate love and she "way to hold a man's interest."

But Bob—quiet, peace-loving Bob found her changing moods amusing and interesting at first, but home soon became about as restful as a soft feeding time. He began to do a lot of thinking. He decided that Uncontrolled Moodiness was the signs of a Genius and a Super-soul, but merely the signs of a nature that needed a little discipline.

All Hazel emotional displays were tiresome, noisy affairs. They wasted strength and time, both his and Hazel's. Home should be a restful place. A wife should be someone you could depend upon. Hazel was about as dependable as a blob of mercury. She got that way by the time she was twenty-five.

He told her so and started a terrible row.

He told her so again and and rushed home to mamma.

Then he settled down and tried to bust it.

But finally, after six years of unbearal, the storm turned. He decided he couldn't stand it any longer. He packed up and went to a hotel. And now she is divorcing him for desertion and telling all the world how shamefully she was treated.

Poor good, kind, true, pure, loving wife has been treated.

But Bob doesn't care much so long as he gets a rest.

That's the "why" of one divorce.

"She comes as a boon to the housekeeping set. This bright little maid that we call Jane Gillex."

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a girl of 17, and have a girl friend of whom I am very fond. We were brought up together. Now I am going with a young man whom my girl friend does not like. She does not want me to go with him.

I think too much of both to give either up. Please advise me how to keep both friends.

BROKEN-HEARTED BROWN EYES.

BROKEN-HEARTED BROWN EYES:

If you handle the situation with tact there is no reason why you should sacrifice either friendship.

It not infrequently happens that either or two girls who have been lifelong friends becomes jealous when the other becomes interested in a young man. Apparently that has happened in your case. I doubt that your girl friend has any specific objection to the young man who interests you. No doubt she feels that he is expressing much of the attention and time that you used to give to her.

You must assure your friend that the continuance of your friendship is essential to your happiness. You must make her understand that your contact with her is not a bit less important because of the new contact you have made. Explain that your interest should, anything enrich your friendship with her, because it will give you broader view.

As for the young man and his disapproval of your friend, I rather imagine that his attitude is just a reflection of her antagonism toward him. He naturally feels that both friendships are important to your happiness. I am sure he will be reasonable about it. I am sure that your difficulty with him will disappear when you have cleared the matter with your girl friend.

More of the best skirts are in tiers these days, measuring, no doubt, for the length to which they used to go. But just to show how gladly it has adopted current chic, this skirt stops its tiers three-quarters of the way around, leaving a plain panel down the back of the frock. The waist is likewise in the swing, with its smart blousing above the narrow tie belt, and with the graceful line of the batwing sleeves. A youthful combination for this frock would be a skirt of black satin crepe with a blouse of cherry red or a rich blue for the crepe de Chine of the skirt and with a touch of silver thread for the embroidery on the lighter blue blouse.

CHAPTER II

CONCERNING THE ACTION AND CHARACTERS

CHRISTINE FAIR

pretty, popular, just eighteen, is invited to the commencement exercises of Reserve University by one inseparable friend, of her childhood, both of whom are in love with her. They are:

HARVEY BLANTON

handsome, brilliant, agressive, and his chum and roomate, grave, dependable, doggedly determined to make his mark in the field of chemical experimentation.

LEWIS HAYES

THE RIVALS

Christine leaned on the rail of the balcony that overhung the ballroom where the commencement dance was in progress. Harvey was on the side of her; Lewis on the other. Behind were several eager young men who clustered for dances on a program already overfilled.

Against the fairyland background of festooned lights in the college colors; of music and laughter and flirtation; of a perfect orchestra executing a perfect waltz, she was an exquisite little figure.

Young, clear-eyed, confident, thrilling with the joy of living, she was the personification of the scene before her. And because of what she saw in the eyes of the men about her, roguetry flashed in hers, and laughter bubbled to her pretty lips. She had never in her whole life known such happiness.

They were like pulsing crimson lights. They were like pausing crimson hearts against the white and crystal of her frock. A bandeau of crystal encircled her slim young head. Her new necklace of rubies lights up her white throat.

She wore the exquisite little crystal fringe slippers—with the rubies—that Harvey had given her. He could—it keep from staring at her feet.

"Let's duck all this," he whispered, under cover of the waltz. "If we start to dance, half a dozen fellows will cut in. Come out on the terrace it's cool.

She cast a half-reluctant glance at the gay scene below, but she followed him obediently.

"Just a little while," she explained to Lewis as they turned away. She caught the look that flashed between the two youths, and was puzzled.

The moon was shining on the terrace of the gymnasium-ballroom, making the shadows under the campus trees all the darker. Still, blurred shapes moved through the shadows; the light flut ter of a girl's gown; the flash of a silver scarf, or the sudden flare of a match and a young face above a cigarette! Through the open windows of the ballroom, the music drifted softly and the passing dancers made a colorful scene.

Harvey guided Christine to a rustic seat under a tree. The moonlight, sifting through the branches, made a pattern on her white gown. She sat motionless and fearful with the scent of syringa in bloom.

Christine chatted on but her companion had little to say.

"What's the matter, Harvey?" she asked, after a minute. "Not having a good time?"

He turned to her swiftly.

"This—is the matter!" he said in a queer, tight voice. And kissed her eagerly on the lips.

She tried to push him away indignantly, though she was trembling, strangely strangely weak after that kiss. He had never kissed her before, and she said:

"You know I don't like that, Harvey."

But he held her tightly and his young voice broke, as he whispered:

"You're going to marry me. Christine's you?"

Somehow, she had always expected this. There had never been anyone else in her life but Harvey—and Lewis. She thought, with swift compunction, of Lewis, and, as if her thoughts conjured him out of the darkness, suddenly he was standing before them, peering with uncertainly through the shadows.

Harvey was on his feet. She could see him only vaguely, but she knew how he looked by the triumphant ring in his laugh. His handsome young head would be thrown back; his eyes splendid in their confidence.

"Come, Lew. Be your chance now. I've been to the bargain—but Im going in for a think—of celebration!"

He was off, lahalooing, like, triumphant.

Lewis seated himself beside the wondering Christine. He moved as though he were under a very tired. She watched him light a cigarette. The flare of the match revealed his face. It was grayer than she had ever seen it.

"What on earth were you boys talking about?" she demanded.

He hesitated a moment. Then he said gently:

"About you, Christine. We're all three too good friends for secrets, Harvey and I agreed, when you promised to come here for commencement, that we'd see each other a fair chance to—to ask you a question. Whatever you decided—" he flushed, with a shrug. "But you haven't asked me anything."

There was a silence. Then:

"I don't need to, Chris. I knew the answer when I came here. I knew you and Harvey will be very, very happy always. You are my best friends. I love you both."

He rose and held out his hand.

"Good-bye," he said gently.

"Good-bye?" she echoed incredulously. "Aren't you going to stay for the supper?"

"I'm taking the midnight train to Chicago." Had an offer from a chemical firm there—nothing big, just something to start with. I wired them today that I was coming."

"But—then you had your reservation when you came to the dance tonight?" she faltered.

"You see how well I—knew."

He turned and went striding across the grass. Something in her heart cried out "You may never see him again. And he is your friend! How can you be so cruel?"

She sped after him, caught his arm, lifted her exquisite face to his.

"Oh, Lew, please don't be hurt or angry. You see, I love you too—only not the way I love Harvey."

He did a thing very unlike himself much more like Harvey, who did such things so gracefully. He lifted her hands to his lips—and was gone, without a word.

But her hands were moist with tears. (To be continued)

SCOURGING OF ABBE BY BAND OF FANATICS AROUSES COURT

Ten Members of French Order Given Fines and Prison Terms

Meaux, France, Jan. 25—Ten members of the fanatical Order of Our Lady of Tears were sentenced by default for flogging the Abbe Dee Noyers, parish priest at Bombon, a year ago and mutilating his portraits.

Two men were given eight months imprisonment and their women were sentenced to six months each. A fine of 100 francs was also levied in each case. The Abbe, was awarded 5000 francs damages and the servants 1000 francs each.

The case, savoring of the spirit of the dark ages, aroused nation-wide interest. The members of the fanatic order, which was founded by a former jailbird in Bordeaux, in 1904, went to Bombon, a village near Melun, determined to expel from the body of Father Dee Noyers "the spirits of evil which possessed it."

They invaded his sacristy, gagged and scourged him, leaving him in a serious condition. Marie Monnin, the ex-jailbirds who founded the order, claimed that the Abbe had cast a spell over her.

SONGS OF BULLFROGS CAPTIVATE LADY BYNG

Ottawa, Jan. 25—Lady Byng, wife of the former Governor-General of Canada is a great admirer of the song of the Canadian bullfrog. Clyde L. "Before leaving for England, Lady Byng expressed to me the desire that she be supplied with batches of frogs' eggs, to be placed on her estate, as food had also become of the song of the frog," Mr. Patch stated.

S.O.S CALL FOR NURSE TO SAVE LIFE OF VETERAN OF GREAT WAR

London, Jan. 25—No answer has yet come to the dramatic wireless appeal made on behalf of an ex-soldier who is seeking news of a nurse he met in hospital at Salonika seven years ago.

Behind the appeal lies the grim story of a desperate fight against the bullet-fires of fate and an illness that has slowly but surely seized the upper hand.

Mr. Howard Gordon Hobden on whose behalf the appeal was made, is lying seriously ill here in the East Sussex County Sanatorium at Darvell Hall.

There is just a chance that he will recover, but unless the appeal is answered he will have nothing to look forward to when he leaves the sanatorium, for the nurse with whom he is anxious to communicate can alone establish the fact that he was ill at Salonika and thus secure for him his army pension of 45s. a week. Her name is Staff Nurse Mary Bailey.

Mr. Hobden came here a fortnight ago. He had collapsed while travelling by train in his home at Hove after ex-Bank at Winnipeg.

WHO RESPONSIBLE FOR YOUNG'S WIN?

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 25—(By Canadian Press)—Local editorial comment on the victory of George Young, the 19-year-old boy who achieved fame at Catalina Island has a word for the mother. "Who should receive the credit for the Catalina swim? The boy who did it or the mother who inspired him? Both, no doubt," says the Globe. And the "Mail" has a word for parents to ponder over: "One of the defects of our educational system is that it does not lead young people to believe in themselves. MAROONS PLAY SMART HOCKEY; DEFEAT BROCKVILLE AT HOME 3-1 PLAY IN CORNWALL FRIDAY EVE.

Belleville Defeat Island City Sextette and Remain Tied With Cornwall

The Belleville Maroons won a 3-1 victory from Brockville last evening in the Bland Town in a fast game in which the visitors showed a marked superiority over the home team in every department. The score, in all truth should have been greater, the Brockville net being in constant danger with the Maroons invading continually. The home team were somewhat weakened by the loss of "Mort" Kennedy, brilliant little centre man, who was injured in the Ottawa game but rewarded the boy who replaced him did exceptionally well.

The result of the game had little to do with Brockville's standing in the group since they have been eliminated, but despite that fact, the Easterners gave the locals a worthy argument and demonstrated that they are not the weakest team in the "Big Six" by a long way. The Maroons displayed their best combination of the season, and providing they play as well in Cornwall on Friday night, the "Flying Frenchmen" will have their hands full.

The fast sheet of ice left no room for complaint on that score and the puck behaved in a more appropriate manner than against Kingston Friday. The wings were skating nicely and were always at the vantage point when the rubber was slipped across to them. They carried the disc right in on top of Murray time after time, but the latter played up to his brilliant style and from all reports it was one of his best performances of the season. Murray simply played himself into hockey and turned the Belleville team made after every one on the Brockville team had been beaten. A quick-thinker and just as rapid in his actions, Murray closes the puck fast and allows the opposing team no chance to slap in the rebound. He undoubtedly saved Brockville's bacon last night. Murray went in his best to make some sensational stops. He is one of the smartest goalies in the loop.

Last night's game had little effect on the group standing since Cornwall on Friday night take a full cut of Tilton and Company. If they accomplish that task, then the remaining games should be duck soup for the locals.

The Maroons scored two goals but neither of them were allowed, Referee Chalf Deville, claiming that one hit the outside of the goal post and another he said was off-side. That official has been, even so far better advantage than he was last evening.

There was plenty of rough play that escaped his eye and this was particularly noticeable o nthe part of the Brockville team. "Stan" Hagerman was subjected to a very rough passage and exhibited several marks of the fray on his body after the game. "Dick" Higgins was one of the worst offenders in this respect. He was carrying his stick high all evening and made four, trips to the penalty box and should have made a trio that number. The whole thing culminated in a flat fight a minute before time with Hagerman and the veteran left winger tearing into each other.

Higgins was one of Brockville's most effective players so long as he remained on the ice.

"Red" Garand was another boy who put in a fine game while playing his Junior kid. He worked hard while on the ice and gave a good account of himself.

Whalen in Form

The Belleville team all played well and deserve credit, credit, credit. In the opinion of the writer, a lion's share of the honors adorn the shoulders of "Pat" Whalen, another little left wing player. The same boy outplayed anyone on either team and was responsible for many rushes that gone to song. "Daw" turned in his finest game of the season. His condition is fine and he was right there close in on the wing that fooled Murray.

"Soup" and "Gilly" Goyer were the other marksmen for Belleville. Both of their goals were of the sweetest. Gilly and Murray was given an chance to either one of them. All three counters were well-earned.

Woodcock scored Brockville's lone goal in the second period.

"Stan" Hagerman played the hardest kind of game and deserved one of the goals. He was right up in position to take a pass and gave Murray some hot ones.

Forward Art Green were bouncing them right and left and the Brockville players very seldom broke through. They were effective, shocking and rushing.

"Gilly" played his usual good game and was right there in every effort. His look check and fake pass were working nicely.

Frechette and Rooney both gave good accounts of themselves while on the ice. Rooney fills a big hole and is a capable relief man.

Bowen in goal had plenty of shots rifled at him both from long and short range and he saved a host of them. The one goal that beat was a tough piece of luck.

The only accident occurred when Frechette tried to hurdle Auell while the latter was on the ice but the Brockville player received the worst of it in the high sticks and was taken off.

TWO TIE GAMES IN CITY LEAGUE LAST EVENING

Alemite Surprise Canadian Nat. Express—Bankers and Tigers 4 Each

Brilliant hockey was dished up for the patrons of the city league last evening and those who witnessed the double-header stated that it was worthwhile a trip over to the arena.

C. N. R. Express 3, Alemite 3

The Canadian National Express dropped a smart team on the ice in their first appearance and the rail-birds were given plenty to talk about. Let by "Bill" Finkle and "Pat" Boland who have played on hockey in their day, the Express boys met awo shy foe in the Alemite squad. Frank Rayfield trotted out a bunch of younger boys and they demonstrated that they will be in the fight to a finish. What they lacked in experience they made up in science and gave their older rivals plenty to worry about. Both teams are well balanced in every department and should make a bid for the honors.

Old "Jimmy" Symons was one of the Express teams most's effective players while "Bill" Canning and Strachan also played a nice game.

Pests, Flagler and Rigby were fairly effective for the lubricators. Belmap played a clever game in the goal Anderson and Darrah also played nice games.

Bankers 4, Tigers 4

Both games were tied and no overtime was played as is the rule in the city league.

The Bankers stepped into the Tigers, last year's champions, and nearly administered a trimming to them, but the Bengals came back with the punch and tied things up in the last stanzas. The periods were 2-0 and 4-1 in favor of the Bankers.

Two more games will be staged on Thursday evening and the fans may expect some fast hockey.

Clarence (Pick) Arnott refereed both games and handled them in fine style.

Bankers—Goal McCall, defence Deshane and Hudson, centre Lebarr, wings Moffatt and Cross. Subs — Hearst, Vanderhart.

FAST GAMES IN CHURCH LEAGUE

John St. Outplays Baptists and Christ Church Defeat Emmanuel

Another fast game in the Intermediate Sunday School League was played at Bailey's rink last night between John Street United Church and Victoria Avenue Baptist church. The final score was 6-5 for John St. and although the score indicates a walkaway, the game was a hard-fought battle. For the winners, Milt Davison and Vic White stood out, while F. Hitchen and Lloyd were prominent. B. Ross refereed a very impartial game.

The line-up:

John St.		Baptists
C. Kinnear	Goal	F. Hitchen
M. Miles	Defence	E. Hitchen
M. Davison		R. Turner
V. White	Centre	O. Lloyd
M. Clarke	Wings	B. Orr

W. Fisherton

In a fast Junior fixture at Queen St. rink Monday evening, the Christ Church Sunday School team won out from Emmanuel Church team by the score of 6-2. The Junior League is developing some smooth working aggregations and it is becoming hard-er each game to single out individual stars. Players are learning that the one who plays his position, although not in the select column is as valuable to the team as the one who scores.

MAY VINDICATE TRIS. SPEAKER AND TYRUS COBB

Reinstatement Within Two or Three Days' Likely—Both Have Offers

Chicago, January 25.—Ty Cobb and Tris Speaker, formerly managers of the Detroit and Cleveland clubs, under charges of "fixing" a game in 1919, for the sake of a betting pool, may be vindicated and re-instated in organized baseball within two or three days.

Their attorneys conferred today with Commissioner Landis and Cobb's counsel insisted upon a quick vindication. Cobb said he was under the impression that the commissioner's decision would be handed down today but learned later that it was to be postponed.

Speaker left today with his lawyer for Cleveland with the knowledge that three American League clubs are ready to bid for his services as soon as his record is cleared.

Detroit, Washington and New York clubs are said to be eager to sign him.

While Cobb has received one offer from Baltimore and expects others from major league clubs, the "Georgia Peach" is planning a trip to Europe instead of his twenty-fourth season of major league baseball.

HIGH SCHOOL WIN FROM ALBERT 2-1

Local Studen' Teams Play Smart Game in Interscholastic

For the second time, yesterday afternoon, did the High School sextette trim Albert College by the score of 2 to 1 in the Intercollegiate. The High School lads forced the play for the greater part of the game, seeming to show a faster and trickier forward line. Young Pete Latchford was a thorn in the bigger Albert College boys' side. Black scored the first goal for the High School in the first period. In the second period "Nig" Ross whipped the puck into the net again and in the last period by a strenuous effort Albert College drove the puck into the High School zone and pushed it into the net, Mason and Wren doing the work. Chant and Haig played nice hockey for the losers.

Subs—Bunch and Bryant.

Noble, of the Maroons, heads the penalty list with 48 minutes against him. George Boucher and Hooley Smith of the Ottawa Senators are well up the list with 79 and 78 minutes, respectively.

HANGMAN TO RETIRE

Arthur Ellis to Write Memoirs—His Hanged 400 Persons

Winnipeg, January 25. — Arthur Ellis, Canada's official hangman, made his second visit to Winnipeg within a year, today. He came this time to carry out the capital sentence of the law inspired on Wilford Bonnin, slayer and bank robber who was executed this morning. Bonnin, reduced to a cripple through bullets of the law, was carried to the gallows.

In an interview here today, Mr. Ellis announced his intention of retiring in the spring.

"I intend to publish my memoirs, in fact the greater part of my experiences have already been written, and arrangements made for the publication of the volume," the hangman confided. Mr. Ellis has sprung the trap on more than 400 persons condemned to die.

Skirts in Paris will be shorter in the spring, and the newest show fullness from about the knee, the hips being carefully fitted, while fullness is obtained by many devices, either side or front pleats and inverted pests or a frankle flute in the centre and a series of tucks, ings, and gathers.

BELLE THEATRE

When "A Trip to Chinatown," Fox Films' version of Charles A. Hoyt's uproarious comedy, opens at the Belle theatre tomorrow for a two days' run, local theatre-goers will have an opportunity of viewing one of the funniest five-reel farces ever brought to the silver-sheet. It was directed by Robert P. Kerr, under supervision of George E. Marshall, and the cast includes some of the best artists in America.

The list includes beautiful Margaret Livingston, billed as "Alicia Guyer," the audacious writer, and Earle Foxe, cast as "Welland Strong," the unhappy young man who is sure he has committed murder, assembled at the West Coast studio. Theirs includes Anna May Wong, George Kuwa, Harry Woods, William Scraps, Marie Astaire, Gladys McConnell, Charles Farrell and scores of other well-known actors.

Much of the action is laid in San Francisco's romantic Chinatown, reproduced with the utmost fidelity, and many of the interiors are portrayed in the extreme. It is said to be the most costly five-reel comedy ever produced. Hundreds of extras were necessary for the revelry scenes in Chinatown. Special comedy writers were employed to assist Director Kerr with novel situations.

Preview critics have pronounced this the best comedy released in recent years.

FIRE LOSS $300

Port Hope, Jan. 25.—The remarkable fact that the net fire loss in Port Hope for 1926 was only $300 has been pointed out in the annual report on fires and losses, issued by Fire Chief Richard Ware.

During the entire year the fire department were only in attendance at fires twelve times and on only one occasion was the blaze of such proportions to cause any danger to adjoining property. Of the twelve alarms, seven were for chimney fires, none of which developed into serious conflagrations; one was the Dodge wrecking alarm and four were for small blazes.

WOLF SHOT AT RICE LAKE

Peterboro, Jan. 25.—A wolf five feet six inches long from nose to tail has been shot on Rice Lake by William Hutchison and John Smith, of Harwood township. It had penetrated civilization as far as Cobourg district, most people who saw the animal mistaking it for a silver grey fox. This is the first time a wolf has been seen near Peterboro since the early days of the settlement.

SMALLPOX SPREADS

Port Hope, Jan. 25.—Another case of smallpox has been reported in various sections of Durham County, Port Hope so far remains free from the disease and no cases have been reported. Oshawa has several cases, a new one having been reported Saturday.

MAN SEVERELY INJURED

Peterboro, Jan. 25.—Stanley Houghan, a brakeman in the employ of the Canadian National Railways, is in a critical condition at St. Joseph's Hospital, as a result of severe injuries obtained when he was knocked down by an approaching freight train in the Canadian National Railway's yard, east of Weir street on Saturday afternoon.

One ankle is badly crushed, and his other leg is so frightfully crushed that it is extremely doubtful whether the limb can be saved or not. Latest reports from the hospital today indicated that it would be at least two or three days before any decision in this regard could be arrived at.

There were no actual eye-witnesses to the accident, the first talking that anything was wrong being when Brakeman Bull shouted to stop the train. The injured man, still conscious, crawled from beneath the caboose of the train to the side of the track. First aid was rendered by Harvey Beaudoin, Hoolihan being placed on a cushion taken from the caboose. He was carried to the cabooose and brought to the local depot, from where he was rushed to the hospital by a waiting ambulance.

DIXON CLEARED

Toronto, Jan. 25.—Ernest Albert Dixon of Oshawa was found not guilty of manslaughter at 3.45 o'clock yesterday afternoon and he was discharged by Mr. Justice Smith. The sudden termination was reached after Edward Smith of Oshawa testified yesterday afternoon He was a passenger in the Dixon car the night of the crash. Crown Prosecutor V. Sinclair asked that the charge be not continued, as the clear story told by Smith had cleared the situation. Justice Rose said, "I am glad you adopted that attitude," then, turning to the jury, exclaimed, "In civil actions it must be proved that the collision happened without the fault of the accused but to a manslaughter charge, the crown must make out to the satisfaction of the jury that the defendant acted unlawfully by showing a disregard for the law which required him to exercise reasonable care, and had exercised a certain various disregard for the rights and privileges of others on the road."

Never Let a Cold Get a Start

Vapors Check a Cold Overnight

There are many ways to treat a cold—but only one DIRECT way—with vapors that can be inhaled.

Vapors penetrate immediately into every corner of the air passages and lungs, soothing and healing with every breath.

Vicks is a remarkably successful in treating cold troubles because it acts like a "vapor lamp in safety form."

When rubbed over throat and chest the body heat releases vapors of Menthol, Camphor, Eucalyptus, Thymol and Turpentine. At the same time Vicks is absorbed through and stimulates the skin like a poultice or plaster.

This double, direct action often checks the worst cold overnight.

CANADA RANKS HIGH IN PUBLIC HEALTH MATTERS

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 25. (By C.P.)—That Canada has no cause to be ashamed of her standing in comparisons of the world or of her contributions to the cause of public health and that the League of Red Cross Societies, representing 50 countries, with headquarters in France is doing an indispensable and invaluable peacetime work are the considered opinions of Dr. F. Routley, Director of the Ontario Division of the Canadian Red Cross Society who has just returned from a three months' sojourn in Paris, where he was in charge of the Health Division of the Red Cross Secretariat.

Dr. Routley said: "I was highly gratified to find that Canada occupies a front rank with the four or five foremost nations of the world in matters of public health. We cannot hope to do so as large a scale as the things done in Great Britain and the United States but in our standard methods, and some accomplishments we are second to none.

"I found the Europeans intensely interested in the Red Cross Outpost Hospitals in the frontier sections in the Junior Red Cross and in our Visiting Housekeepers' Centre as seen in the Toronto branch of our Society. These activities of the Canadian Red Cross were serving as models for the Red Cross Organizations in other countries he added."

INSURANCE

Montreal, Que., Jan. 25. (By C.P.)—A leading Insurance Company has been enjoined in the French Press of the city for discrimination in its rates against French Canadian married women. Recently the President of the Company issued a statement relative to that. "In the combined experiences of the American and Canadian companies covering the entire United States and Canada, made from the census of 1 in 8 per cent. of the total number of deaths among married women. In our experience among French-Canadian women is the real cause of the extra mortality.

"The chief trouble is that our French-Canadian women are hard-working and self-sacrificing to an extreme. Too often the wife of a farmer or artisan does not take sufficient rest after the birth of a child, but is up and about in a very few days, attending to the house-work and other duties at a time when she is physically unfit for tasks that so frequently burdensome and exhausting. She cannot but withstand her plight and sympathize with her difficulties, but the results may be disastrous. Her constitution may become undermined, making her susceptible to almost any form of disease. Tuberculosis then becomes a serious menace. The fact that so many of her life must be spent indoors adds to this danger. Pneumonia, pleurisy and bronchitis also take heavy tolls. It is noted that while there is a connection between child-bearing and the heavy mortality, that connection is not a necessary one and is to a large extent preventable. The Irony of Love man came in. He addressed to the description of the stranger whose London clothes and distinctly Cockatoo Yorkshire Teddy so much amused.

"Are you the doctor?" asked Jim, while Rafe's eyes went to the stranger with feverish eagerness.

"No, no!" he replied nervously. "I'm not a doctor, but I heard that an accident had happened, that some one had taken seriously ill, and I thought that I might be of some use, more, perhaps, than three rough men I've just seen. I am a lawyer, not a doctor."

He approached the bed, and bent over the occupant; then he drew back, and gasped: "Wilfred! Great Heaven!"

At the sound of his voice Gentleman Jim opened his eyes, and stared up at the speaker. "Who is it?" he asked.

"I'm Gordon," replied the stranger. "You remember me? Merrival heaven, that I should find you at last and—in this condition!"

The dying man forced a smile. "It is rather funny, Gordon," he said. "Yes, I remember you now, Rafe"—he turned his head to his son—"this gentleman an old friend of mine. He'll have something to tell you—presently. Rafe, boy when I asked you this afternoon whether you'd like to check the job and try another one, it be because the post had come up before me, and I was trying to do my duty to you, as I told you. I've never spoken to you about the past; never let on that I had ever been another one it was because I've just had no—just no chance, a camp follower, a barbecuer." It tickled me when the boys, in their playful way, first dubbed me Gentleman Jim; for I was a gentleman once, Rafe; an officer and a gentleman—"

He paused, and Gordon, attracted by the sudden pallor of the features and the tightening of the lines of suffering, bent over him. "Shall I send for a doctor?" he asked.

The dying man forced a smile. "It is rather funny, Gordon," he said. "Yes, I remember you now, Rafe"—he turned his head to his son—"this gentleman an old friend of mine. He'll have something to tell you—presently. Rafe, boy when I asked you this afternoon whether you'd like to check the job and try another one, it be because the post had come up before me, and I was trying to do my duty to you, as I told you. I've never spoken to you about the past; never let on that I had ever been another one it was because I've just had no—just no chance, a camp follower, a barbecuer." It tickled me when the boys, in their playful way, first dubbed me Gentleman Jim; for I was a gentleman once, Rafe; an officer and a gentle-

Above is an interesting character study of H. Plant, who plies the art of china painting in his quaint little studio in Toronto, just at the borders of Chinatown. He has been engaged in the art since a boy of thirteen in Staffordshire, England, and during the course of his long career in Canada has repainted for many a worn plate from Government House and painted the crest on the plates of most of the distinguished Canadian families of the last half century. ENGLISH DENTIST ROUNDLY SCORES 'VITAMINE CRAZE'

Winnipeg, Man., Jan. 25—(By Canadian Press)—J. S. Watson, D.Sc. M.D. L.D.S., lecturer on preventive dentistry at King's College, London, England, now on a lecture tour of Canada, scoffs at what he calls the "vitamine craze," and condemns the practice of feeding children soft food. Sound teeth, he says, are largely a matter of food and feeding, and the intervention of mothers in what and how to feed their children was of more importance than any amount of practical dentistry. Dr. Watson is the originator of a movement of preventive dentistry. He is conceded to be revolutionary, but such has been the result of the work that he has been awarded medals and a prize. In a certain district in England the average of 8.4 carious teeth in each child out of a total of more than 37,000 was reduced to 1.9 from 1914 to 1920, as a result of putting Dr. Wallace's theories into practice. The per centage of children of the same age entirely free from caries was raised from 4 per cent. to 48 per cent. in the same time.

WOLVES MENACE IN FRONTENAC CO.

Kingston, Jan. 26.—Members of the Frontenac Farmers' Council who represent the northern township, say that the wolves are becoming a very serious problem for the people living in that part of the county.

John Fikr, Reeve of the Township of Clarendon and M'Miller, states that the wolves are getting more plentiful each year, with the result that the farmers are suffering greatly. In a number of cases valuable yearling cattle have been killed and partly eaten by the wolves.

Reeve Fike claims that the bounty of $15 which was offered to persons who kill wolves should be increased. He declared that if the Government were to raise the bounty he was satisfied that many people would make a business of cleaning out the wolves.

POSSIBLE UPSET IN THE WINDSOR CITY ELECTIONS

Judge Ross Says Evidence Would Tend to Show Conspiracy

Windsor, Jan. 26.—The possibility of Windsor's municipal elections of December 6, 1926, being declared invalid was indicated in a statement of Judge Donald Ross, presiding at the sitting of an application to upset the election. The Judge's statement came when counsel were engaged in an argument as to whether or not Wilfrid Heath, counsel for appellants, could ask E. A. Gigaer, witness, if he had voted for John W. McConnell. It is the purpose of Mr. Heath to show that many of the 116 votes cast for McConnell in ward one, subdivision 16, were secured through illegal methods. Judge Ross stated that if Mr. Heath could produce 20 or more witnesses to testify that they did not vote for McConnell at that particular subdivision, it would tend to show that there was a conspiracy on foot at that particular poll to have McConnell elected by illegal means.

NORRIS FREE OF MURDER CHARGE

Austin, Texas, January 26.—Dr. J. Frank Norris, Fundamentalist pastor of the First Baptist Church of Fort Worth, was acquitted by a jury in District Court here last night on a charge of murder for the slaying of Chester E. Chipps. The jury was out two hours and eight minutes.

When the jury gave their verdict there was a rush to Norris and his wife. The judge had threatened a $100 fine or ten days in jail in the event of any disturbance. There were a few hand claps by women as the verdict was read but this subsided after Judge Reuben R. Hamilton ordered the bailiffs to arrest anyone continuing the applause.

The crush about Norris asking his hand prevented the crowd from moving. Norris, finally broke away.

Opinion Divided When Question Was Submitted This Morning

The chief topic of discussion at this morning's session of the County Council was the question of fixed assessments in the various municipalities. After the matter had been talked over freely by the members it was decided upon motion to leave the problem in abeyance for a day or so.

A number of communications were received and dealt with.

Clarke, School Inspector for South Hastings, relative to using Shire Hall or the Inspectorate Room during the session of the Teachers' Convention which will be held here on February 7th and 8th of this province, with the request by the Reeve of Rawdon and seconded by the Reeve of Marmora that this request be granted.

CAROL COMING BACK

Public Opinion in Roumania Swinging Behind Prindipal Prince

Bucharest, Jan. 26.—More and more public opinion is supporting the proposal to reinstate Prince Carol to the position he had before renouncing his rights to the Rumanian throne a year ago.

The majority of the political parties, with the single exception of the die-hard Liberals, are openly advocating the return of Carol and newspapers are distinctly favorable to the suggestion.

HORNEPAYNE IS TO DAY'S WINNER

Noses Out White River For The Sub Zero Championship

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 26.—Canada today has new sub-zero champion in Hornepayne, in the northern section of this province, with 56 below. In addition, Ontario is experiencing its coldest day in many years. Reports filter in through frigid waves which early today practically tied up telegraph and telephone communication in the Northland and brought transportation to a standstill, indicated extreme temperatures in all districts of the province.

For many years White River, Ontario, and Doucet, Quebec, favorite rendezvous for cold snaps bitterly and obstinately contested the sub-zero title, with varying success, but today Hornepayne has breaked both aside and set a new niche in Canada's thermometer. White River, however, struggled hard for supremacy and very reluctantly surrendered to a new conqueror with 54 below. Doucet with many "wins to its" credit, was "seated" halfway through struggle and stepped at 22 below in comparatively "balmy" condition, unopposed by many other contestants including Westree, 53 below; Armstrong 52; Capreol 47, and North Bay 34.

Toronto entered the list as one of the coldest Southern Ontario points when the mercury dropped to 16 below, the lowest so far for the season. Scarboro Beach, a city resort, registered 28 below while Aurora, Richmond Hill and Weston, suburbs of Toronto reported 24, 22 and 20 below respectively.

CONSCIENCE HURT TO $65.00 WORTH

Winnipeg, January 26.—The following letter from Long Beach, California, together with three twenty dollar bills and one five, was received by the passenger department of the Canadian Pacific Railway today: "Reloaded you will find $65.00 for a fare of a six-year-old boy I took over the Canadian Pacific when I sent out a ticket from Moose Jaw, Canada to Long Beach, California, three years ago. This includes interest over the coast route. I take this time to beg your forgiveness."

Not within the memory of any of the staff has so large an amount of conscience money been received and it is unusual to have the name of the sender attached as was the case with this amount.

AURORA BOREALIS LIT SKIES DURING NIGHT

Pressed by a marvellous display of Northern Lights which shimmered and flashed from 10 to 12 p.m., sending a glow over the North sky, a cold wave struck the city last night and the mercury dropped to 11 below between midnight and morning and at 7 jumped a space lower registering at that hour 15 below. The strong sunlight which followed clean did not have very much effect upon the sky atmosphere and many school children arrived at the different institutions with frost bitten ears and noses.

Non official thermometers broke records in the run their mercury took some registering 35 below. One thermometer considered quite dependable owned by Mr. H. J. Parker, Ann Street, showed 25 below at dawn today.

Oldest residents of Belleville admit they have never seen the Aurora Borealis give a finer display. The lights which shot over half way across the sky seemed gorgeous though by looking strong eyes in ever changing shades varying from red to green and yellow. The changing lights shot out so abruptly and so quickly have been convinced that they stopped suddenly as they cast their fiery glory south, east and west;

GEORGE FAILED TO ENTER MOVIES

Has a Pleasing Screen Appearance But Producers Not Ready

Hollywood, Cal., Jan. 26.—George Young, winner of $25,000 in the recent Canadian cup, failed in his first attempt to break into the movies. Negotiations between Young and Famous Players Lasky in whose studio he recently underwent film tests, were dropped when it was found it would be impossible for the producer to use the swimmer in a picture before May. Young's managers indicated that filming must start at once in order to release him for vaudeville engagements. Producers said film tests showed Young had "pleasing screen appearance".

FROST KING'S SURPRISE VISIT STARTLES CITIZENS THIS A.M.

Mercury Did Not Commence To Tumble Until 4 This Morning

Toronto, Jan. 26.—Sweeping out of the north, Old Boreas descended on Ontario this morning bringing the lowest temperature of the season and causing considerable trouble to electrical communication and transportation companies.

The intensity of this morning's blast was practically unheralded. Approximately from 2 a.m. to 30 degrees below zero at Lake Simcoe points to six below at Niagara Falls. Cold Storage reports were not available—owing to lack of telegraphic communication, but it is believed that much lower figures were reached as the cold wave came from north of the lakes, Western Ontario did not suffer so severely.

While colder weather was anticipated the intensity of this morning's blast was unheralded by the meteorological office forecasts and consequently citizens leaving their homes for business were greeted with a chilling shock. Comparatively balmy temperatures prevailed last night and it was not until four a.m. that the mercury commenced its precipate decline in Southern Ontario.

"Th cold weather is expected to continue for a day or so. Official temperatures show that Ottawa and Peterboro were among the coldest spots with marks of 18 below registered but reports from outlying points were to the effect that much lower levels were reached.

HASTING'S NEW WARDEN BIG MAN IN THE NORTH

Henry Harpell, appointed yesterday, Warden of Hastings County, is pioneer, member of a pioneer family

Henry Harpell, appointed yesterday, Warden of Hastings County, is a pioneer, member of a pioneer family whose parents wrested a living from the virgin soil of Rentgow County when they arrived en masse en coming from England, to blaze a path for the coming generations. Henry and a number of brothers and sisters grew to rugged, sturdy, manhood and womanhood, thoroughly conversant with the methods of tilling the soil which their father before them broke and by the clearing they had received and the worthy example of their father and mother's unselfish devotion.

Warden Harpell soared the possibilities for young men in Hastings County and as "there is a title in the affairs of men which takes at the flood, sweeps on in victory" he seized the opportunity, cast his lot in the Township of Carlow, in the far North of the County and set up business in Fort Stewart in 1890.

His reliability and sterling business qualities soon blazed a trail of success and the business grew and flourished

BRITAIN OFFERS TERMS

Willing To Recognize The Aspirations of Chinese Nationalists

Shanghai, Jan. 26.—Heavy concentration of Cantonese (Nationalist) Government troops which is reported in the Chekiang province front has raised apprehension in Shanghai. Nationalists interpret the concentration as part of a supreme effort to be made by the Cantonese to capture Shanghai before a majority of the British Expeditionary Force of 20,000 soldiers and sailors arrive at the end of February.

Fear More Trouble

It is also feared that the landing of Punjabi troops tomorrow from Hong Kong will provide the match that will light a new anti-foreign, especially anti-British conflagration in the provinces held by the Nationalists which include about half of China, in view of this danger and the threat that the Nationalists will overrun Chekiang and Kiangsu provinces, in the letter of which Shanghai is situated the possible necessity of evacuating American women and children from these provinces is under careful consideration.

Marshal Sun Chuan Fang, ruler of Chekiang, Anhwei and Kiangsu provinces, is concentrating his troops to resist the Cantonese concentration in the region of Hang Chow, northern Chekiang. Sun is dending neighboring towns of troops for this purpose.

Still Conciliatory

London, Jan. 26.—Britain's proposals which British official circles hope will bring order out of chaos in China, have been made by Mr. O'Malley, British Charge d'Affaires, to Eugene Chen, Cantonese Foreign Minister, with whom he has been in conference at Hankow.

The proposals would give effect to points outlined by Sir Austen Chamberlain, British Foreign Secretary, in his recent memorandum. They pertain to certain guarantees which the British Government is anxious to have regarding British concessions and holdings throughout China.

Recognize Ambitions

London, Jan. 26.—The memorandum delivered by the British Charge d'Affaires to the representatives of the treaty powers at Peking on December 18th was notable for its frank

TODAY'S THOUGHT

If you know how to spend less than you get you have the philosopher's stone.—Franklin.

CROWDED LIFE

A resident of North Carolina is the father of 36 children. He figures that President Coolidge would be glad to shake hands, and thank him for his patriotic efforts on behalf of the United States.

Perhaps President Coolidge would; but it is questionable whether future presidents will feel that way about such large families. From 1790 to 1920, the population of the United States advanced from 4,000,000 to over 105,000,000, an increase of 2,600 percent. At the present rate of natural increase, according to Professor Edward M. East, of Harvard University, and leaving immigration out of account, in another century the population will begin to press heavily upon the means of subsistence. The North Carolinian father has brought that day a little his nearer.

The population needs of different countries vary. In Canada, Australia and South Africa the populations are for better their economic maintenance. The overhead expenses of governments, railways and other public services fall at the present time upon too few people. With more people to meet them more easy charges everybody would be better off. Not so in Europe.

The example of Europe proves, however, that there is an economic limit. In some European countries the growth of population has been fostered not for economic but for military reasons. And despite the enormous loss of life due to the war, they are paying the penalty today. No one can doubt that the rapid increase of population is at the head of the political disorders in Europe. No doubt efficient governments could provide properly for all the people now within European boundaries; but each country looks to the future, a future with more political power because of their prospective citizens. So they go on increasing.

IMPRACTICABLE AGNES

Agnes MacPhail, M.P., is one of those reformers who are content with throwing out vague and doubtful ideas and leaving it to others to work out the details. This peculiarity on her part is conspicuous in an address delivered at Edmonton to the United Farmers of Alberta, in which she appealed to the Alberta farmers to lead in a nationwide campaign for improvement in educational methods.

Miss MacPhail told her audience that the Ontario Public school system is hopelessly obsolete and inefficient. Her quarrel with it is that it is dominated by "the urban type of mind." Not until the rural type of mind is allowed to rule can any improvement be expected. And the fine results to be achieved by the dominance of the rural type of mind are indicated by the revival of the educational ideals to which Agnes aspires. These are: Education for the child, not the system; social and co-operative education; splurged, vision of life in the community; a world-wide outlook. Such are the rich fruits to be expected when the rural type of mind is allowed to grapple with the problems of education.

Agnes herself is not quite sure how her cherished reforms are to be brought. This is rather strange, for here is a rural type of mind. It should be competent to deal with methods as well as principles. But evidently she lacks self-confidence, for she has no advice to offer the western farmers in regard to methods. The best plan she can think of is to launch boldly upon a sea of experiment —to put into effect the most revolutionary ideas they can think of; and then, after studying the results of all the experiments, to adopt the system which promises to be upon the whole, the best.

Alas, for Agnes! it is to be feared that this people whom she advises are not likely to gain much wisdom from her much speaking.

ONLY A PAINTER

The London Advertiser thinks it is about time that the city did something to honor the memory of Paul Peel. It points out that Peel's canvases are treasured in famous national and private galleries, while many people in the city of his birth know little or nothing of his genius or his history.

The explanation is probably to be found in the mere statement of fact. That his canvases are treasured in foreign galleries indicates that he was a painter, and the painter's day has probably not yet come in this country. If he had been a prize fighter, hockey player, a home-run champion or a long-distance swimmer, it is probable that every bit of the metal trimmings from the scene would be his native city would know something about him. But he was only a painter, though a painter with real genius at his command.

SERIOUS TORONTO

Toronto is taking the case of George Young, its footballs marathon hero, quite too seriously. It has inside presumptuous to take him out of the ring from the scene of his recent triumph; but young George shows no disposition to come home and be welcomed and addressed and cheered. He's pretty tough to have a favorite son, whom you want to claim as his own, spurn your advances and decline to accept honor at your hands until he is good and ready.

However, Toronto's civic and other authorities appear to be under the impression that young George is somehow under the official offence in depriving Toronto people of their right to indulge in a grand glorification of himself and the city of his adoption, where he had the honor of being reared. There is a report that even George's declination to come home to his mother. Mayor Foster, and others are urging Mrs. Young to order the lad home. The Rev. J. G. Inkster, of Knox Presbyterian Church, Mrs. Young's pastor, makes an appeal to all pious Toronto people to pray that George may be Divinely guided to come home, and thus be saved from being "crucified on a cross of gold."

They are taking the case too seriously. George Young when he entered for the Catalina swimming contest, quit the field of amateur athletics and became a professional. That is to say, he took up swimming as his life-job—as a means of earning a living. So far, he has succeeded very well. But there is a chance for him to make much more money than the cash prize that he won. He has been offered all sorts of contracts from film producers and commercial promoters and publicity agents. He would be foolish to pass them by. Being a professional, he is in the swimming business for what he can make out of it; and he is justified in capitalizing to the full extent possible the notoriety he has won. In a little while the world will have found another ten-story hero and George will pass into the background and his earning power will have greatly diminished. He is well advised to seize the present opportunity to make hay while the sun of public favor is shining.

COMPETITION

In considering the future of our railways reckoning should be had with the automobile. For the sooner car is entering into railway passenger revenues—has cut into them by tens of millions in the last few years. That, at all events, is the estimate of Mr. R. A. C. Henry, of the National Railways, who ought to know.

The statistics on the matter are impressive. In 1920 the number of passengers carried by Canadian railways was 51,000,000; 1921, 46,000,000; in 1922, 44,000,000; in 1923, 44,000,000; 1924, 42,000,000; in 1925, 41,000,000. And the number of passengers carried per train similarly declined. In 1920 the number was 64; in 1923 it had dropped to 53.

It is on short distance, local traffic that the automobile competes. Moreover, people, the figures show, are travelling longer journeys, but short distance traffic declines. In 1920, the railways took in $109,000,000 from passenger traffic. In 1923 they took in only $78,193,992.

This, for the railways, is a matter of concern. For as the automobile multiplies, and good roads increase, the competition will become more serious.

Mrs. Sandy—Are you aware, Mrs. Shinbone, that your dog has just bitten my little Willie?

Mrs. Shinbone—What your Willie, who has just got over scarlet fever? Oh, Mrs. Sawley, if anything should happen to Fido I'd never forgive you.

"I would like to put it this way, my lord," said counsel. "Suppose I were to ere your lordship going into a public house—"

"Coming in," corrected the judge.

He—Darling, I've made up my mind to stay at home.

She—Too late, dearest. I've made up my face to go out.—Judge.

He: Why are you opposed to duets?"

She: I think it cowardly for two people to attack one piece of music.

Binks was awakened at an unseemly hour the other morning by a rooster in a neighbor's yard who felt impelled to salute the coming dawn in the manner common to his species.

"Confound that bird!" said Binks; "she's been crowing steadily for half an hour."

"That's nothing," said Mrs. Binks, severely. "You get up before me one morning a while ago, and you crowed about it for a week."

Mr. Boyle with his customary business ability, put the Business College on a working basis in two days, following the fire.

MARY'S LAMB

The following version of Mary's Lamb was discovered among the collected verse of the late Eugene Field. The poet did not often dip into politics, but at the time this was written, about 1888, a tariff controversy was raging in the United States. That country has settled down to a consistent policy of reciprocal protection but Canada is now in about the situation our southern brethren were then and the little poem has a moral for us.

The verses were sent by Mr. W. C. Spinner to be read at a meeting of The Canadian Manufacturers Association recently.

Mary had a little lamb,
Down in Ohio state
And ere it grew to be a man
Most dismal was its fate.

It's fleece was long and white and full,
And Mary loved to shear
Her lamb for the amount of wool
It brought her twice a year.

But once upon a summer's day,
She learned to her dejection,
Her wool investment didn't pay—
And so she craved protection.

And then, it's more a plea-like word
And copious flow of tears,
She flew to genial Mr. Hurd
To get at rest her fears.

But Mr. Hurd in accent dire told
Poor Mary and her kit,
And when their tail of woe was told,
No kindly act he did.

In vain her help the maiden cried
From her bonded knees.
"No tariff, girl" the man replied
"To serve your lamb with fleas!"

So Mary slew her little lamb—
As might have been expected—
For little lambs aren't worth a d—
When they are not protected.

HILLS

(Arthur Guiterman.)

I never loved your plains!
Your gentle valleys,
Your dreamy country lanes
And purbid alleys.

I want my hills!—the tr—
That seem, the hollow—
Up up the rugged sha—
Where few will follow

Up, over wooded crest
And mossy boulder,
With strong thigh, heaving chest,
And swinging shoulder.

So let me hold my way.
By nothing halted,
Until, at close of day,
I stand, exalted,

High on my hills of dream—
Dear hills that know me!
And then, how fair will seem
The lands below me.

How pure, at yesper-time,
The far veils chimin!
God, give me hills, to climb.
And strength for climbing.

SETTLING PLAN VERY LIKELY TO BE CONTINUED

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 25. (By C. P.)—Land settlement is one of the problems before the Dominion government at present. The scheme for the settlement of 2,000 British families on Canadian farms, entered into between the two governments in August 1924, expires on June 30 next. It appears likely that this scheme will succeed. So far only about 1,500 families have been settled under the scheme.

The sub-committee of the Imperial, and Overseas on overseas settlement brought in a report that on view of the overpowering interest of the 3,000 families scheme, it is most desirable that this form of settlement should become a feature of the joint overseas settlement policy of Great Britain and Canada." It provides for assisted passages and assistance in the initial expenses of colonization. The concurrence of the Canadian representatives in the scheme is conditional upon the passing of the necessary legislation (in Ottawa) for the grant of colonization loans, says the sub-committee's report.

SELECTED FAMILIES

Under the scheme, carefully selected families from the British Isles are brought to Canada, given land at a nominal charge and assisted money for the erection of buildings and the purchase of stock and equipment. The families with one children of working age are sought and efforts are being made to give them some initial training in farming before they reach Canada. The Dominion government may provide instructors, implements and equipment for these training centres in Great Britain.

When the scheme was initiated, the Canadian government set aside for the disposal a number of farms on which some work had been done by soldier settlers who afterwards abandoned the farms. This made it easier to provide at first low cost suitable land to settlers, who came out under the 2,000 families scheme, but the supply of government-owned land which comes up to the specifications of the scheme is running low. The chief obstacle to the continuation of the scheme is the shortage of suitable land. The government is making the co-operation of land owners in Western Canada and at the same time is taking steps to prevent anything like a boom in farm lands prices. One suggestion incorporated in the report of the imperial conference is that owners of vacant farm lands should place their holdings at the disposal of the government, which would assess the price at which it would be turned over to the settler.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

The financial assistance provided by the governments of Canada and Great Britain would be extended to families settled on private lands in the event that the scheme is carried out. It is understood that a number of private land owners have approached the government with scheme for colonization, but most of them involves the right of speculation in land prices, which is what the government is anxious to avoid. One such private scheme which may go through provides for the taking over by the Canadian government of 2,000 quarter sections from the Hudson Bay Company and 1,500 quarter sections from the Canadian Pacific Railway. All this land is in Western Canada and was acquired by the respective companies in pioneer days. If this number of farms are taken over in a lump, they will provide for all the family settlement for several years.

This family settlement scheme is the chief factor in the government's colonization plan, today. It is interested financially or otherwise in private schemes to bring farm hands, of both sexes, to Canada, in the "Big Brother Movement" and so on. The two big railway companies in Canada have colonization schemes as also have church and philanthropic organizations. Most of these movements aim to encourage the immigration of British people who will become farmers.

MILD TYPE OF "FLU"

Flu of a mild type is fairly prevalent and the medical profession is busy night and day. The hospital is not only filled to capacity, but cots have been placed in the corridors to accommodate the overflow. The greater part of the cases are surgical, mostly appendicitis following intestinal grippe. Dr. Crook, M.H.O. told The Intelligencer today that in his experience and in the experience of a great many of the doctors, their patients have been seized with violent pains in the intestinal region, developed grippe and later appendicitis. Smallpox in the city is practically a memory while there is but one case of scarlet fever. There is a total absence of grippe throughout the city. All the nurses are kept unusually busy.

LITTLE PEACHES SCREAMED ONCE

Claims She Did Not Write Diary But Got $1,000 For It

White Plains, N. Y., January 28.—Mother Carolyn Heenan and her woman friend of five years, Mrs. Catherine Mayer, today came to the aid of Mrs. Frances Browning and added their testimony to the sixteen year old girl's attempt to prove that her air months of marriage with Edward West Browning, wealthy New York realtor, was a life of quarrels at least one scream—and many frights. Mrs. Mayer, who was a guest at the Browning home, testified that one night at Cold Spring, N.Y., where the couple were married, she had heard Mrs. Browning scream, and when she and Mrs. Heenan went to the bedroom of the couple, they found the girl in tears, and saying "Mother, please take me away."

Mrs. Browning took the stand to identify letters addressed by her to the "Graphic" newspaper, with edition after edition of tabloid newspapers, came out of Browning's home suit case at his release, wherein he had preserved spiteful words recounting his and his wife's venture into marriage. "Peaches" identified several of the letters as certainly account of "why I left Daddy Browning" which she said she did not write, but for which she received $1,000.

Browning's counsel said the writings in the diary of "Peaches" would show that she was a creature of the world and knew what marriage meant.

"I was a good girl before my marriage" Mrs. Browning burst out.

COUNTY COUNCIL

Chas. Thompson, Reeve of Madoc, Township and H. T. Miller, Reeve of Tyendinaga, were both opposed to the resolution.—The latter claimed that if an industry moved into one municipality the whole county benefitted by the location of that industry and that no one Township or County should be burdened more than another by taxation on that account. Mr. Montgomery felt that the natural resources in each municipality should be taken into account in fixing assessments.

Mr. Miller maintained that only the establishment of a similar kind can be granted fixed assessment in each municipality. This system tends to keep industries out of municipalities although the natural conditions may be suitable.

R. M. Mitchell pointed out the advantages of the Canada Cement Company to the County of Hastings. The industry when it first located at Point Anne, was granted advantages in taxation and Mr. Mitchell was of the opinion that fixed assessment was considered by them when coming to Hastings.

S. E. Ballise, Reeve of Tweed felt that each individual municipality benefitted by the coming of an industry and that if that township or village fixed the assessment they should bear the taxation instead of other municipalities.

It was moved by Reeve Ballie and seconded by Reeve Gilroy that the motion be concurred with.

Col. Reaves Vandewater said he thought it was good business for the Council to equalize the assessment rates. Col Vandewater was in favor of supporting the resolution of the Essex County Council.

Lorne Reid, Bancroft, moved that the matter be left over for further discussion.

The motion carried.

Three of his sons heard the call for King and Country and rallying to the colors early in the conflict with Germany, went across, did their bit and returned heroes.

For twelve years Mr. Harpell served as treasurer of the Township of Carlow in which capacity his interesting was demonstrated and his executive ability universally recognized. Nineteen twenty-seven in his stride and better and always showing unselfish devotion to forwarding any matter in the interest of the Dominion, he retires to be as well merited. MINING GOSSIP

Superintendent Cook of Corona Mines, has just completed examination of that company's new holding in Deseronto, adjacent to the Nipissing. He confirms earlier reports of a find on the ground. In a wire to the company, he states that he has made an important find of massive copper in a large body of sulphides in a horsh and rhyolite country. He adds that this formation is an extension of the Nipissing ore body. Samples taken are now being assayed and results should be available in a few days.

Return of 2 million shares of Hudson stock to the treasury by the original holders to carry development to one thousand feet, means that the property will be developed to that level, and ready for a mill and will still have half of its original capital left in the treasury for mill and similar purposes. This action is unusual in mining history and is particularly significant because it shows that the original holders are anxious to keep capital down as low as possible in order that those who finance the property to the producing stage have the best possible run for their money, and that the capital will remain within reasonable limits.

It is understood that a railroad line will be built in from Manitoba to tap the Red Lake field. J. E. Hammell has been offered facilities from Winnipeg, and failing similar facilities from Ontario, will get both power and transportation from the western province. A power line will be run in from the Manitoba Power development at Great Falls, and the railway will follow the same right of way. At present there is a light railway running to Great Falls from the C. P. R. terminus at Lac du Bonnet. This is likely to be taken over by the Canadian Pacific and the line continued into Red Lake.

"BACK TO LAND" MOVEMENT ON FOOT

Vancouver, B.C., Jan. 26—(By Canadian Press)—Between 150 and 200 families will participate in a "back to the land" movement near Ladner, B. C., at the mouth of the Fraser River, as a result of the opening up of a large area of land. One of the men behind the scheme is Leon J. Ladner, Federal member for Vancouver South, whose parents were among the first settlers in the Fraser Valley.

The land is being split up into five-acre tracts and poultry raising will be the principal means of livelihood for those taking advantage of the scheme. Provision is being made for telephone, electric light, water and other services and post roads will be built to serve the new community. An expert poultry man will be engaged to give free advice to the settlers.

LADIES PREFER SHEIKS" NOW IT SEEMS

BY ELSIE MARLOWE

Pete wants to know what chance a Common Guy has against these Movie Sheiks.

Pete's no sheik. Oh he's mighty popular on Automobile Row. Works in the little garage on the corner of North Street, and there isn't a more obliging young mechanic in town. Good head on him, too. Started in there as a handy boy, and now he's drawing down $35 per week and getting raises fast. Always good natured, honest, hard working—that's Pete Robbins—all-wool American goods, a yard wide and guaranteed not to shrink.

Now Pete would like to get married. He's harboring a mighty sweet dream of a Wife and a Nice Little Home, a Classy Little Car and a couple of No. 1 Kids. He has seen quite a few girls that would have filled the bill nicely. Pretty, popular girls. And these girls seem as anxious to be married as Pete himself.

But are they anxious to marry Pete?

They are not.

They like Pete. They will go for rides with Pete or to cabarets or dances or shows. But when it comes to marrying—nix!

For, alas and alack, Pete doesn't rate according to the modern standards. He's a fine guy as far as character goes, but his ears stick out too far and his nose doesn't stick out far enough. His hair is only regular hay, his shape wears well but will never be soothing to the eye, and his line matches his shape. He's worth his weight in gold when it comes to man value. But as a movie Hero he's a failure.

And this is the day of the Movie Hero.

All of these pretty, popular girls whom Pete would like to marry have their hearts all set for Movie Lovers, and a Movie Marriage.

A Movie Lover has one of these Patent Faces that emerges beautiful and unruffled from every catastrophe including fishers and storms. Bermuda cyclones can toting husband, and corn on the cob. His shape throws just like crepe de chine, and he has a line that sounds like: a chocolate eclair and a Swiss Yodel.

And the Movie Marriage—oh, Lady, the Movie Marriage!

The Movie Marriage leads straight from the altar into a $10,000 chalet on the beach at Imported French valet and a butler with buttons on his white bone. Scenes of domestic tragedy, such as washdays and ironing machines, are strictly decited by the censor.

Such is the idea of Romance possessed by all elderly young ladies of Pete's acquaintance.

Where did they get it?

They got it from the Movies, the Pony, the Magazines, the Shop Windows, and Mama's Quarrels with Papa. Are THEY going to marry a Common Guy like Dad who draws down only $40 per week and expects to raise five kids on that? They are NOT—not if they are it coming. They are going to marry Movie Heroes and live in gorgeotic engineers forever after.

"So what chance has a mutt like me?" pleads Pete.

And a lot of other young pops are asking the same question.

It's really a pretty serious question. For what chances has the whole human race if we train our young ladies to expect Movie Marriages?

Advice to Girls
By Annie Laurie

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a boy of seventeen. Please tell me how to make girl friends.

BLUE-EYED BOY.

BLUE-EYED BOY: Join a social club or the Y. M. C. A. Through club activities you will meet other young people.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am hopelessly in love with a man 22. I am more than twice his age. He loves me, but he doesn't want to marry me because he hasn't much money. I have lots of money but he doesn't want to live on it. Ought I to give him up or try to persuade him to marry me?

SARAH.

SARAH: There is no basis for hopefulness in the union which you are contemplating. Certainly such a union could never be lasting. It is unfair for a young man to seek companionship among young people. Your interests can not possibly be the same.

Remember, too, if he ever agrees to the marriage, your money will inevitably influence him in the decision.

WHAT'S NEW
(From a Woman's Standpoint)

The wool crepe frock is to have a great vogue this spring.

The graceful cape bodice is being revived.

The fashioned skirt will be a feature in many afternoon and evening gowns this spring.

Recent gaieties at Palm Beach confirm the vogue for contrasting short jackets.

Bonnets, a medium tan, in a new day-time hosiery shade, and Belgique is a suede shade for evening.

An analysis of color demand developed by a silk house for the past month places blue and beige as leaders, reports New York.

Many new woollen materials will gleam and glitter a little more with metal embroideries and a mixture of wool and artificial silk is rated as the lightest material yet worn by women.

Jewelry motifs worn on hats are duplicated on frocks, according to a Paris dispatch. And Cartier is making these costly ornaments of onyx and diamonds which are pinned on the brim, close to the front, and in the buttonhole of the coat.

The autographed mannequin is one of the latest "stunts" sponsored by one or two exclusive Goodeu dressmakers. She acts a mannequin around a theater, between the acts, or into a restaurant to mingle with the diners, in an elaborate and artistic creation to which is added a brooch of brilliants bearing the name of the originator.

The yellow shades, varying from lemon to sulphur, with a peach cast, are faced to achieve the vogue for spring—in Palm Beach fashion, and the combination of Nile green with dark yellow is also in evidence as the accessories of very pale gray and very pale tones of flesh and light blue tones; favored by the young as well as the older element.

Shawls will come in for an unusual measure of popularity in so far as Paris women are concerned, this spring, and there are many delightful printed materials to choose from in the advance spring showings, for there are shawls with borders of bright flowers like those in fashion during the reign of Louis Philippe and there are others which are copied from Bayeux tapestries from Eastern Roumania and Italy. French dressmakers say that the shawl is to be a necessary material.

CHAPTER III.

THE RUNAWAYS

It was the day before Christine's marriage to Harvey Blanton!

A day of turmoil and excitement for the Farr household. Christine's mother considered a wedding unattended by such details as six bridesmaids, a corresponding number of ushers and the bride's mother absolved in tears—no marriage at all.

The bride and bridegroom, the bride's father, and the ensuing bills, entered not at all into her calculations.

So, when at three o'clock in the afternoon, the bridegroom-elect rang up the Farr residence, his future mother-in-law came to the phone and gave him a couple of what to expect later.

"You certainly cannot see Christine!" she announced, while she waved two demoralized maids on with their work, and cast a critical eye on the outfit which a dressmaker's assistant was wrestling over the fireplace. "Not speak to her either! She's resting. The child is nearly worn out with excitement—"

"I should think she would be—with all this fol-de-rol," he grumbled—but, wise young man, under his breath!

"Can't I have just one word with her?" he pleaded, rather meekly, for Harvey Farr came from the best house and the genuine know how to be deferential. I thought she's like to know about my plans over in the Dreamland—"

"Ridiculous! Besides, it would be most improper, if you were there alone. And none of us has time to go with her. The decorators' man is still there, I think. I can telephone him to stay—" he suggested hopefully.

"No, no, no!" said the lady. "You must control your impatience, dear boy. You'll see Christine at the church rehearsal tonight."

"Yes—with about a thousand other people."

"Well, after tomorrow—" she suggested coyly and hung up, feeling that she had been quite indelicate.

She went back to the condemnation that reigned in the drawing-room, so she didn't hear what went on upstairs. Christine was talking, at rather whisper pace, over the extension phone.

"Darling, I'm coming over to see the new curtains. I heard you from the stairs. I'll manage to slip out somehow. Christine, who on earth are you talking to?"

Christine finished rather as her mother appeared.

"It was—er—Cousin Anna," she said. "She wants me to come over right away. She has something for me."

"Oh, well," Mrs. Farr temporized, "if it's a present run along. I wondered if she wasn't going to give you something. Don't stay long. You must rest for to-night."

Ten minutes later, Christine was meeting her fiance at a corner discreetly sheltered from the window of the Farr home. She wore a frock of blue silk which clamped her gray eyes to forget-me-nots and gave a needed feature to her skin. Harvey looked at her with adoration in his handsome eyes, and she helped confuse.

For several minutes she couldn't look at him. But when she finally lifted her face it was to lift his. They stood there at the curb, oblivious of traffic, and looked at each other's eyes—two happy young people who thought they had found the answer to the riddle of existence.

Finally, Harvey's aggressive, dominating male nature stirred. Of late, in his adoration for his bride-to-be, he had become almost humble at times. That was not approved when his confidence dropped from him. He forgot to be triumphant and over his accomplishment. He was a little afraid of his own luck.

But not for long.

"Darling, the house is a peach," he told her as they entered a charming little suburb and approached their future home. "I went over it thoroughly this afternoon, and I don't think I've forgotten a thing—not even the towels that you helped me select last week. Everything is order, but I want you to see it for yourself, as we'll be ready to step in and start house-keeping the minute we get back from our honeymoon. We'll have had enough of hotels by then."

She brushed her cheek against his shoulder.

"Wouldn't it be fun if we could come straight here tomorrow night, instead of having to go on a honeymoon?" she fumbled.

He handsome eyes blazed.

"Wouldn't it be wonderful, if we could come here—tonight? Without all that infernal fuss and feathers tomorrow."

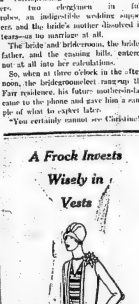

She lifted startled eyes, and he caught her hand and drew her towards him.

"Sweetheart, if you love me, let's run and run. We've time. I have the license in my pocket. We'll find a minister to marry us, and we'll go back to the little house tonight."

Her eyes were sparkling with excitement.

"Oh, wouldn't it be fun?" she gasped. "And wouldn't everyone be furious? The bridesmaids—and the caterers—"

"Will you?" His fingers crushed hers.

In about 1900 some one might write a book on "The Two-Piece Frock: Its Origin and Its Future." Those of us who struggled through the shirt-waist tucked-under-the-skirt era have some idea of the origin, but who can guess the future of this ever-varying fashion species? The author who contemplates writing this history would do well to preserve the above illustration as representing one of the most outstandingly attractive versions of the two-piece frock in 1927. It is very smart for sports in white flannel or jersey with a gaily striped vest; while for general wear, the model at the left is developed in navy blue satin, with a vest of white satin printed in navy blue.

INDIANS STILL USE CANDLE FISH

Victoria, B.C., Jan. 26 (By C.P.).—The candle fish is still being used by the Indians in some parts of British Columbia for illuminating purposes.

The candle fish is similar in appearance to the pilchard, except that its oil content is very much greater. They are, in fact, too oily to suit the Indians as a food, but they have another and important use in regions that are not yet served by electricity or other illuminat.

The Indians, after catching the candle fish, place them in a dry, sheltered place and wait till they have shrunken and all the water evaporated from them. They then put the head or tail of the fish aluntl and use the carcass as they would a torch. There is so much oil in the carcass that it produces a bright, steady flame which burns slowly.

WHAT IS YOUR DOG'S BEST STRIDE?

Pender Harbor, B.C., Jan. 26.—(By Canadian Press)—What is the best stride your dog can make?

Winter affords a good opportunity for dog owners to make some interesting discoveries about their pets' methods of propulsion. If your dog is an active animal, and most dogs are, open a door in the snow, you will be astonished on measuring the space between different sets of tracks, as the dog has moved in the course of his bounding romp.

The record stride here, made by a black and tan terrier during a recent patch of fresh snow, was nine feet. A well-sound leaping stride would easily double that.

The way boys come to grips on why engineers object to having dogs on hand is a ready conversation. It is stated that the disturbance caused by their gait exceeds that caused by the average horse.

"Come on, say you will. And the dear like all this free tomorrow. All those trappings can't make any one happier, and, when we love each other. That's all that counts—just us—always."

"And us always," she repeated. "Let's hurry!"

He flung back his clinging blond head. The triumphant laugh of the young man of spoor rang out.

BISHOP BREWING TALKS TO LARGE CROWD LAST EVE.

Address on "Men of the Hour and Man of the Ages"

Speaking last evening on "Men of the hour and Man of the Ages" Bishop Willard Brewing held a large and representative audience who assembled at Emmanuel Church a host of facts pertinent to Christo relation to men. The speaker opened his address by a reference to a sermon recently preached by Bishop Brooks in which he said "No event ever happens in this World of ours until the fullness of its time has come." No doubt the great preacher meant that every such procession being certain results for evitably; that nothing happens by chance that there is a fullness of good and a fullness of sentence in life's fruitage. That we can understand but in part is man deficiency that nothing happens prematurely, that nothing happens before God intend, it should happen then we seek another interpretation. When I think of the abortions of life, of the enforced child labour of the world, of the hurried and artificial schemes of humanity, of the premature deaths my soul cries out to heaven against any calm, complacencent undisturbed attitude to be responsible to to Almighty God. We must always be careful in the interest of truth to complete our texts. "All things work together for good. That is first but we cannot stop there."

GOD'S PERFECT WORK

God sent forth his son into the world that is God's complete and perfect work. This Jesus is the one man in whom there is nothing hurried or premature.

Humanity does not always give so much recognition to the right and value of the Divine Process as to a sudden and spectacular accident, which seems more than thirty million dollars is involved in the Ford income tax cases. HENRY HARYETT OF CARLOW GETS WARDEN'S OFFICE

After being in caucus for over an hour, the Liberal and Conservative factions of the County Council finally agreed on the selection of a warden at four-fifteen yesterday afternoon. This is the Liberals' year to hold the coveted office and considerable discussion took place before the two caucus finally reached an agreement.

Promptly when the Council had assembled Col. Roscoe Vandewater, Reeve of Sidney Township, moved that Henry Haryett, Reeve of Carlow Township for warden. Mr. S. B. Rollins of Tweed seconded the motion.

Whereupon there were no further nominations and Mr. Haryett ascended the platform amid the applause of his Confederates.

After signing the declaration of office he addressed the Council briefly. "This is something that I never expected when I first came to County Council," he said.

He welcomed the new members who are sitting for the first time and expressed the wish that their journey as a Councillor would be as pleasant as his.

Mr. Haryett spoke of the splendid co-operation afforded previous wardens and asked that the same hearty support be given him. "We must progress and yet try to economize at the same time," said the new warden. "Our road system is a large one that must be looked after and there are other comprehensive problems to be dealt with."

After W. H. Nugent, County Clerk, had read the minutes of the last meeting the Council adjourned to meet this morning at 10 o'clock.

DRUGS EXCITE THE KIDNEYS, DRINK WATER

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore don't get excited and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and allow them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; can not injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the other drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache so soon.

Sydney, N.S.W., Jan. 26.—Australian labor is emphatically against intervention in China, Matthew Charlton, leader of the Federal Labor party declared at a meeting that the Labor party will strenuously oppose any action seeking to commit Australia to a foreign war. Meeting of seamen at Melbourne adopted a resolution declining to man ships carrying soldiers, food stuffs or munitions for troops acting against China.

Pains Across Kidneys For Two Years
Unable to Work

"Gin Pills—Wonderful Remedy"

We receive thousands of letters yearly from grateful users of Gin Pills, who have been relieved of suffering from kidney and bladder trouble. When Nature fails to do her proper work of eliminating harmful waste through the kidneys, bladder and bowels, a remedy must be found. Many people have found Gin Pills to be this remedy. Among them, James Johnson of Bridgburg, Ont. He writes:

"I was troubled with pains across the kidneys for two years. I was unable to work. I got a box of Gin Pills and a box right away from my druggist. My sincere thanks are due you for your wonderful remedy, which has done so much for me."

Neglect of kidney trouble spells disaster. Lumbago, Rheumatism and Sciatica as well as bladder and urinary troubles follow. Upon the first warning get a box of Gin Pills, 50c at all druggists. National Drug & Chemical Co. of Canada, Limited, Toronto, Canada. 127

JUNIORS TO MEET TRENTON KIDS IN FINAL TONIGHT

Belleville Youngsters Hope To Overhaul Visitors 5 Goal Lead

The Belleville Juniors have a five-goal lead to overcome against Trenton here tonight and the youngsters realizing that to fall means the hanging up of the sticks for the season, are sure to be fighting tooth and nail to overhaul the visitors. The Trenton kids trimmed the locals in both games up there but Canning and Company claim it will be a different story here tonight.

If Pete Latchford plays up to his usual form, the forward line should outscore the visitors. The defence has been the Maroons' weak spot all season but Ed Thomas may start a couple of new youngsters tonight.

For scrappiness and aggressiveness, these Junior games can't be beaten and if the fans want to see a real smart game they should drop around to the arena tonight at 8.15. "Slinger" Edger of Bowmanville will referee.

RECREATION BOWLING

Three Ladies' League games were played at the Recreation Alleys last night with the following results:

In one game the Beavers won all four points from the Optics, both teams playing four players aside, The Beavers rolled 1857 for their total score, Miss Whalen being the highest bowler with 570 for the Beavers, while for the Optics, Mrs. Delong was high.

Deacon's also won four points in another ladies' game, taking the whole works from the Hit & Miss. High bowlers were Miss I. Ethier and Mrs. Morrell.

In the third ladies' league game the Alemite won three points and the Cinco won one, this being the closest game of the three, the Cinco starting out strong by winning the first game by 134 but weakening in the second and third game to lose three points. High bowlers were Miss Carter and Miss Watkins.

One game was played in the Men's Junior League, the Intell and the Coca Cola breaking even with two wins each, the Intell piling up enough pins in the first game to give them a point on the total score, as the Coca Cola won the second and third games. The highest bowlers were Sam Curry 645, and Taylor 544.

One Senior game was played on Monday night between the Hunters and the Wolves. The former team by rolling up a total score of 2927 were able to count three points, the Wolves being at their best in the second game when they counted one point. High bowlers were Dorgan and Bryant.

What is recorded as one of the greatest baseball trades in the game's history was recently culminated. In a three-cornered deal, Burleigh Grimes, TOP RIGHT, veteran hurler of the Brooklyns goes to the Giants. Ferguson, TOP LEFT, comes from Buffalo to the Philly Nationals for another fling at big time play. Walter Henline, BOTTOM RIGHT comes to Brooklyn from Philadelphia, and Jack Scott, BOTTOM LEFT, of the Giants, goes to Philadelphia. Henline came to the Giants really, but stayed there about 20 minutes, his release being sent across the bridge to Brooklyn.

SportOgramS By The "Observer"

The Maroons will hook off for Cornwall on Friday at 12.02 which will ensure the team getting a couple of hours' rest before stepping out against the Cornwall Frenchmen in the game that practically places the championship of Group Six at stake. The fare is $8.65 return and tickets may be procured at the downtown C.N.R. ticket office. This is considered exceptionally reasonable and quite a number of fans are contemplating on making the trip. Some of them are figuring on pushing through to Montreal where the Maroons and Ottawa will clash on Saturday night. Last Saturday these two teams staged a regular donnybrook in the Capital and the world's champions will not treat Noble and Company to any pink tea at the Forum on Saturday night.

Queen's intermediates were beaten Cornwall 3-1 at the end of the first period of Monday night's game. If the Maroons can do the same thing the Cornwall team should be defeated right at home. The boys are figuring on stopping in and getting a lead from the face-off. The Cornwall players, if they score one or two before the Maroons get going, are likely to entrench themselves with their defence system. Reports from the Pastory Town state that the supporters of Tilton and Company will be willing to lay 2 to 1 that the Queen's are beaten. The locals played their best hockey of the season in Brockville and are determined to win from Cornwall. The combination work was a big improvement and they back-checked like fiends.

Two double-headers in the City League, one on Thursday and another on Friday, are down on the card. This League looks to be one of the most promising of its kind ever organized in Belleville. The four strong contenders appear to be the Y's Men's Club, C.N.R. Express, Alemite and Bell Telephone. But some of the so-called weaker teams may spring some surprises before the season is far advanced.

• • •

Tonight will see the final appearance of the Juniors unless they manage to overcome Trenton's big lead and the fans may rest assured that the kids will be in there doing their level best to win.

NOT SHORTAGE OF MOOSE IN NORTHERN B. C.

Vancouver, B.C., Jan. 26—(By Canadian Press)—Although reports from Edmonton indicate a comparative shortage of moose in the North woods, according the, to the ravages of a mysterious tick or blood sucker, British Columbia knows of no such shortage, according to trappers and big game hunters who have been working in the mountainy recently.

In the Bessiar and Cariboo district moose are thicker this season than ever although they are one of the few species of big game that does show an appreciable increase in numbers. Even when the conditions of a generation or so ago are recalled by old-timers they are unable to remember any season when moose have been thicker than at the present time.

Building of the Grand Trunk Pacific line, now part of the Canadian National Railway system, is believed to have divided the moose into two vast divisions sending one northward towards the Caribou country and the other south into the Caribou. Both these sections are big enough to accommodate an enormous number of these animals, however and the slaughter of moose by settlers along the railway belt does not seem to have had the slightest effect in reducing the total.

Big game guides report that little have caused more trouble among the moose, especially in the heavy deadfall sections, but they he certainly not here serious enough to curtail their number

NEWSY LALONDE CLAIMS PRESENT PLAYERS FASTER

Manager N. Y. Americans Says Hockey is Speedier and Cleaner

New York, Jan. 26.—"Hockey," said Newsy Lalonde, manager of the New York Americans, "is a faster, cleaner game today than it was 20 years ago when I first broke in as a professional. The reduction of the number of men on a team from seven to six gave the players more room on the ice and put a premium on speed, while the changes in the rules eliminated most of the rough stuff. The demand for speed and the penalization afforded by the rules brought lighter, swifter men into the game, making it more attractive for the spectators.

"And," he added, "while the players of today are better skaters than those of a few years ago, I do not think they are as good at handling the stick. The presence of two rovers on the ice under the old rules gave us less space in which to get loose with the puck and consequently excellent stick wielders were developed. Of course, we have some great men in this respect now, but none, I think is good as Frank Patrick. Ernie Russell, another Original Six star, Cowie, to name just a few of the outstanding players of the past."

TUNNEY IN NEW YORK

New York, January 26.—Gene Tunney was back in New York today "on personal business." Billy Gibson, manager of the heavyweight champion said Tunney was "kicked doing a "five a day" at some vaudeville houses on his tour and had returned to have his theatrical contract pruned of the clause that requires so many performances.

NO BIG CHANGES WITH REGARD TO FAIR CANDIDATES

London, Ont., Jan. 24 (By Canadian Press)—An editorial in the London Free Press says: "The municipal elections just completed in Western Ontario show no great change with respect to the number of women candidates for office, or the proportion thereof elected. It cannot be said that they stand stable in deference to the number of ambitious men candidates, for in the late election, as in those of every year, there have been insufficient nominations in numerous municipalities, necessitating a second election, that there seems to be a dissatisfaction on the part of the electors, indicating women voters themselves to assert from caucus. There have been noteworthy exceptions, of course, as in the case of Mrs. E. F. Twiddle, who served on the City Council of Niagara Falls, and there will be others from time to time, no doubt.

"On the other hand, a woman's home interests connect up normally with those of education, and it is little surprising that women school trustees are so few. There is evidently little or no opposition, save principle, to their election, and their services are apparently satisfactory, for those who continue in office achieve the chairmanship. Windsor board has chosen Mrs. L. A. Killen as chairman for 1927, and there is another woman trustee on the same body. A woman has been elected by acclamation to the board at Exeter, Mrs. J. A. Hunt is entering upon her third term in London. St. Thomas in recent years has had a woman trustee, and at present there are two, at Guelph, Mrs. C. R. Crowe, head of last year's board, and the first woman to serve thereon, has been defeated. Along with another woman candidate, but that is not necessarily significant. In few of the large cities of Ontario Aldermen and trustees who shared that fate in the recent elections.

"It is probable that a great majority of women, while interested in classroom work, with which they come in direct touch through the children, and where, incidentally, a majority of the staff are female teachers, concern themselves much less with general administration. One reads that at a London Township school section meeting, to which ladies had been especially invited, only one was present. In the Legislature of Ontario, which frames the school laws, there is not one woman member, and there were but two women candidates at the late election."

ROYAL COMMISSION TO PROBE TRAGEDY

Montreal, Jan. 25.—In order that the guilt and responsibility in connection with the Lachine Rapids tragedy be settled and the theatre situation in Montreal be thoroughly investigated, a royal commission has been granted by Premier Taschereau. The Government acceded to the request of a very large deputation, headed by Ald. Leon Trepanier, president of the St. Jean Baptiste Society which waited on the Prime Minister and Hon. Messrs. Perron, David and Dillon in the Government offices on Saturday morning.

EXPENSIVE TO SLAP THE PREMIER'S FACE

Geneva, Jan.—Evan DeJurth, secretary of the Hungarian Republican party was found guilty today of an assault on the Hungarian Premier, Count Bethlen. The charge grew out of a scene in the lobby of the League of Nations Palace last year when DeJurth slapped the Premier in the face. The court sentenced the secretary to 21 days imprisonment, already served, 50 francs fine and banishment from Switzerland for ten years.

BELLE THEATRE

After discussing dancers with Anna May Wong, chic Chinese actress, Margaret Livingston made an old observation:

"Nothing is new under the sun!"

It was while Miss Livingston was portraying the role of the dashing widow in "A Trip to Chinatown," Fox Films version of Charles A. Hoyt's immortal comedy coming to the Belle theatre today for two days, that Anna May Wong exploded another popular theory.

"Did I hear you say the Charleston is a modern dance?" the tiny Chinese Mary Pickford asked Miss Livingston.

"Certainly!" said Margaret. "Discovered and patented in the good old U.S.A.!"

"Huh!" (Business of snapping the fingers.) "The Charleston is old—very, very old! It dates back to the Ming dynasty. That was thirteen hundred and sixty-eight! And I am not so sure that it doesn't go back to the Dynasty of Chow—five hundred years before Christ!"

"Stop!" said Miss Livingston, horrified. "Give it!"

"I will!" said Anna May Wong. "Come—look at this circular table cover." She led the way to a round table used in one of the Chinatown sets. "There! See that table-spread?" She pointed to scores of tiny "tabs" which formed the edges of a gorgeous red "throw." It was old—very old—and it contained hundreds of tiny figures, shown in dancing postures—men and women cavorting gaily. "If that isn't the Charleston, I'll eat your swanzer-stick!" Anna May said belligerently. "And that Ming dynasty! That was yesterday! A year's festivities in China—representing a period in the time of Ming and in the time of Chow. Well, isn't it the Charleston?"

"It is!" said Margaret, "What's new? Nothing's new under the sun!"

CAPITOL THEATRE

If you want to laugh and forget your troubles, then be sure and see Reginald Denny in his latest and greatest screen success, "Take It From Me." Another large crowd attended last night's showing at the Capitol and saw as funny a picture as has ever been shown in the city. Gales of laughter greeted the screamingly funny production, and it was well merited because for genuine clean comedy, the picture has almost anything beaten we've ever seen.

It wasn't all comedy at that, for mixed with it was a gorgeous display of gowns in a fashion show that is unique, and one of the outstanding features in a really fine film. Reginald Denny is at his best in the production and that's saying something. You'll laugh till you cry at this picture, which will be shown for the last time, tonight.

POLICEMAN 36 YEARS

Peterboro, Jan. 26.—Chief of Police Samuel Newhall today celebrated his 36th anniversary as a police officer. He has been a member of the local force since June 1905.

Joining the world famous Metropolitan Police in London, England, on January 26, 1897, he served for five years, then transferring to the Liverpool police force.

During the time he was with the Metropolitan Police he was engaged with "C" squadron, "or the Royal squadron, the members of which were always detailed for the big events that happened such as the visits of Kings and Queens, or else for duty in connection with events in which royalty were the participants.

Leaving Liverpool during 1904 he left for Canada where he served on the police force of that country until June, 1906, when he came to Peterboro where he has resided ever since

CONVICTS STRIKE

Kingston, Jan. 26.—A few convicts in Portsmouth Penitentiary got that tired feeling on Tuesday afternoon that comes over almost every person at some years, and refused to work. As a result, work was delayed in some of the departments for a time, but it was stated by the authorities that the affair was not at all of a serious nature, and that everything was quiet and orderly today.

One report had it that the prisoners claimed they were not getting substantial food for the work they were called upon to perform, but the food served is generally regarded as quite good.

Spanish Steamed Founders in Sight of Shore

Lisbon, Spain, January 26.—Fourteen members of the crew of the Spanish steamer Retuerto were drowned when the ship foundered off the Portuguese coast.

People on the shore witnessed the tragedy, but were unable to give assistance owing to the fury of the waves. One boat succeeded in retiring through, but arrived too late. Only three of the Retuerto's crew reached shore.

The Retuerto, an iron screw steamer of 1,778 tons, was built in 1877. Her home port was San Sebastian.

Twelve Russians were frozen to death when returning home from War-saw Fair.

BELLEVILLE TO BENEFIT BY NEW CLEANING IDEAS

Modern Takes Advance Steps in Joining National Association

Belleville citizens are fortunate in many respects and here's another.

Through the union just completed between the Modern Dry Cleaners and the National Association of Cleaners and Dyers, people of this District have now in their midst an establishment which henceforth will represent the last word in Dry Cleaning and Dyeing—based on research work by the above organization.

Mr. Thomas Hutchinson of the Modern Dry Cleaners and Dyers, of this city, has just returned from a five day annual convention at West Baden, Indiana, of the National Association of Dyers and Cleaners. Along with some 1500 other fellow members cleaners (for the application of the Modern was accepted at the Convention)—members from every State and from Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, St. John and Halifax—Mr. Hutchinson heard reviewed the country's yearly progress in Dry Cleaning methods, now exhibited the newest equipment in the business, and gained information which will permit the "Modern" some time to offer patrons really "Modern Service."

"The N. A. D. C. is an association of the best Dry Cleaners and Dyers in U. S. and Canada. A firm may join when the Association is satisfied that it's equipment and standard of cleaning is sufficiently high standard. The purpose of this organization is to demonstrate to its member cleaners, and dyers all the knowledge of chemicals, cleaning methods, equipment, fabrics, etc., as this knowledge is acquired thereby keeping each member posted on everything that's new in the business.

For this purpose the N. A. D. C. operates a research Department in Washington which in turn works in harmony with the American Bureau of Standards, and regulates the quality of manufactured goods. For example, a certain manufacturer, with perhaps too little regard for his reputation produces an expensive gown of a new material which will not properly Dry Clean—thus causing trouble for the owner, the cleaner, and ultimately for the manufacturer. Then through the above associations the manufacturer is made—for the protection of the public and the Cleaner to discontinue the production of the gown.

The N. A. D. C. is the newest organization to which the Modern now is a member and you will readily see the advantages to you as a patron. The Modern too has now adopted a new solvent in its cleaning, dispensing entirely with gasoline; the new solvent used by the largest Cleaners—all those having a plant sufficiently well equipped to use it—other new equipment has also been added in a new and advanced style of pressing machine.

All of which will greatly improve Modern Service. Today, for example, the Modern announces a 24 hour Dry Cleaning and Pressing Service on Ladies and gents suits and overcoats—an unusual service for a city the size of Belleville.

The Irony of Love By Charles Garvice

Profound was the silence which followed this pregnant announcement—for Parchment Joe shared in speechless amazement, and poor Rafe was unconscious of everything but his terrible loss on one of the three heard a faint cry, then was something like a sob, which escaped the lips of Phenie, crouching at the back of the list, and listening with all her straining soul to every word.

CHAPTER III.

THE IRONY OF FORTUNE

After the funeral, Rafe Mr. Gordon said to Parchment Joe returned to the hut. The camp of Jumping Joe had "moved itself," to use its own phrase, on the funeral; they had been proud of Great-uncle Jim when he was alive, and were resolved to pay due honor to his obsequies. A clergyman had been brought from Hinkley, and had officiated in a dirty surplice, which offered a striking contrast to the man's good, clean, white life. The miners had thronged round the grave, with bared head and that grim look upon their faces which is borne by strong men when they are struggling with their feelings; and, in an unusual silence, they had turned away from the grave and repaired to the saloon, to drink, in a like silence, to the memory of the dog; final man, whose warmth of mind and shrunk had held them all as straining greyhounds are held by a slender leash.

Of the mystery which had been unfolded by Mr. Gordon when Gentleman Jim lay dying, the camp knew nothing; for Parchment Joe was the sole and discreet to tell the story, and Rafe still remaining scarcely conscious of the words which Mr. Gordon had spoken. He had stood beside the grave and looked down at the rough coffin, like some listening animal directed by a sudden and keen sense; and he appeared half dazed now as he sat at the table with his chin resting on his hands.

Parchment Joe, in a rusty suit of black, sat beside Rafe, upon whose arm he laid a trembling hand, while with grief and loving sympathy he broke drink. Mr. Gordon, the lawyer, had also taken a seat while they had the funeral, but now was standing, fidgeting with some papers which he had taken from a battered box at the table before him. His appearance was that of a man who had a great deal to say, but was reluctant to start; and he looked from the south, red head of the young man to the gray, disheveled one of the disreputable old lawyer as if he found himself in peculiarly trying circumstances.

Parchment Joe came to his assistance. "Mr. Gordon, here," he said, "has something to say to you, Rafe," he said, "something important. Try and pull yourself together, lad, for you've got to hear it."

Rafe nodded. "All right," he said with a catch in his voice. "What is it? If you've come to tell me my father's dead, you've told me that before, and nothing can ever hurt him, you can count me to take it over. I'll stand for him, whatever it is. And was a white man all through—" His voice broke, his head fell from his eyes, and he shook with a fit of uncontrollable grief.

"God bless my soul; it's nothing of the kind! Your father did not owe any money, quite the reverse. I'm afraid that you didn't hear what passed when your father was dying very much, very quietly. But I'm not aware that I refuse in search of it; that he was not what he affected to be; that his position was very different from that which he filled here."

Rafe made a little movement of his shoulders. It was difficult to give his attention to the man in the London clothes, who spoke with a dry and nervous voice, while he stood in Rafe's eyes, still standing with the echo of the grand and heartrending words he had heard the clergyman utter over the grave.

"You see," said Mr. Gordon, "and it is now my duty to place you in as full possession of the facts as possible. Your father bore the name of Brown, here in camps, but his real name, the family name, was Halgrave."

"They called him Gentleman Jim," muttered Parchment Joe, with a foolish air of pride.

"Exactly," assented Mr. Gordon. "Good blood will show itself in the most adverse circumstances; and your father's blood—and yours, my dear young friend, was—er—of the very best. The Halgraves, as you may know, Mr.—Mr. —" he paused and regarded the battered old figure perplexedly.

"Better go on calling me 'Parchment Joe,'" said that gentleman, "but I happen to know all about the Halgraves, or did once; it's a noble family, as you say."

"Exactly," said Mr. Gordon, "and the peerage is one of the oldest, and, if I may use the word, one of the most famous. The family has always taken a high place. Warriors, statesmen—"

"Never mind all that," Parchment Joe interrupted, with a warning glance at the young man beside him; or Rafe's attention had begun to wander, his thoughts were returning to his dead father.

"Quite so," said Mr. Gordon—with a little cough. "I was only trying to impress my dear young friend with the exalted character of the profession which he has been called upon by Providence you will understand, Lord Strangfye—I to—er—fill. From what I have said, Rafe looked up, glanced at the speaker then at Parchment Joe. "Who does he mean?" he asked.

"I am addressing you my dear young friend," said Mr. Gordon, now unemployed than ever. "It is evident that you have not realized the important fact that your father was the Earl of Strangfye, and that you have succeeded him."

"I?" he demanded.

CHAPTER III.

THE IRONY OF FORTUNE

After the funeral, Rafe Mr. Gurdon and Parchment Joe returned to the hut. The camp of Jumping Jane had "moved itself," to use its own phrase, on the following day and had been proud of Granny Jim when he was alive, and were prepared to pay due honor to his obsequies. A clergyman had been brought over from the grave and remained in a dirty surplice, which offered a striking contrast to the man's good, clean, wholesome life. The mourners had thronged round the grave, with bared head and that grim look upon their faces which is borne by strong men when they are struggling with their feelings; and, in an unusual silence, they had turned away from the grave and repaired to the saloon, to drink, in a like silence, to the memory of the dead, to the man whose strength of mind and pluck had held them all as straining greyhounds are held by a slender leash.

Of the mystery which had been unfolded by Mr. Gurdon when Gentleman Jim lay dying, the camp knew nothing; but they knew that Rafe was dead and after to tell the story, and Rafe still remaining scarcely conscious of the events which Mr. Gurdon had spoken. He had stood beside the grave and looked down at the rough coffin, like some figure carved in stone, and during the long funeral service and the "sing-song" and he appeared half dazed now as he sat at the table with his chin resting on his knuckles.

Parchment Joe, in a rusty suit of black, sat beside Rafe, upon whose arm he had a wrinkled hand, and looked with grief and manly's hygone drink; Mr. Gordon, the lawyer, had also taken a seat which placed him on Rafe's right, but now was standing, fidgeting with some papers which he had taken from a buttoned box on the table before him. His appearance was that of a man who had a great deal to say, but was reluctant to start; and he looked from the rough, red face of the young man to the grey, dignified old one of the disreputable old lawyer as if he found himself in peculiarly trying circumstances.

Parchment Joe came to his assistance. "Mr. Gordon, here, has something to say to you, Rafe," he said, "something important. Try and pull yourself together, lad, for you've got to hear it."

Rafe nodded. "All right," he said with a catch in his voice. "What is it? If you've come to tell me my father owes you any money, I can't say anything up against him, you can count on me to take it over. I'll stand for him whatever it is. And was a white man all through——" His voice broke, his head fell from his eyes, and he glared at the disreputable Parchment Joe.

"God bless my soul! it's nothing of the kind! Your father did not owe any money, quite the reverse, quite the reverse. You might that you didn't hear what passed when your father was giving very valuable, very private advice to me, about the best course to pursue in case of his death; he was not what he affected to be; that his position was very different from that which he filled here."

Rafe made a little movement of his shoulders. It was difficult to give his feelings to this man in the London clothes, who spoke with a dry and cerebrous voice, which seemed in Rafe's ears, still ringing with the echo of the grand and heartrending words he had heard the clergyman utter over the grave.

"Quite so," said Mr. Gordon, "and it is now my duty to place you in as full possession of the facts as possible. Your father bore the name of Brown, here in camp, but his real name, the family name, was Halgrave."

"Exactly," said Mr. Gordon, "and the peerage is one of the oldest, and, if I may use the word, one of the most famous. The family has always taken a high place. Warrior statesmen——"

"Never mind all that," Parchment Joe interrupted, with a warning glance at the young man beside him; or Rafe's attention will wander, and—and—the thoughts were returning to his dead father.

"Quite so," said Mr. Gordon—with a little cough. "I was only trying to impress my dear young friend with the exalted character of the position which he has been called upon by Providence you will understand, Lord Stradlyne—I mean—ill. From what I have said, Rafe looked up, glanced at the speaker then at Parchment Joe. "Who does he mean?" he asked.

"I am addressing you, my dear young sir," said Mr. Gordon, more uncomfortable than ever. "It is evident that you have not realized the important fact that your father was the Earl of Stradlyne, and that you have succeeded him."

FOOD FROM AIR PLANE SAVED 3

Ice Marooned Sailors Rescued When Freighter Crashed Thru

Chicago, Jan. 27. — Three weather worn fishermen, for five days adrift on a tiny ice floe, were rescued from the middle of a big ice flow in lower Lake Michigan, were rescued today when they spied a food laden freighter "Sandhunter" crashed through to their side. Rescuers found supplies of food dropped from an aeroplane had staved off hunger, but the men were wrecking the tug for fuel.

For twelve hours the Sandhunter charged the ice field in the dark and at midnight flashed radio word to the Chicago owners that she had won the fight and was alongside the tug. A line was quickly run to the diminutive "Imperial," then lying off Michigan City, Ind., and the three men transferred to the freighter, and she started back for Chicago with the tug in tow.

The men, Frank Jentsen, Harvey Frazer and Joe Vrakirk, apparently had suffered no serious effects from long exposure and period of hunger and cold on Tuesday when an aeroplane swept within a few feet of the big and dropped food, clothing and fuel. The men were known to be in peril of their lives in event of a sudden loosening of the ice field, which detached itself last Saturday and moved out in to the lake with the three fishermen.

FAMOUS LIBEL ACTION COMES TO TRIAL OVER CAPT. WRIGHT'S BOOK

London, Jan. 27.—The character of the late William Ewart Gladstone and all interns placed on trial to day when Captain Peter Wright's libel action against Lord Gladstone, the 75-year-old son of the Victorian Prime Minister, opened before Justice Sir Horace Avery.

Captain Wright, London chairman and free lance Journalist, characterized the elder Gladstone in a book entitled "Portraits and Criticisms", as "Mr. Gladstone who founded the Great Tradition, since observed by so many of his followers and successors with such pious fidelity, in public to speak the language of the highest and strictest principles, and in private to pursue and posses every sort of woman."

Viscount Gladstone immediately challenged Wright; called him a liar, coward and fool, which invited a libel action from Wright. Capt. Wright repeated the assertion and then accepting Gladstone's invitation, brought a libel action. Wright's manuscript his written statement in his book was made on the authority of the late Lord Milner, who, said the elder Gladstone, was "governed by his Semplic"—his barcus

COUNTY COUNCIL HEARS REQUEST OF FAIR BOARD

Assessment Question Left Over Until June Session

A communication was read this morning at County Council from R. H. Ketcheson, Secretary of the Belleville Agricultural Society, inviting the council to appoint a County representative to the Board.

The Belleville Society asked for a larger grant in view of the fact that the County is now favored with a five-day Fair. The new buildings and improvement involve the cost and upkeep and the officials believe that a larger grant is warranted. The officials are working hard to place the Belleville Fair on a par with any in the Province. The matter was referred to the ways and means committee.

The matter of a grant to the West Hastings Women's Institute was brought up. The Institution are hoping to establish a School Inspection which will increase the cost.—Referred to ways and means.

It was moved by James Moore and seconded by George Bailey that the matter of fixed assessment be left over until the June Sessions. This motion was passed and will probably be the big problem to be considered at the summer meeting.

SIX KILLED BY GAS EXPLOSION

Turner, Idaho, Jan. 27.—Six persons are dead and nearly a score injured, 12 seriously as a result of an explosion of acetylene gas which wrecked Turner Chapel and Recitation Hall last night, while a basketball game was in progress. Nearly 200 persons had assembled to finance building for the game. Shortly after play started some one struck a match and a terrific explosion followed. Portions of the ceiling fell near the exit and before the hall could be cleared the roof had collapsed. Most of the dead and injured were found near the exit.

TEACHERS PAID LOW SALARIES IN N. HASTINGS

Inspector Colling Reports Good Progress Made in His Territory.

The report of Mr. Jas. Colling, Inspector of Schools for North Hastings was submitted to the Council this morning. Two or three cases were made to each school by him during the past year.

Two teachers who were found incompetenced will be replaced at midsummer. Many of the teachers are working under disheartening conditions but good work is being done. Twelve additional schools have undertaken the teaching of Agriculture. Mr. Colling stated there was a wonderful field for improvement in the major industry that of dairying. Creameries should be operated throughout the year, he said.

The average salary for teachers in Rural schools for 1926 was $737.00, a con siderable increase on the previous year. Boards of Trustees are making a mistake in this, thinking the reduction of a few dollars as a matter of fact the grant of $600 is figured at 60% or less than $600.00 at 70% over a certain minimum. Teachers are tended to migrating to the south. The average salary in South Hastings was $1018 as compared with $1100 in 1925. There is lacking that Institute for good from both and educational and moral standpoint when a successful teacher remains permanently in one school.

Some years ago the readjustment of the schedule upon which the Legislative grant was appointed to Rural schools effected a great improvement in the poorer sections compared on assessment basis the wealthier sections are getting more liberal assistance.

The assessment in Montteagle .i. $15,000 and the Tyendinaga 14, is $120,000 a comparison which is typical. The Township grant in Montteagle 4, is $120 and Tyendinaga 14, is $600. This means that Montteagle section with 1-8 of the assessment must raise 1-4 of the amount raised in Tyendinaga.

The grants received in Montteagle

JAPAN AND UNITED STATES JOIN GREAT BRITAIN IN FRIENDLY MOVE

STILL 15 BELOW

Just as Cold This A.M. as Yesterday But You Did Not Feel It

While most of the thermometer fans of the city two the official weatherman today estimated the severity of the weather yesterday when 15 below was the lowest figure reached, it is undoubtedly a fact that 15 was the bottom obb the weather reached. Scores of unofficial thermometers registered 25 and 26 below and many from 18 to 22 but the official instrument which is government tested and absolutely reliable never went below 15. The pump house, where the official thermometer is kept is read precisely and is placed so that the coldest blasts are caught, was kept busying yesterday with requests for the weather phenomenon and many who had previously felt certain that it must be 30 below hung up disappointed.

Today the record was 15 below and strangely most people going out to business early in the morning, felt certain that the climate had moderated.

TY AND TRIS ARE BACK IN FAVOR

Judge Landis Says They Never "Fixed" a Ball Game

Chicago, Jan. 27.—Tyrus Cobb and Tris Speaker today were cleared of all charges which might make them ineligible for participation in professional baseball, in the decision of Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis and they are also free to rescind their withdrawal from baseball and return to the reserve lists of Detroit Tigers and Cleveland Indians respectively.

"This is the Cobb-Speaker case" decision by Commissioner.

Landis says: "These players have not been, nor are they now found guilty of fixing ball game. By no decent system of justice could such a finding be made. Therefore, they were not placed on the ineligible list. As they desire to rescind their withdrawal from baseball, they will be made to other Chinese authorities—that is, the Peking government—that preventing the impression that Great Britain regrets the Customs agreement as the responsible authority for all of China.

JAPAN CONCILIATORY

London, Jan. 27.—Reuter's Tokyo correspondent says: "It is understood the Japanese government at a conference yesterday decided that a new treaty should be concluded between China and Japan as the basis for fixing mutual granting of most favored nation treatment being likewise specified.

NO CO-OPERATION

Washington, Jan. 27. — Assurances that the United States government is ready to enter into immediate negotiations with both the Cantonese and Northern Factions in the present civil war were given at the State Department today in amplifying the formal statement issued last night by Frank B. Kellogg, secretary of state.

WILL REVISE TREATIES

British Army and Navy Reserves Being Rushed To Shanghai

The British foreign office regards the United States statement as expressing much the same spirit as was displayed in the recent memorandum which proposed "no foreign control of an unwilling country, readiness to negotiate revision of treaties and an amendment of extra territorial system" Japan is also understood to favor a new treaty with China on an equal footing with mutual granting of most favored nation treatment.

British army and navy forces are rushing to Shanghai.

Latest development in the Chinese situation is that the United States government has notified the powers and China that it stands for recognizing China on a basis of international equality. According to secretary Kellogg United States is eager to see China obtain full control of her own tariff schedules. Though there is a sharp warning about the necessity of United States having protection of lives and property of Americans outside the limits of the state—it is regarded as friendly.

TO MAKE NEW TREATIES

London, Jan. 27.—Proposals which charge Defaires OMally has been authorized to make to the Cantonese Foreign Minister at Hankow for the settlement terms of complete eventual surrender of British concessions throughout China, including extra territoriality and fixing for new treaties supplanting the present "unequal" one up. It is not known here what, these proposals have actually been handed to foreign Minister China as yet,but they are expected to be presented soon. Meanwhile British Governmen is keeping United States, Japan and other interested powers fully informed on negotiations between Chen, and Mr. Omalley, which are expected to have a most important bearing on the whole crisis arising out of anti-foreign outrages in the Yangtze valley.

In making their proposals to Chen, the British have been most careful to state that identical terms will be made to other Chinese authorities—that is, the Peking government—thus preventing the impression that Great Britain regrets the Cantonese government as the responsible authority for all of China.

JAPAN CONCILIATORY

London, Jan. 27.—Reuter's Tokyo correspondent says: "It is understood the Japanese government at a conference yesterday decided that a new treaty should be concluded between China and Japan as the basis for fixing, mutual granting of most favored nation treatment being likewise specified.

BURKE.

THE MONROE DELUSION

It is a coincidence not without an ominous aspect, that both Great Britain and the United States should simultaneously find themselves confronted in different parts of the world with international complications somewhat similar in character. While Great Britain is engaged in the difficult and delicate task of protecting her subjects, and, incidentally, those of other foreign nations, in China against a menace fraught with grave consequences, the United States is employed on a mission in Mexico and Nicaragua that is said to have the same object.

In both cases, it is claimed, the origin of the trouble is identical. Just as in China the revolt of the Cantonese is attributed to Soviet influence and support, so in Nicaragua the disturbances that have brought about American intervention are credited to "Red" activities and threats. According to Secretary of State Kellog, the Calles Government of Mexico is seeking to establish in Nicaragua a Bolshevist regime hostile to the United States, and there is more than a suspicion that the same sinister agencies are at work in other parts of Central America.

The policy proclaimed by President Coolidge in relation to Mexico and Nicaragua, like that of Great Britain in regard to China, is also defended on the ground that the lives and interests in the disturbed territories must be safeguarded. In both instances there has been a resort to armed force as a powerful reactionary measure with a danger of conflict arising; and in both the action of the interested countries has been subjected to a good deal of bitter criticism.

On the one hand, we have the ironical spectacle of certain American newspapers attacking Great Britain for its so-called Imperialistic designs upon China while, at the same time, unconsciously justifying the policy of military intervention on the part of the United States in Mexico and Nicaragua. On the other hand, there is witnessed the no less incongruous attitude of a section of the British press which, in one breath, clamors for action in China and, in the next, anathematizes the interference of the United States in Nicaragua.

It is all very confusing and by no means edifying, for to the ordinary observer, unfamiliar with the facts, and knowing little of the conditions in the countries that are the cradles of disturbance, it would seem as if there was little to distinguish between policies of intervention that are essentially protective in their character and scope. The only difference—and it is material—is that whereas Great Britain has always recognized her responsibilities abroad, and never hesitated to defend the rights and interests of her subjects when these were menaced or attacked, the United States has ever pleaded the righteousness of the Monroe doctrine as a symbol of disinterestedness, and a sure protection against what its Fourth of July orators call "foreign entanglements," or "imperial aggrandizement."

That there are critics who find it difficult to reconcile American intervention in Central America with the much proclaimed virtues of the Monroe doctrine, so meticulously observed in relation to European affairs, is interesting, not to be wondered at. Nor is it surprising that the Mexican Foreign Minister should regard it as "inexplicable" that a nation, which boasts of its championship of peace, and regards the League of Nations as unnecessary, is apparently disinclined to listen to any argument but that of force.

The weakness of the American position is that the precepts of Monroe are not the practice of Coolidge, and that what some people might regard as inconsistency, others might term hypocrisy. The more our friends to the south seek to justify the policy of intervention in Mexico and Nicaragua, the more they condemn their pretensions to "splendid isolation" and expose the political delusion under which they have remained for a century.

ACCIDENTS

In spite of the fact that safety propaganda has increased very considerably in the past few years, the actual results have been rather disappointing. "Accidents occur with sickening frequency and the spirit of carelessness seems to be too firmly established to be amenable to persuasion or reason. But one wonders what the situation would be if there efforts were relaxed. Associations for the prevention of industrial accidents are doing a great work and it is certain that their constant warnings and reminders to employers and employed are not without effect. It is a most encouraging sign that individual firms are paying much more attention to this matter than used to be the case. The economic loss resulting from such accidents, not to speak of the amount of preventable suffering and injury and the number of deaths for which they are responsible, has sawed enormously to the importance of instituting more effective methods and from many points gratifying results are being reported.

MODERN SPORTS IN ANCIENT SETTING

Winter sports are a joy at any time, but in the ideal environment of old Quebec they give a degree of pleasure unknown in more prosaic places.

Skiing down the Cleric heath the shadow of the ancient citadel, tobogganing on Dufferin Terrace with snow-shoed Lower Town and ice-bound river far below; sleigh drives through a countryside of quaintness, history and romance! There is winter sport indeed.

Canadian National train service is appreciated by those who seek the winter joys of old Quebec. Trains leave at convenient hours; accommodations and service are typically Canadian National.

Nujol acts like Nature, said thousands of doctors

RECENTLY we made a country-wide investigation among leading doctors to learn why they advised the Nujol type of treatment for their constipation patients.

80.7% were prescribing it. A large proportion said it was "The more natural method of treatment." As one doctor putit,"Laxatives are irritating. Their repeated use brings on the laxative habit. Nujol trains the bowels to act naturally but thoroughly."

Doctors Advise Nujol

Nine doctors out of every ten told us they were advising the Nujol type of treatment for their patients in place of laxatives—and for these reasons: 1. Nujol is not habit-forming; 2. A more natural method; 3. A lubricant is better than a laxative; 4. Does not gripe; 5. Is not irritating; and 6. Nujol gives lasting relief.

Unlike Laxatives

Laxatives and cathartics act by irritating the intestinal tract. They cause the bowels to frantically expel the contents of the intestines and thus rid the system of the drugs that pills and potions contain.

Nujol acts entirely differently. It contains no drugs, no medicine. Its action is mechanical. It merely softens the dried waste matter in the intestines and lubricates the passage so that the muscles of the bowels can expel the waste matter regularly, naturally and thoroughly.

Nature-given Remedy

Nujol appeals to the medical man because it is a simple, scientific and safe remedy for constipation, no matter how severe the case may be. It is gentle in its action and pleasant to take. Children love it!

Get a bottle of Nujol from your druggist today. Doctors advise it for constipation whether chronic or temporary. Avoid substitutes.

MATERNAL AID OFTEN WEAKENS HUSBAND

If a Man Can't Stand on His Own Legs and Support ah! one He Isn't Much, in Elsie's Opinion

DL ELSIE MARLOWE

"Of course, my daughter-in-law isn't crazy about having me live with them," writes mamma-in-law, "but if my son had to get out and stand on his own legs without the help I give him he'd have to do without his automobile and live in a very ordinary manner."

And upon this touching proof of her usefulness the lady adds: I'll write an enthusiastic endorsement of mamma-in-law in all up-to-date homes.

Will I?

Watch me NOT.

DEAR ELSIE:

Everyone roasts the mother and father-in-law who live with their married children. Can't anyone ever say a good word for the greatly abused creatures?

I live with my son and daughter-in-law, for by doing so it helps my son in many ways. I pay them my part of the expense instead of giving it to strangers.

By doing this they can live in a much nicer home, have an auto and many things which they could not afford if I did not live with them.

My son only gets a small salary—$100 per month. Unfortunately, he married a girl who is very extravagant, and will sacrifice in no way to help him along. If he had to stand on his own legs and not get any help from me he would have to live in housekeeping rooms and do without his automobile and live in a very ordinary manner.

I will admit my daughter-in-law isn't crazy about having me, and the only reason she does have me is for the most my she gets out of me.

Now, Elsie, would you go on living with them when you knew your daughter-in-law only tolerates you for that reason. Sometimes I think I should get out and let them shift for themselves and at least have my independence. I certainly haven't got it now.

PERPLEXED IN-LAW.

You may be the most estimable person on earth, lady dear—

But if you were hanging around my house coddling a male that happened to me my husband—letting him get by on a $100 a month salary when he was perfectly able to earn more and would do so were it not for the assistance you gave him—if you were doing this to my life I'd regard you as a dangerous menace and I'd treat you as I would any other pest.

I'm not desiring your views as an individual—they're probably manifold—but I insist that you're Bad Medicine for a young family.

To you it seems delightful that your boy should still depend on you. You like to give him automobiles and have comfortable rooms now, just as you liked to give him pop guns and lollypops when he was a baby. It does not occur to you that he is baby no longer. It should occur to you, if your love for him were intelligent and unselfish—but your love isn't unselfish. You're thinking more of the joy you receive through giving him comforts than you are of the effects those comforts will have upon him You're weakening your boy at the time when he most needs to grow strong and self-reliant.

And then you blame the young wife for being extravagant.

I'm not upholding extravagance. I can fully understand how it must distress a loving mother to see a son mated to an extravagant wife. But believe me, my dear, that young wife's extravagance is probably a thousand times better for the boy than your coddling.

Moreover, what indictment has she to be other than extravagant? You have seems into their home and robbed them of initiative to work. You've robbed them of the pride and excitement of their first struggles. No wonder that wife resents your presence.

Yes, I know it hurts, and I'm sure you haven't meant to do any harm. I know how much you want to be near this boy whom you have loved and served for so many years. But can't you see, my dear that the love you are giving now is neith er wise nor kind?

Leave them! It will mean a wrench an agonizing wrench. But it's the only fair thing to them, or to yourself.

For you're not being fair to yourself either, my friend. You're robbing your own life in robbing theirs. Some day you want to be proud of your boy and rejoice in his happiness and success. Some day you want to reap a harvest of heart's content for those long years of love and sacrifice. But you'll never do it if you thwart his growth as you are now doing. You are heading for tragedy, rather than for peace. And you had better take another trail before it is too late.

WHAT'S NEW

(From a Woman's Standpoint)

New York notes with the black velvet evening frocks they are now wearing black stockings and black satin slippers with rhinestone heels.

Seven hundred children in the Brooklyn Hebrew Orphan Asylum, the second largest Jewish home in the United States are to be taken out of it and placed in private homes.

At the Paris openings, navy, and black with pink are stressed in the showing of Mandeleine des Hayes.

At Lake Placid the preference in sweaters is described as of two or three tone horizontal stripes, or plain vivid or pastel shades.

The list of millinery colorings for the spring and summer stress taupe or blond all the beige and rosy tans on the monkey skin order, and the light but bright shades of green.

Gingham are again fashionable for children's frocks and dotted Swiss is much in favor and the Swiss dresses are usually trimmed with bandings of organdie or Irish crochet lace.

For outdoor dining and dancing in the evening every style the flimsier type of scarf or wrap is permitted this season and the new lovely lace and net scarfs and capes, include some as large as the old-fashioned paisley shawls and show up glitteringly the fine metallic thread embroidery while others run in circular capes and of lace are often with colored embroidery.

SULPHUR BEST TO CLEAR SKIN

Any breaking out of skin irritation on face, neck or body is overcome quicker by applying Mentho-Sulphur, says a noted skin specialists. Because of this germ destroying properties, nothing has ever been found to take the place of this sulphur preparation that instantly brings ease from the itching, burning and irritation.

Mentho-Sulphur heals eczema up, leaving the skin clear and smooth. It seldom fails to relieve the torment of disfigurement. A little jar of Rowles Mentho-Sulphur may be obtained at any drug store.

Yokes That Are Easy to Wear

BUTTERICK 5346

Fuss modern young girl believes in being free from all dictates, except from those of Fashion. In fact she is so capsivated by smart style that she wears a frock with a yoke. This is a pleasure, for the yoke is new and most interestingly cut, being V-shaped in front and slashed for a tie, while in back it follows an unusual and attractive outline. There are inverted pleats at the sides and in front, and a narrow belt which fits in the back. The frock is especially effective in satin crepe, with the shiny side used for yoke, cuffs and inverted pleats.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a bride of eighteen. Before we were married my husband was well and we were happy, since our marriage he is always ailing and sick.

He has told me that he does not care for me. I have loved him as much as any woman ever loved a man. He wants me to go to dances but he says a million times that he all the beige and rosy tans on the monkey skin order, and the light but bright shades of green.

I will not "step out." Shall I believe him?

I want him and need him but he says that I am young and can get somebody else. He says that he only cares for his son, the child of a former marriage. His first wife is in Minneapolis and I am afraid he still sees her.

I had my mother six weeks ago and am keeping house for a sister, brother and dad, as well as my husband. Shall I send my sister and brother to relatives and leave and cope, include some as large as the old-fashioned paisley shawls and show up glitteringly the fine metallic thread embroidery while others run in circular capes and of lace are often with colored embroidery.

MISERABLE.

MISERABLE: It is quite impossible that your husband has ceased to love you. Perhaps you have overcompanioned your need for "stepping out." You may have made him believe that you feel too keenly the difference in ages, experiences and interests.

If you love him, you must expect to sacrifice certain youthful pleasures. Make him believe that you would rather spend a happy evening at home with him, than go out to dances. And act as though you meant the words. Have you ever thought that your home is so happy because you have made no effort to make it otherwise? Through your discontent you have probably bred an atmosphere of discontent.

I don't want to seem harsh. But I want you to see that it is your duty to yourself and the husband you admire as you need to make your marriage a success. Tell him you love him. Tell him you want him, that you have no wish to find somebody else." Reassure him and give him confidence in the future. You will find that his bitterness will disappear and that his indifference was merely an attitude.

..Annie Laurie welcomes letters on problems of general or unusual interest from women readers of this paper and will reply to them in these columns. Letters should be addressed to her in care of this newspaper.

Look up that Fire Insurance Policy and see when it expires. Then consider renewing it with Belleville Locators, J. L. R. Gorman, Proprietor.

HEARTS' HAVEN

By Mildred Barbour

SYNOPSIS

On the eve of their wedding, Christine and Harvey elope and are married quietly.

THE FIRST LOVE NEST

Christine—Christine Blanton now for six months—was humming happily over her work in the shining kitchen of the little bungalow in the suburb, the bungalow to which she and her bride-groom had crept, grinning like two children after their elopement on the afternoon before their appointed wedding-day.

It was November now,' The roses that had bloomed in the neat little garden were gone, but their fragrance was still fresh in the hearts of the honeymoon pair. Snow nestled against the panes like the casement windows, and the dusk outside was beginning to emphasize the cheerfulness of the light in the little kitchen.

Christine, with a blue-and-white check oil apron over her fresh, tucked rather like a flushed, important little girl, as she flitted about washing lettuce for a salad,setting the white of an egg to cut beet-flidfiness for the custard cooling on the window-ledge, peering ever so anxiously into the oven at a roast simmering in savory juices.

The same Christine—small, exquisite but exhibiting another side of her nature. A happy Christine, who sang as she worked in the pretty kitchen and listened for the sound of a key in the door and a low whistle which was exclusively theirs—hers and Harvey's.

Presently it came—three notes—and Christine whipped off her apron, fled to the mirror for a last touch of powder to her nose, a lifting of dainty fingers to her hair. Then she sped to the blue-and-ivory living-room, where a fire was burning in an open hearth. She was waiting there when the front door opened.

There was an ecstatic kiss, a murmur from Christine of: "Darling, I've been so lonely," before she noticed another form looming behind Harvey.

"Oh, I didn't know anyone was with you!" she gasped, extricating herself quickly from his embrace.

Harvey laughed and drew her back in to his arms.

"Well, it isn't anyone in particular," he said teasingly. "It's allen—"

"Lewt" cried Christine, as she extended eager, welcoming hands to her old friend.

Lewis Hayes looked down at her, blinking a little in the sudden light. His eyes were wistful.

"Chris, little pal, it's good to see you again."

"And you—why, Lew, it's been ages since we've seen each other." In her excitement, she didn't recall the last time —commencement night, when her lover gone out of her life across the campus. "You didn't even come to our wedding," He joined his hands with Harvey's in a fightful grow.

"I understand that nobody had a chance to come to your wedding."

"Won't it dreadful of us?" said Christine, with a gurgle. "Mother didn't forgive me for weeks and weeks, and some of the girls who were to have been my bridesmaids haven't spoken to me since then. But we—we planned, and—and—ourselves, was father-in-law," said Harvey, with a chuckle. "He was decided to death to escape."

There was a sudden cry from Christine: "Oh, my roast!" And she flew to the kitchen.

Lewis, looking puzzled, shed his topcoat and came to war mhimself at the fire.

"You're not trying to tell me that Chris can cook?"

"Can—and does," declared the bridegroom proudly. "She's a wonder. Has a done-tie streak that you'd never suspect. Wouldn't you have said she was purely ornamental?"

"She's all of that—and more," assented Lewis. His eye swept the charmingly living-room. "This is a mighty fine little house you've got here."

Harvey shrugged and lighted a cigarette.

"Nothing much yet—but you wait and see. I had to go slow at first, of course, because my uncle, who's the president of my firm, is a nut on thrift and economy. He doesn't like to see young people stepping out too much. But you just watch. In a year or so, I'll be right where I can do a bit of lavishing. And Chris and I won't be living in a small place like this, without a maid to do the work."

"Harvey, darling, the roast is ready for carving," Christine called from the kitchen, and when Lewis followed Harvey to the door, she explained, turning a flushed, lovely face to him, "I asked Harvey do the carving in the kitchen. He isn't an expert yet, and I simply won't have the table-cloth ruined every meal."

Lewis watched her gravely, noted the deftness with which she handled dishes. Those very small, very white, very fragile hands!

"Let me." He took a heavy casserole hungry men pretty hard work?"

"Poof! It's fun. I love it."

She looked at Harvey, struggling with the roast, and touched his blond head with little, caressing fingers. "Nothing's work, Lew, when you're doing for someone you care about."

She never thought that this might hurt him. Love and the loved one had absorbed her.

They dined gaily in the dainty little dining-room with its bright chintz hangings and its casement, looking toward the fire. The curtains were drawn now, and the firelight from the living-room sent shadows dancing on the walls. It brought out the mellow glow of the candles.

"We'll have coffee before the fire," Christine announced, when the meal was finished, "and then, Lew, you're going to tell us all about yourself. Harvey and I have talked so much that there hasn't been a minute to bore you. I haven't even had a chance to ask how you happened to be in town today."

"Very little to tell," he said, when they were settled before the cheerful fire. "I've quit my job in Chicago, the one I took when I left college."

"Not enough money in it, eh?" remarked Harvey, passing the cigarettes.

Lewis shook his head.

"Not enough time. The money was all right, but I needed more time for my own experiments. The firm kept me too busy with routine stuff."

"Still working on the Great Formula, Lew?" traced Harvey.

It was a standing joke between them this 'Great Formula.'

Lew nodded gravely: "I want to find a job where I'll have a little leisure and a laboratory to work in. The pay doesn't matter."

Harvey gave a low whistle.

"By Jove, the very thing. Lew, you've got just such an opening for you in my firm. What say you come down with the tomorrow and tackle my market?"

Lewis hesitated. His gaze went to Christine, then back to Harvey. He seemed to be weighing something.

"Very well," he said at last. "It's a mighty fine thing of you, old man." (To be continued)

COUNCIL HEARS ANNUAL REPORT OF P.S. INSPECTOR

H. J. Clarke Submits Comprehensive Account of Work Done

Yesterday afternoon Inspector of Schools H. J. Clarke presented his nineteenth annual report to the County Council. It was a most comprehensive and concise in nature.

The Inspectorate consists of the Township of Sidney, Thurlow and Tyendinaga, Deseronto, Frankford, Belleville and Trenton.

There are 60 school houses in the Inspectorate all in good condition. Most are modern in design and many improvements have been made in the last year.

Every school is well equipped and music has been a new innovation in many schools. Of 125 teachers in the Inspectorate 18 hold first-class certificates, 102 hold second class certificates and 3 kindergarten Primary. No third class teachers are employed.

Of the 126 number of teachers 23 are music pupils in Rural communities.

Mr. Clarke also inspects the O.S.D. with 26 classes and the Mohawk Reservation. There were 220 candidates for the High School entrance examinations and 405 of these were successful. These were distributed as follows:

Candidates	Passed Part Reports	Passed Exam.	Total
Belleville 179	117	30	147
Co. Pupils 137	64	20	87
Trenton 100	66	24	90
Deseronto 69	35	10	45
Frankford 46	27	9	36
Total 530	309	93	405

Mr. Clarke reported the attendance officers as performing their duties most efficiently. A new Provincial attendance officer has been appointed who will oversee this work. In 69 of 81 schools Agriculture is being taught. Teachers who have taken this course in summer schools are much better able to teach this subject. This training in Agriculture costs nothing since every cent is refunded.

In 14 schools Household Science is being taught. Hot meals are being served in many schools which tend to increase the ability of the children to grasp the substance of their studies much better. The department offers liberal grants which pay for the necessary equipment.

SCHOOL FAIRS

School Fairs were held in each of the Townships and these were all well attended. Mr. Clarke stated that this is a most useful branch of school endeavour and in getting the parents together a feeling of fellowship is fostered. Efforts are being made to point out the defects in the various specimens in order that these may be corrected the next year.

The idea of Township Boards of Trustees is being spread. This point was stressed at the Women's Institute Convention held in Belleville.

COUNTY'S SHARE OF MAINTENANCE COST LOWERED

Deputation Waits Upon Council to Ask Grants For Blind Institute

A representation from the Institute of the Blind waited upon the Council this afternoon to place before that body a report of the work done for the unfortunate blind by the Institution. The Blind are being taught trades in order that they may be self supporting. Little work of this nature has been done until late years. Previously the blind had to the country. The Ontario Government will pay fifty per cent. of the grant providing the municipalities would bear the remainder. The matter was referred to the Ways and Means Committee.

Two representative employees of the Employers Liability Insurance Co. waited upon the Council today to solicit the County's business. It was referred to the Finance Committee with power to act.

A letter was received from Deputy Minister John of the Dog Tax Department acknowledging a resolution passed at the December session in regard to the killing of sheep by dogs in North Hastings. They promised to give the matter attention.

A communication from S. L. Squires, Deputy Minister of Highway, regarding a resolution passed asking for a Provincial Highway from Fishers to Petersboro. They promised to look into the matter.

A resolution from the Clerk of Sidney Township protesting against the protection afforded at the Cemetery Crossing. The Council of that municipality are of the opinion that more protection should be afforded.

Several letters received from the Board of Railway Commissioners, and the President of the Canadian National in regard to the train service between Trenton and Marmora. The matter was attended to and the residents of that vicinity are now receiving better passenger service. Dr. Embury reported that he had been in touch with the Board of Railway Commissioners who promised to take action.

A communication was read from the Ontario Sick Children's Hospital asking for support from the Council toward that Institution. The matter will be laid before the Committee on Ways and Means.

A letter from the Accounts Department of Ontario stating that the cost of construction and maintainance which falls upon the County of Hastings in 1926 was $7985. This is the County's share. It was referred to the Finance Committee.

This figure was considerable lower than in 1925 when nearly $20,000 was the County's share.

A letter from the Trent Waterway Development Association explaining the work done by that organization in promoting advertising the Trent Valley in the United States and elsewhere. The Association received several grants from the municipalities along the Trent to aid in this work. The Association distributed booklets and other publicity matter at the motor boat show in New York the month. The matter was left in the hands of the publicity work.

The officers of the Association believe that they have been instrumental in drawing a great many tourists to this locality.

LOCAL JUNIORS LOSE ROUND TO TRENTON KIDS

Visitors Excel Belleville Youngsters By Wide Margin and Win

The Belleville Juniors were eliminated from further competition in the O.H.A. when they were defeated at the arena last evening by the Trenton kids 8-3 and thus lose the round by 13 goals.

The visitors showed their superiority in every department and are by all odds the best team for long odds. They can carry the puck better, play nice combination and have plenty of aweinspiring which they use to advantage.

Eddie Thomas' boys put up a plucky fight against greater odds but the winners came back strong in the final session and matched five tallies while the home team were hanging their hats low.

The game was marked by continual roughness on the part of both teams with the locals being the worst offenders in the matter of penalties. The score-sore held at least one or two players throughout the whole battle. At one time there were only three players on the Belleville team but they managed to hold the Trenton boys off the score sheet until help returned.

In the second period a free-for-all fight was staged with spectators and players alike mixed in the melee.

When the smoke had cleared away Hefner and Hutchinson were each given ten minutes and Bowen, Trenton's gritty defence man, was suffering from a badly bleeding nose.

The score at the end of the first period was 1-0, Davis bulging the twine for Trenton in the second frame Johnston scored a soft goal that fooled Latchford, Perry scored two in this period making the score 3-0. In the final period Trenton bagged five more while Johnny Canning and "Red" Doran managed to keep Belleville from retaining a goose-egg by getting the two lone goals.

"Ginger" Edger of Bowmanville refereed but he did not keep the play as well in hand as he might have. There was plenty of rough stuff secured his eye and he called her the eyes for kicking the puck behind their own line which can be done this year.

Henry and Johnny Canning played the best hockey for Belleville. Both youngsters were going nice all evening and should have been rewarded with a couple of goals. Latchford was bombarded perpetually throughout and turned a raft aside. Those that beat him were practically impossible to save.

Perry, Johnston and Davis were the best of the visitors and divided the scoring honors between them.

Trenton will now meet the winners of "A" section which will likely be Brockville.

One application by instance stops itch itching of eczema, and a few applications clear the eruptions to dry up, scale off and completely disappear. It is equally as effective in barber's itch, salt rheum, redness and inflammatory skin trouble.

People who want to reduce varicose veins, or get rid of eczema, blotches, pimples in a few days, should not hesitate to get a bottle at once. It is so powerful that a small bottle lasts a long time. Any pharmacy can supply you. Doyle's Drug Store sells lots of it.

CONTINENTAL LIFE Makes Steady Progress

The twenty-seventh annual report of the Continental Life Insurance Company records continued growth and increased prosperity. The gain in business in force was the largest ever made in the Company's history. The Company has $30,169,012 of insurance on its books and during the year just closed issued $8,509,768 of new business. This latter figure again constitutes a record and shows the high regard in which the insuring public view the service the Continental has to offer.

The mortality experienced by the Company was again an outstanding feature in its operations for 1926. Only 31 per cent of that expected was experienced—thus demonstrating the careful selection of risks which the Company maintains.

With Assets of $5,065,402 invested in most carefully selected securities, the Company shows an interest rate earned of 6.24 per cent. With its Surplus funds—including paid up capital—at $505,909, and a net income $1,073,320—with an increasing demand for its policies and service the Continental Life is to be congratulated on the solid progress and growth its report indicates.

URGE LIGHTS ON ALL VEHICLES

Toronto, Jan. 26.—The grand jury in its presentment to Mr. Justice Rose today strongly endorsed proposed legislation to compel all vehicles to carry lights at night on public highways. More frequent use of the lash in curbing offences against women, and investigation of the present system of discharge of inmates from jail, on the belief that some are not fairly treated, are also recommended.

RECREATION BOWLING

Four C. N. R. League games were played at the Recreation Alleys last night with the following results. In one game the Shops No. 1 won all four points from the Shops No. 2, the Shops No. 1 rolling 2434 for their total score. The high bowlers were Carmichael and Lorimer.

Shops No. 4 also won four points from the Shops No. 2 in another game. The high bowlers were John Doe and Palsy.

In the third game the Shops No. 7 won four points from the Shops No. 8. The Shops No. 8 started off rotten and ended up in the same manner. The high bowlers were Riggs and Gibson.

In the fourth game the Shops No. 6 won all four points from the Shops No. 5. The Shops No. 5 got away with a poor start and ended with very little improvement shown. The high bowlers were Collyer and Dayrard.

One game was played in the Men's Senior League the result was that the C.N.R. Shops came out in the lead winning three points from the Recreations. The Recreations were at their best in the second and as a result came out winners though that was the only point they managed to secure. The high bowlers were Collyer and Burrell.

HAVE DARK HAIR AND LOOK YOUNG

Grandmother kept her hair beautifully darkened, glossy and attractive with a brew of Sage Tea and Sulphur. Whenever her hair took on that dull, faded or streaked appearance, this simple mixture was applied with wonderful effect. By asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, all ready to use, for only 75 cents. This simple mixture can be depended upon to restore natural color and beauty to the hair.

Well-known druggists say everybody uses Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound now because it darkens so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied—it's so easy to use, too. You simply dampen a comb or soft brush and draw it through your hair, taking one strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, it is restored to its natural color and looks glossy, soft and beautiful.

Weather in Newfoundland during January too mild for winter sports.

TWO OUTSTANDING TOURS

It has been truly said that "Travel is a liberal education," and the opportunities were never so true as it is today. The whole world, so to speak, has been made easy of access by transportation systems by rail, ocean, automobile and aeroplane. While the advantages of travel are now available to the many instead of the few, the refinements of modern railroad transportation and the exacting requirements of the modern traveller as regards his creature comforts have combined to make the detailed arrangements of an extensive tour-ist trip rather complex. Every traveller making a vacation trip wishes to derive the utmost benefit in pleasure and education and to spend as little time as possible arranging itinerary details, the itinerary and train connections, securing sleeping car, steamer and hotel reservations, etc. He desires also to make the best possible use of the time available by the inclusion of the most important and worth-while attractions and shows of all, to know how much it will cost.

All this is done for you in the "Personally Conducted All-Expense Tours," which have become so popular with the Canadian public, the best known and most popular being the splendid tours operated by the Canadian National Railways, under the direction of Mr. Martin Kerr, B.A., (4 Bedish Ave., Hamilton, Ont.) and Mr. A. E. Bryson (44 Silverthorn Ave., Toronto, Ont.) of the Kerr-Bryson Tours. Two more tours are announced for July, 1927,—one from Toronto through the Canadian West to the Pacific Coast including Wainwright Park, Jasper National Park, the Triangle Tour, Vancouver and Victoria, B.C., returning through the United States via Yellowstone Park, Salt Lake City, Denver, Colorado Springs, Pike's Peak and Chicago. The other from Toronto east to Montreal, Quebec, Ste. Anne de Beaupre, Saguenay River, the Maritime Provinces, Saint John, N.B., Prince Edward Island, the Bras d'Or Lakes, Halifax, N.S., Land of Evangeline, Annapolis Valley, Boston, Mass., and finally Ottawa, the capital of the Dominion. Descriptive booklets of both these tours will be available very shortly and in the meantime further information may be secured from any Canadian National Railways agent or from the organizers.

If you have not previously been interested in these tours it is well worth your while to enquire about them; they will solve your vacation problem.

Man Wants To Eat, Gas Stops Him

"I had gas bloating and was always in misery after eating. Used all kinds of remedies, but got no relief. After taking Adlerika, I was much better, and now I can enjoy a good meal again."—Mr. Taylor.

Adlerika gives the system a REAL cleansing and brings out old poisons which may have caused trouble for a long time. Unlike most medicines, it acts upon BOTH upper and lower bowel. Just one spoonful relieves GAS and takes away that full, bloated feeling so that you can eat better and sleep better. Even if bowels move daily, Adlerika brings out much additional poison which you never thought was in your system and which caused sour, gassy stomach. No matter what you have tried for your stomach and bowles, Adlerika will surprise you. J. S. McKeown, Druggist.

BELLE THEATRE

Tom Mix, playing the stirring role of Tom Gordon, a detective, in "The Great K. & A. Train Robbery," Fox Films latest release, which will be shown at the Belle Theatre tomorrow Saturday disregards the danger of death from bullets as he flees from all sorts of desperados and turns aside to rescue a girl whose horse has bolted, and who has caught her foot in a stirrup and left her head hanging near the runaway's flying hoofs.

Gordon saves her in spite of her fight to escape him because she believes he's a bandit and the pursuers are a sheriff's posse.

After she has had time to think it over, the girl considers such a chivalrous man could not be an outlaw, and when he reappears in her own father's home, sends apparently a desperado, the girl decides one good turn deserves another and hides him in a closet of her bedroom, so that he can elude her father's pursuit.

These are only two of the many dramatic incidents of this picture.

Dorothy Dwan, who plays the feminine lead, gives the screen a new interpretation of modern riding and acting. Don't miss it.

REGENT THEATRE

A few years ago three unknown young cow-punchers were obscure members of "Stanley's Wild West Show," when travelled about the country astounding the citizenry with feats of horsemanship, roping and shooting. The three young men were named, Hoxie, Gibson and Acord. Now all three are western stars under contract to Universal Pict. Corp., whose latest production, "Hidden Loot," is coming to the Regent Theatre today, and the starring productions of Hoxie Gibson and Art Acord are shown frequently.

NEW HEADSTONE FOR DISCOVERER

Trail, B.C., Jan. 26 (By C.P.).—A new headstone marks the grave of the Kootenay pathfinder, Father de Smet, Egmore, cemetery, East Kootenay. The headstone was erected by the Knights of Columbus and the Sullivan Company because Pielle discovered the St. Eugene mine, one of the richest lead producers in B.C. a region famous for its copper mines.

The story of Pielle and his copper mine is a fairy tale. He was a youth when he first met Father Coccola, a noted missionary of the Kootenay country. The latter joined the Catholic faith and was fired with a desire to see a good church built at the St. Eugene mission.

"You must have money to do that," Father Coccola told him. "To get money you must go as far as Toronto and see Eaton into the hills and look for minerals."

Pielle followed this advice and became a prospector. A few months later the Indian returned to the mission with samples of ore he had found. Father Coccola sent them to a mining man of his acquaintance, James Cronin, of Spokane, Cronin staked around the property discovered by the Indian and divided the yield of the mine—enough to provide generous funds for the St. Eugene mission.

Cronin died some years ago. Pielle followed him six months afterwards. Father Coccola is the last of the trio living.

APPOINTED AS PRINCIPAL

Brockville, Jan. 27.—Lewis S. Beattie, B.A., science master of the Brockville Collegiate Institute teaching staff, was notified today of his appointment as principal of the Napanee Collegiate Institute at a salary of $3,000 per annum, succeeding Dr. Morden, who is going to England to engage in chemical manufacturing. Mr. Beattie is a graduate of Queen's.

BOY BURGLAR CAUGHT

Kingston, Jan. 27.—Two boy burglars were caught by the police early last evening in the act of attempting to break into the home of Mrs. Derbyshire, at the corner of Albert and Union streets.

One youngster was seized with a "jimmy" bar, and was endeavoring to open one of the windows when the police arrived on the scene, and spoiled their game.

In the Juvenile Court on this morning, the lads pleaded guilty to a charge of attempting to break into the Derbyshire home, and were remanded until Friday for sentence. The two boys under arrest are about fifteen years of age, and they were taken into custody by Constables Paul Dedore and William McKee.

LOCOMOTIVE HITS TRAMCAR

Montreal, Jan. 27.—Seventeen persons miraculously escaped death but suffered minor injuries when a backing locomotive crashed into a westbound Guy street tramcar on the Canadian National Railways tracks, at the intersection of St. James and Guy streets, a. 6:30 o'clock last night.

The safety gates were raised when the motorman jumped, owing to some misunderstanding on the part of the gateman, it was reported by the police.

The impact knocked the car off its trucks and buried it on its side in the ditch edging the tracks.

Despite the fact that the car was wrecked the victims seeked no help in extricating themselves from the ruins. None of the passengers suffered such light injuries that they hurried away, anxious to be clear of the scene of their narrow escape.

ARRESTED FOR PERJURY

Oshawa, Jan. 27.—Four men were arrested today and locked up on perjury charges. They will be arraigned late this afternoon and bail will be arranged, it is believed. D. A. J. Swanson has been retained to defend the men.

The men arrested are Frank Kobernick, John Fialka, Russell Arnold and Frank Wright. They were arrested before noon by Inspector C. A. Macklin with constables N. McFee and M. Bowman.

The charges were laid as a result of evidence given by the men at the trial of Frank Kobernick, who was convicted in police court here on a charge of selling liquor. Mr. Swanson told the informer that the Kobernick case would be heard in appeal at Whitby Friday before County Judge Ruddy.

The Irony of Love

By Charles Garvice

Rafe's brows knit, and he nodded. "I remember now," he said. "you were saying something of the kind when—when——" But I didn't know what you meant. I suppose that didn't new lad mean much—if you say it was Halgrave. I suppose that he was of a different sort from the boys here; that he was a gentleman—I never saw one, so I can't say what that exactly is—but I don't understand this card business. I've read about 'em, of course. Do you mean to say that I'm one of 'em?"

Mr. Gordon sank into his chair and rubbed his forehead with an expression of despair which would have been comical but for the imminent seriousness of the occasion. Parchment Joe came to his assistance.

"Look here, Rafe—oh, blame it! I've got to call you that still—I've gotten more than one big new for you. You've struck a nugget, and he's trying to tell you what it is—in his own way—keep your hair on, Rafe—He laid his hand on the lad's brawny arm. "Your father was not only a gentleman, but a nobleman, because the people who stood before him had been called on and dubly to hand in their checks. He was no earl, one of the out-and-ear' ones you've read about. As lads gone, he only broke and he struggled with it —"you've come into the business and have got to carry it on. It's a mighty big business, and you won't fancy it, you'll find it a decent troublesome affair to run. But you've got to run it; it's a claim you've got to walk right down to the bed foot. Do you keten on?"

"No," said Rafe, curtly and a trifle impatiently. "What is there in it? What do you do?"

With something like a groan Mr. Gordon broke in:

"Believe me, I see your difficulty. Lord Strashyn"—here Rafe glared at him again, almost resentfully—"I can understand that you do not realize that you cannot form any idea of the new life, the new duties upon which you must enter, but you will soon learn; fortunately you are young and, I am sure—remember, you must remain one to render you every assistance within my power. I and my father and grandfather before me have been the legal advisers of your family, and you must allow me to be your guide, monitor, and, if I may say so, your friend. We will go, with Lord Lascelles—"

"Not me," said Rafe calmly, indifferently. "I belong to the cheap lines of business, you know. I've got my claim to work! it may pan out well. There's the saloon, too. I told dad I didn't care for it, but somehow or other, now—now he's gone, I begin to look on it in a different light. Seems to me as it will be an honor to take his place—"

"Blow my soul," ejaculated Mr. Gordon. "I don't know what to say or do! My dear Lord Strashyn, that you should remain in this camp with the—er—ridiculous name, among those dreadfully rough people that you should carry on a drinking saloon— Oh, it's impossible —he shuddered—"it will not bear thinking of. My dear young friend, you have not only succeeded to an entailed title, but to a vast sum of money and estates of the greatest value. You are not aware of the er—er—extent of your possessions; and it is impossible for me to explain to you my idea of it within moment, on this occasion."

Parchment Joe emitted again laugh and proceeded to interpret.

"What he means, Rafe, is, that you're so cool of a swell, with no key enough I suppose, to buy up half a dozen Jump ing Jones." He looked at Mr Gordon "If I remember rightly, there are two or three big places—one of them a castle—in the country, besides the house in Grosvenor Square."

"Quite so," assented Mr. Gordon, grateful for Joe's assistance. "Of course, there are several places, the rent roll is—well you would not grasp the figures. Lord Strashyn's grandfather bought a large acreage in London which has been largely but steadily developing; and, in consequence of that speculation, and the ordinary revenues of the family, Lord Strashyn is at the present moment the third richest nobelman in the kingdom."

Parchment Joe whistled. "Bad 'un, that, eh?" he murmured, under his breath.

Abraham Robinson up for Preliminary Hearing on Murder Charge; Chinese Situation Unchanged

8000 MORE BRITISH TROOPS WILL LEAVE FOR CHINA OVER WEEK END

Sir Austin Chamberlain Expected to Make Important Statement Sat.

SAME SITUATION

British Labor Party Demonstrates in Favor of Chinese Nationalists

Full exposition of Great "Britain's" policy towards China, which Col. L. C. M. Amery, Colonial secretary describes as "economic" is expected when Sir Austin Chamberlain, foreign secretary, speaks at Birmingham Saturday night. He is expected to outline the new proposals made to the Nationalists at Hankow. Meanwhile it is unofficially reported that the policy embraces the surrender of British concessions throughout China, including extra territoriality and new treaties with certain guarantees.

Measures for ensuring the safety of Shanghai foreigners in case of emergency are continuing. Foreign consular corps have received a memorandum from the Southern Nationalists proposing that no British troops be landed in Shanghai or that troops of the Northern army evacuate the city and allow the Cantonese force, to protect foreigners.

The situation is reported to be unchanged. Eight thousand British troops will leave for China over the week end as part of the British protective force. The British Labor Party, supporting China's Nationalistic aims, will hold demonstrations at town halls Sunday supporting a peaceful settlement.

SOVIET NOT PLANNING TO INTERFERE IN CHINA

Lexington, Russia, Jan. 28.—Armed intervention in China does "not enter into the plans" of the Soviet Government. Assurances to that effect was given to a speech here yesterday by I. P. Rudzutak, vice-chairman of the Soviet Cabinet. "Even if the foreign powers open war on China, we shall not interfere," he said. "We shall only maintain toward Canton (the Cantonese, or Nationalist Government), friendly neutrality and sympathy and shall help Canton in every way, but armed intervention in China does not enter into our plans." The Soviet Government cannot and does not wish to forbid Soviet citizens voluntarily joining the Cantonese army in its "fight imperialists." He went on, "But from this it must not be assumed that Chinese revolution is the work of Moscow.

"During our own civil war," he pointed out, "we had many foreign soldiers in our ranks but it would be absurd to say that the October revolution and triumph over foreign intervention were accomplished by foreigners."

ACCUSES PRESS OF BEING UNDER GOVT'S ORDERS

Leader of Quebec Opposition Chims Newspapers Are Subsidized

Quebec, Jan. 28.—Leader of French Canadians from the province still forming the subject of discussion in the legislative assembly when the debate on budget speech was resumed yesterday, Arthur Sauve, opposition leader, made another onslaught on the newspapers of the province, except for what he termed "free press," saying that newspapers were under orders from the government never to criticize the latter, but always to attack opposition and he claimed that disobedience to this order or removal of newspapers from government fund. The Government, he said, had paid newspapers more than five million dollars in the past ten years to secure their support. Hon. Mr. Perrault, minister of colonization, said Mr. Sauve was appealing to prejudice and felt that the government which could produce such surplus as had been produced had nothing to fear as to its record. He said Washington figures showed only 31,000 Canadians had left for the United States last year and of this number only 18,000 had been French Canadians.

CHINESE BISHOP VISITS CANADA

Montreal, Jan. 28.—"I am on a hurried visit to Canada for the purpose of visiting some of the religious communities who are engaged in the China mission field and for the purpose of meeting some of those who have been there," said Dr. Simon Tau, Roman Catholic Bishop of Haimen, China, who arrived here today from Boston. Bishop Tau is fluent in the French language and spoke in exchange of greeting with his new found friends. He is Jesuit and was born at Shanghai of Catholic parents. His father was a member of an ancient Christian family.

CASH EMPLOYEES ENJOY SLEIGH RIDE

The employees of J. J. Cash, Inc. had an enjoyable sleigh ride last night around the countryside to the north of the city. On arriving back at the factory they adjourned en masse to the home of Mrs. Hall where supper was served and the festivities prolonged to a late hour. The jovialists regretted that the ground is quite hard under the thin coating of snow and that even the ditches fail to make comfortable tumbling mats under present conditions otherwise the conditions were ideal for the event.

The breaking up party by a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. and Mrs. Looker, for their hospitality.

LEISURED WOMEN GRAVE MENACE TO CIVILIZATION SAYS LADY RHONDDA

London, Jan. 28.—George Bernard Shaw and a new rule when he acted as chairman of the debate on "Leisured Leisured Women" last night. The assembly which gathered at Kingsway Hall to hear the debate included Gilbert Chesterton and Lady Rhondda were more tickled with the remarks of Shaw than in the actual debate. Formerly, said the famous writer, women had little leisure, but nowadays that was changed by services in flats and residential hotels, and "woman can spend her time drinking cocktails, going to night clubs, dancing the Charleston and doing all these things which many women seem to imagine will fill their lives gloriously."

He did not know if Mr. Chesterton was going to defend night clubs, but it was his opinion that if challenged to dance the "Charleston with Lady Rhondda, Mr. Chesterton could not do it. Lady Rhondda said the existence of leisured women constituted a grave menace to civilization, while Mr. Chesterton held that home was the place for women.

ROBINSON FACES FIRST STAGE OF MURDER TRIAL

Preliminary Hearing at Madoc Brings Out Little New Evidence.

SHOWS EMOTION

Stanley Lewis Tells of Seeing a Man Dodging Behind Trees

Stoical and apparently uninterested in the testimony of the witnesses called or the course the law was taking, Abraham Robinson, charged with the murder of Charles St. Charles, appeared this afternoon before Magistrate Jarman, at Madoc for a preliminary hearing. The court room was packed to the doors, a seething mass of curious humanity sat hanging on every word of the witnesses called.

Jas Smith, the first witness, a tax collector, identified the tax form which he had given to St. Charles to serve on Robinson.

Stanley Lewis, the principal witness of the afternoon, stated that between 5.30 and 6 o'clock he and St. Charles and David Sharkey, went to the Robinson farm in a car. St. Charles went into the Robinson house and when he came out he (Lewis) and Sharkey commenced to drive the car to the road for tax service. Coming out of the yard, The witness stated that three shots rang out, the direction from which the second came, was identified by the staging of the bullet as it whirred through the air, and at the firing of the third, St. Charles called out, "I'm shot—get a doctor." Shortly after the firing of the bullets a man was observed dodging about in the trees but the distance intervening was too great for identification, also the short period of witness testimony the prison showed the only feeling he exhibited during the hearing following every word with keen interest.

The only exhibit in the court room was a rifle with which the alleged murder is said to have been committed.

London—London papers today published a picture of Gladstone, the "grand old gentleman" and Lily Langtry in the youth. Among those in the crowded court today were T. P. TO-DAY'S THOUGHT

Every generation laughs at the old fashions, but follows religiously the new.—Thoreau.

OPPORTUNITY.

The boldest self-assumed by Mr. Edward G. Austin on his arrival in St. John, New Brunswick, from South America, that Canada has splendid opportunities of extending trade with the South American states are the present time. He is a native of London, England, and has spent many years in South America. He declares that at present there is a strong feeling there against the United States, which has been accentuated by the treatment of Nicaragua. Apart from this state of affairs, Mr. Austin expects declare that the opportunity for developing markets for Canadian products is excellent.

AN UNSAVORY MESS

The Browning case now before the courts is being treated in the American press, as the highlight of the day's news. Browning, the defendant, is a millionaire who, if half the charges made against him are true, should be undergoing treatment in a psychopathic hospital, and "Peaches," his 16-year-old bride, on her own evidence, should be in reform school. The story of their wedding, unsavory as it was, was mild compared with the testimony that is being brought out in her action for separation and substantial alimony. There is but one more step for newspapers which are giving this testimony, in toto, to take—the compiling of a daily smut column. In which lewd yarns of a kind that used to bring blushes to the cheeks of bartenders in the pre-war days, will be preached. Reputable newspaper owners or this continent would heartily welcome legislation similar to that brought down in England, where publication of divorce court proceedings is prohibited, but the difficulty in the way of such legislation in the United States is that the newspaper owners with high ideals are outnumbered.

TAX ON CLOTHES

Retail clothiers and clothing manufacturers are urging the Dominion government to abolish the sales tax on all wearing apparel, and a deputation representative of these interests is waiting upon the minister of finance, Hon. Fleming at Ottawa, to present their arguments. The public will wish them well in their quest for the price of clothing is something which affects the purse of every individual. It is said that the abolition of the sales tax would mean a "vast reduction in apparel prices;" the announcement of its abolition would, therefore, be very good news. There is a general expectation that something will be done about the sales tax this year by the government, and there could not be a greater boon than its removal from articles of clothing.

NOT MURDER

According to a Texas jury, the Rev. Dr. J. Frank Norris, although he deliberately shot and killed his man, is not guilty of murder. He is not a murderer because the law of Texas says that if a man believes that his life is in danger at the hands of another and kills that other, to save his own life, he commits no crime.

Norris killed Dexter E. Chippe because, he says, he feared that Chippe might kill him. He had been carrying on a campaign of public abuse against certain members of the civic government of Fort Worth who were personal friends of Chippe. Chippe remonstrated with the minister. Norris says that Chippe threatened him. When, therefore, Chippe called upon the minister at his study, the minister assumed (so he says) that Chippe had come to do him harm, so he shot Chippe and killed him. It turned out that Chippe could not have intended to harm the minister, for he was unarmed.

The Rev. Dr. Norris is now free to continue to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ, his conscience untroubled by a consciousness of guilt, for a jury of his fellow citizens has pronounced him guiltless. Possibly, also, he may attract larger congregations than ever, for there must be in many minds a certain fascination in hearing Divine law expounded by one who has killed his man in cold blood. But it may be doubted if Dr. Norris will be regarded by life insurance companies as a first-class risk.

NOT MILITARISM

Agnes Macphail M.P. says that Canadians went overseas to kill Prussianism, but she fears they caught it instead. She wants the Canadian military machine to keep hands off the youth of Canada, and she wants the women to see that it does.

There is not much of a military machine in Canada, and what there is of it is as far from the Prussian model as possible. If Canada is a country worth living in it is a country worth keeping. The making of some provision for defence is a patriotic and natural duty, and it is necessary to begin with the youth if the lessons of citizenship are to be taught. But there is no militarism in Canada, of the Prussian variety or any other, and there is no immediate danger of it.

DOMINION BANK ANNUAL REPORT

The report which the Directors of the Dominion Bank submitted to the Shareholders at the Annual Meeting in the city of Toronto on Wednesday the 26th instant covering the operations for the year ending December 31st last, contain many significant features—increased profits a larger volume of deposits and a considerable advance in commercial loans within Canada.

In fact, the Bank's business for the year reflected the betterment which has been evident in business and the general prosperity of the country.

The profits for the year amounted to $1,250,275.65 the second largest profits in the Bank's history and $102,000 greater than in 1925. It was only in 1920, Canada's Peak Year, that the profits exceeded those of the year just closed.

Those earnings enabled the Bank, after paying usual dividends both at home of one percent, amounting to $700,000, to contribute $45,000, to the Officer's Pension Fund; to provide $100,000 for Dominion and Provincial taxation and to write off $200,000 from Bank Premises, Account—$100,000 greater than in the previous year and to carry forward $1,022,554.92 to Profit and Loss Account, increasing the balance in this account by $62,256.00.

It is doubtful if a better index can be found of general welfare in the country than the spread of deposits which bear interest in our chartered banks. In the statement under review, deposits bearing interest increased from $76,385,-014.41 to $79,790,232, an improvement of over $3,000,000.

Better business conditions in Canada are reflected in Current Loans which reached a figure in excess of $53,700,000, an expansion of more than $6,000,000, during the year.

The Bank's strong liquid position is shown in cash assets which stand at $24,001,150.95, or 22.35 per cent of Public Liabilities, while liquid assets are $70,614,313.53, 54.50 percent of Public Liabilities. The Bank's holdings in Dominion, Provincial, Municipal and other securities total $27,939,264.86.

The notes of the Bank in circulation show an increase of over $353,000, additional evidence of greater activity in business.

The report of the Directors received the unanimous endorsement of the Shareholders and the addresses of the Bank's Officers indicated their confidence in the immediate business outlook.

MARK TWAIN STORY

When Mark Twain in his early days was the editor of a Missouri paper, a superstitious subscriber wrote to him say ing that he had found a spider in his paper, and asking whether that was a sign of good luck or bad. The humorist wrote him this, and he printed it: "Old Subscriber,—Finding a spider in your paper was neither good luck nor bad for you. The spider was merely looking over our paper to see which merchant is not advertising, so he can go to that store, spin his web over the door, and lead a life of undisturbed peace ever afterward."

KIT KAT CLUB SUSPENDED

London, Jan. 28.—The Kit Kat Club, one of the most fashionable night resorts in London, with a membership of five thousand persons, has been struck off the register for three months for supplying intoxicating liquors to patrons outside the hours of sale permitted by statute. Many habitues were fined £10 apiece for consuming liquor on the premises. It was not suggested in court proceedings that the club had been disorderly.

Winnipeg audience left theatre quietly when comedian announced fire in building.

In the tea room with its pretty decorations of yellow and white, Mrs. George Horton presided at the tea table which was finished with golden daffodils and golden candles in silver candlesticks. The assistants were Mrs. Fox, Mrs. Norma Horton, Mrs. Harry Irvine and other members of the Circle. During the afternoon a splendid musical programme of which Mrs. G. H. French was in charge, was given, to which Belleville talent contributed some enjoyable selections.

Deaths & Funerals

WILLIAM J. ANDREWS

Mr. William J. Andrews of 249 Coleman street, died yesterday evening at 5 o'clock. The deceased was born in Belleville sixty-three years ago, and was a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Friend Andrews. Mr. Andrews was a member of the Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church and had no family. He is survived by a wife, four brothers, George, Fred, Robert C. and of Belleville, and Alec of Brockville; two sisters, Mrs. Charlotte Rosever, Belleville, and Mrs. F. E. Dracus, Victoria, B.C.

ELLEN A. SPRAGUE

The funeral of the late Mrs. Ellen A. Sprague took place from the residence of her son, J. O. Sprague, to Glenwood cemetery, Picton. The bearers were all friends.

LOUISE ANNE BROWN

Mrs. Louise Anne Brown passed away peacefully yesterday at the family residence, Sydney street. The deceased was a wife of George H. Brown and a daughter of the late James and Marie Pitts.

Born in Hampshire, England, she came to Canada when she was still a child. She was a member of Bridge Street Church, of which also Mrs. Brown was a consistent member.

The minister paid a high tribute to the fine christian spirit of the deceased, her devotion to her family and loyalty to her friends and consistent christian life.

The remains were interred at Picton cemetery. The pall bearers were F. S. Deacon, H. A. Ackerman, H. C. Earle, Sheriff J. H. Clare, Harry Hill and Howard J. Clark.

MARGARET WOODCOCK

Mrs. Margaret Woodcock passed away Saturday afternoon at the residence of Mrs. E. Doran, 245 George street. The deceased was born in Belleville and had lived here all her life. She was a member of St. Michael's Church. She is survived by a son, William, in Bridgeport, Conn. Her late husband, Palmar Woodcock, died some years ago.

MRS. C. DELISLE

In the death of Mrs. C. Delisle, 299 Foster Avenue, which occurred at midnight on Thursday, Belleville loses a kindred old and most respected citizens. Mrs. Delisle was born in Belleville 80 years ago and has lived her entire life in the province. Her father, James Falconer, came to Belleville from Edinburgh, Scotland, when he was but 4 of 14 years and spent his entire business career in this city. Della, (Mrs. Delisle) his eldest daughter, was first married to Mr. James Blair, of which marriage there were two children, Lionel and Helen, the former of which died four years ago. After the death of Mr. Blair his widow and two children took up residence in the city and for several years lived here. In July, 1900, Mrs. Blair married Mr. C. Delisle, a Canadian National engineer and since that time has been living on Foster Avenue.

To those who knew Mrs. Delisle, the news of her death will come as a real sorrow and loss for no one was ever turned down at her door unhelped. She was a veritable mother in Israel, wherever there was trouble, sorrow or want. Here were the hands and heart always ready to the needs of human need in mansion and cottage alike.

She was a loyal saint, enthusiastic Presbyterian and a most devoted member of St. Andrew's Church. During the struggle through which the Church passed in the recent union vote she proved herself a tireless champion of the Presbyterian cause. Sparing neither time, energy or means to retain in its integrity the Church of her fathers and when consummation of union was effected she continued her loyal support to the new Church.

Mrs. Delisle was a lover of home and family and her greatest joy was in ministering to the comfort of those she loved. Her husband, who is employed on the Canadian National Railways, was away on a trip when the end came, but was notified by wire and arrived home on the first train. Besides her husband she is survived by a son, Lionel, in Toronto, and a daughter, Helen, (Mrs. Carman, Manitoba.—Contributed.

BRUTAL CHESS PLAYERS TO BE MOVED AGAINST

New York, Jan. 28.—Following the example of basketball and football, chess is having an upheaval, with charges of brutality, crooked timing of moves, claiming the gate receipts, regulating the ventilation so as to disturb an opponent, and everything but sloughing games and manoeuvring noses with seat rings.

Dr. Emmanuel Lasker, the former world's champion, has employed all overtures to take part in the International Grand Masters' Chess Tournament next month, alleging that in the tournament here in 1924 he had been clocked by a highly sophisticated timepiece and that his share of the "take" had not been delivered to him. Dr. Lasker also alleges that both in 1924 and this year the arrangements for the tournament were designed to exclude him from the competition.

Dr. L. Lederer, Secretary of the Tournament Committee, on behalf of the Tournament Committee, said that all of Lasker's charges were false.

In his public letter of complaint, Lasker protests against the allegation that during chess games he smokes long, black cigars and blows the smoke across the table to confuse the opponents. Mr. Lederer asserted last night that this charge was true. He alleged that during chess games Dr. Lasker has consistently used long, black, five-cent cigars, which caused acute irritation in the nose and back of the throat of ordinary players. When not at the chess table, according to Lederer, Dr. Lasker smoked excellent cigarettes. As soon as the former champion lighted up one of his five-cent cigars, other persons in the room hastily proceeded him with expensive cigars. Those Dr. Lasker put away for his leisure, while he continued to puff energetically at the cheap chess ones.

"Anything to Win"

"Anything to win" is Lasker's motto, said Mr. Lederer. "He indulges in virtual gas attacks on his opponents. Some people think that I suppose is entirely innocent. I do not. Chess is not a game or a sport with him. It is a battle."

MINING GOSSIP

Ore bodies encountered at the 1,500-foot level of the Coniaurum Mines vastly enlarge prospecting was commenced at this new deep level have proven equal to those of the upper levels in the limited amount of development done to date. While none of the shoots are long so far, some of the ore is very rich. Where the rich material occurs the ore shoots have proven short, causing some disappointment over the expectations for long ore bodies.

A new high level for a seat on the Standard Exchange was made today when $17,000 was paid for a seat. This compares with a previous actual high of $12,500, though a bid of $14,000 was made after that and not accepted. Chicago, Jan. 28.—Exhaustion of supplies at Liverpool and unexpected higher quotations for future deliveries there led to an early upturn in Chicago wheat today, offerings enlarged on the bulge, however and gains failed to hold well. Starting unchanged to 1-2 to 5-8 cent advance, wheat hardened and then reacted somewhat. Corn and oats were easy, corn opening at 3-8 cent off to 1-4 cent up and later showed general sag. Provisions tended upgrade.

New York, Jan. 28.—Huge losses which may run into the millions of dollars, have been sustained by "bear" traders on the New York Stock Exchange, in what to cut-and-dry appearances today was "corner" in the common and preferred stocks of the Wheeling and Lake Erie Railroad. Beneficial jump of 11 1-2 points to 65 1-2, new high record, and 38 points above the low price of the year, took place this morning in the common stock, top price being cash transaction. The preferred moved up three points to 65, following the "spread" between the issue is about 20 points in favor of the preferred.

AFRAID OF TOO MANY ACCIDENTS

Reims, Jan. 26.—Declaring that fatal shooting accidents were occurring in the northern big game country and had increased enormously during last season W. C. Burtley, Conservative member for Tuxlow, moved in the legislature yesterday that stringent measures should be taken to bring about a change. If nothing more done, he said, he feared they would have one man with a grudge against another coming back from hunting and swearing that he had mistaken the man for a moose and killed him.

OVER 80,000 MOTOR CARS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Victoria, B. C., Jan. 27.(By C.P.)—For every 7.5 people in British Columbia there is one automobile, according to statistics given out by the provincial government. This shows an increase of nearly 20 per cent. over the number of cars registered for 1925.

There will be 80,000 automobiles in use in British Columbia this year, and officials would not be surprised if the number reached the 100,000 mark at the beginning of the 1928 season.

The current figures show a remarkable increase over those of all previous years. Last year there were 67,000 registered motor vehicles and ten years ago the number was only 8,500.

Approximately 105,000 persons are entitled to drive automobiles in the province, the number having registered and obtained licenses, which are compulsory.

ETHICS OF APOLOGIZING TO ONE'S OWN CHILD

BY ELSIE MARLOWE

Old Mrs. Cameron is troubled. She says her son Will's wife is simply ruining the children. "Why, the other day I actually heard Esther APOLOGIZE to little Ben because she had scolded him when, he didn't deserve it!" she cries. "Can you imagine apologizing to a seven year-old child!" That respect can a child possibly have for a mother who brings herself down to his level that way?"

"When I was a child" she continues "you had better believe our every word did as spoken to us. Very often my mother punished me when I didn't deserve it—and punishments were punishments in those days. No easy short scolding, but real whippings. Yet she would never have dreamed of saying that she was in the wrong. I believe that is the way to bring up young people. It makes them respect authority." Does it, really, or does it merely make them fear authority?

There's a great difference between the two.

The older generation knew plenty of fear for authority, but they never knew the sort of confidence and companionship which exists between the modern parent and child. And they never knew the enjoyment which a child notes out to a parent whom it considers a good sport.

I suppose the idea of a parent being a "good sport" shocks you, lady. But what earthly use to himself or anyone else is a parent who ISN'T a good sport? And why shouldn't good sportsmanship be expected from a parent as well as from any other person? Why shouldn't a parent apologize if he knows he is in the wrong?

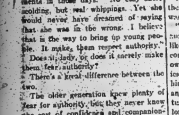

An apology has nothing to do with age! It is the courtesy and genius dealing one human from an other, regardless of years. It is as much due the one who apologizes as the one to whom the apology is not made, the one who neglects to make it pays heavier penalty than the victim of his neglurence.

That was one of the grave faults of the old domestic regime. It not only was unfair to the children—it was gyes "Believe me, I see your difficulty, no matter being cast aside being treated like a little Tin God. It makes him too comfortable and complacent for his own good. It bolsters up his hypocrasies, eaters to his impulses and protects him from all stimulating competition and criticism. The result is that he turns into a cruel old fraud, or boy, long before his time.

That was what happened to the Papas and Mamas who were "interested in their children's plans" or allowed the children to question or criticize them. They became so pompous and complacent as Sheiled Queen. And just about as companionable.

Parents don't have much of a chance to grow complacent these days, which is the best thing that could happen to them. It's little they manage to put over on the younger generation. They have to think quick and act politely to hold their jobs—which is extremely tough on paternal conceits but good for paternal psychology. For it keeps parents elastic and lovable. And young!

IF you look so well in simple things that your natural desires for more dressy effects have been disturbingly suppressed, you will find peace of mind and this in this frock. For it is made on those becomingly simple lines, yet with such skilful cut and finish that it achieves an unusually rich and haughty air. The Medici sleeves fall loosely above the elbow and then fit smoothly into the tight cuff, while the frock blouses smartly above the hips and then falls straight and slim from the novel double belt, with an inverted plait in front for fullness. A ledge or cuff-satin crepe with cuffs and collar trimmed in old-gold metallic braid would be charming, as would a black crepe de Chine or a light velvet with sleeves of sheer material.

Advice to Girls
By Annie Laurie

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a college sophomore of twenty. For the last year I have gone with a very desirable young man of twenty-two. A short time ago he asked me to marry him. I refused on the ground that I did not care for him. The truth is, that I am interested in another friend with whom I have been out several times.

I went with the first young man all last Winter when I knew he did not go with anyone else. I went out with other men whenever I had the opportunity. My friend is serious industrious, and dependable. He is also very kind and most considerate.

He wishes me to continue to go out with him in spite of my answer. Through a friend of his I found that he believes my answer was negative only because I am not ready to quit school. That is very true although I gave him my real reason.

If I continue to go with him I'm afraid I shall have to face the same situation again and my answer must always to the same. I would like to keep him as a friend but I do not wish to hurt him unnecessarily.

I do not believe that by words or action I ever gave my friend cause to believe I had more than a friendly interest in him. I try always to be square. I do not pet for that reason.

GEAN.

GEAN: Apparently you have treated the young man fairly and he understands your attitude. If he still wants to be friends there is no reason why you should not permit it.

As for hurting him, perhaps he find that it would hurt him less to continue seeing you even though you have given him no hope, than to lose you altogether. You have been honest with him. If he wishes to run the risk of being jilted, that is his affair.

However, in your relationship from this time forth, you must be very careful not to lead him on to the hope that you may change your mind. Treat him with the consideration and respect that you no doubt feel for him, but keep it quite clearly before him that you are swayed by friendship and affection—not love.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

Is it proper for a girl to write to a boy first?

BUTTERCUP.

BUTTERCUP: It is the boy's place to write first, if he wishes to begin a correspondence.

HEARTS' HAVEN
By Mildred Barbour

KING OF THE HOUSEHOLD

Christine lay in bed and silly watched the June breeze ruffle the curtains. Birds were singing in the sunlight I the tiny garden. The scent of roses and honeysuckle drifted in to her.

The room was filled with roses. The dressing-table, Harvey's chiffonier, the bedside table, all bore bowls and vases filled with luxurious blooms. Cards were clinging in the sunlight of the tinglings. The nurse was too busy to attend to such small details. From where she lay, Christine could see Lewis's card which bore the inscription: "Congratulations and best wishes for all three of you—Lew."

Christine smiled happily, but a bit wanly. She turned her face back to the window and relaxed into the pillows. Never had she known such exquisite peace. The black hours of pain were fading from her memory. Just to lie still among the soft, scented pillows, was heavenly.

And even more heavenly was the thought that in the adjoining room her son slept in his ruffled bassinet. Her five-pound son! Hers and Harvey's flesh and blood! Hers and the baby! How they had planned for him! How tender and thoughtful Harvey had been! How mad with anxiety during the long, dark, pain-filled hours of that hideous night!

Years of weakness and of joy filled Christine's cup.

"Now, now, Mrs. Blanton! The nurse had ordered silently. "There is nothing in the world to cry about. Of course, you're dreadfully weak; but in a month you'll be feeling like your every again."

"I was crying because I was so very happy," Christine confessed. "Maybe I have the right to cry when I'm feeling good and quiet?"

"We-ell [illegible] I won't take issue with you," replied the nurse of the household, and Christine sighed and finally slept.

It was dusk when she awoke, a cool fragrant dusk. Some one was bending over her.

"Harvey!" she said softly. Then "Where's the baby? Miss Sheldon told me I could have him as soon as he was fed and—"

"The little beggar's being bathed," laughed Harvey. "Never mind him. I'm told her not to bring him in till it's had a minute or two with you. Darlin' do you know what day this is?"

She shook her head absently.

"Time gets all mixed up, when you're sick. I suppose it's Friday. Baby name Sunday." •

"No, no, sweetheart, I don't mean the day of the week. I mean the day of the year!

"What difference does it make?" she asked, her eyes on the door to the adjoining room.

He shook his head.

"Remember what we were doing around this hour—a year ago today?"

And she said gently:

"Ooh! It was a year ago today! "You bet! We were motoring home from Stacy where we'd just been married. And I have to remind you of it! And yet they say that in always the man who forgets anniversaries!"

"Ah, but everybody doesn't have a beautiful baby to think about when an anniversary rolls around!" she said softly. "Darling, I do remember every bit of it. How you stopped the car every time we found a bit of deserted road. And at the little inn, where we had supper, just when I was trying not to look newly-married, you dropped the marriage certificate out of your pocket right in the middle of the floor. Oh, do you remember the waiter's face? Nice and red once around the color! And the manager said we could send it back and have them sign it, if we liked!"

She was laughing softly, and at that moment the door was opened briskly and the nurse's voice announced:

"Mrs. Blanton, your son is calling."

With a quick gesture, Christine pushed Harvey aside and held out eager arms.

"Oh, the darling! Why, he's grown since this morning. He gets bigger and handsomer every day."

Harvey sifted down upon the pretty picture of his wife and son, while the nurse beamed upon all three.

"A splendid boy, Mr. Blanton. You should feel great pride."

Harvey looked at her a trifle helplessly, for one of his aggressive traits was never work in Chesterfield. She was utterly absorbed in her son.

"I guess so," he said rather uncertainly. But I certainly seem to be a back num ber."

WHAT'S NEW
(From a Woman's Standpoint)

Sweetens the Breath

Printed silk combined with plain is much in models for the south.

The long, fancy shaped tortoise shell pins on the hats are the latest from Paris.

A coat model in a spring fashion show was of at least eleven tiers of black monkey fur with collar of yellow marten.

The contrasting jacket in brocade, taffeta or quilted chintz is being much worn at Florida resorts in colorful versions.

Green, mauve or blue suede gloves exactly made to match the frock, the hat of which is embroidered in the old gold beads is the latest creation of Parisian glove makers.

Once again you may find pretty collars at the neckwear counters to finish off the neck of the day time frock for the Eton styles and kerchief effects are prominent and the sailor collar is seeking recognition.

London declares the novelty color of season apparently is regarded as yellow and "Citron," a bright sunshine tone leads, while another favorite is to be a light clear green called "sedge," a well toned pastel shade, slightly deeper than apple green.

5,597 FARMS IN HASTINGS COUNTY

Ray Atkins, Agricultural Representative Submits Annual Report

Ray Atkins Agricultural Representative for Hastings County submitted his annual report to the County Council yesterday afternoon.

Among other items was a survey of County resources.

Urban population	25,997
Rural population	31,540
Occupied farms	5,597
Occupied by owner	4,810
Total land area (acres)	1,466,282
Area occupied farms (acres)	790,702
Occupied by owner (acres)	682,951
Occupied by tenant (acres)	5,126
Improved land, 1921 (acres)	296,012
Unimproved land 1921 (acres)	490,716
Farm values, 1921 (acres)	$9,339,620
Land	12,780,065
Buildings	9,718,430
Machinery	4,053,420
Live Stock	3,353,410

Some of the most outstanding features of the work during the year was the large monthly sources in Agricultural and Home Economics held at Stirling along with the 6 weeks course at Stone. The attendance at both of these was large and the interest was keen. Some more work was started in sheep improvement, two school fairs being held in the northern section last Autumn.

Bacon Hog Clubs were organized and some educational work has been carried on for the improvement of the swine industry.

Valuable assistance has been given from Dominion and Provincial departments. The late spring had the effect of holding up seeding proper and as a result clover and fall wheat suffered some. A marked increase was shown in the growth of alfalfa.

Dairying was satisfactory and the flow of milk was greater than ever. The price of cheese was 2c or 3c lower. The income per cow was nearly as large as 1925. The revenue in the price of hogs has been increased.

Potato and root crops were below normal a portion of the latter being destroyed by rot. There was a reduction in the amount of ensilage due to the unfavourable season for harvesting. Some farmers are doing away with their silos and emphasizing that seed with alfalfa.

HOSPITALS EACH GIVEN GRANT BY COUNTY COUNCIL

The County Council went into Committee of the whole on ways and means yesterday afternoon with Reeve Rooce of Vandewater at Sidney in the chair. There was a considerable number of accounts to be passed.

A great amount of discussion took place on the question of the annual grants to the Bancroft and Belleville Hospitals. The Bancroft Hospital have a deficit of $750.00 and upon motion this will be paid. The Belleville General Hospital were given $2100 last year payable $175.00 monthly. Some of the members were in favor of increasing this amount to $200.00 but the motion was not carried and the usual grant was made.

The Canadian National Institute for the Blind was granted $100.00 by the Council yesterday. Several of the members had visited the institution in Toronto and made a glowing report of the work done there.

Three years bound watchman of Vandewater Township dynamited safe, but failed to get away with $1,000 inside it.

The Care of Cut Flowers

While growing, plants demand an abundance of daylight, cut flowers should never be placed in direct sunshine or in a draught.

Flowers live and breathe. A little thoughtful care means longer life for flowers—increased joy for you.

When people say that flowers and plants will not "live" for them the trouble really is that these persons will not "do well" for flowers.

Most cut flowers do not wilt from age or staleness, they simply starve to death through improper care.

If left out of water for even a short time, the ends of the small tube through which nourishment passes shrink and close. Then the flower must die.

Change the water every 24 hours. Cut the stems slantwise with a knife and trim the water is changed.

Water to a flower is life.

It is important to scald the vase, immediately.

Don't add sugar, salt of any thing to the water,. Nature has provided the water the perfect nourishment for flowers.

To freshen flowers, place them in a cool place free from draught for a few hours.

Make your house more homelike with beautiful flowers and plants.

Globe Indemnity Co. Ask to Insure County Against Accidents

A representative of the Globe Indemnity Co., spoke to the County Council yesterday afternoon in regard to renewing the County's policy with that concern. It was stated that the board to motorists has increased in the last year or two. The Company guaranteed to carry the full risk against defective bridges, faulty guard rails on bridges etc. "This Concern has 31 of the 37 Counties insured.

All claims by incoming travellers and ratepayers are taken care of by the Company. The Company hopes to make a substantial decrease in the premium next year. It will be laid before the Finance Committee.

Ex-Warden W. E. Wiggins, Pres. Bancroft Red Cross Hospital addressed the Council yesterday afternoon.

Including the County Council grant raised and a beautiful building was erect and individual subscriptions $200.00 was received and equipped. It was discovered that a deficit of $750.00 was found upon the completion. It is expected that $1000.00 will be raised by local subscription. Four patients have already been admitted to the Institution.

Mr. Wiggins said that the new hospital is most up-to-date in every description. The Bancroft Red Cross Hospital will undoubtedly be one of the worthy institutions of the County. Two trained nurses will be in regular attendance and patients will be given the best of attention. This has been one of the long standing needs of the North County. The matter was referred to ways

U.S. GIRLS SHOCK JAP STUDENTS

Tokyo, Jan. 28.—Schoolboys just back from a tour of the United States think girls in that country must be lack of decorum by eating peanuts in the street.

The total amount disbursed in Hastings County during the year was $17,485.00, fifty per cent of which is chargeable to the Municipality. A decrease from the previous year of $1,230.00.

In closing this report I desire to express, on behalf of the other members of the Board and myself, our appreciation of the courtesy and assistance at all times extended to us by Mr. W. H. Nugent, Secretary, and the very efficient manner in which he has discharged all the duties arising out of his connection with the Board.

ALEX MOORE,
Chairman.

1820 PATIENTS TREATED, B.G.H.

Reports Presented to County Council of Work Done Encouraging

Robt. Tannahill, Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Belleville General Hospital presented the annual report. The efficiency has increased considerably and the number of patients who receive the service has also grown larger.

The Deputation consisting of Mr. Tannahill and John Kerr asked for a continuance of the financial aid given in the past.

A expert technician is now in charge of the X-ray department and the Hospital is among the most moderate in the Province.

Last year 1820 patients were treated.

Residents County	620
Residents City	1017
Residents other place, in Ont.	163
Residents outside Prov.	20

The average time spent by each patient was 10 1-0 days.

County's contribution was .. $2100.00
City's contribution was 9600.00
Provincial contribution was .. 2223.00
Patients paid 55,000.00
The expenditure was 67,823.00

There are always a number who have no means of securing medical or surgical treatment and these are dependent upon charity.

Converts, harness, etc., have been sold to raise money. Some patients have to be cleared more than others to make up for those who are unable to pay. This seems unfair to make the sick who can pay, not only pay for their own care but also contribute toward the cost of others while the general public are not called upon to contribute their proper share.

The Hospital Board hopes to decrease the costs to a figure not in excess of what self respecting people can pay.

Hospitals cannot give what they have not received and an effort will be made at the coming session of the Ontario Legislature to obtain more aid.

At present the law provides that hospitals may collect $1.50 per day from municipalities and receive 50c per day from the Province, making a total of $2.00.

The Government report shows the average of all hospitals to be $3.12 per day.

In the larger hospitals, public ward patients cost the hospitals as much as private ward patients. One large City Hospital gave a maintenance cost of $2.78 per day for public ward patients.

The report was referred to the ways and means committee for their consideration.

CITY LEAGUE GAMES PRODUCE SOME FAST HOCKEY WITH Y'S MENS CLUB AND BELL TELEPHONE WINNING

Two Games Scheduled For Tonight Commencing at 8 O'clock - Officers Elected

Two more fast games were run off in the City League last evening and some speedy hockey was dished up for the fans who were present. These games are not drawing the gate fans they are deserving of especially at the low figure of 25c for each double-header a price that sure by suits everyone pretty.

The fans are passing up some real high-class hockey when they miss these City League contests. The long title year is going along in fine style and not a hitch has marred any of the games played thus far. There is little "hog-ging" that is a general rule between City teams and the best of feeling exists between the various teams. There is two games scheduled at Arnott's arena this tonight with the Canadian Nationals Express taking on the ice at 8 p.m. to gambol the Tigers and following this the Alemite meeting the Bankers in the night-cap affair. The Express have one of the strongest squads in the loop with "Bill" Finkle," Josh Canning, "Sammy" Symons, "Bill" Cook and several of the old reliables signed up. The Express will meet some keen competition in the Tigers who are a younger bunch of play-ers but are determined to win from them. The Tigers captured the laurels last year and are out to repeat again.

Frank Barfield has a smart bunch of boys who will endeavour to put the skids under the Bankers, team who held the Tigers to a four-all tie last week. The Bankers have some well-known play-ers in their line-up who will make the grasers earn to win. Both of these games will be well-worth watching and the small admission price makes it within everybody's reach to attend.

Vern Weir will handle the bell in both games.

Some matters of importance were thrashed out last night at a meeting of the various managers, it was decided to have the first and second teams play off at the end of the season.

It is believed that a couple of games of this kind should draw a good crowd in view of the calibre of hockey being played. The so-called hockey teams have been the surprise package of Low season thus far and are creating plenty of competition.

THE OFFICERS

The officers elected last evening were Pres.—Steve Lecrae.
Vice-Pres.—Hank Curry.
Sec'y-Treas.—Sam Curry, Sporting Editor Intelligencer.

These three along with the team representatives will constitute a Board of Management to handle any disputes that may arise although it is hoped that nothing of this sort will occur.

A capable official has been found in Clarence (Scotty) Angel. The big boy has handled every game to date and has given absolute satisfaction He handles the bell with an iron hand and the boys after one or two trips to the penalty box forget the man and play the puck a little more. A single schedule will be played with each team playing seven games.

BELL TEL. 9; INTELLIGENCER 0

The Bell Telephone squeezed out a victory over the Intelligencer pochery, by a score of 3-0. It was only in the last period that the winners were able to score their two goals. The newspaper boys put up a scrappy battle although Basil Doolittle's boys had much better of the play throughout. The tip-ples were without a couple of their regular players and went through the game with one rush, and had they been on the ice a different score might have resulted. The "bells" boys were much heavier than their rivals and this was a big handicap in their favor. They spoiled the Intelligencer boys practically all through although the latter got in a couple well-directed shots at that. The Bell's first goal was a soft one that never left the ice, but the second was a lone rush effort by Duval who carried the puck through the defence to the goal mouth to score a lovely goal. Duval was one of the Bell's most effective men. The game was given some valuable assistance by Turcott and Connolly.

Young Sammy Tobe who is no bigger than a plate of cider stayed on the ice for the whole sixty minutes and was one of the best up on the ice. Sammy made my tore into Bell boys big or small and was a thorn in their sides all evening. Cook of the Smith nine a clever second and was also one of the hardest workers and tirred in a fine game. Jacks shot is not entirely perfected yet and when it is opposing goalies will have a busy time as he can shoot from nearly any position or distance and get fours.

The rest of the team all played well and deserve credit for holding the winners to such a close score.

Near the start of the third period the Intelligencer were playing with only the regular six men as their only sub Fred Symons was laid low when he and a rival player collided and did not return to the game.

Y'S MEN 6 BUTCHERS 2

The Y's Men's Club continued to win their increasing fame Mitchell's Butchers 6-2. It was a fine game to watch and the meat carvers who were regarded as one of the weak teams upset the dope and gave "Bob" Brown's troupe a closer game than the score would indicate.

The losers pressed hard from bell to bell against heavy odds but the Armstrong-Weir combination proved too much for them. The Y's Men are headed for the top of the League unless the Canadian National Express put a crimp in their aspirations when the two teams meet next Friday's night, in fact they are at the top at present with two wins. One regrettable accident marred an otherwise clean game, that, when Vern Weir collided with "Bob" Mike. The two crashed deadwood into the blue line and Weir carried from the ice but felt better after he game. I was purely accidental and one of those things that comes up in any hockey game.

Frank Symons bulged the net three times for the Club gem and leads the team in this department. Weir, Armstrong, Grob and Drew were all in great form and showed up exceptionally well especially the first two. Chimmy" Ales under had no chance to save either of those that beat him.

Lafferty played a whirlwind game in the loser's net and kept the score down it was unfortunate that one or two easy ones beat him.

Vincent Naphin who was at resting we was one of the best-looking men on the ice and showed the bulk of the work up forward. "Bob" Miles and Jack Trunlech worked hard, also were Stuart and Will Wilson watched the Butcher first goal on a pretty cross. White played a nice game on the defence. The Butchers are a great checking bunch and will cause plenty of worry before the season closes.

GOV'T TO BREED STURDY CATTLE FOR NORTHLANDS

Co-operating With United States in Developing Hardy Species

Vancouver, B.C., Jan. 27 (By C. P.) —The Dominion Government is co-operating with the United States authorities in the development of a species of cattle that will withstand the rigor of the Arctic winter.

Beef and dairy breeds suitable for the climate of Alaska and the vast districts of Northern Canada are now being made at several experimental farms in the Far North. The most hardy beef breed, the Galloway, is being crossed with the shaggy yak, of Asia, to produce a desirable cattle for northern climes. The cattle-yak calves obtained by these crosses are too young as yet to determine just how far they will meet the requirements, but results are said to be promising.

The first yak-Galloway, the result of mating the yak bull to a Galloway cow, was a curious freak. At the time of its birth, which was normal in all respects, there was little to distinguish it from a full-blooded Galloway. The other cattle-yak crosses exhibited by their

RAILROAD MAT. SOLD TO SOVIET

Vancouver, B.C., Jan. 26—(By Canadian Press)—After lying on a railroad siding at Port Coquitlam, a year and since the last years of the Great War a vast amount of railway material originally destined for Canada, has been sold the Russian government has been sold to the Soviet government of Russia and will soon be on its way across the Pacific and the steppes of Siberia.

The material which was valued at more than $3,000,000 when it was first fabricated, consists of the framework of rolling stock. After being assembled in Montreal in the Eastern Canada, Locomotive Co. the trans-Siberian railway. Although not a single casualty has occurred together, there is sufficient material for during those five years in connection the assembling of 4,000 cars.

The history of the material, whose sale at a junk price, has just been consummated in New York, is interesting. Fabricated at the Montreal plant of the Canadian Car and Foundry Company of New Glasgow, N. S., the cars were routed across Canada and were to be shipped to Russia for service on the Trans-Siberian line. Shortly after the cars reached here, the revolution in Russia broke out and the shipment was halted. Since then the stock remained, at Port Coquitlam, until the Soviet government decided it did not conform to the standard gauge roadbed and would have had to be remodelled at a huge cost. Until four years ago efforts to dispose of the matter met with without success, and then the Canadian Steel Corporation of New York purchased it at auction. The latter concern, however, found the stuff to be a white elephant and was unable to dispose of it until a few days ago, when a deal was put through with the Soviet government. The sale is said to have been made largely through a Vancouver agency bringing the two parties together.

Recently agents of the Moscow government came to Vancouver and inspected the material and since then word has come from Russia that the deal is closed and the transaction. The 4,00 cars will, therefore, find their destination nearly ten years after the intended time.

AERIAL SURVEYS GROWN LARGELY IN FIVE YEARS

50,000 Square Miles of Canadian Soil Mapped Last Year

Ottawa, Jan. 27.—(By Canadian Press.)—How Canada's aerial surveys have grown from 50 square miles a year to 50,000 square miles a year in the short space of five years, was related at the Dominion Land Surveyors' Convention today, by W. A. Fletcher, D.L.S., who presented the report of the Aerial Topographic Surveys Committee.

"Just five years ago," he said, one of your members, A. M. Narraway, now chief aerial surveys engineer, photographed for experimental purposes, some fifty square miles of unmapped territory in Northern Saskatchewan, to find out first sight of a surveyor over such territory, marks the beginning of aerial surveys in Canada." In the years the experiments were extended until during the past year approximately 50,000 square miles were covered by aerial photographic survey. Mr. Fletcher characterized it as "a record which demonstrates clearly the adaptability of Canada's surveyor and the investment which this country has in his years of training and experience in all parts of the country and on all classes of surveying and mapping."

Tribute was paid to the splendid co-operation of the Royal Canadian Air Force. It is to the credit of the force Mr. Fletcher said, that not a single casualty has occurred Work with the photographic operations.

The usefulness of aerial survey is to be measured in terms of the utility of the photographs themselves and of the maps produced from them in the development of Canada. That the value of the photograph is of great value as a permanent record of the terrain is emphasized, Mr. Fletcher said, by the number of requests received from widely different sources for photographs of the areas and in the various uses to which they may be put.

Aerial surveys, Mr. Fletcher said are intimately connected with the development of the mining industry. The publishers of the Lake Shore map, within a few months of the first discovery and of subsequent stages of adjoining country, has opened up thousands of square miles to intensive prospecting. The province is enabled to carefully and thoroughly cover the country without delay to grope blindly through a mass of unknown waterways.

The report of the committee indicated just how wide the field for mapping from small photographs has grown. It is still confined to mining districts, but has taken in many other areas, land classification and typographical surveys were carried out on air photographs over an area of 1000 square miles north of Edmonton, Alberta, last season; aerial photographs were also used in mapping the rough and hilly districts west of Calgary and in the vicinity of the Turner Valley Oil field in Alberta; 800 square miles were photographed in Saskatchewan to aid in the production of the Battleford sectional map. One of the recent developments in the use of the aerial survey for detailed mapping proposed power developments.

The Committee reports that maps in print so far cover The Bas, Manitoba, mineral area, the Red Lake District of Ontario, the Reindeer Lake area of Saskatchewan, and the Mikado tourist region lying partly in Ontario and partly in Manitoba. Eight of these maps are in course

BELLE THEATRE

The Royal Corps, grandest of all Colorado's incomparable scenery, was the location for "The Great K & A Train Robbery," Fox Films version of Paul Leicester Ford's thrilling story in which Tom Mix stars as Tom Gordon a detective who tracks down a gang of outlaws who have robbed trains and worried officials of the road to the edge of nervous collapse It is showing at the Belle Theatre today and Saturday.

It is a real western story of hard riding outlaws, a courageous, fast thinking detective who overcomes difficulties that drop out of the sky, apparently, and almost wreck his plans for the capture of the desperadoes.

The supporting cast includes Doris Dean, in the role of Madge Culhane, Harry Gripp, playing de Luxe Harry, a tramp; William Walling as Eugene Culhane, president of the K & A. Railway; Carl Miller, in the role of Burton Holt, division superintendent; Edward Peil, Sr., as Bill Toltree, leader of the bandits, and Curtis McHenry as the Cullen bullet. Don't miss it.

REGENT THEATRE

Jack Hoxie, one of the screen's most popular riders, will be seen in a colossal at the Regent Theatre today in "Hidden Loot," his latest Universal Blue-Streak Western production. The photoplay was adapted from a story of the same name written by William J. Neidig and published in the Saturday Evening Post some time ago. Robert North Bradbury directed the picture and the cast includes Olive Hasbrouck, Edward Cecil, Jack Kenny, Bert DeMarc, Buck Connors and others.

Oshawa, Jan. 28.—Harold Drew, 316 King street east, was the victim of an unfortunate accident just before noon yesterday when his car skidded on the icy street at a point almost opposite the King Street School, and careened into a tree. "DODGER" LEWIS ACQUITTED

Port Hope, Jan. 27.—John W. "Dodger" Lewis was acquitted in County Court this morning by Judge J. E. McGlade on two charges, one of theft and the other of attempting to steal from the Canadian National freight cars.

Crown Attorney Kerr felt that while there were a number of suspicious circumstances, the evidence was not sufficient to ask for a conviction.

The Irony of Love By Charles Garvice

"Yes, sir," returned Mr. Gurdon, rather piqued at this way of putting it; "therefore, you—er—a man of the world, will understand, though Lord Strasyfyre does not, that his lordship's presence in England, London, is imperative. No business can be done without him; and, of course, there is a great deal to do. Even at this moment, I am urgently needing his signature to various legal papers. Yes, I must take his lordship to London with me, at present's delay."

"I'm afraid that's so, lad," said Parchment Joe, with a shake of the head, "you'll have to go. We shall have to lose you. We hard on you, it's hard on us; for we're fond of you, boy—Oh, I crave the lord, I can't get to call you it!—there isn't a man who won't be sorry to say goodby. But, look here, Rafe. It's a big thing you're struck, and you've got to stand up to it like a man. You've never been found wanting yet, when the call came; and you mustn't take the lying down. Go with this gentleman, and play the game for all it's worth. For not saying the weight's against you; they are; but you'll ride straight, Rafe, and you'll beat 'em on the post, or I'm much mistaken in you."

"I'll go, if you'll come with me, Joe," said Rafe.

The gray of Parchment Joe's face grew red; he shuffled his feet and shook his head.

"Can't be done, Rafe," he said huskily. "There's reasons why I couldn't show my face in the busy haunts of men, the places where you're going. Let it go at that."

Mr. Gurdon, with a little sigh of relief, gathered up his papers and looked at his watch.

"I am glad to understand that a coach passes through this place tomorrow morning at six o'clock—an extremely inconvenient hour—and I shall be obliged, Mr. Strasyfyre, if you will make your preparations and be ready to accompany me."

"Where are we going?" asked Rafe, with an air of resignation.

"To London," replied Mr. Gurdon.

"To Lord St. Ives in the first place, naturally."

"Who, Lord St.—St. Ives?" asked Rafe, with an great show of interest.

"His lordship is your duly appointed guardian," replied Mr. Gurdon.

"Guardian!" echoed Rafe, with a little more interest and incredulity. "What do I want with a guardian? I'm past a kid, a girl."

"In the eyes of the law, you are a kid Rafe," explained Parchment Joe. "According to the certificate of your birth, you're not much more than twenty; and until you get to twenty-one, such swells as you live to be looked after, properly washed, your hair combed—"

Mr. Gurdon coughed and frowned. "This—er—levity is—" he began reproachfully.

"Sorry," apologized Joe; "I was trying to explain."

"It is very simple," said Mr. Gurdon impatiently. "Lord Strasfyre, here, is a minor—"

"That's right," said Rafe. "That's what I am and want to be."

"Mi-no-or," said Mr. Gurdon almost as his wife' end, "quite a different thing my dear Lord Strasfyre. You are a minor, and under the guardianship of Lord St. Ives. You will live with him and—benefit by his care and experience. He will launch you, so to speak, on the great world in which you have so exalted a place."

"I dunno," said Rafe dubiously. "I mayn't like this Lord What's His Name—why do they call him a saint? Don't think I should take much stock in saints or gentlemen, and Mr. Gurdon grasped. "And he mightn't catch on to me," said Rafe cogitatively.

"My dear Lord Strasfyre, Lord St. Ives is one of the most charming, the most delightful of—of personages. You cannot fail to appreciate and like him; and I am sure his lordship will—er—be. He broke down as he gazed at the red, shock head, the weary, defiant eyes, the brawny figure of the lad, and prepared to himself the fashionable and polished Lord St. Ives' astonishment and dismay when he, too, looked for the first time on the young Earl of Strasfyre. Once in England, my dear Lord Strasfyre, once surrounded by persons of your own rank and class, you will very soon grow accustomed to the new life which awaits you will—smooth away; so to speak, the angularities acquired in this—er—rough place, and assist such wild and desperate characters as those with whom you have been, regretting."

"Do you mean the boys?" demanded Rafe, with a half-resentful half-puzzled stare. "What, the mutter with them? Look here, mister, don't you call my friends names. They're good enough for me; they've stood by me and—and the dad—all these years, and you bet I'm not going back on them. If it wasn't that I thought dad would like me to up sticks and take on this new job, I would go with you, but"—with a toss of the head—"I suppose I've got to."

"Better leave it at that," said Parchment Joe, in an aside to Gurdon. And so the conference ended.

Later on Rafe went down to the saloon to say goodby. He did not tell the boys he was going, for he had all the very young man's dislike of seeming to "preach," to flaunt his change in his life which he was far from welcoming. The announcement of his speedy departure was received with profound interest, for Rafe was very popular, and enough as the boys, undoubtedly were, their hearts were soft enough. The parting with Gentleman Jim's boy was keenly felt by all of them, and added to the gloom which his father's death had cast upon the camp.

The following morning a crowd was waiting at the corner of the road to see Rafe start. There was a tremendous amount of handshaking, gruffly muttered words of farewell, hearty good wishes, and not a few loudly expressed assertions that he would soon be back, of London life and would be back among them before long. Rafe gripped Joe's hand; the two men, the young one just starting on his new career, the old one with his career lying shattered at his feet, looked into each other's eyes; and at last finding his voice, Joe said:

"So long, lad! Keep your end up. Don't let them beat you."

SINICAL SADIE SEES

Everyone is wailing "Are we not to have say more road-shows in Belleville?"

Sinical Sadie Says—"I was being told the other night that the D'Oyly Carte Opera Co. was coming to Belleville. Then I woke up!"

A number of women in Belleville seem to think the Home Dinner would have been even a bigger Success if each man had taken home a Souvenir to his wife! Unfortunately the cork, were, all removed before serving!

Said the plumber's widow: "Sweeties, Father's dead of diabetes;
"Please," said little daughter Sue,
"Won't some other plumber do?"

"Ay," exclaimed the Scotsman to his American friend. "Scotland's the greatest place on earth!" "Then why did you leave it?" asked his bored friend. "Since you like it so much!" "Aweel, it was like this, chuckled the Scot. "Over there everybody was as cute as mustit and I couldna' mak' muckle progress, whilst here I'm gettin' on yera weel!"

AMERICAN CHEEK

Discussing the operation of a well-known reform in the United States an American orator says: "It has taken the bloom from the noses of men and placed it on the cheeks of the women."

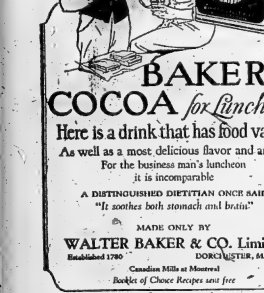

Now, we feel no impulse to start dimnis'
The glaze of a beautiful thought,
And we know few Americn women
From the land of the gay movie plot
We have never been South, 'neath the shady trees.
Nor North; yet we venture to pen:
All the bloom on the cheeks of their ladies
Doesn't come from the noses of men.

So we question if Dorothy Dish 'll Deny us the right to declare
That the use of a blush artificial
Is a habit well-known over there.
Go to Broadway and watch the parade here,
Get wise, and we'll bet you a ten:
All the bloom on the cheeks of their ladies
Doesn't come from the noses of men.

We may wonder sometimes how they stand it,
Taking life as a matter of course
In the land of the vampire and harlot
In the home of the easy divorce.
That load may be heaven or hades,
Yet we venture to state once again.
"All the bloom on the cheeks of their ladies
Doesn't come from the noses of men.

Oh, bravely they send politicians,
All ever creation and back.
To labor in great foreign missions
'Neath the folds of the old Union Jack"—

But let us tell those who have paid fees
To hear some famed speaker—and Bet;—of—
All the bloom on the cheeks of their ladies
Doesn't come from the noses of men.

Poems Old And New

THE FAIRY FIDDLER

When lady moon was shining
And all the trees were still,
I saw a fairy fiddler
Come fiddling down the hill;
He danced at me so gravely,
Then lingered with a smile,
Until I strolled along with him
A moon-enchanted while.

He played to me the secrets
That in his dark eyes slept,
Such middling tones and wistful
He played, until I wept.
Then sighing deep, he left me
All mazed and fairy-wise,
Because that fairy fiddler threw
Some star-dust in my eyes.

The petty jealousies I strove to hide,
Where fretfulness has carved its lines of care,
The malice I denied.

The ugliness of age is but the part
Come to the surface. Do we never gauge
The pitiless world shall gaze on us at last
In all our piteous ness?
Forgotten passions, thoughts I dared not say,
Will leave their legends written on my brow;
And you shall read them there some future day,
Though they be hidden now.

And yet when I am old, and others scorn
My shrunken features, you and only you
Will see the dim of sorrow bravely borne,
And love still shining through.
O, only you, my dear, forgive the good or ill;
Then let my story in a glance be told—
God grant you find my face has beauty!
Then you shall see my failings all laid bare.
The petty jealousies I strove to hide,

UNMASKED

When I am old and thin and fair mask of youth
No longer veils my heart, and you my love
In every furrow the unyielding truth
Inscribed upon my face;
Then you shall see my failings all laid bare.

Almey St. John Adcock

The Irony of Love By Charles Garvice

There was a mist before Rafes eyes as he climbed up beside Charlie the driver, and looked down at the crowd, now cheering and waving its hats. He was parting from the old life, from the rough men who had been his friends and brother workers, and the prospect that lay before him had no attraction for him.

"Thank Heaven!" murmured Mr. Gordon, as the coach swung around the bend, and left the romp out of sight.

The words were scarcely uttered when Charlie pulled up his horses almost on their haunches; and Rafe, looking around to see why the coach had stopped, saw the slight diminutive figure of Phenie standing beside a bowlder by the road side.

"What on earth have we stopped for?" asked Mr. Gordon impatiently.

"Lady wants to speak to one of her passengers," said Charlie, jerking his whip toward Rafe.

Rafe colored, but he did not hesitate for a moment. He stepped from the coach, and went up to Phenie, who was standing, white faced, her lips twitching.

"I—I didn't mean to stop the coach," she said, with a mixture of defiance and apology. "I—I only wanted to see you go by."

"That's all right, Phenie," said Rafe "I'm glad you came. I missed you last night when I was saying good-by. You weren't anywhere about."

"No. I didn't want to join in the rush—but I'm glad you missed me, Rafe. There's none of them sorrier than I am. I—I was fond of Gentleman Jim—I—I know I know," said Rafe, a little tearfully. "You were very good to him always. Don't forget me, Phenie. I'm going to London—"

"I know—" she began, then bit her lip, "I heard tell about it. I shall forget you Rafe, though—though it's like enough I shall never see any more of you. I mustn't keep Charlie, or he'll lose his hire."

"Oh, let him wait," said Rafe, with a jerk of the head. "Look here, Phenie, it appears that I've struck a good thing at last, that great Tom London says so—and if it pans out all right, I—I shall be able to help any old friend. Phenie if you like to come to England—"

"Blest if I don't think I was in bed!" he said, loud enough for Rafe to hear.

Rafe grinned mirthlessly, and took Phenie's hand; it was hot and dirty.

"Good-by, Phenie," he said. "And don't forget—"

They had drawn behind the bowlder, and, for an instant, in that agonizing moment, the girl lost her self-control. Her quivering arm went round his neck and, reaching up to him, she put up her lips. With a horrible blush he bent his head and kissed her; then, shamefacedly, he put her from his mand sprang up to his seat.

"Sorry to keep you waiting," said Charlie, addressing the passengers generally, as he let his impatient horses go. "But I always make a point of stopping here for a minute or two, to admire the view."

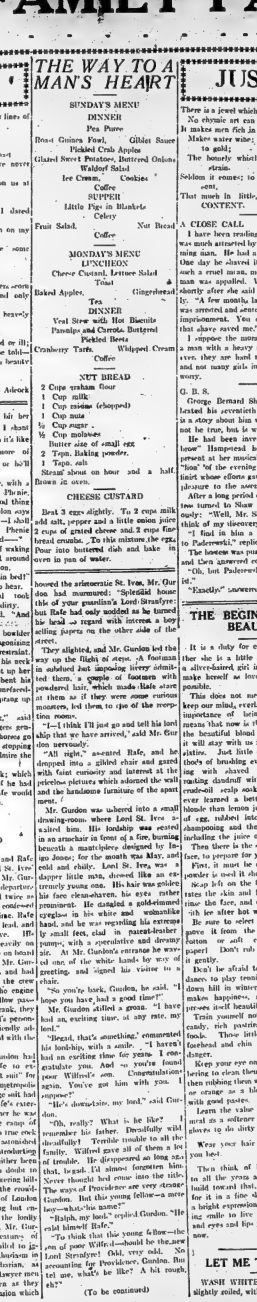

Mr. Gordon made no remark; which was just as well, perhaps, for if he had done so, in all probability Rafe would have thrown him off the coach.

CHAPTER IV.

THE OTHER MAID

Ten days later, Mr. Gordon and Rafe drove up in a taxicab to Lord St. Ives' house in Belgrave Square. If Mr. Gordon looked worried on the day of departure from Jumping Jane, he looked twice as harassed now, for it must be confessed that he had had a dreadful time. Rafe had proved a difficult bear to lead, and one quite impossible to drive. Mr. Gordon's death still weighed heavily on him, and he had spent the time on board the liner in carefully avoiding Mr. Gordon and his fellow passengers and had put in the long hours among the crew in the fo'c'sle, or down in the engine room; and yet, though his fellow passengers were not aware of his rank, they had been attracted by the lad's personality, and had made many friendly advances, which Rafe had repelled with the obduracy of a stone wall.

Arrived in London, Mr. Gordon had succeeded in persuading Rafe to exchange his rough miner's "best suit" for clothes more suitable to the fashionable world, but the plain serge suit had only wrought a change in Rafe's exterior, and at heart and in manner he was still the young miner of the camp of Jumping Jane. Mr. Gordon, a true sailor, had expected Rafe to be astonished, but to my amazed at his introduction to London; but Rafe had neither been astonished nor admiring. No doubt in the eye accustomed to the towering hills the wide valleys of America the crowded streets, the grim houses of London must have appeared anything but entrancing. On their way to the lordly mansion in Belgrave Square, Mr. Gordon had pointed out many features of the great city, but he had failed to excite the faintest spark of enthusiasm in the bosom of the young barbarian, as the precise and London-bred lawyer mentally called his charge. Even as they drew up at the imposing mansion which honored the aristocratic St. Ives, Mr. Gordon had murmured: "Splendid house this of your guardian's Lord Stradlyre; but Rafe had only nodded as he turned his head in regard with interest a boy selling papers on the other side of the street.

They alighted, and Mr. Gordon led the way up the flight of steps. A footman in satelord but imposing livery admitted them to a gilded hall of footmen with powdered hair, which made Rafe stare at them as if they were some curious monsters, led them to ripe of the magnificence room.

"I—I think I'll just go and tell his lord ship that we have arrived," said Mr. Gordon nervously.

"All right," assented Rafe, and he sank into a gilded chair and gazed with faint curiosity and interest at the priceless pictures which adorned the wall and the handsome furniture of the apartment.

Mr. Gordon was ushered into a small drawing-room, and Lord St. Ives awaited him. His lordship was seated in an armchair in front of a fire, burning between a mantelpiece designed by Inigo Jones; for the month was May, and cold and chilly. Lord St. Ives was a handsome man of about forty, with an extremely young eye. His hair was golden his face clean-shaven, his eyes rather prominent. He dangled a gold-mounted eyeglass in his white and womanlike hand, and he was regarding his extremely small feet, clad in patent-leather pumps, with a speculative and dreamy air. As Mr. Gordon's entrance he waved one of the white hands by way of greeting, and signed his visitor to a chair.

"So you're back, Gordon, he said. "I hope you have had a good time?"

Mr. Gordon stifled a groan. "I have had an exciting time, at any rate, my lord."

"Bezad, that's something," commented his lordship, with a smile. "I haven't had an exciting time for years. I congratulate you. And so you've found poor Wilfred's son. Congratulations again. You've got him with you, I suppose?"

"He's downstairs, my lord," said Gordon.

"Oh, really! What is he like? I remember his father. Devilishly wild and handsome. Terrible trouble to all the family. Wilfred gave all them a lot of trouble. He disappeared as long ago that, bezad, I'd almost forgotten him, never thought he'd come into the title. They say he died in the States. The ways of Providence are very strange Gordon. But the young fellow—a mere boy—what's his name?"

"Ralph, my lord," replied Gordon. "He said himself Rafe."

"To think that this young fellow—the son of poor Wilfred—should be the new Lord Stradlyre! Odd, very odd. No accounting for Providence, Gordon. But tell me, what's he like? A bit rough, eh?"

JUST IN PASSING

There is a jewel which no mines can buy
No riches set can counterfeit;
It makes men rich in greatest poverty,
Makes water wine; turns wooden cups to gold;
The homely whistle to sweet music strain.
Seldom it comes; to few from Heaven sent,
That much in little, all in naught,
CONTENT.

A CLOSE CALL

I have been reading of a woman who was much attracted by a handsome, charming man. He had a heavy moustache. One day he shaved it off and revealed such a cruel mean, mouth that the woman was appalled. When he proposed shortly after she said "No" emphatically. "A few months later," she said, "she was arrested and sentenced to five years imprisonment. You can imagine what his shave meant to her."

I suppose the moral is never marry a man with a heavy moustache. However, they are hard to find these days and not many girls in this shorter need worry.

C. B. S.

George Bernard Shaw recently celebrated his seventieth birthday. Here is a story about him which may or may not be true, but is worth repeating.

He had been invented for a "high-brow" Hampstead hostess into being present at her musical party, where the "lion" of the evening was a young violinist whose efforts gave more pain than pleasure to the assembled guests.

After a long performance, the hostess turned to Shaw and asked rapturously: "Well, Mr. Shaw, what do you think of my discovery?"

"I find in him a great resemblance to Paderewski," replied Shaw.

The hostess was puzzled for a moment and then answered correctingly:

"Oh, but Paderewski is not a violinist."

"Exactly," answered G. B. S.

THE BEGINNING OF BEAUTY

It is a duty for every woman, whether she is a little sixteen-year-old or a silver-haired girl in her eighties, to make herself as lovely and sweet as possible.

This does not mean that we shall keep our mind, everlastingly upon the importance of being beautiful. It means that now is the time to set the habit of the blond or black hair, so it will stay with us into our fifties or sixties. Just little commonsense rules for handling every day shampooing with shaved Castile soap and rinsing dandruff with hot olive oil or cream will work wonders. No one has ever learned a better aid for the blonde than lemon juice and sunshine. Squeeze the juice into the hair before shampooing and the last rinse water including the juice of half a lemon. Sunshine is the skin, especially the face, to prepare for years of beauty.

First, it must be clean, and then if powder is used it should go over cream.

Soap left on the face is bad; it irritates the skin and hardens it. Always wash it from the feet with bits of cotton or soft clean cloths—never paper! Don't rub the skin hard treat it gently.

Don't be afraid to walk, to swim, to dance to play tennis, to skate, to ride down hill in winter. A healthy body makes happiness, and happiness expresses itself beautifully in the face.

Be very careful not to eat too much candy, rich pastries, cake and fried foods. Those little piggies on the forehead and chin are red lights of danger.

Keep your eye on your teeth, remembering to clean them regularly, now and then rubbing them with a piece of lemon or orange as a bleach, in conjunction with good exercise.

Learn the value of wet bran or oatmeal as a softener for the hands. Wear gloves to do dirty work.

Wear your hair whatever way suits you best.

Then think of beauty as belonging to all the years as well as now, and build toward that, having a foundation for it in a fine skin, a straight back, a bright expression and an understanding smile to live with the lovely hair and eyes and lips you see in the mirror now.

LET ME TELL YOU!

WASH WHITE PAINT, when only slightly soiled, with a little milk.

THE WHISPERING GALLERY

This book was one of the literary sensations of the season but one can guess the sensation was increased when the Daily Mail of London exposed it. A Mr. Hesketh Pearson who took the manuscript to the publishers. Messrs. John Lane, stated that the author was Sir Ronald Rodd.

Sir Rennell is a diplomatist of high order and it is rather a puzzle even to a lay reader how the Lanes had it put over them. What purports to be reminiscences and private conversations of many leading statesmen appear in the book. The Daily Mail published the denial from many of those whose names were used in this unscrupulous manner. A couple of days later the publishers withdrew the book from circulation, admitting their mistake.

Just at this time the New York "World" said they hoped that the American publishers would follow the lead of London and keep the book discreetly in the cellar. But that has not been done and an American firm put the book out with all sorts of well-sounding excuses, even to the promise to the public that if their London representative finds the book is not authentic, it will be withdrawn!

This volumne of faked stuff has found its way to our bookshelf and I took to me as if the book had been written with one eye on the dear American public. The three or four Americnis mentioned are spoken of most kindly. How they will scream over them at the beautiful things said of some of England's big men!

It is more than unkind, it is cruel and malicious. A man has no right to hide his name when writing such a book—a book attacking the reputations of men in public life, a few of whom too have passed away. We are glad to have it exposed but it should not have been published in the first place.

ENAMELLED PANS can be cleaned by scouring with crushed egg shells and soapy water.

BELLEVILLE LOSES TO CORNWALL IN TOUGHEST GAME OF SEASON

Cornwall Scores Winning Tally After Eleven Minutes of Last Stanza

The Belleville Intermediates lost the toughest game of the current season in Cornwall last evening when the Factory Town Six emerged on the long end of a 3-2 score. It was a thriller from start to finish and the spectators who crammed the Cornwall rink were certainly given the worth of their money and were kept on their toes from the opening bell to the final one. The Maroons played every bit as good hockey as the homesters but the breaks went the other direction as has been the case in every game in which they have taken part. The winning goal was a heart-breaker scored from the wing by Cully Tilton, brilliant little centre man. Bowen went to the ice but the disc slid beneath him and the Belleville team, battle as they might, could not score the equalizer. The fatal counter came after eleven minutes of the third period had elapsed and immediately the Cornwall team played the old dilly-dally game and played the puck behind their own net or lifted it to the other end out of the danger zone and consequently a great deal of time was lost in forcing it back into enemy territory. Eddie Thomas threw his old team into the fray but the winners were able to stave off the attack until the curtain was rung down. The Cornwall team were given a great battle by the Maroons and a scare was thrown into their camp when at the end of the second period the score stood a tie two-all. It was certain that the team scoring the first goal in the last stanza would be the winner and Cornwall proved to be the lucky team.

PERCY BARRETT

One of the old guard of Canada's professional golfers, who died at St. Joseph's hospital last week. He was a splendid player and teacher, having been taught the game by Harry Vardon, in 1907 he won the Canadian open championship with a score of 306. In 1923 and 1925 he captured the professional golf champion-ship of Canada.

FAST CLEAN GAME—ICE IS PERFECT

A perfect sheet of ice was provided and a fast clean game was given the fans, only one penalty being handed out by referee Rodden, Mallon Contant being the guilty party. He was clearly body-checked by "Soup" Coyer and after sprawling on the ice for half a minute got up and in a rage tore at "Soup" from behind but Rodden caught him in the act and was quickly banished. Rodden was on top of every play but certainly on one occasion he could have allowed Gilly Goyer's goal whiche was scored toward the end of the first period and appeared to be a perfect one-side pass. Both teams realized that the game meant a great deal and clean hockey must be the order of the day. The Maroons still stand a chance of getting back into the running although it is a mighty slim one. In order that this may happen Brockville must wallop Tilton and Company on Monday night in the Island Town or Kingston step in Cornwall and defeat them. On Brockville rests the duties and if they can take the group leader, into camp then Kingston can step back into the running by scoring a win. It's problematical but not impossible and the Cornwall team on their showing last night demonstrated that they are not as strong as they are cracked up to be when the Maroons can step in and hold them 3-2 and with a little luck should have beaten them.

The Maroons are a great fighting team and they never stopped trying throughout the whole encounter. The fast goal came within a minute of the face off and the second when Joe Coyer scored. From appearances it looked as though the rubber would be big and the referee did a part way in handing it out but it was recorded and was badly needed at that time.

CORNWALL EXTENDED TO LIMIT

"Stan" Hagyman, who was taken ill with tonsilitis early in the week and has been confined to his bed under doctor's orders, was forbidden to play. Hagyman was missed because of his fighting qualities and would have been of great assistance, but no credit must be taken from "Hoot" Gibson who replaced him. The boy played a fine game while he was on the ice.

Cornwall have a fine team and played hard to win last night and they were extended to the utmost limit by the plucky Belleville squad. They are a fast-playing bunch and play lovely combination. They take advantage of every opportunity to drive the rubber home and lose no time in following in their rebound shots and they possess some wicked ones.

Cornwall team, although they have not yet won the group stand the best chance and if they do manage to cop him the laurels they will be worthy representatives of group No. 1.

On the night's play Gilly Cornwall's clever and fast defence man was the mark of the winner. A brilliant man on his skates and a star in the art of handling a stick. He is one of the most dangerous men on the Factory town aggregation. Gillie's one goal was a beautiful and well-executed effort. He is a pretty player to watch as he seems his way in and about opposing players.

Rooney the Goal Getter

Jack Rooney with his two goals played a big part in the fine game Belleville put up. Jack is a hard worker and keeps his nose well in tow. Pennie had a hand some breaking away when Rooney was opposite him. He passed the puck without any thought of selfishness and takes the bumps with the best me whose a murmur.

Another boy who gave a remarkably fine exhibition was Dan Whalen. The gallant little player that he is, was all over the ice, back checking like a fiend and skating along the bounds like a demon.

"Gilly" Goyer gave Rooney both praise that resulted in goals. "Gilly" played a fine all-round game and only dame luck robbed him of a couple of goals. He was accidentally tripped after he had broken through on one occasion.

Bowen, in the goal put up a marvelous game and saved wonderfully when the speedy Cornwall players bore in on him. In the first period he was the target for a num-ber of shots but he turned them aside with coolness and regularity. Bowen has been one-of-the big assets of the team and has played consistently all season. Had it not been for his super-work the score would have mounted to a large figure. He had almost the same work of Filion and it was only a break in the last goal that beat him.

DEFENCE SHOWS GOOD FORM

The defence of Gillie and Goyer stood out prominently. Their blocking and rushing was perfect and they forced an almost impregnable bulwark in front of Bowen. "Soup" came in for an entirely unwarranted panning at the hands of the crowd when he dropped Contant but Frank always hands out his body-checks in a fine open manner. Bill Green was injured in the first period. He received a badly swollen lip when Gilly tried his stick to turn upon completing a rush. "Bill" gave his best effort and was a hard worker.

Frechette and Gibson were both effective while on the ice and cleaned up well with the other forwards.

Tilton at centre ice was the same clever boy and made some fine plays. Tilton is just as tricky as he was when graduating from Junior Company. His side goal was of the "fluke" variety.

Both teams carried the play to the other and consequently the puck was in mid-ice during a goodly portion of the time. The Cornwall team exhibited much the same style of play as they did here, the kitty-bat-the-door policy, swatting the attack. The Belleville team adopted somewhat the same system and met their opponent's allies in mid-ice. When the Cornwall players did manage to get by they gave them a chase and oftentimes hooked the puck away and sent the play in the other direction.

Some unfair tactics on the part of the spectators annoyed the Belleville players. One individual in particular waited at the dressing room door for a fighting mood but his ardor was soon cooled.

Both teams tired at times under the gruelling pace and subs were rushed on frequently.

R. M. C. will be here on Monday night and thus far the Cadets have been the hard-luck team of the group. They defeated Kingston 8-3 and any team that can do that beer watching.

RECREATION BOWLING

Three snappy Senior League games were played at the Recreation Alleys last night and in all the three games each of the winners counted four points and also rolled very good scores, the highest score going to the Ponies who won their four points from the Carthage, the Ponies rolling 2324 or just 18 pins below the record that the fivecrations hung up on the opening game. This loss for the Carthage was a hard blow as they were up fairly good in the running but even now it will howch several teams on. The highest bowlers for this game were J. Cummins 716, J. Yerex 651.

The next hihest score was rolled by the Ontarios who rolled 2167 and won four points from the Belleville Motors, the first game being the only one that was close which the Ontarios won by 5 pins. High bowlers were L. Rossetti 763, Drew 663.

The third highest score went to the Rovers with 2158, this score giving the Rovers four points over the Alemite who were far below their average scores. It has been something unusual for three teams to roll nearly an average of 2200 in one night, but that's just the way the pins were falling last night. High bowlers were O. Anderson 695, T. Barrett 690.

One postponed Ladies' League game was played, the Orchids playing their first game in three weeks, won one point and lost three to the Ponies. Orchids starting out with a win and failing to count any more in the second and third game. The highest bowlers were Miss Kemp and Mrs Draycott.

One game was played in the Class League, the Office counting all three points from the Cooper Shop. High bowlers were Hynlop and Lo Monk.

When public opinion takes hold of a product like the Chrysler and in three years' time lifts it over the heads of twenty-three other long established cars—from twenty-seventh place in—the industry to fourth place—the significance of the act is almost too plain to require analysis.

It can only mean, of course, that people have found in the Chrysler qualities and values they did not find elsewhere.

In the four great quality car fields throughout the world, people have preferred Chrysler to long established cars of both lower and higher price, and Chrysler engineering, design, beauty, performance and long life, elements of progressiveness which inspired them to invest in Chrysler produces the staggering total of five hundred and thirty millions of dollars ($530,000,000) in three years' time.

It is an inspiring tribute of public confidence—one which fills Walter P. Chrysler and his organization with a deep and serious sense of responsibility for the future.

It is their determination so rigidly to apply the Chrysler principle of Standardized Quality that fourth place in the industry will be merely a temporary stopping place—a momentary pause on the way to the higher place they will earnestly try to deserve in public esteem.

JUST ANOTHER WAY TO ECONOMIZE, FOOTWEAR

How are shoe galoshes standing the strain of the winter's wear? They're likely developing a few holes in the soles, that will soon let in the water when the weather breaks. They let in the cold too, so altogether there isn't much sense wearing them in such a state.

But here's the answer. Take them around to B. W. Brown's on Campbell St., the One Way Street. He'll repair them for you—and do a good job of it, Brown's is on a one way street, and their galosh repairing is done in only one way too—the best.

A GOOD SERVICE AND MADE KNOWN DISPELS WORRY

Story of How One Man Was Relieved of Day's Trouble

They say misfortune never comes singly but it may be so, for here's the story of a common everyday man and his mix fortunes of a single day. But every dark cloud has a silver lining and such was the case in this instance, but the story was related to us the other day by the victim and he still had a smile on his face so things didn't turn out so badly after all as they seemed.

Remember that cold, cold morning two or three days ago. Hard to forget, well, a friend of ours started the day off in bad humor because the furnace had gone out—and the house was like a barn. You've likely experienced it yourself that when something goes wrong in the morning, things just keep on going wrong all day long. However, he got the furnace going and headed for the garage, only to find the oil circulating fan in his car not functioning and the battery not strong enough to turn the engine over. But he had a bright idea and on trouble was solved in short order for he phoned the City Battery Service at 418 and in a few minutes was on his way with a good strong battery in the car, for the City Battery gave him immediate service.

MORE TROUBLE

So all looked rosy again, but on the way down the street, our friend noticed that a threatening cold seemed to be getting the better of him, and growls or growling voices indicated an ever increasing bad humour. But anyway, he dropped into Dan Bleskens on his way down Front Street and got a "Sure-Cure for Cold," then he proceeded to the office, ready to do battle with all whom he came in contact. But in an hour or so the threatened cold felt better, and life looked a better brighter. Then he started to think and realized that a well constructed garage would have saved him some trouble that morning, and noticing in a paper that E. J. Mott was constructing sectional garages of the type he wanted, and at a low price he decided to see Mott's about it soon as possible.

Still reflecting on his troubles, he remembered that when the fire had gone out at the house he had acted like a bear with a sore paw towards wife, as he phoned Ward the Florist at 127 Bridge Street, and ordered some roses for her; from past experience he knew that Ward's could be depended upon to sell him by phone and deliver, cut flowers of any kind—and just as fresh and attractive as if he were at the store seeing what he got.

THE SUN SHINES

Things began to brighten up; the sun had come out and our friend stepped out for lunch, but still misfortune dogged his path, for just as he entered the car, he slipped on the icy running board, and broke the crystal of his wrist watch. What, to do it? Again he remembered that somewhere he had read an ad to the effect that Rowntree the Jeweller was fitting watches of all kinds with the New Crystaloid Unbreakable Crystals—clear as glass, but a substance that will survive the hardest of knocks. So he proceeded to Rowntree's and had a Crystaloid fitted—in a few minutes, and he found out something else—that it is the only unbreakable watch crystal that is fitted without the use of tools of any kind.

Then lunch. And as he wife was out he decided to eat down street. Remembered that Wongs' served a good full course lunch for fifty-cents. He dropped in there, and was agreeably surprised to both the quality of food and the service offered, he wasn't accustomed to eating in restaurants and didn't know there was a place in town where he could get a meal like in the one he had—so he felt better, and as the day wore on, life seemed a little more worth living after all.

A PERFECT EVENING

Then home, a good dinner, and with the radio tuned on to Westinghouse by the way, which he had bought from Carl Read at The Radio Shop, he settled down to read the paper. Again he started to think, and the sum total of it was a realization of just how much modern advertising does, for the householder now a days, he was in good humor again, after a day of trouble, but the difficulties had been met and overcome through whose watch word was service; and he idly thought just what kind of humor he would have been in if all these men weren't in town to serve his needs—and if they didn't tell us about it in our daily papers.

CARE EXERCISES BIG INFLUENCE IN BUSINESS

Moores' Candy Store Progress Indicative Great Care

It has been said, and truly, that one of the big factors in the building of bigger and better business is that of care; and here's an illustration of the above ten years ago Peter Moore started in a small way a candy and ice cream business in a little town in the Anglo-Irish; no one thought that he could "make it go," "sink low, develop it into the huge business he now enjoys but with the special care he devoted to it, proper merchandising methods, and long experience, Peter Moore has built up one of the finest Candy and Ice Cream businesses in the City. Care is it, because he has in the selection of the ingredients—none but the best—for his homemade candies and ice cream, steady and intelligent newspaper advertising, and finally a constant care to give values that were a little better than the "other fellow" till this has combined to spell "success" for the enterprising proprietor The demand for Moores homemade Candies and Ice Cream has grown to such proportions that it became necessary to enlarge the store a few months ago to carry the larger stock necessary to meet the demand of an increasing number of customers.

Careful buying in all important factors in handling a man's business. Mr. Moores has always searched the markets for the choicest of materials that could be bought to make his delicious candies, and ice cream; that's what gives Moores' products the enviable reputation they possess. The motto of the store is Quality, Small Profits and Large and Quick Turnover."

Moores turn over their complete stock not less than six times a year. Anyone can judge of this, for himself when he considers the size of homemade

PLANS OF PREMIER FERGUSON'S GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF LIQUOR

Toronto, Jan. 26.—Premier Ferguson's plan of liquor sale by governmental control has been widely discussed since the election campaign of last November. Briefly, it is proposed to amend the Ontario Temperance Act to provide for establishment of a commission "who will have the authority to issue to all citizens over 21 years of age, who desire to purchase spirituous or malt liquors for their own use, an annual permit upon which shall be entered each purchase and which may be suspended or cancelled at any time for abuse or misconduct," in the Premier's words.

A large portion of the province at the time of the institution of the Ontario Temperance Act in 1916, had already banished the sale of liquor under local option. It has been stressed, that these "dry" areas will be respected and the sale of spirituous and malt liquors may be allowed in these areas until the people of those municipalities indicate by vote their desire for a change. The commission, however, may establish at such places as may select in other portions of the province, dispensaries for the sale of spirituous and malt liquors in sealed packages to persons holding official permits. To the commission whose personnel has yet to be announced, will likely be entrusted all details of administration of the new system. Expectations are that the system will be in operation by May.

That will be added another chapter to the eloquented history of the Ontario Temperance Act. Plebiscites in 1919 and 1924 failed to overturn it, although each time the majority in its favor was decreased. In 1923 another amendment allowed sale of the now famous 4.4 per cent beer, which however, failed to meet the demands of the "wet" factions while it was opposed by the "dry" side. The popular majority for enforcement control at the last general election, was 241,632 in a total vote of 1,537,878.

OTHER NEW LEGISLATION

The amendment to the O. T. A. while dominant, is not by any means the only piece of legislation to come before the assembly. Upward revisions in the speed limit on the highways of the province, probably to 25 miles an hour; an alteration in the marriage law, and a requirement on the part of all vehicles to carry lights at night, constitute three of the most interesting features of the legislative programme. The speed limit will be 10 miles an hour faster than the present 25. The measure to have all vehicles carry lights after dark has been up for discussion a long time, and it is such pieces of legislation as this,

MOTHERWELL GIVES FINE TALK ON PAST AND FUTURE OF WEST CANADA

Seventh Dinner to County Council Helps Bind Ties Closer

CO-OPERATION

Speakers Stress Importance of City and County Working Together

Another link was forged in the chain of friendship—another mile stone happily passed last night when for the seventh year the City Council did the Chamber of Commerce banquetted the Hastings County Council and other prominent men of Hastings and Prince Edward. The dinner was good, the speeches better, the singing excellent and best of all was the good people of fellowship emanating the alliance of City and County friends.

The outstanding address was of course that of the guest of honor, Hon. W. R. Motherwell, who brought a message of wide usefulness from the great Canadian West. Mr. Motherwell made a fine impression, his easy conversational style of talking putting him at home with his listeners. The tone of his remarks was distinctly patriotic, he pleading the necessity of National thinking—dispelling completely any ideas some of his Eastern hearers may have formed that all Westerners are wild-eyed, frenzied fanatics. But then Mr. Motherwell comes from Perth. In Eastern Ontario as his birthplace which fact may account for his sanity.

Mayor Wilmot III

In the regrettable absence of Mayor Wilmot, who was unfortunately afflicted with a severe cold, Mr. E. W. Worth, Manager of the Canadian Optical Company and President of the Chamber of Commerce acted as chairman most acceptably. He welcomed the County Councillors and other guests, then swung into the evening's program.

His Honor Henry Hayrett, Warden of the County, was also unfortunately ill and so unable to attend the dinner. Seated at the head table, beside the guest of honor were, W. E. Tummon, M. P., J. J. Hill, M.L.A.; Mr. John Elliot, W. H. Nugent, County Clerk, Ald. A. B. Collins Vice-President of C. O. C., Col. Roscoe Vanderwater, Reeve of Sydney, Bruce Airhart, Ex-Warden, Freeman Ketcheson, W. C. Mikel, County Solicitor, Dr. E. N. Baker, Principal emeritis of Albert College and others prominent in County and City life.

Growth of West

The Hon. Mr. Motherwell was given the main theme of the evening.

The Minister's chief theme was "What the further development of the West would mean to Eastern industry and business generally." In developing this he first pointed out the phenomenal agricultural expansion of Western Canada during the last forty years or so, during which time it emerged from zero as a grain-growing country to being today the largest exporter of wheat in the world.

He also pointed out that at the outbreak of war in 1914, the West was importing butter from Eastern Canada. Today the aggregate production of cream my butter has there produced amounts to approximately fifty-five millions of pounds. With the exception of beef

LLOYD GEORGE ADVISES MEETING CHINESE AIMS

Birmingham, Eng., Jan. 29.—Former Premier Lloyd George addressing the Midland Federation today declared that the only solution of the Chinese problem was a wide and prompt concession of legitimate Chinese demands. "I have no apprehension of military defeat in China" Mr. Lloyd George said, "but there is real danger that we may secure a diplomatic defeat which will shake our position in the whole east."

108 YEARS OLD

Well Past the Century Mark But Still Going Strong

Windsor, Jan. 29.—To have lived long past the allotted span has been the good fortune of Mrs. Margaret McRae, who celebrated her 108th birthday yester-day. Though she has seen many winters and summers come and go, the weight of years rests lightly upon her shoulders.

Born at Cape Breton Island, Nova Scotia, of hardy pioneer stock, she was brought by her parents to Three Rivers, Que., and later to Wolfe Island, near Kingston, and finally to Victoria County, where most of her life was spent. For the past eighteen years she has been residing in the Border City with her son.

ANGLICANS STOP RESOLUTION ON CHINESE MATTER

Block Motive Urging the Abandonment of British Concessions

Vention of the Social Service Council of Canada was disrupted yesterday when a resolution on the Chinese situation, urging that concessions held by British and other powers in China and rights of extra-territoriality should be withdrawn or abandoned, was vetoed by the Anglican delegates. When the resolution was first introduced Archdeacon Cody immediately vetoed their opposition and declared their intention of vetoing the resolution by constitutional means. The vote was taken and the resolution carried, but was thrown out because of the Anglican section exercising its right of veto. The meeting was divided into two camps, Anglicans, led by Canon Vernon of Toronto, and others headed by Dr. T. Albert Moore, and Dr. Hugh Dobson.

During the resolution clause by clause, the Anglicans voted solidly against each of them and were supported, in each case, by representatives of the Salvation Army. Dr. T. Albert Moore, supporting the resolution, said that the people of China looked to the ministers of the church for guidance in matters of this kind and that the ecumenical might well express their views on this important subject for the benefit of those who look to the church for leadership. Expression of opinion from an organization of this kind, he thought, would strengthen the Government at Ottawa and enable the general public to understand the situation better.

EXAMINE WOMAN AGAIN TO TEST HER SANITY

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 29.— Further medical examination as to her mental condition is to be made of Mrs. Jessie Ward, Saskatchewan, who had been ordered deported from Canada on the grounds of illegal entry and the likelihood of becoming a public charge. She has been detained under at Belleville and has been confined in the asylums in Kingston and Toronto for nine months.

ROBINSON HELD FOR THE MURDER OF ST. CHARLES

Preliminary Hearing Last Over Three Hours at Madoc

SISTER IN TEARS

Seven Witnesses Heard — Cannot Find Death Weapon

Abraham Robinson, formally charged with the murder of Rudolf St. Charles on the 15th of November, 1926, was committed for trial at the next Spring Assizes to be held at Belleville by Magistrate Jarman at the Court House, Madoc.

The preliminary hearing lasted for over three hours and the Court room was crowded from the beginning to the end. Spectators were standing around the walls, on the back benches and on the aisles. Seven witnesses in all were heard. Dr. Smith, Smith, taxi-driver, Stanley Lewis, eye witness of the shooting, though he did not see the assassin, Dr. Thompson, physician who first attended the late Rudolf; Provincial Constable Percy McCoy, Foster Broad, farm hand; Eliza Robinson, sister of the accused; Abraham Robinson and last but not least, Alec Sharkey who stated that when he had gone to the Robinson farm some days after the murder of the two proprietors, of the farm he didn't see any names) had said that if St. Charles ever came back he would put a bullet through his G—D— heart.

CONSTABLE McCOY

One of the most important witnesses called was Provincial Constable Percy McCoy, who had collected most of the evidence in the preliminary hearing, including the finding of the rifle in the swamp on which was found the blood.

McCoy stated that the 38-55 rifle alleged to have been the weapon that killed St. Charles could not be found, though he had searched for three weeks for it. Numerous exhibits were shown by each witness during hearing, including a coat with many bars stuck to it. Following Mr. B. C. Donnan's, Crown Prosecutor, questioning, McCoy was subjected to a rigid and grilling cross-examination by Charles Payne, counsel for the defence.

Another main witness was Eliza Robinson, sister of the accused man. She told of the shooting, of hearing the bang, and striving to choke back the sobs which rose in her throat, she gave her evidence. She testified that she was in the kitchen when the shooting occurred. She could not identify the coat that was found near the scene of the murder, but in the pockets, nor yet another handkerchief found in the wood-shed of the Robinson home.

BACK TO JAIL

Following the pronouncement of the court, Abe Robinson was brought back to the county jail in Belleville, where he will await his trial at the Spring Assizes.

HE WENT TO JAIL DESPITE HIS PROTEST

An amusing and rather pitiful case appeared before Magistrate Jarman at Madoc yesterday, when Charles Sopby, an elderly man, charged with vagrancy, was sentenced to three months in the County Jail, Belleville. Sopby was sent to Belleville before and stayed at the House of Refuge, running away a day or so later. Colored he had been serving on a "jury case."

Magistrate Jarman sentenced him to three months in the County Jail, Belleville.

"But you can't send me to jail," said Sopby.

"Oh, yes, I can," smiled the magistrate.

"You can't send me for more than a month," protested Sopby.

Nevertheless he got his three months' sentence and was brought to Belleville in the same car as Abraham Robinson. He seemed quite happy now he got in the car, smiling and waving to the crowd the had collect

DISCOVERED STREPTOCOCCUS WHEN AFTER BACTERIUM PNEUMOSINTS

London, Jan. 29.—Letters from two Edinburg doctors, David and Robert Thomson, brothers, recounting the discovery of what they term unusual streptococcus, has aroused anxiety among the more influenza bacillus.

The letter, which appears in the Medical Journal "the Lancet" says Streptococcus was obtained from nasal discharge and blood of one of the brothers who was suffering from "flu". They were expecting to find "bacterium pneumosints," discovered by Doctors Crisby and Gates of the Rockefeller Institute, which supposedly but unprovedly is the cause of the disease. They tell of failing to discover the "obeymiouton and of their success in finding this new streptococcus which tentatively suggests the real cause, invading the blood from primary focis in the nose."

During his speech at the dinner to the County Council of Hastings last night at the Quinte Hotel, Mr. John Elliott, Chairman of Belleville's Board of Education gave interesting figures in connection with the proposed New Collegiate and Vocational School. These figures are official and have not before been made public.

Mr. Elliott stressed that the plans as prepared, affording accomodation for pupils from surrounding counties, and making allowance for future growth, would not cost the citizens of Belleville a dollar more than it would to erect a smaller school designed only for city students. If a smaller school were built the counties of Hastings and Prince Edward would not contribute to it's cost or maintenance nor would the Government grant be so large.

Dealing with salaries, Mr. Elliott quoted figures compiled by Principal P. C. McLaurin, showing that while the New Collegiate as planned, would involve an increase of $10,000 a year in salaries, for teachers the increased annual grant from the Ontario Government towards the Vocational School would reduce this extra outlay to less than $1500 a year.

THE FIGURES

Mr. Elliott's estimates in brief are given below—

Proposed Cost of New Collegiate and Vocational School based on lowest tender. $475,294.84

Estimated Architect's fee and contingencies 75,000.00

Estimated Cost of Equipment 50,000.00

$550,294.84

Cost of Vocational part $180,849.40

Cost of Academic part 154,251.43

Cost of parts in common to both 240,123.96

550,294.84

Proportionate amount paid by the City, Department of Education, Hastings County and Prince Edward County of the total cost of building and equipment.

City of Belleville's ... $314,770.24

Department of Education ... 145,705.79

County of Hastings shares 66,904.13

Prince Edward County share 22,914.77

MISSION CIRCLE IN CLEVER PLAY

Bridge Street Young People Display Considerable Talent on Stage

It is not often an amateur cast presents such a thoroughly successful play, so free from the amateurish acting, and so excellently presented, as that put on by the Jubilee Mission Circle last evening in Bridge Street Sunday School Parlors. The young ladies taking part knew their several roles perfectly and lived the parts they played with convincingly result ing in a thoroughly successful entertainment.

The play proper was enchanting, the scene cleverly arranged and the costumes actually made in China. During the action of the play with its witty and clever lines, some pleasing musical numbers were introduced by Mrs. McKinnon, Miss Florence Barber and Miss Wylda Palmer. The novelty was keenly enjoyed by the large audience present.

The Cast

Those taking part in the play were: Hon. Mrs. Ling ..... Ada Ketcheson
Golden Lily ..... Margaret Stewart
A Soothsayer ..... Muriel West
Frances Woodby ..... Dorothy Diamond
Mrs. Mary Woodby ..... Ruth Wright
Heavenly Wisdom ..... Wilma Ross
A Coolie ?..... Muriel Morris
Hon. Mr. Ling ..... Jean Bleecker
Big Sister ..... Mary Railton
Hon. Mr. Ling ..... Grace Tucker
Precious Gold ..... Alice Gilbert
Beautiful Pearl ..... Joan Graves
Old Ray ..... Betty Ridley

A real novelty was introduced in a Chinese tea room where one fortunately stepped into China. The walls were finished in Chinese tapestry, the lovely lights shaded in celestial shades and wisteria blossom hung from every corner. Miss Orra Clarke and Miss Lillian Wray presided at the pretty tea table and Miss Norma Clarke acted as treasurer, each young lady garbed in the costume of the country they had transplanted to Bridge Street. The tea room was well patronized.

AN OPPORTUNITY

Fifty thousand of the wealthiest families in the Eastern United States are going to establish Summer residences in Ontario this Spring, it was announced on Tuesday this Speaker said the following year.

So a prominent New Yorker told a Canadian publisher recently and we believe he is well within the mark. Why should not a like number of new cottages and attractive Summer residences be brought to the shores of beautiful Quinte? We have everything they are looking for: fishing, bathing, scenery, climate and are easily accessible.

If looks like a chance for our Chamber of Commerce to do some good co-operative work with the Councils of the neighboring counties and bring some wonderful business here.

TODAY'S THOUGHT

Minds that have nothing to confer,
Find little to receive.

—WORDSWORTH

CO-OPERATION

Co-operation is a feature only if even one's money can act at the table, he is handicapped as from insect or injury by becoming a place entitled to courtesy and help.

Addicted to modern Christian usage when our college neighbors at its table who is so clever that, on no longer be considered outdoors for ex members of a larger family—a western is building up the part of our Province.

The annual get-together dinner, the account of which was celebrated last night when the Belleville City Council and Chamber of Commerce entertained the County Council, kept unfortunately no standing for the of friendship between the urban and rural sections. There is something comforting about sharing a good meal, which warms one to the fellow sitting beside him and makes cold to regard him as any other light take this or a good fellow, with much the same problems of living as one's self.

This old issue have placed or are pressing him. There was a time when the farmer thought of a city dweller as one who sat around in a white collar scheming to get another dollar on everything the farmer had to buy and the city man's impression of the farmer was of a fellow who put the small scabby potatoes and the worm eaten apples at the bottom of the barrel, and then asked fifty cents too much for it.

That is gone. Even when the country feller is a real good chap who has his worries too and the former realizes the human qualities of his friend. We do things better now.

DIAMOND JUBILEE

It is not time that Belleville made plans since towns are making the Diamond Anniversary of Confederation? Already the National plans are being prepared and many of our cities and towns are preparing tentative proposals for the great day.

Belleville, the centre of the loyalist section of Canada, the heart of the United Empire Loyalists settlement, must not lag behind other parts in celebrating this event, July, 1st next should be a splendid day in our history.

It is not too early to get the idea started. What form the celebration should take will have to be worked out by the united wisdom of the City Council, the Chamber of Commerce, and other public bodies. A committee could be formed of representatives from all these associations to formulate a suitable plan and then the whole citizenship be urged to fall in behind and make it the biggest thing we have yet done.

THE TYPICAL MAN

The world makes innumerable jokes at the expense of Scotsmen, according to the Ottawa Journal, and the Scotsmen laugh at the jokes as heartily as other people, and can afford to laugh, because they are in reality the most generous people in the world. It has also been said that the Scotsman, when he does see a joke will laugh at it, but that he doesn't see the joke until two or three days after other people are through laughing. That, too, is a libel, no doubt.

The truth probably is that there is no typical Scot any more than there is a typical Paddy or a typical John Bull. The Scot has acquired a reputation for being slow in catching jokes and relishing epigrams, but there is probably no more foundation for it than there is for the belief that all Irishmen are witty or that all Englishmen have a habit of muddling through. At any rate, whatever their characteristics may be the three races make a pretty fine mixture.

(W. Beach Thomas, in London Spectator)

—Unexpected charm lurks in old Parish registers. Incumbents or churchwardens or others were infrequently scribbled down quaint verses and sentiments of their own. Here are some, deciphered with much trouble from the fading script on the fly-leaf of a register in the parish where I write this. The date of the volume is 1690 to 1714:—

"Ask me not how calmly I
Alin the ills of life defy,
How to baffle human woes,
Woman, woman, woman knows.

You may live and laugh as I,
You, like me, may cares defy,
Join the songs the heart endures,
Woman, woman, woman cures.

Ask me not of empty vows,
Feats of arms and drunken joys,
I have pleasures more divine,
Woman, woman, woman's mine.

Rapture more than folly knows,
More than wit or fame bestows,
Brimming bowls or conquered fields,
Woman, woman, woman yields.

Ask me not of female arts,
Broken vows or faithless hearts,
Tell the wretch who pines and grieves,
Woman, woman, woman leaves.

All delight the heart can know,
All that fortune can bestow,
Wealth of words and crown of kings
Woman, woman, woman brings."

Part of the pleasure extracted from the naive rhymes lies in their utter inappropriateness to the volumne wherein they are written.

The same volumne records in yet more ingenuous style, but in prose, a chance incident in village life. A baby girl was found in a basket hung on a pear-tree. She was rescued, was thereupon by christened Mary Peartree and became by chargeable to the Parish. The expense must have vexed the economic soul of the compiler of the register, for there is a note of anything but regret in the conclusion of his narrative:—"But she soon died, which eased the Parish." Did any unknown parent grieve for poor little Mary Peartree?

FIRST YEAR OF ARMY'S FLYING EXPENSE $150

San Antonio, Tex., Jan. 29.—The appropriations which will be made this year for maintenance of the army air service would have sounded like the combined national debts of the nations of the world to Lieut. Col. B. D. Foulois, who carried the army's flying activities through their first year on an appropriation of $15.

Airplanes were rare machines in 1910. San Antonio saw its first flight in that year when an intrepid aviator, as he styled himself, conducted a flight from a nearby pasture. About ten days later Lieut. Col. Foulois, Lieutenant Fredman, arrived with the army's plane, one of the primitive Wright models, and assembled it at an army camp here.

His first flights were apparently successful, as a newspaper of that time records the fact that he broke his own endurance record a few days after the pilot was assembled by remaining in the air 23 1-2 minutes. Shortly after this Lieut. Foulois and the small person nel assigned to help him take care of the plane became the aviation section of the Signal corps.

The maintenance appropriation of $150 was insufficient and approximately $300 came out of the pockets of the aviation section the first year.

Sidney T. Smith, of Winnipeg, who was elected a director of the Bank of Nova Scotia at the annual general meeting of the shareholders this week. Mr. Smith is president, Smith, Murphy Co., Limited, grain dealers and exporters, Winnipeg; president, Reliance Terminal Elevator Co., Limited, Fort William; president Provincen Elevator Co., Limited, Winnipeg; president, Smith, Murphy and Co., Inc., New York; director, Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., Limited, Montreal, etc.

NEW LEGISLATURE AWAITS NEW BILL AS LT. GOV. OPENS HOUSE

There Will Be a New Speaker and New East Block With New Floor in Chamber—Ferguson Government Has Strong Backing in Assembly

Toronto, Jan. 29.—The new Legislature of Ontario, with a new Speaker, many new members and a new liquor control policy awaiting discussion and adoption, will be opened by a new Lieutenant-Governor, His Honor W. D. Ross, on Feb. 8 next. Incidentally, there is a new East Block of the Legislative Buildings open for occupation and a new and reinforced floor in the Legislative Chamber.

The 17th Legislature sees the Conservative government of Premier Howard Ferguson returned with one of the biggest majorities any government ever had in Ontario—a majority of 36 over all other parties, and of 24 on the question of sale of liquor in government control, which is the main issue of the session.

The Liberal-Progressives returned in the elections on Dec. 1 last year have divided themselves between the Liberal and Progressives groups. Including a few United Farmer representatives among the Progressives, the standing of parties as the House assembles, is as follows:

Conservatives	74
Liberals	17
Independent-Liberals	4
Progressives	10
Labor	1
Total	112

W. D. Black, veteran Conservative member for Addington, who was elected by acclamation last year, will be the new Speaker of the House. He will succeed Hon. George Thompson, who (still retains a Toronto seat. The assembly over which Mr. Black will rule is the fifth in which he has taken part.

Major T. Ashmore Kidd, Conservative, Kingston, will signalize his debut in the House by moving the Address-in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. Dr. Paul Poisson, Conservative, Essex North, also a new member, has been named to second the Address.

The Progressive members of the Legislature, led by W. E. Raney, former attorney-general, like those of the Liberal group under W. E. N. Sinclair, were elected as opposed to the choices in the Ontario Temperance Act. Both Mr. Raney and Mr. Sinclair will receive the additional ministerial grants of leaders of parliamentary groups.

The four Independent-Liberals, Messrs. Finnel (Ottawa East), Proulx (Prescott), Belanger (Russell), and Legault (Sturgeon Falls), will sit with the Liberals but will vote with the Conservatives on the Control bill. The sole Labor representative, Kent K. Brandt (Waterloo South), will also vote with the Conservatives on this question.

OLD DRUGSTORE IS NOW CLOSED

Fredericksburg, Va., Jan. 28.—Young George Washington—he of the cherry tree fame—probably would be a happy man were he alive today. The caster oil for him is closed.

Drugstore where his mother purchased remedies for the ailing sixteen spookery shop in the United States was opened here by Hugh Mercer. The Washington family, nearby, Mary Washington, like most mothers of her day, was a firm believer in caster oil as a cure-all for man ailments.

When George grew up, however, he evidently forgot the physician's concoctions, for it was at Washington's request that Mercer was chosen by congress as a brigadier-general in the Continental army.

MINING GOSSIP

Reports are current that N. A. Timmins is about to take a closer interest in one of the two Quebec companies in which he has a heavy interest, the management of which, however, has been in other hands. This will be done with a view to increasing the engineering efficiency there possible. Now that the preliminary development of the Amulet has been accomplished it is understood that C. Erickson is retiring from management of the Amulet at the end of the month, and that A. Timmins now has will succeed him.

It is also reported in Montreal mining circles that a straight Hollinger subsidiary is likely to be formed for Quebec development. If a subsidiary is will be chartered as the Hollybee Mines, Ltd., capitalized at $3,000,000 of which Hollinger will be the sole stockholding save for directors qualifying shares. The rumor says that five millions is to be issued first. Whether this company, if formed will be a straight development company, or a holding company for interests which Hollinger has in various properties is not known. It is said, though, that Mulligan's Noranda block holdings may be turned over as a modern nucleus, which might indicate that a straight holding company is planned.

Substantial preparatory work is under way in both the Narrow and Women Lake areas according to those who are just back from that camp. They state that the shafts at Hudson are piled high with freight for the Jackson Manion and Bahurst properties, together with heavy supplies now arriving for the Howay, and that it looks as if there would be congestion unless some of it gets going on the trail pretty soon.

GOOD HOCKEY IN CITY LEAGUE; 2 FAST CONTESTS

Proposed New Senior Group Being Formed — Alemite Forfeits Game

Two more fast clean games were run off in the City League schedule last evening, when the Canadian National Express team and the Tigers locked horns, the Expressmen coming out on the long end of a 5-2 score.

In the second game the representatives of the Alemite Company succeeded in downing the Bankers to the tune of 4-0. It was learned after this game however, that the Alemite Company had forfeited the game, due to the fact that two players were used who had previously turned out with the Belleville Juniors. The rules of the City League bar O.H.A. players, and if was unfortunate that the Alemite, after winning the game, should lose it, assumably by an oversight such as this.

In the victory of the Expressmen, the old reliables turned in their usual polished performance, Hurland, Bill Finkle, Strand, Ted Whalen, Summons and the rest. The game was fast throughout, and Referee Farrell rendered the verdict. For the losers, Masters and Hedger were best.

In the second encounter, Prudennent in the Alemite win were Anderson and Rigby; and Labary for the Bankers.

About the best crowd that has turned out, to date, greeted the games last evening and were treated to an evening's worthwhile entertainment.

New Group in Leagues

Plans are under way for the formation of a second group in the City League, with four teams proposing to enter. Hastings Paper Mills, Class, Ritchie Company and the City Dairy Service. The managers of the latter two will meet this afternoon and draw up a schedule for these games, which will be played at Gimpson's Rink. With the completion of the schedules of both groups, the respective group winners will play off for the city championship.

IS A BOY OF 18 FITTED FOR MARRIED LIFE

Many Married Folk Vote Yes on This Question, But Elsie Advances Further Arguments on the Negative Side

I said he wasn't.

So one of 'em along and proudly point ed to his own record, he himself married at that tender age. And, according to this Proud Husband, it was a grand success, for, after some years he was still "trying to please his wife."

I called him a Boy Bride and told him that; with all due respect to Wives, I thought there were more vital jobs for adolescents than supporting and pleasing one of 'em.

Whereupon about 1,267 Married Folk spat all smoked up and said I had no soul and had probably never been in love, and what did I mean by trying to bust up American homes?

Now I admit I was mean to call him a Boy Bride, for I suspect they kidded him about it down at the garage, and he's probably justified in longing to serve 18 Elsie. But I deny that I was trying to bust up American homes. And I repeat that BOYS OF EIGHTEEN ARE NOT FIT MATERIAL UPON WHICH TO FOUND AMERICAN HOMES.

Yes, I know a lot of homes have been founded on the part of eighteen. And they're still going strong ten or twenty year later. But I maintain that both the home and the boy would have been edified if they'd waited four or five years before crashing into matrimony.

In the first place, the American boy of eighteen has a body which is fully matured. Certain trees mature early, but the Anglo-Saxon race does not. The American boy of eighteen may be a big husky, with a score of athletic medals and the appetite of an ox. But he isn't a finished man. And he won't be finished for at least three more years and in some cases not for nine or ten. Nerves, muscles and bones are all imperfectly developed and badly co-ordinated. He's a raw machine and he isn't yet able to endure the strain of life.

The same is true of the mind and spirit of the boy. He can love and hate, bless and curse, just as well as any man—even more fiercely, in fact. But he's in a ferment. Life hasn't sorted him out—set—defined him—molded him into a distinctive individual. HE ISN'T SET. He needs to face the weariness of work, the dangers of freedom, the irritations and tribulations of social gay tants. Until he has faced these things he won't be ready physically or mentally or even morally, to assume the responsibilities of marriage.

"But boys of eighteen DO face those responsibilities and get by with them!"

They get by with them—in a fashion. But they never can mean to themselves or to their wives or families, or to the world, what they might have meant if they had come to their full strength before assuming the yoke. When the time comes to guide their own children such men fall miserably. They don't. They curtailed their own childhood, and they cannot understand the experiences which face the normal, unmarried young man or woman between the ages of eighteen and twenty-five.

They seldom reach this stage, however. For most young men who marry at eighteen, unmarry in even greater haste. Their untried rough grows perish at restrictions of matrimony and they break away. And so they start life amid wreckage and dishonor. It's a very wise law which says that it is not legal for the boy of eighteen to marry unless with his parents' consent. It would be a wiser one if it would forbid the parents to give their consent to such marriage.

Advice to Girls
By Annie Laurie

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

with whom I fell in love. At times she seems to enjoy my company and at others she seems wholly indifferent. The last date I had with her she broke. She gave a satisfactory reason—if it was sincere. But I interpreted her action as a hint that she did not care for my companionship.

Because of this and her indifference at times when I was with her I have avoided seeing her as much as possible. I have tried to forget her but I cannot.

When I meet her she is still friendly and I can see no difference in her attitude. I want to reestablish our friendship. I am undecided as to how to approach her again. Your advice will be greatly appreciated. EAGER.

EAGER: At your next meeting you might ask her whether you may not call some evening. It really is not nearly as difficult as you imagine. You can tell by her attitude whether she would welcome a renewal of the friendship.

If you do not wish to wait for a chance meeting, it would be quite all right to write her a short note. You might explain that you have long wished to renew the friendship and that you wondered whether she shared your wish. You might conclude with adding permission to call.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a girl of eighteen. I have been working for four years I have spent three months. I love him and he loves me.

At first my parents liked him. Now they disapprove of him because of religious differences. "If we marry his parents would grieve if he changed his religion and if I changed my religion I would grieve. What shall I do?

I've tried to forget. We've parted, but couldn't stay away. Don't tell me to forget him for I can't.

BLUE-EYED JUDY.

BLUE-EYED JUDY: Perhaps your parents would agree to the marriage, if you decided to follow your separate religions and be interdenominational from each other or either family. Has that occurred to you?

Discuss the matter with your parents. Assure them that you have tried to forget the young man, but have found that he is essential to your happiness.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a young girl of 19 and am madly in love with a boy several years my senior who is engaged to another girl. It is absolutely impossible for me to forget. What am I to do?

RAVEN LOCKS.

RAVEN LOCKS: There is nothing that you can do but forget the boy who has given his affections elsewhere. It is also impossible to forget, if you make a real effort. Make new friends. Interest yourself in books. In people. In sports. You will find that time will give you the freedom from memory that you seek.

I see no alternative. There is no relief for unwilling love. But I believe you thought that the other girl would be in exactly your unhappy state of mind if you were able to take her fiance away from her.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a young girl of 18. As I have been working for four years I have matured very quickly. The young man with whom I am in love is 17. He is not making enough money at present, so we cannot marry.

We are seriously in love, and it is hard to stay single after we have learned to love each other so much. The young man is a child-digger now and hasn't the least ambition to become anything else. He loves me—he says so—and thinks that we can live on the money he makes.

I shouldn't like to marry a person without ambition. What shall I do? Shall I ever be able to make him ambitious. I want your help. Please advise me. J. SHACK-EYED SUSAN.

SHACK-EYED SUSAN: In spite of the fact that I realize that you are mature for your years, I am afraid that I must advise you against marriage with the boy you describe. While you have studied the problem with they understanding and penetration of a much older woman I rather think that he is far too young to appreciate the responsibilities of marriage. That for one thing would account for his lack of ambition.

You must realize, too, that many a marriage has been wrecked upon the rocks of poverty. A certain minimum of comfort is necessary for peace and harmony. And where the wife has ambitions and the husband is utterly devoid of any desire to better his circumstances there is a basis for continuous and bitter discord.

Children Like Them

Baby's Own Tablets Are Effective and Easy to Give.

You do not have to coax and threaten to get the little ones to take Baby's Own Tablets. The ease with which they are given, as compared with liquid medicines, will appeal to every mother. None is spilled or wasted; you know just how big a dose has reached the little stomach. As a remedy for the ills of childhood arising from derangement of the stomach and bowels they are most satisfactory.

Mrs. Rose Veyer, Williamstic, Conn., says:—"I used Baby's Own Tablets in the Canadian Northwest and found them a wonderful medicine for children's troubles, especially indigestion and constipation. I have also given them to my children for simple fever and the restlessness accompanying teething and they always gave relief. I can recommend Baby's Own Tablets to all mothers."

MANY of the best shirts are in tiers these days, assuming, no doubt, for the lengths to which they used to go. But just to show how gladly it has adopted current chic, this shirt stops its tiers three quarters of the way around, leaving a plain panel down the back of the frock. The waist is likewise in the swing, with the seam blousing above the narrow tie-belt, and with the graceful line of the batwing sleeves. A youthful combination for this frock would be a shirt of black satin crepe with a blouse of cherry red or a rich blue for the crepe de Chine of the skirt and—with a stitch of silver thread for the embroidery on the lighter blue blouse.

HEARTS' HAVEN
By Mildred Barbour

THE GREAT FORMULA

Winter had come again. Again the friendly fire was burning on the living-room hearth. Christine, sat before it her bright head bent over a bit of sewing. On the opposite side of the hearth Lewis Hayen smoked reflectively.

Harvey was sprawled on a fur rug in front of the fire, graceful in his carelessness, his blond hair shining in the firelight.

The rug was an addition to the furnishings of the household. Christine had bought it that the baby, Harvey Junior might have a warm nest in which to lie after his bath.

"Blessings on thee, little man," Harvey father had remarked, when he saw the rug. "Now I'll have a place to smoke in comfort. But your poor mother would never have thought to bother it for me."

On this particular evening, Harvey lay stretched at full length, looking like a splendid young Siegfried. Lewis was hunched up comfortably, his arms encircling his knees. His eyes watched every motion of Christine's hands.

She was the same Christine, slim small, exquisite. She looked as happy as ever, but it was a quieter happiness, a more serious happiness. Suspicion that watched and listened for those days er to her then herself.

Harvey raised a leg and took one of her hands from her needlework, holding it against his lips.

But she disengaged her hand abruptly and leaned forward in her chair.

"Listen!" she commanded. "Wasn't that the baby?"

She sprang up, her sewing tumbling unheeded on Harvey's head, and ran up the stairs.

Harvey laughed, as he extricated him self from a tangle of linen and embroidery silk.

"Absolute nutty about the kid. Lew. Afraid to trust the nurse for a minute. Can't drag her out of the house at night, even if her own mother comes to stay with the baby. Afraid the place we'll burn up—or something."

"Isn't a mother always like that her first child?" remarked Lewis, with a smile. "She'll get over it after a while."

"I hope so."

"You're spoiled. You want all the petting yourself, I'll bet."

"You bet I do!" declared Harvey. "Well, darling." He turned to greet Christine, who was coming quietly down the stairs. "What was the matter? Had His Highness turned over in bed, or something equally frightful?"

"He's all right and smiled upon him. Then, placidly resuming her sewing, she turned to Lewis:

"I'm sorry I said a word about yourself, all evening. Tell me—have you discovered the Great Formula yet?

He took his pipe from between his lips.

"I think I have," he answered quietly.

"Holy cat!" Harvey sat up with a jerk. "Why didn't you tell me?"

"I'm telling you now," smiled Lewis. "I wasn't sure at first. I'd made so many failures before that I didn't want to brag."

"You're a wonder!" declared Harvey. "Now, then, can you see I'm eaten with curiosity?"

Lewis reached into his pocket.

"I've got some of the stuff here. I'll show it to you if you like."

"If I like!" Harvey took him by the arm and pushed him to a chair. He dragged up a reading-lamp and two chairs.

"Fire!" he commanded.

Lewis spread out his papers.

"I dare say," remarked Christine, that it's no use my trying to listen. It'll be too technical for me."

"You bet, honey," said Harvey absently, his eyes already eagerly scanning the notes.

So Christine went on with her sewing one ear listening for a sound from the baby, scarcely conscious of the voices of the two men at the table, until Harvey leaped up.

"You've got it, Lew! You have!"

"I hope so," he said earnestly.

Christine jumped up and ran to him.

"Oh, I'm so glad, Lew. You've found what you've been working for. You've worked so hard and so long."

"It has been pretty strenuous," he admitted, and she noticed, for the first time, the tired shadows around his eyes and the new lines about his mouth. Her boy's face was as fresh as a college sophomore's.

"I've worked day and night—mostly night," Lewis admitted, "because I couldn't take the time from there during the day. Perhaps it wasn't quite fair to them to expend so much of my energy at night, but I honestly believe I gave them their money's worth. However," he added, with a smile and a shrug, "that may not be the way the boss takes it—and I'd rather layed for his co-operation in putting it out."

"I say," he remarked slowly, "I never thought of that. My uncle is a poet for wasting all he can get—so fellow's time and money. He's likely to raise merry Ned and fire you, if he kinds out what you've been doing with his lab and supplies.

"Here's an idea," he added, after a moment, "I've got a pretty good pull with the old boy. What say, I send him out on your discovery, Lew? Now tell him you did it—anybody in his employ, that is. Then, if he finds it's the big thing we think it is the firm'll take it on. You'll be the fair-haired boy in the shop, even if you did steal office time. But, if it doesn't pan out, you'll still have your job and opportunity to go after another big thing."

Lewis seemed instantly

"I'll be awfully grateful, if you can put it across for me, old man."

When Lewis had left and Christine had gone up-stairs, Harvey stood with his back to the dying fire, deep in thought. Christine had to call him twice before he came out of his revery.

"Yes, darling, coming," he answered. Then, very slowly and thoughtfully, he mounted the stairs to his room.

Nerves at High Tension

The Result of Keen Competition and the Struggle for Supremacy.

This is the age of hurry. The hurry at breakfast, the hurry to work, the hurry at lunch, the hurry home and the hurry out to evening engagements.

There is no time for rest or sleep. No time for the nerves to renew their vigor. The spirit of hurry is everywhere and few can escape its influence.

As a result of this constant nervous strain you find yourself irritable and nervous.

Heart disturbances are among the early indications of an overtaxed system. There is headache, stomach troubles, brain fag and neuralgic pains.

If you could only get away from it all for a rest. Some have solved the problem by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to restore the exhausted nervous system and now rejoice in good health and strength. They were just as rundown as you are but persisted in this treatment until their vigor and energy was thoroughly restored. There is nothing like Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to build up the rundown nervous system.

"Don't come to New York to look for a job, unless you have at least $100 to meet expenses" is the warning sent out by the Young Mens Christian Association.

"New York draws hundreds of young men every week, and many are unprepared for the hard life before them," said Charles G. Wright, executive secretary of the West Side Y.M.C.A. "Some succeed, some drift into mediocrity, some into crime, and some become lobos. That they often come from good homes and are fine types of boys makes the situation all the more tragic."

BELLE THEATRE

George Jessel, famous for his portrayal of "The Jazz Singer," one of the greatest color Broadway hits of the past year, is now stared by the Warners in a yellow-cheek heart drama of the days of the World War, "Private Izzy Murphy." Izzy Goldberg, having to leave his quarters in the Ghetts, adds drawing appeal to the customers of the Irish neighborhood into which he moves, by naming himself "Murphy." His delicatessen business thrives to the point of making it possible for him to bring papa and mamma from Russia. They come. Are delighted with their son's success. All goes well, And then—the World War!

"Izzy" joins up with an Irish regiment, still keeping the Delicatessen name with which he has also courted pretty Eileen, Colleen, and goes overseas. Word comes that he has been killed in action. But after the armistice, when the boys are parading up Fifth Avenue among the cheering crowds, the Gallagher's are still with joy to see their boy among the rest.

The complications which follow (with a fine father, Mac Ginsberg, the marriage broker, doughboys, neighbors) are so mirth-provoking as human, that everyone in the audience forgets that such things as rancor and prejudice can exist in the world. "It is one of those rare plays which love universal appeal.

Patsy Ruth Miller is "Eileen Colleagan," the pretty Irish sweetheart, and plays supporting company and make the play a riot of mirth, a rough-and-tumble of all things American.

REGENT THEATRE

A whole town went into the movies just summer during the filming of "The Overland Stage," the Chas. R. Rogers production starring Ken Maynard for First National, which comes to the Regent next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Deadwood, South Dakota, whither the company travelled to make scenes of the great pageant and celebration, "The Days of '76," and to use a thousand Sioux Indians from the nearby reservation, was the town that made its return debut as a body.

Every man, woman, chick and child in the place was invited by Director Al-best Rogelt to appear on the frontier town set, wearing quaint old costumes of years ago, and is photographed in the picture. And it is conservatively estimated that every citizen, except the telegraph operator, and a woman in the hospital, was on hand. Maybe her name stayed with her.

ROGELL LIKED

It wasn't entirely their enthusiasm for the movies that brought about such whole-hearted co-operation. It was as much their friendship for Albert Rogell, the director. Rogell had been in Deadwood previously, to make some movie scenes, and at that time had established himself as almost an "adopted son" of Deadwood.

At that time he suggested and helped to organize the Black Hills Community Association," bringing together rivals towns in a promotion and advertising plan to benefit them all, and to every to all the world the beauties of the Black Hills.

Rogell was made honorary president of the association, and when word came from him that he was coming to Deadwood to make a picture for Rogers and First National, Al Mayer just wired back that the whole town was his!

"The Overland Stage" is from the story by Marion Jackson.

CAPITOL THEATRE

The great emotional address, Nazimova, in "The Redeeming Sin," a Vitagraph picture, comes to the Capitol Theatre Monday night, to remain Three days, and from all accounts picturegoers are due to have a rare treat.

"The Redeeming Sin" is a J. Stuart Blackton production from an engrossing novel by L. V. Jefferson. Nazimova has the role of Joan, "Queen of the Paris Halls." She is sought after by Lapine, the Apache leader, but is attracted by Paul de Gafolet, a young nobleman. Lapine plans to get even with his young rival by kidnapping Joan, but Gafolet is on the job and rescues her. Lapine determined to win her, steals a great necklace for her, she hids him return it, and he complies. Then the girl decides that she loves the Apache leader after all.

All the scenes in the pictures are laid in Paris, and J. Stuart Blackton has reproduced the narrow streets and old buildings with remarkable fidelity. A fight in the Paris sewers, with gangsters mixing it up, is declared to be one of the most realistic combats ever screened.

Lou Tellegen impersonates the Apache leader and Paul de Gafolet is cast to Conway Tearle's performance. Others in the well balanced cast are Carleton D. Miller, Otis Harlan, Rosita Marstini, Rose Tapley, Eric Mayne, and Violet Virginia.

FRANK YEIGH TO GIVE HIS LATEST TRAVELOGUE IN BELLEVILLE SOON

What the person he sees the beauties and glorious expanse of our own Country! We have a wonderful variety of scenery right here in Canada. To see all these time and much money but in one evening you may hear and see a great deal about our Dominion at the celebrated world traveller Frank Yeigh of Toronto, tells in picture story of the influences we possess and the progress made in developing our unlimited resources. Possibly no one else is so familiar with this subject as Mr. Yeigh because for years past he has made a business of getting first hand knowledge and gathering information in his year book called "6000 Facts About Canada." He has been in close touch with Government reports and newspaper records for many years and has contributed articles for the press and magazines particularly E. S. and Church publications. In his summer outing of the Y.M.C.A. and boys' clubs he has learned to observe things of many sorts. Mr. Yeigh has addressed over a thousand gatherings of business and service organizations such as the Rotary, Kiwanis, Canadian, Empire Club, Progress Clubs, Colleges, Schools and Universities here and in the United States and Europe, and is at home with any audience.

A clear eye, is afforded Belleville in having Mr. Yeigh portray the magnificence and grandeur of our Rocky Mountains, prairies, mineral, lumbering, fishing, agricultural and manufacturing industries which formed Canada's Silver East and Golden West. This travelogue will be of permanent benefit to all who hear it and should be heard by every citizen at this time in our history.

Home and School Council, Oshawa: The splendid opinion of the two travelogues are decidedly favourable. The slide difference in particular was quite enthusiastic in his approval of the two entertainments—afternoon and evening, as an ideal. Home and School Club effort, from the lecture to the use of real educational value to the scholars.

The evening's entertainment is under the auspices of the young ladies of the Mizpah Class of Bridge St. Church B. S. and a good margin of proceeds is hoped for, to augment their plans for community endeavour.

Prof. Hunt will render some piano numbers and Mr. James Bankier and others will sing a few selections.

Out of scores of personal and press comments the following will convince us of this high class artist.

Whitby—His lectures, an impetus to education.

London, Eng., Daily Telegraph—Mr. Frank Yeigh addressed over 200 members of the London Rotary Club yesterday at the Hotel Cecil on "Canada Today," in which he dealt with the Empire trade of Canada and British investments there.

London, Eng., Financial News—Mr. Frank Yeigh, Canadian lecturer and writer, gave a picture in Kingsway Hall yesterday afternoon on Canada in which

BASKETBALL

The newly formed Bay of Quinte Basketball League got off to a start last night when Albert College met Trenton High School at Trenton. The game was fast and well-played, Albert College began with a rush and netted four baskets before the Trenton boys tightened up. After that the play was up and down with Albert getting most of the baskets. Trenton defence too often allowed the opposite for wards to penetrate behind them, but in their shooting it was largely a case of bad luck. At half time the score was 19-5 in favor of Albert.

In the second half the play was more even. Trenton checked more closely and there were fewer baskets scored against them. The final count was 27-13.

Albert College—Robertson (9); Hughes (14); Crawford (2); Wright (2); Bandy, Downie, McEwen (2); Earle, Hill.

A Weak Stomach
Can be Strengthened Through the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Wonderful is the process by which the chemistry of the body changes the food we eat into blood. And the whole of our well-being depends upon this being accomplished day after day year in and year out. Sometimes the process becomes faulty, and then food, instead of feeding us, feeds on us. This is followed by all the pangs of indigestion such as pain in the stomach, pains around the heart, often nausea after eating, and a dislike for all kinds of food.

The only way to overcome these troubles is to tone up the digestion so that you can assimilate all your food. To do this you have only to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. A short course of these pills will quickly tone up the stomach and banish indigestion. Here is a bit of convincing proof given by Mrs. Chas. Ladner, Silverdale, P.E.I., who says:—"For some years I was a sufferer from stomach trouble. Every, thing I ate caused distress, sour-ness, acid and belching. I could not eat meat or potatoes, and I grew weak and nervous. No medicine seemed to help me until I was persuaded to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and these simply worked wonders. I took the pills faithfully for a couple of months by which time every symptom of the trouble disappeared, and there has not since been the slightest symptom of stomach trouble. No wonder I praise Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

You can get these pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

cattle, all other explodable farm products had also increased substantially.

80 Per Cent. Increase

With the improved outlook for immigration, due largely to the more satisfactory condition of public agriculture today, compared with a few years ago, and the immediate prospect for further railway branch line construction, including the Hudson's Bay, it was estimated that the aggregate agricultural production throughout the prairie provinces had a good prospect of increasing fifty per cent. before the termination of this next decade. As the increased wheat production during the past decade amounted to 173,220,000 bushels, the increase regarding the next ten years will be lowest upon as within the possibilities of attainment. The beneficial effect upon business generally throughout Canada of such agricultural expansion is so obvious that it only needs to be mentioned to be appreciated.

Mr. Motherwell also dealt with the great importance of improving the QUALITY of our general exportable farm crop surpluses as the best possible means of capturing and retaining the markets of the world, particularly the British market. Looking toward this end a strong, consistent campaign had been carried out by the Federal Department of Agriculture, along the lines of seeing and distributing pure-bred sires, pure-bred sires, pure-bred sires,

ENGINE MEN PLAN BREAK FROM INTER'L BROTHERHOOD

Mexican Rebellion Crushed --- Quieter in China --- British Women Want Vote at 21 Years

SIXTEEN C.N.R. ENGINEERS ARE SLATED FOR REMOVAL FROM CITY

Men Meet Sunday Afternoon To Discuss Their Course of Action

CLAIM UNFAIR RULE

Proposal to Form a Canadian Brotherhood is Heartily Endorsed

The men in the Engine Service on the Canadian National Lines met yesterday afternoon in hear Mr. C. D. Gregory of Battlecreek, Mich., talk on the grievances which the men have, arising out of the division of seniority through amalgamation of the Grand Trunk, Canadian Northern, Grand Trunk Pacific and International Lines, which have been amalgamated into the Canadian National Railway. The question of forming a Canadian Brotherhood of Engineers absolutely separate from and independent of the International Brotherhood was up for discussion and it is understood that the Belleville men are 90% in favour of such action.

Mr. H. A. Hogan, Chairman of the Grievance Committee of the Local Brotherhood acted as Chairman of the meeting. The feeling in Belleville is particularly strong, as some sixteen men in the district to be moved from this city to various points and they feel that they have been unable to suffer under an unjust ruling. The majority of these men are owners of homes and have established the family of other connections in Belleville.

Ordered to Move

The trouble dates back to the amalgamation of the old Canadian Northern with the Grand Trunk. On May 1st, 1926, an agreement was finally signed between Brotherhood Officials from Cleveland and The Canadian National Railways by which the conflicting seniority rights of the workers were settled on a basis of 10 Grand Trunk, men to one Canadian Northern man.

The territory from Brockville and Ottawa to Niagara Falls and the Bonnet Tunnel is one district and the seniority rights of the men in this district were adjusted as a district. At the present time, about 66 men are being brought into this district from the territory lying to the west (centering around Port William) and apparently there are only about half enough senior positions available in this district. The change involves shifting quite a number of men about sixteen from Belleville, and the men resent what they claim is the unfairness of bringing men from another district.

Origin of Trouble

The Belleville men are slated to be moved today but Mr. Hogan left for Toronto this afternoon in the hopes of having the shifts postponed until some adjustment could be made. The proposal to form a purely Canadian Brotherhood arose out of this and other difficulties. The Canadian members feel that the International Organization has treated them arbitrarily and without power consideration of their rights in signing the agreement last May 1st. They are seeking to have this agreement annulled and in this connection, sixteen Canadian chairmen and the general chairman were expelled from the Brotherhood.

At the Sunday afternoon meeting Mr. C. D. Gregory, Chairman of the Grievance Committee at Battlecreek Mich., went extensively into the dispute and urged the men to form their own Brotherhood as that they could obtain proper consideration for their claims. He received an enthusiastic welcome from the men. In opening his address he said.

China Protests

Pekin, Jan. 31.—V. K Wellington Koo, foreign minister of the northern government, today addressed a note to the British legation, protesting against the dispatching of British forces to Shanghai, and asked that it be transmitted to London in hope that the British Government would give necessary instructions for the immediate withdrawal of troops dispatched to China so nothing untoward may happen to mar the friendly relations of the two nations."

Ignore Objections

London Jan. 31.—The British government, competent circles say does not take seriously the protest made by the Pekin government today, protesting the despatch of British forces to Shanghai and asking for their immediate withdrawal. The expression of the British government's position indicates that demands will not be granted. Transports bearing forces continue on their way to the Far East.

WILL TURN OUT 100,000 BARRELS BEER ANNUALLY

Quinte Brewery Expects to Commence Actual Brewing in 10 Days

While it is unnecessary for beer to make Belleville famous, from present indications Belleville will be famous as producing the best beer in America when the new Quinte Breweries product has been placed on the market. An Intelligencer representative paid a visit today to the Brewery where the newly-arrived brewmaster, Hans Baur, is installed and getting a close up of the work before him. Mr. Baur who impresses one as a man who is a thorough master of himself and his business, received the scribe with every courtesy and before talking of himself showed him through the plant. The newness, size and completeness of the brewery was something of a revelation. Actual brewing will commence in about ten days.

Was Surprised

"Yes," said Mr. Baur, "I was very pleasantly surprised myself when I came here. I had no idea it was such an excellent plant. I understood that it was a small brewery, that I would have to improve to take care of the future output. When the public call for demand, however, I can turn out close to 100,000 barrels a year with present equipment by enlarging the storage.

"Do you expect that there will be a demand as large as that?" Mr. Baur was asked.

"I have no doubt," was the confident reply, "that the demand will be limited only by the capacity to produce the beer. It is not extraordinary that I should think so. I will

The co-operative movement to a weekly paper and the alliance would greatly strengthen the Labor party, with which its members have previously held much sympathy.

CANADA'S TRADE BALANCE LOWER

1926 Imports Increased $118,000,000 and Expo's Fell $2,400,000

Ottawa, Jan. 31.—While the values of Canada's foreign trade continues large, the trend that commenced at the time is working heavy with the Dominion's favorable trade balance. During the calendar year of 1926 the imports were $1,006,241,211, an increase over the previous year of over $118,000,000, while the exports for 1926 were $1,268,581,079, a decrease of over $2,400,000.

The retrograde tendency shown both in the increase in imports and the decrease in exports, is evident in trade with two important customers—the United Kingdom and the United States Exports to Great Britain decreased nearly $23,000,000 to a total of $453,233,013 and imports from the United Kingdom increased over $7,000,000 to a total of $183,736,395. Exports to the United States decreased over $7,000,000 to a total of $465,285,500 and imports from the United States increased nearly $80,000,000, to a total of $669,457,564.

Canadian imports from Australia more than doubled to $3,280,238 and exports to that Dominion increased by over $4,000,000 to a total of $18,262,831; while $4,736,395 from the United States decreased nearly 50 per cent., to South Africa they decreased slightly, and to the British West Indies they increased over $3,000,000 to a total of $14,250,677. Exports to China increased nearly $3,000,000 and to Japan they increased tremendously by over $12,000,000 to a total of $72,393,000. Imports from France increased about $1,000,000 and exports to France increased by about the same amount.

Canada continues to import more figure than it exports. The imports for 1926 were $28,329,112, an increase of nearly $5,000,000, while the exports were $24,538,581, an increase of nearly $6,000,000.

"DIARY OF LOVES" RULED OUT OF COURT IN THE BROWNING TRIAL

White Plains, Jan. 31.—Fireworks in the Peaches Hexam-Edward Browning separation suit made their appearance early, at the resumption of the trial today when Justice Seeger ruled "the Diary of Love" kept by Peaches, out of court as evidence ten minutes after the trial began. The diary was said by Browning-counsel to have contained names of several "boy friends" of the young wife. They letters identified by Mrs. Browning as having been written to girl friends who also ruled out.

The morning session was occupied by character witnesses for Mrs. Browning. Leslie Fullerminer,newspaper graduate writer, testified that he saw Mrs. Browning on Thursday before she left her husband. "She told me Mr. Browning was becoming unbearable and asked us

"What shall I do?" he said. "I said 'we are newspaper people, not lawyers'." Nothing, he added was said about writing ally articles at that time. Later Peaches agreed to write articles and received $1,000. Browning will probably testify to-morrow.

QUEBEC MADE A HUGE PROFIT ON LIQUOR SALES

Business Last Year Not as Good as in 1923-24 and 1922-23

Quebec, Jan. 31—The report of the Quebec liquor commission shows that the total sales amounted to $19,018,209; the profits $4,624,338 after payment of all charges.

From this is taken an additional $25,000 for working capital, which brings the profits down to $4,171,333, but to this must be added a sum a $1,278,155 derived from permits, duties, fines and seizures, thus making the amount, hence the net profits are given as $5,446,490.

NOT HIGHEST

The figure of $19,018,209 for sales is not the highest in the history of the commission. This was exceeded in the two years of 1923-24 and 1922-23. Of last year's receipts, the year under review, the federal government received $7,276,055 in customs, excise and sales tax, which is lower than the total received by the commission for purchase of stock operating charges and general expenses, the figure for those three items being $7,230,979.

TO-DAY'S THOUGHT

Great Deeds have been From simple sources.

—SHAKESPEARE.

ONE EXPERIMENT

The experience of Texas with "Ma" Ferguson has not been such as to encourage that state to be in a hurry look ing for another woman governor. She seems determined to make a name for herself by the exercise of the pardoning power. Her record so far is somewhere in the neighborhood of 4,000 pardons. So serious has this situation become in the estimation of the citizens of the state that in some districts the trial of all criminal cases has been suspended until her term of office expires. What is the use of sentencing people for crime only to have them pardoned by the governor?

Of course the experience of Texas with Mrs. Ferguson is not necessarily an argument against the selection of a woman for governor; she may be more by an exception; but she will certainly not stand as a brilliant example of woman's capacity for public service.

LAW AND JUSTICE

A Texas preacher who shot and killed an unarmed man, following an argument is acquitted of murder by a Texas jury and goes free of all punishment.

A moving picture star, legally accused of no crime, is branded throughout the world as guilty of unpardonable offence on the strength of his wife's suit for divorce, his property is seized by the courts and held as security for the payment of alimony, and there are murmurs that his pictures should be banned.

An eccentric, middle-aged New York millionaire, whose affairs with young girls have been a newspaper scandal for months, and whose marriage to one of them proved a super-sensation, ends his and her love in the manner which fills the court room where the story of his married life is being revealed in shameful detail.

A strike of the building trades unions in San Francisco ends by "the entering out process." "In the course of the ten months' warfare," writes a correspondent "several hundred men, whose only offence was that of working for their living and for that of their families, were assaulted; some twenty or more were maimed for life; and in more than one case the result was the death of a nonunion man."

There seems to be work for Uncle Sam nearer home than Nicaragua.

NECESSARY CONDITION

Whatever may be the merits of the St. Lawrence seaway project, it is more than doubtful if this country will become a party to it so long as Chicago is authorized by the U.S. government to abstract water from the great lakes. This appears to be realized by William Bruce Mason, a Wisconsin delegate to the regional conference of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater association, in session at Muskegon, Mich., yesterday. Mr. Bruce pointed out that, as half of the water in the great lakes belongs to Canada, neither the U.S. government nor the U.S. congress had any right to authorize the diversion of water at Chicago; and he added: "Canada can never fully approve the St. Lawrence-waterway until the Chicago water steal is discontinued."

How could it be otherwise? The diversion in question is in violation of a treaty to which the United States and Canada are parties. If an American municipality is to be not merely permitted but authorized by the U.S. government to appropriate Canadian as well as American water to the amount of 10,000 cubic feet a second in violation of treaty obligations, American municipalities might be authorized to take for their own uses double, treble or quadruple that amount, thus ruining the navigation of the St. Lawrence and making the construction of a deep waterway impossible. Before any Canadian money can be spent on that seaway there must be a guarantee, she'll have still no enough water for navigation purposes.

BRITAIN IN CHINA

The announcement that a considerable British force is going to Shanghai has evidently disturbed some of the people in England and elsewhere who oppose, by its every action, that step. To the British Government may do in foreign affairs is animated by what they choose to dub imperialism, meaning thereby that Britain wants to trample on somebody who does not want to be trampled on.

Of course the day is past when any British Government would want to trample on anybody, or would indeed dare to trample on anybody—for public opinion in the Motherland Country, including all parties, would promptly kick that government out of power. The day is past when the government of any English-speaking country, — unless perhaps that of the United States — would venture to interfere unnecessarily with any other country.

The force which Great Britain is accumulating at Shanghai is intended to protect the foreign settlements there from attack and massacre. This is not an empty fear. It has happened before Shanghai has been seized at least once in its history by a rebel Chinese force and has been attacked repeatedly, and if anything was to be done at the present time to attempt to protect the foreign settlements at Shanghai, whose people number 20,000, including British and other Europeans, Americans and Japanese, the only common sense thing was to place there a force powerful enough to compel the respect of even the strongest of the warring Chinese factions, or of mobs in Shanghai itself, which has a population of a million and a half.

A man's automobile stalled in a mud hole near Bass Lake last week. While making a vain attempt to get out, a small boy appeared with a team of horses.

"Want me to haul you out, mister?"

"How much do you want?"

"Three dollars."

After the work had been done and the money paid, the tourist asked:

"Do you pull out many cars here?"

"About 12 a day on the average," replied the boy.

"Do you work nights, too?" enquired the tourist.

"Yep, I haul water for those mud holes."

SURVEYORS TELL OF EXPERIENCES CHARTING WILDS

Thelon River's Source one of Many Mysteries Cleared Up by Land Surveyors

Ottawa, Ont., Jan. 29 (By C. P.).—The myth as to the headwaters of the Thelon river, one of the great rivers of Northern Canada, was one of the gorgeous mineral mysteries solved by a topographical surveyor during the field season of 1926, according to the report of the topographical Surveys Committee presented by E. W. Cautley, D.L.S., at the annual convention of Dominion Land Surveyors in session here today.

School geographies and even the best of government maps have shown this stream as heading a relatively short distance northeast of lake Athabaska. Last summer, G. H. Blanchet, D.L.S., made an exploratory trip into the country northeast of the Athabaska, selecting for the first part of his journey a traditional Indian route from Tazin Lake to the headwaters of the Tazbend. A river known to the natives as "Skin of an Animal" was ascended to a plateau 1,000 feet above lake Athabaska where another river was discovered flowing northeast along Hearne's course of the Thelewaik river (supposed to be the Thelon.) This river after flowing one hundred miles in the desired direction, turned southeasterly—instead of north—and joined Dubawnt river at Wholdaia Lake. Thus the exploration removes the myth of the Thelon head waters which has persisted for 150 years, since Hearne's time.

Mr. Cautley referred to the "practically unexplored, uninhabited and almost totally unsurveyed" portion of Canada as the larger part of this country, and stressed the need of reliable maps in connection with the development of wealth of mine and forest in this great hinterland—development which is always retarded and in some cases made impossible for want of them. Discovery of the greatest mining camps of Cobalt (1903), Porcupine (1909), Kirkland Lake (1911, Rouyn (1923) and Red Lake (1925) waited on and followed railway construction.

MODERN AIDS UTILIZED

Wireless telegraphy and air flying—the two most amazing developments of modern science—are being utilized by the topographical surveyor in making known this north country—in placing on the maps the maze of rivers and lakes which will make it possible for the prospector to enter the country, and to travel in whatever direction he pleases. Transportation, Mr. Cautley said, is not difficult in northern Ontario and Quebec, but the lakes are irregular, and deeply indented, and the traveller must know how far it is expedient for him to follow any one particular system of waterways before transferring by portages to another, the existence of which he must also know about.

Aerial photographs used in conjunction with the ground work of the topographical surveyor is providing this information, said Mr. Cautley reported that last summer the Topographical Survey of Canada had four parties engaged on this work in northern Ontario, and that the Royal Canadian Air Force work in conjunction with the Survey in taking photographs.

The north country while literally unknown, and unexplored is not the only country needing maps, said Mr. Cautley spoke of the situation in the older parts of Canada where information desired on individual tracts surveys of all kinds, many of them ancient, not to say obsolete. Through such modern surveys as are being carried out the old information is being correlated and new information gathered from which national maps are prepared.

In Western Canada, the Dominion Land System of Surveys—a system of surveying land which covers a greater area than any other prerconceived method of subdividing land for settlement in any part of the world—providing the basis for mapping, and that adequate mapping of this vast area was conceived at an early date is shown in the name of the surveyors' organization. The Topographical Survey, has lately been able to devote more of its energy to this end of its original objectives.

Dominion Land Surveyors, Mr. Cautley pointed out, were last season engaged in mapping in twenty-one areas of Canada. They were scattered throughout all the provinces and two parties invaded the northwest territories. The work ranged from the highly detailed map of areas of great economic importance to the exploration work of the north, where in addition to solving the mystery of the head-waters of a river, an investigation was made with a view to showing on a map the feeding resources of the new Wood Buffalo Park.

The growing tourist traffic in Canada was not being over-looked by the map makers, Mr. Cautley pointed out, and three parties engaged in mapping areas decidedly attractive to tourists. In British Columbia, the photo-topographic system of survey developed to a high degree of perfection in Canada, was being utilized to portray the relief of mountain, area, the rivers, creeks and trails which would make the glories of the Selkirk mountains accessible to the tourist. The boundaries of the latest addition to Canada's chain of mountain parks—Kootenay Park—were also delineated during the season.

SHOT IN LEG

Shirley Williams, Sr. Island, is seriously ill at his home as the result of a most unusual accident. Returning from the duck pit he carried his gun with each trigger cocked, when a gun on a table exploded, the bullet passing through Williams' leg. The handling of the gun caused a recoil and it struck a wall firing again, the bullet passing through the ceiling of a bedroom.

FAREWELL SERMONS

Rev. Mr. Young who has been in charge of the Thomas' Church pending the arrival of the new vicar, Rev. Mr. Lewis, preached his farewell services yesterday at St. Thomas' Church. Mr. Young, who has worked in the diocese for the past forty-two years, will now spend for the last time before retiring, taking the place of Rev. John Lyons at Picton until the arrival of the new rector. His has been a long and wonderful service in the interests of the Church of England and his retirement, enforced by advancing years, is much regretted by the clergy and laity.

The Tigers and Intelligencer will clash at 8 p.m. on Thursday night with the Butchers and Alamite locking horns at 9 o'clock. On Friday night the Belt Theatre and Bakers will meet in the opening game with the Y's Men and C.N.R. Express, the league leaders for the attention in the last game. The Express-Y's Men's game looms up as one of the best of the season. Both teams have yet to be defeated and a good game is in store for the fans and they are advised to keep this date open.

NEW BAPTIST PASTOR

Sermons of outstanding interest and power were preached by Rev. Hilliard Jones, newly appointed pastor of Victoria Avenue Baptist Church yesterday and were heard by congregations of large congregations. Rev. Mr. Jones' coming to the city is a distinct addition to the community and the Church is considered most fortunate in obtaining a minister of Rev. Mr. Jones' calibre. The pastor in his morning address rendered an appropriate sermon for the first meeting of a pastor with his congregation.

MARKET SPOTLIGHT ON MINING STOCKS

HOWEY M&M BROADLEY

With the price of silver staging a strong rally, having advanced within the past few days above 30 cents, only a few cents per ounce under the average for the past few years, a revival of interest in silver stocks has taken place which should develop still further if the white metal market continues to show its present strength. The silver stocks shared without exception have been selling for sometime past at unusually low levels. Under the circumstances it is only to be expected that the advance in silver should find immediate reflection in the market price of the white metal stocks. Cassik-Trethewey on Saturday closed up 10 points at $1.17. This morning it opened at 1.26 bid and sold as high as $1.42. This rapid rise is naturally followed by some profit taking, but at the time of this writing there is $1.30 bid.

WILL TURN OUT

explain why Canada has always been an ale drinking nation, consequently the art of lager has been neglected. No good lager beer is brewed in Canada. This brewery will produce lager beers such as are produced only in Europe and some especially fine breweries in the United States prior to prohibition. As there will be no opposition in this market, the product is a sell out. Budweiser was a popular drink in Canada in the old days—we will produce a lager as good, if not superior to Budweiser. Can you not see the answer? Our materials will be the best obtainable and our manufacturing expenses we hope to keep low and thus complete. Anyway, a company run of business-like principles and "better than the other fellow and you will get the business." We intend to operate on that basis of business and "build a good, but "better than".

The brewmaster beamed an optomistic smile as he led the Press past the great refrigerating plant into the brewhouse with its huge kettles capable of turning out 150 barrels in a single brew and continued through the cellars with the huge glass-lined tanks, and last into the bottling house where the final twist is given to the entire operation. Men were at work cleaning and washing bottles. Unless it is the first requisite of brewing. Scalding water, soda, soap and paint in everywhere putting the place into an ultra hygenic condition. Not the smallest germ is left anywhere to pollute the yeast germ which is now being developed in the famous Sterble Academy in Chicago.

"The process of beginning the manufacture would be too technical to be of interest to the public," Mr. Baur explained. "You take certain ingredients take the minute care to get start ed right. Everything is analyzed, kept to the most rigorous standards, built, bops, etc., following in order. We will use only the best food products materials, but also the best that can be pure, free of all infection and rich in food value. I cannot explain how I intend to make my beer," Mr. Baur said with a knowing wink. "That is just what the other fellow would like to know. I am sorry but that as a surprise and the other fellow will get a surprise when he tastes the product."

While the brewmaster was loath to speak of the technique of his art, he was only slightly less so in speaking of himself. Replying to the query "Where did you start in the brewing business?" Mr. Baur said, "I can hardly remember when I was not connected with the brewing business. Where I came from beer and food as well as drink and the art of brewing is a profession. I was connected with many breweries in Europe from a very early age after graduating from the world famous Brewing Academy of Weihenstephen, near Munich, Bavaria. I became brewmaster in some of the world's most famous breweries in Europe as well as America.

Home in U. S. A.

"While my home is in Cincinnat where I was brewmaster till prohibition was enforced, I have until lately been brewmaster in Guadalajara Mexico, which is nearly 12,000 feet above sea level. While the altitude was almost unbearable to me, my wife was threatened with complete breakdown and I was obliged to leave. This is a pleasant change for both of us as yours' altitude and climate here is ideal. We have both decided to settle here and only hope Belleville will like us as well as we like Belleville."

MINING GOSSIP

Kirkland Lake, Ont. Jan. 31.—Steady progress is being made in shaft-sinking at the Northland Gold Mines property in Teck township. At the end of the year the working had reached a depth of 725 feet. Considerable fracturing was noticed, extensive fracturing was noticed, especially during the last 50 feet of sinking than at any previous time. The quartz vein filling is similar in every respect to that of the producing mines of the Kirkland Lake camp at the deeper levels.

Important ore has been opened up in the Kirkland Lake gold mine at the 1,000-foot level, where a cross-cut has been sent a with a view to intersecting the upward extension of the ore shoots opened below two thousand feet. The ore just encountered is reported to be high grade, and from both values and location it is believed to be the extension of the chute found at depth. If this is the case, ore is indicated in the shoot for a depth of over 700 feet.

Present interest is centred in the Vipond property that the old Porcupine Crown ore system which fastled and was lost by the old Crown Company, has been picked up by drill holes from the Vipond which recently acquired the Crown. It will be recalled that the Crown was one of the earliest producers in Porcupine. It mined out one fairly high grade vein and then lost it, closing down as a "worked out" property. J. M. Bell of the adjacent Vipond studied the geological data on the mine and its neighbors as a result of which Vipond acquired the Crown. Ore already indicated is said to have been picked up throughout Vipond for its purchase. If this be the case, it will bear out the theory of Dr. Bowling, a former Crown manager, who was so confident in being able to reopen ore on the property that he tried unsuccessfully to secure the property some years ago.

Cobalt, Ont., Jan. 31.—Victory Silver Mines is slowly developing the new vein found in a short crosscut from the ninth level at a depth of 160 feet. Drifting on a vein showing patches of silver at this horizon for 200 feet, a fault was encountered. Fractures showing silver running to the north indicated the continuation of the vein in this direction, consequently a crosscut was run 16 feet where it encountered a vein showing nine inches of 5,000-ounce ore.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES

As a result of the two games played Saturday afternoon, the basketball tournament which has been in progress at the Y. M. C. A. for the past few weeks is drawing to a close, having reached the semi-finals. In "A" Group, A. L. Stilwell will play off with A. W. Armstrong, and the winner will be pitted against the survivor in "B" Group, either F. Faulkner or M. Davison. With only three sets to play it is quite probable that the finals will be played off before the end of the week.

Saturday afternoon provided two good fixtures from which the winners contest the semi-finals. In the Armstrong-Wells' fracas, "Army" had to go to beat two of a kind to gain the decision from Vern and towards the conclusion of the second game it looked very much as if a third would have to be played, but a belated rally by the winner, made a third session unnecessary. The score of the first game was 21-15; the second 21-19.

In the other fixture, Davison had a very slight edge on Chadwick and took the set only after three games had been played. The final game ended 21-20 and gave "Davy" the decision by only a one-point margin. The scores of the other two games were 21-8 for Davison, and 21-16 for Chadwick.

FIRESIDE LURE PART OF WOMAN'S JOB

One Lonely Wife is Reminded That Spirit of Comradeship is Necessary to a Fun-Loving Mate

(By Elsie Marlowe)

"A Lonely wife——"

That's the way so many of them sign their letters.

Does the pity of it touch your heart?

Perhaps not. We're so used to Lonely Wives that they no longer move us. A man in a host but as one—a prisoner "in solitary"—for such loneliness we have hysterical response. But the tired little woman sitting alone in the kitchen after her day's work has been done—there's nothing dramatic in that picture to us. Yet for her, the hours are so terrible and as hopeless as for the fish in the bowl or the cell.

Listen:

DEAR ELSIE:

I'm a young woman, just twenty-five. I have been married for six years and have a home, husband and three children. I dearly love my husband and children and in a certain way my husband is good to me. He gives me every thing we need; but Elsie, he just won't stay home after work. He eats in that way more like a single man than like a married one.

As soon as night comes, there's a drive out in the country with some of his friends, a dance, a visit to the club or a stag party of some sort. And I'm left alone.

It has come to the point where I don't know what to do. Don't you think? Elsie, that after a woman has worked for six long years, taking care of her home and family, that she needs some pleasure? I never get anywhere except to see a show once in a while.

A LONELY WIFE.

Yes, little sister, I think you need pleasure. We all need pleasure. We need it just as we need air and water and food. It's just as essential—to our bodily and spiritual health. And we can't lead proud, efficient lives unless we are happy.

But we have to work for our happiness. We have to work for fun. No one is going to hand it to us on a silver platter.

"But I do work," cries the discouraged little wife. "I've worked for so long now. I've cooked and scrubbed and saved and been a faithful wife every day of that time. Isn't that work enough?"

Yes, I know you've done that part of your job, dear. But I suspect that there's a part of your job which you haven't done. It may be that your husband neglects you because he is read by selfish and unkind—and yet he does not seem to be that sort of a man. I rather think he neglects you for another reason.

You may have been a good mother and housekeeper. But have you been a 100% wife? Being a wife implies more than cooking and scrubbing and sewing. It implies being a comrade. Creating FUN in the house as well as cookies and pies.

You've planned for the cookies and pies but have you planned for the fun? What have you done to make home so jolly that your husband will prefer it to the stay parties and clubs? The home in YOUR club and in it you and your husband and your friends can find unusual happiness—if you run your club wisely, with a merry heart. How often do you tell Bill to bring the boys in with their wives for an evening of cards and a little supper of doughnuts and sandwiches and coffee? How often do that way. I'm the Victola and have a little dance with two or three couples? Or how about a "Dutch Supper"—each couple bringing a part?

You'd enjoy these things, and you husband would probably enjoy them, too, if you suggested and planned them. You can't expect him to suggest and plan them. Husbands don't function that way. I'm the home man's club. Hey go out and find one.

How about starting tomorrow to run YOUR club on a party basis?

Advice to Girls
By Annie Laurie

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am very much interested in a girl whom I have met, but I do not think she is located in my—

I have called her and asked me a date, but she refuses. I called her again and she finally consented. But on the night she was to have gone with me she called me and said she could not keep the engagement. We asked her for a date on another occasion, she said she didn't care to go.

Ought I take this as a sign she doesn't care for me?

MAX.

MAX: It is quite obvious that the girl is not interested in you. You are only buying yourself open, to continued rebuke by persisting in your attentions. You could scarcely make her attitude more clear, except, perhaps, if she were to tell you outright that you don't interest her. You wouldn't want her to do that, would you? And I am sure she would not be so blunt or unkind, unless you carried it apparently unwelcome attentions.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am a girl almost nineteen and expect to enter college this Fall. I have been going with a young man two years my senior who thinks a lot of me, but I am not sure of my love for him. Since I want to finish college, do you think it advisable for me to continue my friendship or dissuade the young gentleman for awhile? I have no desire for married life until I finish college and enter some profession.

ANXIOUS.

ANXIOUS: There are very many cases in which couples are married while one of them continues his or her education, but my advice to you is that you wait until you have completed your college studies. If you are not sure of your love for him, rationality demands that you wait until you are. On the other hand, if you are sure, remember that love should be able to stand a test of time.

Your question, however, is not whether or not you should marry and continue your schooling, for trouble is that you are not positive of your conditions, and this is a matter which lies solely in your own hands.

Collars and Cuffs
Try New Steps

BUTTERICK 1183

The front of this gown pretends to ignorant of what the back is doing, its attention being quite absorbed by the interestingly pointed and slashed collar. The simplicity of the front panel gives the back that long unbroken line so becoming to all figures, while the treatment of the collar prevents over-severity. Not at all offended by being omitted in front, the belt assures to the back of the frock the blessed effect which is so stylish. Side plaits furnish a tailored fulness, while the glistening band on the cuff runs through a slash and finishes in a bow and to match the collar.

HEARTS' HAVEN

CHAPTER VII.

NEW HAPPINESS

One evening several months later, Christine came downstairs to the living-room an hour after dinner. Junior had been wakeful, and she had left Harvey to finish his coffee alone, while she hurried to the nursery.

In the kitchen, the maid-of-all-work was rattling the dishes, eager to be off for the evening.

Harvey was seated under the reading lamp surrounded by official looking papers over which he was poring with interest. His lighted cigarette on the edge of the table, was rapidly burning its way toward the wood.

WHAT'S NEW
(From A Woman's Standpoint)

Cutout embroidery through which colored lining shows is to be a mesh trimming for spring.

Shoes in red, green and blue Japanese crepe with a red leather heel are being worn in Paris.

James J. Montague observes: "You never hear a girl say any more: 'That was when I was in short dresses.'"

Novel new sweaters are made in "Coat of Mail" style or are extremely supple and light of fine material of daily grey color range.

Among the evening slippers of silver-gold leather now in vogue some have a rose tint, others a slightly lavender hue.

Belts made of cut crystal, alternated with silver or metal plates, are very smart, and are worn on sport dresses of navy blue, Goya red or violet woollens as well as on long light-colored sweaters.

Jersey was black and rose for a new dinner gown in which long points of black velvet met the buttoned clothes form the corsage and two long panels of black velvet form the skirt.

For two piece sport costume, there are a great many knitted jumpers of two shades, wind and geranium, for instance. Flemish blue and white or two tones of grey, rang ng from pearly grey to slate.

A silk and wool combination called moonlitshade is most effective when printed, as the flecks have been twisted a bit to give a high sheen, and it's this moonlitshade that heats the gold embroidery of which M. Rodier is fond.

FUR THIEVES GET $2,500 LOOT

Toronto, January 31.—Thieves breaking into the fur store of Charles Lewis on Church street early today carried off furs to the value of $2,500. They unlocked the front door after smashing the glass in it.

Christine picked it up and supplied an ash-tray.

Harvey glanced up with a grin.

"Thought I was going to spoil your beautiful table, eh?"

"Well, it's a nice table—the nicest one I've ever had," she returned.

"But not by any manner of means the nicest one you will have, when my ship comes in," he boasted.

Her little, disdainful shrug showed her indifference to greater affluence. She perched on the arm of his chair and put her arms round his neck, locking her small hand under his chin.

"I don't want anything better, than we have; I have all I need in the world —this adorable house and Junior; and you."

"I notice you rate me last," he laughed.

Her lips quivered in a smile, as if at some tender, secret thought; her eyes were shadowy and dreamine.

"Not quite last," she said softly.

She bent closer to him, laid her lips against his ear and whispered.

His face showed his astonishment; in fact, its expression dismayed her.

"Good Heavens, Christine! I never suspected! When?" he took out a hand kerchief and mopped his brow.

"But you don't seem pleased," she said.

"I was just thinking that it's a pity we'll have to go, a wonderful vacation. I was saving the news as a surprise for you. My chief is going to Europe later in the summer, so I have to take his vacation in June, and Dunn—our vice-president, that two-weeks' bluff—is at the same time and has asked you and me up to his place in the Adirondacks. It's a peach of a place. I've been looking forward to it a lot."

"But, darling, you must go. Everything will be over by that time, and Mother will look after me beautifully."

"Nonsense!" he declared.

"I thought we decided not to," she said firmly. "I won't have you miss your vacation. Mother and Lew will be here."

He lit a cigarette, with elaborate care, before replying.

"Lew won't be here," he said. "He's gone back to Chicago."

"Back to Chicago?" she echoed. "Without saying good-bye?"

He began to move his papers about uneasily.

"Well, he was in a great rush; got a sudden opening and had to take it. It was along about the time that Junior had the croup and you were too upset to see anybody. He sent his good-bye through me; I'm pretty sure I told you. You must have forgotten."

"But what about his job with your firm?" she asked. "What wonderful formula he discovered—the one you both were so enthusiastic about?"

He extinguished his cigarette in the ash-tray, and was careful not to look at her.

"Oh, that?" he shrugged. "That was no good. It didn't pan out; in fact, he had him his job, just as I feared it would. You remember I warned him about it. Well, the old man went up in the air,

He thought the idea was no good, and come one told him Lew had worked it out. He said Lew was wasting the time that and material, and kicked him out. It's a pity, because Lew is a great chap, but he wastes too much time dreaming and losing over the impossible. He ought to get out and make for a living like the rest of us. I tell you, Chris, I'm going to have some results to show soon. I have done a lot of pounding and I haven't been so mad at presidents, but believe me, I'm on the right track now. We're going to be rich girl of mine."

He rose from his chair and drew her up with him; he cupped her face in his hands and looked down at it from his splendid height.

"I'm going to give you everything, Chris; that a woman could want—gowns jewels, servants a whole of a house."

She listened absorbly; her thoughts were busy with Lewis Hayes's strange behaviour. It wasn't like good old Lew to go away without saying good-bye.

Women's New Hygiene

Ends disposal problem — Discards like tissue

By Ellen J. Buckland

THE old-time sanitary pad has been supplanted by a new and better way called KOTEX.

It ends the embarrassment of laundry and disposal. You discard Kotex as easily as tissue.

It's five times as absorbent as ordinary cotton pads, and thus protects amazingly. You wear sheer gowns and gay frocks under the most trying conditions.

Also deodorizes, and thus ends all fear of offending. 8 in 10 better class women now use it. Great hospitals employ it. Doctors widely urge it.

Most stores have Kotex on counters wrapped in plain paper, ready to be picked up without even asking.

Costs only a few cents for a package of 12. Be sure you get the genuine KOTEX, for only Kotex itself is "like" Kotex.

Y.M.C.A.'S FIGHT WITH VATICAN TO FORE AGAIN

Fascist Newspapers Urge Suppression of All Italian Sections

4 ACCUSATIONS MADE

Trouble May Be Solved By Slight Change in Organization

Rome, January 31.—A recent article in the Roman Fascist newspaper Il Tevere, advocating the suppression of the Italian sections of the Y.M.C.A., has brought to the fore again the battle which ever since the war has been waged between this institution and the Vatican.

The fact that Il Tevere, has espoused the Vatican's case has led some people to believe that the Fascist government is lending a hand in the struggle and abolish the Y.M.C.A., but, as a matter of fact, there is nothing at present to indicate that any such interference is imminent or even considered.

The Y.M.C.A. suffers in Italy through being considered an eminently Protestant institution whose hidden purpose it is to entice the youth of the country into its ranks with the lure of sport and material advantage, in order to convert them to Protestantism.

This accused the Vatican, and the Pope in public utterances, and not hesitate to call attention to the Y. M.C.A.'s attempts at proselytism.

To review the question in its proper proportions, however it should be said at once that the Y.M.C.A. has not made much headway in Italy. It possesses only two properly organized sections—one in Rome and the other in Turin,the former having only 200 members and the other not quite 1000.

The specific accusations made against the Y.M.C.A. are, first, that it seeks to convert its members to Protestantism; second, that it tends to "Americanize" them, who are educated in her influence, and especially protective emigrants, to the United States where the work of denationalization is continued by American sections of the Y.M.C.A.; third they being an international institution, it loosens the ties of nationality and patriotism among its adherents; and fourth that its activities in Italy are in conflict with the principle which recently found expression in the dissolution of non-Catholic boy scouts, namely, that the education of Italy's youth should be unified in the hands of one organization under government, or, to be more accurate, Fascist supervision.

These accusations are indignantly denied by the Y.M.C.A. It is not true, the association says, that the Y.M.C.A. attempts to convert its members to Protestantism, to denationalism them, or to weaken their patriotism. The best proof of this it is argued, is that the Italian sections of the association are managed by Italians, that many of its members are Catholics, Fascisti and ardent patriots."

The recent law which concentrated the education of youth in the national institution of the Balilla Fascist organization, and brought as a consequence the dissolution of non-Catholic boy scout organizations, introduced a new element into the situation.

In the opinion of some is should that the Fascist government is not afraid of offending even the Vatican in order to have a free hand in trailing the country's young manhood created the possibility that the government may attempt to regain some of its lost favor with the Vatican by suppressing the Y.M.C.A.

The Y.M.C.A., it is felt by some, possesses a strong card in the great activity displayed in Italy in recent times by the Knights of Columbus. In the opinion of these observers it would be difficult legally to suppress one organization and not the other without discrimination against one religion, which probably the Fascist government is not prepared to do.

But there are not lacking those who believe that the whole difficulty will soon be solved by a slight change in the organization of the Y.M.C.A., that will make it quite obvious that its activities are not in any way directed against the Italian state or religion.

MAROONS BATTLE SENATORS IN OVERTIME DRAW

Montreal Forum Scene of One of Roughest Games in N.H.L. History

(By, S. P. E.)

The Montreal Maroons and Ottawa Senators of the National Hockey League battled for eighty minutes without a score at the Montreal Forum on Saturday evening in one of the roughest games ever recorded in the history of the "pro" circuit.

The writer was one of the many privileged housabbe who jammed the mammoth Catherine street auditorium to watch the gladiators. To one who is unaccustomed to watching the salaried players perform the speed at which they travel is really astounding.

Thirty-five penalties were handed out by referees Lou Marsh and "Bobby" Hewitson and there was a whole lot more rough play that was not caught. At one time there were only six players on the ice and at this stage the play slowed up with the teams hugging the goal behind their own goal in order to protect themselves. Saturday night's game was a repetition of the Ottawa-Montreal games this year, it being the second scoreless fixture between these two teams this year.

Beaia was a problem, the reserve section having been completely sold out two days previous and only by dint of shrieking salesmen in the downtown section.

It was worth the price of admission alone to watch Cusset perform in the Ottawa nets. This boy is a regular wizard and with the coolness that is manifested with all pro goalies he saved almost impossible shots with his hand and stick and drew a thunder of applause on his work.

In the opinion of the writer, "Hooley" Smith, brilliant little Ottawa forward, was one of the most effective players on the ice. His sweeping poke check was working overtime and the Maroon players found him a thorn on their sides. Smith crouches low on his haunches when hooking the puck away and the Maroon players hurdled over top of him in dangerous fashion.

"King" Clancy, speedy Ottawa defence man was probably fastest and made several dangerous sallies.

Clancy is like a flash and brought the spectators to their feet with his clever playing.

Dune Munro, heavy defence man, was the Maroons star. He bore on Connell several times only to have the latter save wonderfully.

Dutton, in the speed test, circled the Forum ice surface carrying the puck around in 17 1.5 seconds, but Gilbert's record of 17 flat still remains. Ootman made a great effort to break it but lost the puck near the finishing line.

The game was a close-checking affair and the subs were rushed on frequently but the players were tiring fast when time was called for the second overtime period.

Les Mark fame in for a raising and newspapers and other articles announced to fly from the rush section.

Jack Adams played a nice game toward the dying stages and Nighbor showed flashes of his real form.

TUNNEY TO TOUR EUROPE

Plans Exhibitions in England France and Germany

New York, January 31.— Dudley Field Malone, New York attorney, who has been handling the legal affairs of Gene Tunney and Gertrude Ederle, sail for Europe today to arrange exhibitions by Tunney in England, France and Germany this spring. He said he expected Tunney to begin the overseas tour in May.

Malone said that Miss Ederle, first woman to swim the English Channel, would not join in the European tour.

"Why should she?" he said. "She has just completed fifteen weeks' in vaudeville at $6,000 a week, and has ten more weeks to go."

He expressed a desire, however, to see Miss Ederle race George Young, the youthful Canadian who recently won the Catalina Island marathon.

McTIGUE SEEKING HONORS

New York, Jan. 31.—Mike McTigue was moved to capitalize his sensational four-round triumph over Paul Berlenbach by offering to fight Jack Sharkey of Boston, in Tex Rickard's heavyweight elimination tournament.

Rickard's efforts to match the match for February 25, the date on which the Boston heavyweight had contracted to meet Berlenbach, struck a snag, however, when Johnny Buckley, Sharkey's manager, demurred, Rickard said he considered McTigue had established himself as a strong heavyweight contender, in spite of the fact that he scaled only 169 pounds.

Piles Disappear

No Cutting or Salves Needed

External treatments seldom banish Piles and for the very good reason that the cause is inside—bad circulation in affected parts, vains are flabby and bowels walls weakened.

To quickly and safely rid yourself of piles you must free the circulation—send fresh, healthy blood to the raw, sensitive membranes. Internal treatment is one safe method. Ointments and other external treatments can't give lasting relief.

J. S. Leonhardt, M. D., a specialist, set at work some years ago to find a real internal remedy for piles. Its successful. He named his prescription HEMROID, and it has proven successful in thousands of cases—so successful that now HEM-ROID is sold by druggists under a money back guarantee. It is a harmless tablet, easy to take, and can always be found at J. S. McKeown's, who will promptly refund the purchase price if you buy diastisfied.

FEW CHANGES IN RUGBY RULES

Less Severe Penalty For Forwards Pass—Outside Pass Amendment Fails

Toronto, January, 31.—Few changes were made in the rules of the Canadian Rugby Union at a meeting of the C.R.U. rules commission here Saturday. The onside pass, which in effect was a modified forward pass, failed to be adopted.

The two chief changed concerned the drop kick after a touchdown for a convert, and the penalty for a forward pass. In the future after a touchdown the drop kick for a convert can be made anywhere behind the 35-yard line as the past the ball had to be made directly in front of the point where the touchdown was scored.

The forward pass next year will be penalized by the loss of a down and ten yards. Previously it was penalized by loss of the ball.

TALKING FILM DEMONSTRATED

Sound and Action Synchronize Perfectly—Boon For Small Towns

Schenectady, N.Y., January 31.—Talking motion pictures, in which the tones of the performers were synchronized perfectly with the action upon the screen and which are produced by a new and different process, were demonstrated by officials of the General Electric Company in local theatre today.

The demonstration was in two forms. In one, the sounds recording apparatus was meshed with the motion picture camera and both the audible and the visible were imprinted simultaneously on the film. In the other, the incidental music for "one of the latest [illegible] run" films was recorded on a separate undeveloped print of the feature picture. When reproduced, the strains of the 100-piece orchestra permeated the auditorium with the deep low notes of the tubas, bass viols and the bassoons easily identified. Heretofore, the chief difficulty in tone reproduction and amplification has been to make audible the low frequency tones.

The new process, called by its inventors the "photophone", is a combination of the motion picture projector and the pallophotophone, a device invented by Dr. C. A. Hoxie of the General Electric Company's research staff. The pallophotophone makes a photographic print, by means of a vibrating beam of light on the strip of film. When run through the reproducing machine the vibrating beam of light translates the photographic sound record into audibility. The sound record in the projecting machine is amplified by a loud speaker to any degree desired.

By means of synchronized motors the incidental music accompanying the "first run" picture in the theatre at New York was played upon the picture in exactly the proper relation. This was shown by two incidents or the action of the picture. In one place the sound of a blow was timed exactly with the motion on the screen; later the crack of a pistol was simultaneous with the burst of smoke from the muzzle of the weapon.

The inventors whose combined efforts produced the new talking film believe that in imposing the music after a film has been made they have added the small town exhibitor. Wherever there are thousands of picture theatres is limited to one piano it will be possible here after to show anywhere or everywhere a picture with symphony accompaniment.

FATHER THOUGHT DEAD, CLAIMS HIS DAUGHTER

Mother Insisted Husband Died While Fighting in Great War

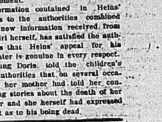

Calgary, Alta., Jan. 31.—Doris Helms, 13, daughter of Emma Helms, former Calgary woman, who died in Toronto two weeks ago, will be sent to Alameda, Cal., to be cared for by her father, as soon as permission is received from the children's aid department at Edmonton, according to an announcement by J. T. Robinson, superintendent of the society here.

Mr. Robinson is awaiting a report from Alameda concerning the home conditions of the father of the girl, William T. Helms, and as soon as this is received the girl will be sent south.

The letter from Helms came as a surprise to the officials here, as Mrs. Helms, in sworn testimony, had said her husband had been killed while serving with the United States army in France and that she was in receipt of a pension from the United States government.

Information contained in Helms' letters to the authorities combined with new information received from the girl herself, has satisfied the authorities that Helms' appeal for his daughter is genuine in every respect.

Young Doris told the children's aid authorities that on several occasions her mother had told her conflicting stories about the death of her father and she herself had expressed doubt as to his being dead.

BLOW IS AIMED AT GOLD DIGGER

Restrictions Proposed on Alimony Paymenis to Divorced Wives

Albany, N.Y., Jan. 31.—A barrier between the "gold-digging" divorcee and the wallet of the ex-husband is proposed by a bill introduced in the assembly today by Assemblyman Fred L. Hackenburg, New York Democrat.

Contending that the alimony feature is one of the worst scandals of the divorce problem, Hartenburg proposes that no divorced husband would pay alimony for a period longer than a year, unless at the time of divorce, the wife was over 50 years of age and had been married at least ten years; that there were children under 18, laws of the commission of that the divorcee had more honest efforts to support herself, but was unable to secure sufficient income to do so.

"The abuse of the alimony privilege has reached a point where it has become not only a public scandal, but a menace to public morals," Harkenburg said.

"The courts of all the principal cities are clogged with cases of women seeking to have their husbands jailed for failure to keep up alimony payments, and there is some real effort we made to stop designing women from gouging the former spouses."

The assemblyman also says he believe his bill, if it becomes law, will tend to lessen the divorce problem.

CONSIDERING

Ottawa, Jan. 31—The Government is considering giving the Civil Service an upward revision of salary.

The Civil Service Federation of Canada, which represents practically all of the public service of the Dominion, has had a letter from the Prime Minister's office stating that the Premier will meet the federation's representatives before Parliament adjourns. Establishment of Civil Service Councils, the last increase of $300 civil servants' salaries has been the bonus and amendments to the Superannuation Act will be urged on the Government.

The Government has not yet decided on the question of salary revision. The Prime Minister stated that the Civil Service Commission is busily engaged in making a full report on the subject how the recommendations will be carried out.

The recommission has been working on a number of alternative schemes. These proposals range all the way from one for a general increase of $300 a year to the practically every employee of the public service to a plan whereby a graduated increase would be granted according to merit. It is said that the plan most likely to be recommended by the commission is the latter and that it would involve an added expenditure on civil service salaries of almost $9,000,000 a year.

Some of the more generous plans submitted to the commission would involve an extra cost of about $15,000,000, it is estimated unofficially.

"Musician's Career Is Happiest," Says Leader

There's food news on the Vit-o-ray. And he's dieting, too. Sec.....

B. A. Rolfe Declares Melody Lulls and Soothes

New York City.—Who gets the most out of life? If everybody answered this question the same way, there would undoubtedly be a rush to one profession. But perhaps it is fortunate that everybody does not think the same as B. A. Rolfe, orchestra leader, who believes the musician is the happiest man in the world.

Mr. Rolfe practices what he preaches. At one time he was a partner of Jesse Lasky in the Lasky Players and rated many times a millionaire. He gave all this up for music.

"I have never regretted it, either," he declares. "Business men are afraid to be happy. They are always scared they will lose some of the money they have, or an opportunity to make more. They get indigestion and all sorts of ills from this constant anxiety.

"Music, on the other hand, provides a sort of hypnotic effect that lulls and soothes. You can lose yourself in music and forget everything that bothers you. Everybody can find time to give himself up to this kind of enjoyment for music speaks a language that can be universally understood.

Mr. Rolfe believes that the American dance craze marks a rejuvenation of all music. He points out that many great masters learn from the gutter. He predicts that in the future every child will soon begin to turn their attention to writing for jazz bands.

"The brasses and reeds will play a secondary role to the cellos that were formerly given to the strings," he explains. "Already the brasses, which I regard as especially important are being catered to by good music like There's a Rainbow on the Volga. There will be more."

Mr. Rolfe toured Europe as a concert cornetist at 11. He is now leading an orchestra at the Palais D'Or, the most elaborate Chinese restaurant in America and conductor at the Palais Royale, music famous by Paul Whiteman.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE COMING STRONG TONIGHT

Cadets Playing Great Hockey and Big Crowd is Expected

The Belleville Maroons will make their Ball boys stand tonight against Royal Military College. The cadets have given practically every team in the group a stiff game but have been outplayed. After winning from Kingston 9-0 R. M. C. is a team to be reckoned with. The Maroons played beautiful hockey at Cornwall and had their combined the pace set in the second period would have emerged on top but the last two games have shown a vast improvement in team-play and general cohesion and the fans will be handed a surprise to see how they note the difference.

The specttices will see a snappy pair in action as Clarke and Tremaine who are regarded as the cadets' two stars from Kingston are to the effect that Kingsmill their goal tender is a whirlwind. R. M. C. team are all young and good conditioned and a good game is sure to result.

Belleville have still a good chance to land into the group championship providing they win all of their remaining games and Cornwall is handed one defeat. The Factory Town boys step into Brockville tonight and the Island six although out of the running are playing their best hockey of the present season. On Friday night with Murray in superform, Orr, stepped into Kingston and gave the Queen's team a facing to the tune of 3-1 and it would not be surprising if they should take Tilson and Cornwall away into camp tonight. Again the Kingston team will give Cornwall a good battle at home although they were defeated by the close score of 1-0 in the Jock Harty Arena.

Belleville will be fighting every inch to gain the verdict tonight since a win is absolutely necessary. The army team as played in Cornwall will be doing just over the boards tonight. Rooney played a bang-up game on Friday night and he is counted up tonight. Hagar is still under the weather with "Hoot" Gibson showed good form and will be used again.

It is not definitely known who will referee but the game will get under way at 8.15.

My European Excursions

WHEN I WAS IN NORWAY LAST

There are numerous folk in the world who in their reminiscent moments occasionally speculate, "I have been to Japan," or who will introduce a conversation saying, "When I was in Egypt," and so on, but the man who returns from a trip to Norway nearly always says: "When I was in Norway last," implying that he has been there more than once. Like the mysterious island in Barrie's, "Mary Rose," is it the land "that likes to be visited," and unlike that same island, is it the land that visit ors like to see more than once. I have had a very intimate acquaintance with tourists and would be tourists for many years, and while I have found among the latter a large number who vaguely "want to go to Europe some day," a-

BELLE THEATRE

William Strunse, who plays the Jewish father in George Jessel's starring vehicle, "Private Izzy Murphy," the Warner picture, directed by Lloyd Bacon, featuring Patsy Ruth Miller and Vera Gordon, and coming to the Belle Theatre today for a run of two days, got his start away back in 1897 as "Mark" the boy who could n't be hitted!

So famous did Mac become that he was commanded to appear before Queen Victoria at the time of her diamond jubilee. The little old lady's autograph is one of his prized possessions. After returning to America he played in stock and later appeared in many Broadway stage productions. His picture career began seven years ago in "The North Wind's Malice," with Vera Gordon, which was also Izzy Murphy," is cast as his wife. The story is that of a Jewish boy of the New East Side, who joins an Irish regiment during the World War, serving with the outfit in France. It is a tender, at times shocking, heart-warming story of which tolerance is the keynote.

Included in the cast are such well known filmsmen as Gustav von Seyffertitz, Nat Carr, Douglas Gerrard, "Spec." O'Donnell, Jack Raymond and Tom Murray.

REGENT THEATRE

TODAY

One of the screen's great gifts to the public is the history lessons contained in such pictures as "The Covered Wagon," the Ken Maynard feature for First National started at the Regent today.

This impressive production shows one of the really great events in the conquest of America; the linking of the continent by the railroad to West. The celebration of this historic event was recently reproduced on a massive scale at the site of its occurrence, Deadwood, S.D.

Although this picture is the first to deal in such a big way with the epic of the transcontinental stage-coach, the picture which deals romantically with historical events is frequently seen, and, when well done, is always among the most popular offerings. This way of bringing historic events and personages into view, and injecting into them the very breath of life makes for the education mixed with the future, according to the psychologic experts.

"The Overland Stage," which is destined to give great impetus to this method of teaching history of the West, has been adapted for the screen by Marion Jackson and is interpreted by a brilliant cast including Kathleen Collins, Tom Santschi, Sheldon Lewis and others.

EYE ON DETAILS

Hollywood, Cal., Jan 31—Microscope and stop watch are the paraphernalia of F. W. Murnau, painstaking director of motion pictures.

Thirty-one hours he had an actress walk past a window and glance into it for a scene in "Sunrise" before he got the action as he wanted it. Each time he had a camera follow her on a perambulator. Each time he held the stop watch on the movement to get the exact timing.

A band of blazes in another set did not appear to his expectations. He built, and examined them closely. Then he turned a couple of assistants loose with hand fire extinguishers. They fanned the flames until the whole looked right.

The two incidents are examples of the infinite pains he takes in the almost perceptible details of his pictures. and his "try, try again" policy.

among the tourists, themselves, who have already been to Europe, the frequent excuse for not returning is: "I want to see Norway again," is astonishing. Norway is an escape and like all successful escapes, has its fascination. Its beauty, varied by the gods in a bewitching pleasure which the heart may dream and enjoy, but which no pen can describe.

SKIRTS PROVING BIG ATTRACTION

Paris Designs Stress Move Toward Front—Hip Line Higher

Special Cable to the New York Times and Montreal Gazette.

Paris, January 30.—The skirts of the new gowns being shown in Paris fashion exhibitions are proving more interesting than the waists. There pronounced types of skirt for the most formal gown have developed, each type emphasizing a movement toward the front. A tiered skirt has two or more finely pleated or circular flounces rounding up to the front. A draped skirt has ribbon ends falling below the hem and a full overskirt over a tighter underskirt. For sports the skirts are generally box pleated and stitched flat for a few inches.

The results are straight but loose, with a similar approach to body always provided. Seaskin and patent leather belts are popular. The elusive waistline, placed by various designers a week anywhere from the natural position to below the hip, has finally been settled slightly higher than last season's almost normal position.

Sleeves are long, fitted or gored into fulness midway between the shoulder and elbow, with patent cuffs. Sleeveless gowns for summer are reappearing. New lines of every type are shown.

Fashions of 1880 begin their two lovely gowns in the Lesieff collection, shown to night. One is taffeta, plaided, of delicate rose mauve; the other is gold cloth, with a new material in evening gowns. Both gowns are drawn to the back under great bows.

Surah this season leaves the rank, of street silks and makes informal plaid, purple a agray for the dinner coat. Hell fern uses a natural color banded black fox.

Practical ensembles of navy or black crinkly crash, lined with figured silks, for a gown or small banded patterns are outgrown in the Lesieff collection
